Romnae in Broadest Sense Product of Film

s goes into the making of the last thing it sees when it leaves. The box-office is the pulse of the theater. Evidence of silent is the pictures come and go.

When the first Vitaphone projected jumping, scampering pictures of real people on a screen by using Edison's Kinetoscope in New York in April, 1896, few people realized that they had become a force which might change world. From a short time ten-reels that stayed on the screen for a few moments and then disappeared, the film has been started again, the pictures began to grow. Books based on the film was projected without stops and stars and authors. Sound film lasted for about as long as the usual vaudeville act, and it was used as a novelty in vaudeville. In November, 1903, the first motion picture theater opened and showed a feature picture. This theater, a vacant store, three windows wide, with a screen, a flannel and whose floor was occupied by seven rows of kitchen chairs and a projection machine, was the first "movie" house. It was "The Great Train Robbery." It was the first picture to have a plot in it and was a great success. Nickels poured into the tiny box booth in front of the window of the store. The race had begun. Science and the fertile, little group of men were marching together.

The advances in these pictures were anonymous. Then, in 1911 Adolph Zukor entered the field of having some well-known actor or actress make a picture. He let work and persuaded Sarah Bernhardt to act in "Queen Elizabeth." She was the first "star." Her picture was shown in all the little storefronts which were open. Business boomed. More companies were formed. Although the shows were flowered upon by the "nicest people, they began to develop a character of their own and which continued to grow until they surpassed the wildest dreams of the first small group of inventors and investors.

The first actual "hit" was The Birth of a Nation. Here, the wide possibilities of the movie as an art was demonstrated. It far outdistanced any treatment which the story might have been given on the "legitimate" stage. Here was action brought to reality. Living, dying people whose emotions were carried to a vast audience. Soon, as science improved apparatus, and producers became more experienced, pictures became bet-to cope with both the child and the wrong home inflences—only failure is possible at the end of the year the parent has exhausted all resources with the disobedient son or daughter. Since there is no definite outlet, no one right act to be performed, a tense condition continues in the individual. As a consequence all of his acts will be tense acts. Trifling stimuli such as sudden noises will lead to pronounced responses, or the tension say lead to the diffused movemeots that were mentioned a moment ago.

"Let me repeat that the condition is due not to "weak nerves" but to the existence of unsolved problems. The habit of meeting difficulties openly and courageously is lacking: a tension persists that has consequences in the total life of the person.

"The corrective for this condition is not drugs but a changed mode of living. On drugs I would prefer not to speak since the topic belongs to other fields, but we recognize such sustances as valerian and the bromides as we would a pain-relieving drug: the cause remains untouched. However, changes in occupation, in modes of livina, in associates, particularly in one's fundamental philosophy of values will lead to normal stabilized modes of acting.

"A word needs to be added on the "nervous breakdown" since it illustrates again what I am trying to say. This is a hlanket term to cover extreme cases of nervousness that have their cause in maladjustments. The breakdown is ofteo ascribed to overwork. A student has difficulty in her studies; the threatened failure is the condition which leads to the exhausted state, not tha studying. The same factor which produces the overwork also leads to the so-called breakdown. The corrective is again the direct facing of ihe problems of life and the open and courageous meeting of the issues that resent themselves. Life offers no by-paths to achievement in the real of personality and it does not encourage short cuts.

"A few words need to be added on worry and anxiety. This state also has its origin in unsolved problems that leave a visceral tension. The central feature of anxiety and worry is an element of fear. At the beginning some failure in adjustment has a genuine fear element, if this failure remains unsolved and continues as a condition of failure, many other events will revive this fear. Such a condition leads to a dread of the future, and inability to come to a decision, and a tendency to turn to the past with "pangs of conscience," often questions about the person's own health will become central in his thoughts. The common worry is a form of this unsolved problem condition. It is almost universal among people due to the conditions of modern life. In worry we tend to deal with the problem in terms of words rather than acts: we continue to reflect on a difficulty which often has no solution. We thus carry the situations that lead to anxiety and worry around with us in the form of words and visceral tensions.

"The relief of worry as of nervousness often requires a change in the whole life of the person. Suggestions for removing anxiety and worry are numerous, but no simple corrective can take the place of practice in courageous living and of sound philosophy of life. However, some relief is possible by practices that can be adopted readily by all. First cultivate the friendship of people who are courageous and optimistic; such personal qualities appear to be contagious. Second, set a time for the careful consideration of the problem that causes worry and anxiety; the tendency to put off decisions must be counteracted. Third, confide in other people, possibly only in one or two: to face the difficulty objectively with another often relieves the ension. Often the advice given by others is better than any conclusion we ourselves may have been able to reach. Fourth, develop hobbies; these may become more satisfying than our daily tasks and they may become the center of one's life. Finally, do something about the problem that causes the anxiety. If possible acts should be substituted for words, and the responses of large muscles for bodily tensions. The large hope for both nervousness and worry is that anything that has been learned may again be unlearned."

Invited to a beach party at Carrabelle last Saturday by Miss Elizabeth Gordon Andrews were Miss Helen Parker, Miss Dorothy R. Disher, Louise Gehan, Alma Butler, Ruth Rogers, Mary Jeanne McKay, Martha Makemson, Loree Lamb, Betty Ostland, Marion Usher, and Jean Andrews.

Sandels, dean of the School of Home Economics, "Food Fads and Fancies"; and Miss Leila Venable, assistant professor of home economics, "Federal Legislation for Consumer Protection." Presiding at the morning sessinos was Mrs Beeson, alumnae president.

At the general alumnae meeting Saturday afternoon it was decided that next year's "Alumnae College" would again be held in the spring and would be conducted on the same lines as that of this year.

Following the alumnae meeting was a three-hour recreation period when the alumnae were free to swim in the college pool in the gymnasium, visit Camp Flastacowo, or attend "at homes" given by some twenty members of the college faculty.

Saturday night's program featured a formal banquet in the lower dining hall with Dr. Olivia Dorman, dean of students, as the main speaker. President Edward Conradi extended greetings and welcome to the alumnae. Toast mistress for the occasion was Mrs. Beeson. Following the banquet the alumnae adjourned to Reynolds Hall parlors for after dinner coffee.

President Conradi Speaks

The final event of the "Alumnae College" program was a devotional service Sunday morning in the college auditorium with President Conradi as the speaker and with music by the college glee club. Presiding at this session was Miss Maude Flowers '29, director of residence halls. Miss Etta Robertson of the music faculty directed the glee club.

Other events during the "Alumnae College" was an Eta Sigma Phi luncheon and tea on Saturday, and a Mortar Board breakfast Sunday morning. These events were for members of the organizations, respectively.

Throughout their stay the alumnae wers guests of the College and were housed in Bryan Hall. Special tables were reserved for them in the college dining hall.

Among the graduates attending the Alumnae College were the following: Sarah Browning '34 Apalachicola; Christine Boone '34, Bascom; Gertrude Kuhn '36, Mrs. Virginia Holland Gailemore '19, Miss Elizabeth Brown '35, of Bartow; Jewel Godwin '23, and Mrs. Brooksie Godwin '34, Bonifay; Elizabeth Hampton '35, Bradenton; Mrs. Nella Wells Shivers '15, Mrs. Fleda Farrior Huggins '19, Mrs. Kate McSween Smith '23, of Chipley; Maude McCall '34, Doris Lee '34, of Clearwater; Mrs. May Gradick Horner '31, Crescent City; Allean Turner '33, Crestview.

MANY INFORMAL PARTIES BEING GIVEN THIS WEEK-END BY CAMPUS SORORITIES

Many informal parties and gatherings are being planned by various sororities on campus this week-end in honor of friends and out of town guests.

Members and pledges of Alpha Omicron Pi will entertain rushees at an informal tea this afternoon in the sorority house from 4 to 6 o'clock. The house will be decorated with arrangements of jasmine and roses. The members and pledges of the sorority will spend Saturday and Sunday at Camp Flastacowo.

Alpha Xi Delta members will entertain friends at a picnic supper tomorrow night in the back yard of the house. Following the picnic, dancing and card games will be enjoyed during the evening.

Alpha Delta Pi members entertained informally in the sorority house Wednesday night with an after dinner coffee in honor of the faculty advisors, Dr. Burks, and Miss Lester. Spring flowers were used in decorating. Present with the members and honor guests were members of the town alumnae club.

Friends of Zeta Tau Alpha members and pledges will be entertained informally tomorrow night at an informal bridge and bunco party in the house.

Theta Upsilon members and pledges entertained friends at an after dinner coffee last night in the sorority house. The members and pledges will entertain faculty members informally Sunday afternoon at a tea from 5 to 6 o'clock. Spring flowers will be used in decorating the house.

Kappa Delta members and pledges will entertain friends and faculty members Tuesday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock at tea. Spring flowers will be used effectively in decorating.

The directors and students of Bryan and Broward halls gave a formal tea in Bryan Atrium Wednesday afternoon from 5 to 6 o'clock. Those in the receiving line were: Dean Dorman, Miss Maud Flowers, Mrs. Saynor, and Mrs. Wimberly. The girls of both halls invited faculty members as their guests.

The tea table was decorated with flowers of pastel shades. Coffee, sandwiches and mints were served to the many guests who attended.

Landis' Talk Marks Climax of Peace Day

Mary Eaton led a special forum at 11:30.

At 1:00 a play entitled "Gold Stars for Glory" was presented from radio station WTAL. Those in the play were Betty Peck, Francis Lewis, Beverly Brown, Marjorie Jones, Mr. George Lewis, Mr. Cheever Lewis, Mr. Robert Miller, and Mr. William H. Joubert, and Mary Jeanne McKay was the announcer. Radios placed in the dining hall made it possible for students to hear the program.

Plays Presented

Thursday night the presentation of two peace plays completed the events of the day. Mary Berryhill read a three-act play "Bury the Dead" and Sarah Lewis, Robert Parker, and Tom Humphries enacted a one-act play entitled "The Terrible Meek."

"Is a World State the Answer to the Present World Crisis?" was the subject of a factulty panel discussion Monday afternoon in the Augusta Conradi Little Theater. Virginia Allen, chairman of the emergency campaign, was in charge of the meeting. Faculty members invited attend this meeting included: Dr. Ralph L. Eyman, chairman; Dr. Raymond Bellamy, presenting the social phases; Miss Marian Irish, representing the political phases; Miss Sadie Young, economic and financial phases, and Henry F. Becker, natural resources. This discussion took the place of the weekly forum.

63 Colleges Participate

At least sixty-three colleges and universities besides Florida State College for Women cooperated in this Peace Day celebration. These included: Ohio State, Agnes Scott college in Georgia, Lehigh university in Pennsylvania, Johns Hopkins in Maryland, Bethany-Peniel college in Oklahoma, Rosemont college in Pennsylvania, North Adams State Teachers' college in Massachusetts, Women's college and the University of North Carolina, Skidmore in Pennsylvania, Hillsdale in Michigan, University of Newark, in New Jersey, Hood college in Missouri, St. Joseph college and academy in Michigan, Pennsylvania College for Women, University of Florida, Wayne university in Michigan, Momimgaide college in Iowa, Connecticut State college, and Wellesley college in Massachusetts.

Other colleges also cooperating were: Vassar college in New York, Colorado State A. and M., Albion College in Michigan, American university in Washington, D. C., University of Pennsylvania, Adelphi college in New York, Mary Baldwin college in Virginia, Williams college in Massachusetts, Lake Erie college in Ohio, Lawrence college in Wisconsin, Sam Houston State Teachers college in Texas, North Dakota college, Texas State College for Women, Scarrett college in Tennessee, Franklin and Marshall in Pennsylvania, Arkansas A. and M. Music Faculty Members Attend Tampa Festival

Seven members of the faculty of the school of music went to Tampa this week to act as judges at the State High School Music Festival which began yesterday and will continue through Saturday. The Florida State College has provided seevral judges each year since the beginning of the music festivals.

Those members of the faculty acting as judges this year are: Mr. Walter R. Cowles, Miss Augusta Murphy, Miss Etta Robertson, Prof. Owen F. Sellers, Miss Mary Ester Winslowe, Miss Gladys Koch and Miss Mary Reeder.

Dad Doesn't Appear For Birthday Party

A birthday party by proxy!

That is what happened here last week when one student became desperate for a birthday cake. As her birthday and those of all her friends were inconveniently lorated in other months of the year, she could think of no way to appease her hunger until she suddenly remembered that the very next day was her father's birthday. She immediately ordered a cake to be inscribed "Happy Birthday, Dad" and invited all her friends to the feast.

A few days later her father was quite surprised to get a letter from his daughter telling him how much she enjoyed his hirthday party.

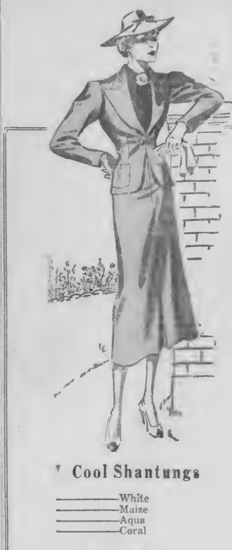
Sororities Install Incoming Officers

Installation of officers for the coming year was held this week by two sororities on campus.

Alpha Chi Omega installed the following: Virginia Toffaletti president; Dulcie Cavahnero, vice-president; Anita Leonard, corresponding secretary; Ruth Unland recording secretary; Lurline Goodman, treasurer, and Helen Hickerson, historian.

New officers instaled by Beta Phi Alpha are: Ellen McLeod president; Frances Humphries vice president; Ruth Garcia, secretary; and Jessica Jane Mackey, treasurer.

Peace Council Sponsors First Motion Picture



The loral council of the Emergency Peace Campaign is sponsoring the presentation of a series of foreign and American commercial films on this campus. The first of this series of moving picture, "Road to Life," will be presented tomorrow night at 7 45 in the Augusta Conradi Litle theater.

This is a dramatic, humorous and educational talkie about the wild boys of post-war Russia and their rehabilitation. It includes a forward by John Dewey, according to the announcements made by the Emergency Peace council. The movie, which is two hours in length, has superimposed titles in Enalish throughout.

The proceeds from all movies will be used to send out students from Florida State College for Women as peace volunteers for study and participation in field work during the summer months.

Seniors Want To Do Things Before Going

As Commencement Nears Students Wish for Excitement

"In a month's time you will graduate from college. What would you like to do more than anything else during this last semester of your college career?"

This question brought to light many of the queer ambitions which the seniors have longed to carry out for four long years.

One bitter soul would like to release four years of pent up energy by popping a plate over a girl's head, pouring a bowl of gravy down her back and spilling a salad in her hair. Then she would like to break all the china she could find and have a glorious time eating plates from one end of the dining room to the other.

"I'd like to go away every single week-end and come back to find that I'd made Phi Beta Kappa. That would make mother and dad feel so good." This is longed for by one who presents the probation list.

"Sleep! How I'd like to sleep!" cry the overworked upperclassmen. "I'd like to be able to go to bed on time one night, stay in bed as long as I like every morning, go to classes only when I'm in the mood, and in case I do go, have a pillow with me so that if I get sleepy I can take a nap."

"If I could do anything I wanted to during the last semester of my college days, I'd order a candy bar after every single meal" stated one of the larger members of the senior class.

"I'd like to insult a dean! Why, I'd almost rather do that than graduate! Then I'd like to tell all of my teachers just exactly what I think of them and their courses."

"Leisure time!" cry the seniors. "If I could have a wish come true, I'd wish for leisure time. I'd go to the browsing room and browse to my heart's content for a whole semester. Here I am a senior, my last year in college, and I have never set foot in the browsing room!"

"I'd like to take tumbling," say the more energetic seniors. And I think a course in making terrible faces should be installed in our curriculum. I'd like to perfect my face-making. One certainly could make use of practical applications in that course."

"Before I graduate I'd like to learn how to study. Then I would make plans for an education to be obtained as soon as I get out of here."

"Nothing would give me more enjoyment than to turn the tables on the teachers and make them go to school. It gives me great pleasure to plan my method of attack I'd show them how it feels not to be able to cut classes. I'd assign homework that would take at least five hours to prepare. And, oh boy! My exams would be fierce!"

"Wouldn't it be grand to give an egregs pasky in Bryan parlor?" ask the more frivolous seniors. And I'd just love to be able to smoke in the dining room and in every other non-smoking area on campus."

"It certainly would give me a thrill to swing on the chandeliers in the dining room."

With a mallerous grin one girl stated that it would certainly give her the greatest pleasure of her college career to be able to plan the menu every day for a week. "We'd have chocolate pie for breakfast, sizzly steaks for lunch, and a seven-course dinner every night."

There are always those who yearn to scream in the library and to bang out jazzy tunes on the organ in the still of midnight. But the most longed for ambition of all seniors is to stay out all night just once during their last semester.

after only a few minutes of play. The Odd rally was strong and swift and continued even after the team was at bat, but it was not enough to overcome the earlier batting advantage gained by the freshmen, and the game ended with a score of 26-20 in favor of the Even team. Frazier and Washburn were umpires.

Substitutions for the freshman team were: Rogers for Helms; Jones for Brown; Jones for Helms. Sophomores, Corey for Colburn; Colburn for Corey.

A Harvest in Medicine

Well-Planned System of Socialized Medicine Considered Essential by Student For Full Benefits

By MARY ALLEN

The harvest in medicine has not yet been reaped. Until a well-planned system of socialized medicine is adopted the fruits of progression will remain on the tree to wither and drop to the ground. "Socialized medicine is the science and art of preventing and curing disease through collective effort with financial support of one or more social groups or governmental groups." Statistics and every day living show that in the United States today the present system of medicine is inadequate in caring for the majority of the people. The benefits that a program of socialized medicine would produce would be gathered by two classes of people, the laymen and the members of the medical profession.

The intelligent American consumer demands for the care and protection of his health five elements in the medical service. Of these the most emphatic one is a service which will remove the hazard of unexpected illness by a system of prevention rather than the care of sickness. This danger would be removed by the socialized control of medicine because under this plan each person would have a regular examination at least once a year, each person would pay a sum each month as an insurance measure, and at the time of illness he would pay no bills; each person would have the complete attention of all necessary specialists; and each person would have the confidence of a well-trained physician. There is no reason why the United States should have so many people without medical attention because the United States ranks at the top or near the top as far as quality of medical service is judged. The problem lies not in acquiring medical knowledge but in distributing the value of medical knowledge more widely to the people. The need of this is shown by the fact that "a total of 47 per cent of the people in the highest income class have no medical, dental or eye care whatsoever during the year, although only 14 per cent of the people in the highest income classes appear to be so free from illness."

The American consumer wants a service which will remove the hazard of unexpected sickness bill and will develop the maximum paying power from his income. Sickness bill always come at the most inopportune time, and they often upset the budget system in the home. A great many people do have so much as places for the money they lack any money to go, or else they

The average group representative physician. Under the socialized system one could never have that for an excuse because the money would be collected at intervals as a tax, and the service would be at the disposal of the patient at any time. Incomes do have a bit to do with whether a person will go to a doctotor or not. In 1928 15 percent of the people had incomes of less than $1,200. This group received an annual average of 1 132 visits from physicians per 1,000 people. During this same year 3 per cent of the population that had incomes of $10 000 and over received an annual average of 4.-734 visits per 1,000 persons. Any

French Society Meets Wednesday Afternoon

The members of the French club, an organization of beginning students in "French, learned several new songs at their meeting, which was held in Broward lounge Wednesday afternoon. Among those were "Sa-ve-vous planter les choux," and "En passant par la Lorraine." The club played several American games with French versions.

Because of the interest of some of the elementary students in learning to speak French, a table is being organized for them which will meet in the dining hall at noon on Saturdays. Other first year students, not members of the club, who are interested in speaking French are welcome to join the group. It will be necessary to sign up with Miss Davis in Room 204 History building, before coming to the table.

tributed by age should have 1-750 calls per 1,000 annually.

The population would be assured of the best-trained physicians, and a great waste of money would be eliminated because only the best physicians would be employed in the plan. This would eliminate quacks both in the profession and in the patient medicine line. By destroying the quacks harmful and useless practices would be avoided. The waste of the present medical system in clinics and rents is appalling. In prodepression years the use of patent medicine amounted to $369 000.-000 annually. The amount spent on osteopaths, naturopaths, chiropractors, and faith healers resulted in a cost of $125,000,000 annually. It should be noted that not all servers of this kind was entirely wasted. Pre-splitting also constituted another waste under the present service. These recommended waste would be curtailed to the extent that 20 per cent of the total costs of medical care would be saved.

The benefits that would come to the profession through this socialized medicine plan would be in readjusting the fix that are now present. There are three needs of the profession: (1) "The need of more preventative and therapeutic medical service; (2) the need of better coordination and control of medical service; (3) the need of better and more assured income for medical practitioners and institutions."

This proposed plan would assure morep reventable work and cure a phenomenal amount of physician would not be hampered by building and maintaining routine practice. This would give the physician more time for concentrated study and meditation.

Better control of medicine would make a much better trained group of physicians than exists today. The plan would be similar to that of the educational system which has socialized the teacher, and in comparison to the

Telescope Reveals Venus to Students

Last Wednesday evening the members of the Astronomy club were given an opportunity to observe the planet Venus through the large telescope.

At present the planet, which is about the size of the earth, looks like a tiny new moon through the telescope. Venus goes through all the phases of a moon because it is between the earth and the sun, but it takes this planet about ten months to complete its cycle. Gladys Ware, president of the club, explained these details to the group.

Next Wednesday night Dora Helen Bagnott will speak on "Measuring the Temperatures of the Stars by Electricity."

Plans are being made to have the spring astronomy camp at Lake Bradford some time during the first week in May.

Requirements Discussed

The question of whether Latin should be required to graduate with an A. B. degree will be discussed at the next meeting, May 5, of the faculty senate, stated S. R. Doyle, registrar.

members of the medical profession they are a much trained group. In a scattered position as the present medical world is today, efforts cannot be concentrated to the best interest of the profession. The majority of our private practitioners cannot be expected to add greatly to the accomplishment of improved preventative work and further medical research because they lack the exceptional vision and ability.

As to the income for physicians the average in 1929 for all of the 142,000 active practicing physicians was $5,300. For the 28,000 specialists the average was $9,000 by over $10,000. Partial specialists averaged $8,000. The median income for all physicians was $3,-800. On the average for physicians and dentists in private practice it is possible to cut down the overhead for expenses from 40 percent to 25 percent. This means a saving of about $200,000,000 annually. Assuming that private physicians one third in 1929 had net incomes of less than $2,500, and there were 35,000 general practitioners who had less than $2,000 a year to live on. Less than one per cent of the dentists had incomes over $20,000. Among nursing the nurses in private duty suffer the most. At the middle of the last decade such nurses earned about $1,200 a year. The income was not based on ability or experience.

A definite change is needed in the medical world. What will be the next step? A socialized program of medicine fits the present needs of the laymen and the profession. The hazard of unexpected illness would be lessened. The threat of unexpected sickness bill would be redneed entirely. The population would be assured of the best trained physicians in their service at all times. The profession would reap its benefit through more preventative and therapeutic medical service, better coordination and control of medical service, and the assurance of better incomes for medical practitioners and institutions.

Split-Skirts Become Fashionable Rapidly

Whether to split the side seams in our skirts as a result of hooking our legs over the fences that have recently been placed at each appropriate spots on the campus is becoming an even more important question than the former problem of whether or not we should become trail-blazers.

Students had previously proved their thrift in saving time and footwear by the self-made paths across corners and grassy plots which have graced the campus for some time. Now, due to the farsightedness of certain officials who could visualize a close network of paths covering the grounds in the future, fences are daily being constructed across the most popular trails.

U of F Glee Club Will Sing Here Tomorrow Night

Concert Has Become Part Of Regular Program For May Day

SENIORS SPONSOR GLEE CLUB VISIT

Men Will Present Sacred Robed Choir for First Time at F. S. C. W.

One of the major attractions of the spring college calendar, the University of Florida glee club concert, will be presented in the college auditorium tomorrow night at eight o'clock.

The program has become an annual event of May Day, and is being sponsored by the senior class. It will include selections ranging from negro-spirituals to classic pieces, as well as light airs. For the first time in Tallahassee the glee club will present the sacred robed choir, a newly-formed unit. The entire group will present several semi-popular numbers following selections by the choir.

History Related

The history of the University of Florida glee club shows a record of steady development since the first group was organized in 1900. The first concert was held at the university and sang for their own pleasure. For twelve years the glee club has been acting as the "Florida's ambassadors of good will," making thirteen concert tours

Director Secured

In 1926 Professor John W. Dodson was secured as director of the glee club. Regular weekly rehearsals are held every afternoon and evening, and in addition, private instruction is given free of charge every Saturday afternoon.

Class Sponsors Dance

The senior class will sponsor a dance in the gym, to which all seniors, members of Village Vamps, Collegiate Club and the college glee club have been invited with the university glee club members and their dates.

Visiting singers will be entertained at dinner in the cafeteria dining room at which time they will present a short preview of their evening's program.

New Members of IRC Tapped

Twenty Students Chosen For High Scholarship And Leadership

Twenty students were tapped to new membership in the International Relations club Tuesday in the college chapel room, and were pledged yesterday in Broward cloister.

Chosen for their leadership, interest in international affairs, scholarship and ability to aid the International Relations club in furthering its purpose here on campus, the new members are: Elizabeth Blake, Hattie Baro, Mary Emily Parker, Alice Coleman, Elizabeth Pierce, Frances Wetherington, Shirley Fields, Sidney Moore, Ermine Lawrence, Sarah Lewis, Audrey Cooper, Virginia Allen, Ruth Bonnesiepken, Anne Jennings, Mary Ruth Sayers, Betty Jean Mahon, Ruth Baggott, Rothe McElhannon, Patsy Johnston, and Nell Colvin.

Although many International Relations clubs on other southern campuses select new members from the student body on the basis of scholarship only, the local charter of the organization follows a policy of selecting members by the interest they show on campus and in classrooms, stressing the ability of the student to take part in discussions and give short talks if necessary. Each new member this year has been first recommended by one of her teachers, not only for scholarship but also for the ability which she exercises in thinking and expressing herself, thereby adding to the interest of the classes.

New members of the club were elected Thursday afternoon at the first meeting to be held since the new officers of the club were elected, these new officers are: Marguerite Browne, president;

Mortar Board Taps Ten In Annual Rite

Impressive Ceremony Is Pledging of Junior Class Members

In the hushed silence of the darkened auditorium the twelve retiring members of Mortar Board tapped ten new members from the junior class Tuesday night in one of the most impressive ceremonies of the college year.

Wearing the caps and gowns of their senior order, the members entered the auditorium carrying aloft the United States flag of the Mortar Board. The processional, "Priest March," was played by Lois Dean, as members walked single file down the aisles of the auditorium and across the stage forming a semi-circle against the background of three glowing tapers.

Dr. Harold Richards addressed the audience on the high standards and ideals of Mortar Board and pointed out the aspirations for which it stands—service, scholarship and leadership. Mary Virginia McKay read "The Torch," inspiring poem of Mortar Board which is read annually.

Lights filled the auditorium and and as the "Ideals" Mortar Board's song was sung softly on the organ, the members walked one by one from the stage to the auditorium where members of the junior class, clad in white, sat in the front of the center section. Each member tapped a student who returned with her to the stage where she was presented with the lighted torch of the retiring member.

Girls honored by selection to Mortar Board were: Phil Asher, Mary Catherine Bolton, Frances Evelyn Fisher, Sarah Sealey, Louise Gehan, Francis Lewis, Rosa Lee Robinson, Martha Lester and Dot Marsh.

Retiring members of Mortar Board are: Ma'dora Tills, Mary Jeanne McKoy, Eleanor Williams, Ruth Bowman, Sue Whitaker, Mary Catherine Gibson, Frances Burke Bundrick, Sarah Frances Forth, Martha Makemson, Elizabeth Stevens and Dorothy Leach.

Also taking part in the ceremony were: Dean Olivia Dorman and Miss Katherine Abbey, honorary members; Miss Bonnie Richardson, organ; Miss Louise Richardson and Dr. Harold Richards, advisory members; Miss Ruth Schornburet, Miss Katherine Warren, Miss Ruth Bell, Miss Elizabeth Lynn, alumnae; and Mrs. Harold Richards, alumna and officer of the organization.

Following the ceremony, the old and new members and those taking part in the ceremony were entertained with a buffet supper given by Miss Lynn and Miss Schornburet at the latter's home.

The Torchbearers, a local group was organized on this campus in 1932. It was also affiliated membership in the national organization of Mortar Board in 1931. Not less than five nor more than twenty members may be elected to membership each year.

Scholarship Is Recognized By 2 Honoraries

Phi Beta Kappa Initiates, Phi Kappa Phi Taps In Regular Rituals

TWENTY COMPRISE HONORED GROUPS

Both Organizations Try To Encourage Student Leadership

Two general scholastic honoraries—Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Phi—held recognition ceremonies for new members here this week when the former initiated and the latter tapped.

The honor society of Phi Kappa Phi, whose purpose is to encourage among students higher ideals and greater achievements in scholarship, issued bids Tuesday to fourteen members of the senior class: Josephine Bonino, Marion Carson, Rosalyn Deuss, Sarah Myrtle Everett, Margaret Delaney, Frances Porth, Lottie Belle Howard, Bess V. Mack, Anna Marie Mitchell, Bernice Oliver, Daisy Parker, Hazel Sarazier, and Frank Edna Smith.

Organized on this campus in 1924 by the heads of departments and eight alumnae, the membership is chosen from members of the senior college class in the highest upper tenth of their class and attain all the standards of the society. The group has a charter which also permits them to invite into membership a small percentage of the faculty who maintained the standard in their college work.

Registration Will Be Same

Students Send Schedule Cards to Registrar During Summer

Registration, having proved so satisfactory last year, will be continued in the same manner for the school year of 1937-38, S. R. Doyle, registrar, has announced.

The confusion arising out schedules during the first week of the school term was avoided this past year by registration during the summer months. In the spring, students in the College of Arts and Sciences meet with their deans for conference to plan their major courses and are told of their required subjects, and informed of the number of hours of electives necessary.

The student's schedule card is sent to the student to be filled out and returned two months before to the registrar. By this plan, students may request preferred professors and hours. During this registration week students are given their schedule cards for

Martha Graham Describes Slow Development of Modern Dance

Believes Modern Dance is "Vitally American," Stating New Form of Expression Had Origin in This Country

By ANN LADD and NANCY ROGERS

A simply dressed, quietly gracious Martha Graham was speaking earnestly about modern dance. It was the afternoon before the performance, and capable assistants were hanging backstage, preparing costumes and scenery for the recital. Occasionally they interrupted the rather slight young woman with black hair drawn tightly back from a set face with high cheek bones and straight features, after every ringing quiet directions Martha Graham continued speaking freely and unhurriedly.

"Modernism is a difficult thing, you know. What a modern ought to decade won't be modern the next. That's the excitement of it—it will always change. That is all. "Ballet and classical dancing sometimes gets sterile, unproductive. Something is needed to vitalize it—to renew it. And so modern dance has its place in America and abroad."

Contrary to popular belief, modern dance had its origin in America and not in Germany, Miss Graham pointed out, saying tribute to its true originators, Ruth St. Denr and Isadora Duncan. "It was not easy for them," she smiled. "Why, when they started twenty-five or thirty years ago no one had ever danced in bare feet on the stage before." Miss Graham believes that modern dance is "vitally American." As she says, "Dancing is not made up of one people but is a fusion of many. In the same manner, modern dance is not one pattern but many.

Born in Pittsburgh, Miss Graham moved to Santa Barbara,

French Comedy Advocates New Spouse School

Speech Department Offers Adaptation by Langner and Guiterman

What the proper training of a husband should be will be demonstrated in "The School for Husbands," Langner and Guiterman's adaptation by Arthur Guiterman and Lawrence Langner of a seventeenth century two-act French comedy, which is to be presented by the speech department at the Florida State college on May 6 and 7.

The plot of this comedy centers around the situation that arises when two old bachelors are left with the responsibility of a ward to rear. This play which is considered the most entertaining undertaking of the speech department this year is written in verse.

John Anderson of the Evening Journal has said of this comedy, "... The Misses Langner, Guiterman and Arthur Guiterman rhyme marvelously, they rhyme wit with wisdom; the modern verse with the antique idiom causes the tale to sparkle with pertinent bedazzlement of language."

The Little Theater orchestra, the modern dance group, which will give a short musical interlude during the play, and Miss Kemper Moore is directing the play. Stage designing is under the supervision of Miss Ruth Thrush, who will be aided by the stagecraft class in making the scenery. Miss Helen Richie is in charge of costume designing with Nan Chesnut assisting.

The cast is as follows: Betty Peck, Sagaretie, an old grouch who is reading; Mary Ann Carruthyll, Ergaste, servant of a young beau who has been married; Dorothy Barr, street vendor; Becky Ashton, Lisette, a daring flirt; Jane Frances Peck, Arlette; Hallie Bert Nunnum, Valere, a young beau; Mary Margaret

Delegates Go To Meeting At Rollins Campus

Student Government and College Press Groups Gather for Council

FORUMS, LECTURES WILL BE FEATURED

Eleven Students from F. S. C. Attend as Representatives

Students from Florida State College for Women will attend a joint convention of the Florida Student Government association and the Inter-collegiate Press association at Rollins college from Friday until Saturday.

Student forums will meet to discuss up-to-date methods of dealing with campus problems and to compare the systems used in student governments of various other colleges in the country. The groups will be in the form of discussions, although several lectures have been scheduled by the meeting. These lectures will be given by faculty members, alumnae of the women institutions, and several members of the student body.

Official delegates for the College Government association are Betty Cothran, Elizabeth Lee, Sue Whitaker. Sue Whitaker is president of the Florida Student Secretary of the college student government association.

The three Florida State college publications, the Datuff, the Flambeau, and the Seminole are entering the state wide publications contest which will be held during the meeting. The results will to be decided while the convention is convening.

Special press forums will include discussions on the merits of

Hay Reelected As President

Study of Spanish Texts Is Main Project at Rollins Meeting

Dr. Marion J. Hay, associate professor of education, was unanimously re-elected president of the Florida section of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish, at the annual meeting of that organization held last week-end at Rollins college in Winter Park.

Those persons belonging to the association are teachers of Spanish in high schools or junior colleges. Other faculty members from Florida State College for Women belong to the organization are: Dorothy Brown, Dr. Margie Burks, Dr. Arthur Seymour and Miss Margaret Campbell.

At the chief purpose of the meeting was the examination of all available texts in Spanish and to find those most suitable for the next state adoption. All members had the opportunity to vote on the merits of texts. Discussions and tentative decisions were given, and Flambeau Receives Congratulations on New Honor Rating From Alumnae and Many Congressmen at Washington, D. C.

Since the Florida Flambeau's award last year for American interest rating, congratulations have been pouring into the staff office from all parts of the country. Alumnae who themselves worked on the paper have voiced the news of the recognition and sent in messages of pride; and many of the congressmen in Washington, both those from this district and others particularly interested in newspaper work have expressed their pleasure at the achievement.

Florida's senior United States senator, Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher, telegraphed:

"The Florida Flambeau is indeed to be congratulated upon this outstanding journalistic honor that has come to it in the world of collegiate journalism. The National Scholastic Press Association has chosen the Flambeau as one of the best college papers throughout the country, which is a rare and high honor of which the staff and college for Women as well as all Florida can well be proud. I am glad to extend my felicitations and best wishes to the Florida Flambeau upon this auspicious occasion in its history."

Joining his colleague, Florida's other senator, Hon. Charles O. Andrews of Tallahassee, was particularly pleased and proud to receive the news from his home city. "It is a pleasure to congratulate the staff upon this outstanding Florida college paper's real national achievement in winning the highest established All-American rating. It is particularly gratifying to me to know that Tallahassee has been thus honored. The All-American rating given the Flambeau signifies real achievement among the nation's collegiate newspapers. The Flambeau deserves all the praise it receives upon this occasion and I for one am glad to extend my felicitations."

Congressman Millard F. Caldwell of the Tallahassee district writes, "I am sincerely proud that a college newspaper right in my district has been awarded such a high rating in the collegiate world. I am particularly pleased to congratulate the Flambeau because I personally know of the high-type newspaper accomplishment of its editors and staff. Its record has now won national recognition and I feel that State College for Women and the whole district should be proud of the achievement of our young newspaperwomen."

Messages have come by proxy from several other Florida congressmen, among them the statement of Congressman James Hardin Peterson, who, when informed of the award, said, "Fine, this is indeed a great honor conferred. I am very pleased and very proud and desire to extend heartiest congratulations. I know the Flambeau deserves it. The beau was cited for All-American rating last year and I know that all things our Florida girls can accomplish."

The leading publisher-senator on capitol hill, Arthur Capper, publisher of the Topeka Capital, Kansas City, Kansas, sent the following encouraging message:

"The National Scholastic Press Association is eminently qualified to pick the leading college papers and magazines and when it has given its good judgment it selects a newspaper for rating of All-American which is the highest rating that the winning newspaper and journalistic publication can have a right to lot on the ball. The Flambeau has done a fine job to warrant this honor and sincere congratulations are in order for all participating in that achievement."

Speaking for the newspaper world in Washington was Oliver Owen Kuhn, managing editor of the Washington Star, the capital's most widely circulated newspaper. Commenting on the outstanding newspaperman I appreciate perhaps more than others what it means for this means to a newspaper. The National Scholastic Press association has chosen wisely in selecting the Flambeau for such recognition. I add my congratulations to the Flambeau and its staff of aggressive and progressive young women journalists who have consistently put out a fine paper throughout the college year."

Becky Ashton, chairman of May Day, traditional college event which will take place tomorrow.

Dorman Opens Training For New Advisers

Plan Series of Lectures To Assist Prospective Freshman Leaders

Following an after-dinner coffee in Jennie Murphree parlor, Tuesday evening, Dean Olivia Dorman opened the six week's training course for newly-selected freshman advisers and orientation leaders with a lecture entitled "The Scope of Orientation and Qualifications for Leadership."

In her talk Dean Dorman outlined the series of lectures which will cover the problems that confront freshman students. Next week at the same hour Dean Dorman F. Pinner will speak on homesickness and its cure.

The six-week's orientation period for next year's freshmen will be in complete charge of the 52 students who have been chosen for their leadership ability and high scholastic standing. In the fall term, leaders will return to college at the beginning of freshman week in order to assist new students in their activities. Each girl will have charge of 20 freshmen and will conduct weekly meetings.

The list of students selected for orientation leaders, from which 24 will be chosen to act as floor chairmen, is as follows: Tru Brown, Julia Burnette, Pat Campbell, Virginia Craig, Frances Dowdell, Martha Evelyn Ford, Ruth Eyman, Virginia Gautier, Martha Hague, Betty Ruth Hall, Frances Howell, Charlotte Kamper, Sara Lewis, Sarah Lytle, Elizabeth Lundie, Elva Martin, Mary Louise Meewther, Beulah Mitchell, Dot Molzar, Florine Morris, Julia Mullis, Esther O'Byrne, Mary Emily Parker, Melba Park, Lutrelle Patterson, Marion Purviance, Carol Raynes, Mary Elizabeth Russell, Dorothy Scott, Mary Elizabeth Stevenson, Margaret Walcott, and Polly Ann White.

Spirogira Selects Four For Odd Honorary Group At Dining Hall Tapping

Last Wednesday Spirogira, Odd honorary society, tapped four new members. Becky Ashton, Frances Douglas, Mary Emily Parker and Ruth Bonnesiepken, secretary of the residence hall. The tapping was followed by a banquet in the dining hall during which the new members were properly "toasted."

Miss Ruth Bonnesiepken, Miss Bertha Boston, Marie Taylor, Winifred Ewart, Beth Deane, Martha Makemson, Elizabeth Stevens, and Jeanne McKay, Peggy McMichael, Mary Ruth Sayers, Betty Peck, Mary Miller, Josephine Binion, Margaret Walcott, Katherine Allen, Lutrelle Patterson, Frances Forth, Sarah Lytle, Betty Mack, Daisy Parker, and Betty Hatch. Members of the faculty who became Odds, Miss Olivia Dorman, Miss Maude Flowers, Miss Elizabeth Thomson, Mrs. Pearl Beverly, Miss Lena Devinny, Miss Alice Tracy and Miss Olivia Dorman.

F Club Elects Officers

New officers for the "F" club, elected at the 11:30 meeting Tuesday, are Frances Thill, president; Dot Molzaar, vice-president; and Lynette Thomson, secretary-treasurer.

Plans were made for a supper hike to be given soon for all members.

May Day Plans Include Court And Pageantry

Identity of Queen, Maids Of Honor, Attendants To Be Revealed

SISTER CLASSES WILL BREAKFAST

State History Has Place In Annual Ceremony Welcoming Spring

Annual May day festivities will tomorrow lend a cosmopolitan air to the campus as the stalwart Spaniards of Ponce de Leon tread again with their leader the soil of the land they discovered, and English lasses dance around twin May poles in the center.

The afternoon program which will be presented before this court of a May Queen whose identity is to be revealed at a ceremony in chapel at 4:30, will be arranged largely by members of the modern dancing classes, and will be comprised of a number of individual pieces.

Attendants Chosen

Attendants of the Queen two maids of honor and twelve court ladies, were chosen by student vote at a recent election, but the ceremony of naming them will be as much of a surprise as is the very coronation of the Queen herself.

Sister-senio, breakfast, which will mark the beginning of the campus day's celebration, is planned for 6 o'clock tomorrow morning. The affair, to which sophomores will cordially invite their senior "sisters," is to be presented at the site where the theme has been planned in secret, and even sophomores council girls will be kept at the occasion have no idea as to the probable program.

Sadler Wins Grand Prize

Art Student Voted Cash Award in National Contest

Ruth Sadler, of Winter Garden, received a cash award and honorable mention in the nation-wide competition for scholarships to the "Art Students League" and received a grand prize of $25.00 for her design and commercial art entries in the contest sponsored by the league for college students.

Twelve students of Florida State College for Women winning prizes in the contest are: Grace Whitaker, two awards of $5.00 each in non-commercial drawing and Virginia Hendrix and Olivia Embrey, second prize of $5.00 in water colors and pastels.

The educational and art committee of the city of Winter Park "Four Arts" are exhibiting work submitted by students and are endeavoring to maintain the higher ideals of an art education. The contest closed April 15 and the exhibit will close on May 9. Those colleges whose students entered the contest are John B. Stetson university, Rollins college and the Florida State College for Women. Rollins college, University of Miami, Florida State University of Miami.

The Art committee, of which Mrs. Frederick Johnson is chairman, acted as jury of awards.

Senate Meets Wednesday

At the senate meeting Wednesday the members voted that the Florida college delegates to the Florida Student Government association convention invite this organization and also the Press association to meet at this college next year

The senate also passed the executive recommendation that the chairman of Torch Night be a senior instead of a sophomore.

Students Will Laud Members Of Honoraries

Tuesday Designated As First "Honors Day" On Campus

Honors Day will be held for the first time in the history of the institution next Tuesday when members of honorary societies will be presented in a special convocation program.

A fanfare, two composed by Miss Augusta Muroky, Miss Mary Esther Williams, and Owen C. Bellers, faculty members, will play Opus 99 by Schubert, and Dr. R. L. Bryan, of the education department, will speak on "Our Broadening Horizons." A representative of each honor society will be presented and will speak briefly on the purposes and ideals of her organization.

Representatives of the honor societies are: Aptitha Lockhart, Alpha Chi Alpha, journalism; Holly Wright, Alpha Sigma Phi, classical; Pearle Overhults, Theta Kappa Epsilon, Dorothy Purse, Kappa Delta Pi, education; Louise Johnson, Omicron Nu, home economics; Alice Mae Mitchell, Phi Alpha Theta, history; Bernice Oliver, literary; Ida Spaeth, Spanish; Catharine Lavey, Phi Delta, literature; Marjorie Tillis, Music Board, instrumental; Dr. W. H. Rogers, Phi Beta Kappa, scholarship; and Miss Katherine Mae Somery, Phi Kappa Phi, scholarship.

Miss Florence Tyron, of the college faculty and president of the Florida chapter of Kappa Phi, is general chairman of the honor society events.

A banquet will be held Friday night at which the representatives of the honor society will tell of something achieved or accomplished by the organization this year. Mary Knaign is in charge of the banquet, and Miss Tyron will be toastmistress. As a part of the program Julia and Merry-Gay Rosser will sing Schaefer's Serenade, accompanied by Eleanor Hamilton. The address, on "Fellowship," will be given by Dr. Seymour.

It is hoped by the present sponsors that the custom of having an annual Honors Day will be inaugurated. At this day new members of honor societies will be presented, and all honorary and individual awards will be made. An executive council will be formed to act as a governing body for all the honor groups.

Martha Graham Tells of Development of Dance

California, when she was eight years old. Her father, a prominent doctor who would have shuddered at the thought of her making dancing her life's work, never saw the dancing as unfeminine. He wanted her to live a woman's life. Miss Graham herself had no thought of becoming a dancer until she was in high school. She had studied nothing more than a little ballroom dancing, and as a matter of fact, had never actually seen theatrical dancing. While in high school she saw a picture of Ruth St. Denis and was taken by her family to Los Angeles where she saw the great dancer on the stage. "From that moment my fate was sealed," she said. "Before I had only danced in a disjointed way but now I was to make it my life's work."

After graduating from schools in Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, Miss Graham took up a serious study of the dance at Denishawn under the two great teachers for which that institution is named. She was a student-teacher at that institution and later toured with her teachers. For eight years she has toured with her own company of dancers, twelve young women, the youngest of whom is eighteen years old. Louis Horst, the musical director, was formerly at Denishawn, and has been with Miss Graham since her first concerts. He has written much of the music for the dances, which she composes herself. Miss Graham explained that the dances are written first and the music inserts so that it may interpret the dance.

Miss Graham and her company came to Tallahassee from New Orleans. Since March 4 they have been touring the country, starting in New York, going to Chicago, Omaha, Vancouver, Montana, Seattle, the California coast, Denton, Texas. From here they will go to Randolph-Macon in Lynchburg and from there to Pittsburgh and on to New York where their season will close May 2. Martha Graham's dance group has been the first to make a trans-continental tour since those of Miss St. Denis several years ago.

During the summer members of the company scatter throughout the country to rest, teach or give their own performances. Each girl earns her own living. Miss Graham herself has been studying with Mary Wigman in Germany.

Sweet Young Things Question Staff Members About Office

Inquiring Visitors Learn Reportorial Methods At Open House

"Laugh and the world laughs with you," or so say some of our great writers, but we're wondering if this holds true on visiting day in the Flambeau office.

During "open house" one could hear anything and be sure to be laughed outright at some of the questions our inquisitive visitors asked, but a good hearty laugh might have helped matters some.

The cub reporter had a grin a mile wide spread across her face as she showed the visitor proudly through the office and demonstrated how things are done on a live newspaper.

"We put a little check mark opposite your name on the bulletin board to show we have seen the assignment," she explains.

"Very methodical. Oh, that's to show that the work is completed." Here the visitor displays the newspaperwise exchange a sweet smile as they stack a pile of papers on the desk.

"The books? No, not a hat rack. But it is very handy for hanging your copy.

"Yes ,the typewriters are available as the public desires." Here the visitor seats herself before a typewriter and begins to peck away with one finger while the reporter stands by helplessly.

At regular intervals another member of the staff hurries into the office to perform some duty. She greets everyone with the assurance that she has no scoops out of her way to be nice.

"Unusual? No. The staff is always sweet and nice to each other like this, and so matter how many visitors come or close on a word of reproach is heard. We're just one big happy family."

By the time the visitor knew that during the week when there are no prying eyes, the staff members hardly notice one another. There's just too much work to be done, and yes, there's always someone to gum up the works by hurrying in at the last minute with a story about two days overdue. But then if everyone took time out to notice the other fellow and chat about the day's happenings, there just wouldn't be any Flambeau by the time Friday rolled around.

In all ways to show that work and play do not mix, thinks the reporter, but she finishes her "summary" made last week would you like to see some of the back issues?

The visitor's eye catches on a picture from the MAY 1926 issue. "Why, that's Mary Lou. I didn't know she was May Queen that year. I wonder why she never told me."

The reporter tries every way to keep the visitor away from the pile of papers to show her the current issue. Flambeau's busy mechanism, but the visitor just won't be lured. She is busy looking for familiar faces in the college days and she digs further into the pile of "old stuff."

"Open house" is at last about to close. Everyone is going to dinner, so the visitor decides she'd better go too.

The visitor thinks it's wonderful the way a college newspaper is run—especially the Flambeau.

As the visitor walks out close on the last visitor, the staff literally collapses in the chairs and desk.

"Why didn't you explain to her about the deadline?"

"You should talk. You should have spoken nicer to me when I asked to be interviewed. Now look at it, it all goes to show that even newspaper writers can be sweet when they have to.

Preceding this pledge service, the new presidents explained the ideals and purposes of the International Relations club, organization under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in universities and colleges throughout the world. The purpose is to stimulate unbiased study of international affairs and to create a better understanding of international law.

The group was saved for this study, the president continued, has never been so great as now. The European and Asiatic countries are seeking to be heard and should only the intelligent understand, education, study of racial problems, religious emphasis, and international relations can be accomplished by the International Relations club. The present extent of the club's influence Marguerite went on, is shown by the fact that there are besides the 547 groups in the United States, 144 in foreign countries.

The president concluded her talk by an outline of the International Relations club's library. The librarian has charge of these books which are sent for the use of the club members and other interested students on campus by the Carnegie Endowment Fund. This collection of books, dealing with all phases of international affairs, is kept in Miss Irish's office and as the librarian keeps a record of them through card files, students may borrow books for a reasonable length of time to use as reference or material for club discussions.

A summary of the year's work and the awarding of keys to members who have been outstanding during the year will feature the final meeting of the organization, to be held soon.

Graham herself returns to Connecticut where she rests completely for one month during the summer.

Seniors Become Dignified, Athletes Rampant As Vacation Nears

By MARY GOBER

Apparently the trend of thought during the past few weeks among students at Florida State College for Women has taken a decided turn toward plans for the summer vacation as indicated by the conversations heard almost any time in the canal eavesdropper.

The seniors are becoming more dignified day by day. Caps and gowns and diplomas take on a new meaning. The problems of getting a job become active experiences rather than merely something to think about and discuss in the class room.

Complaints of being fed up with books and flunks several times every day and there has been a decided drop in the number of drooping eyelids and nodding heads in the classroom.

Bull sessions occur more often as plans for summer fun get under way. A considerable amount of day-dreaming is indulged in by thoughts of home predominate.

At this season of the college year, a number are seized with the desire of getting a share for a summer spent in a bathing suit. This means cutting out food in order to get rid of the extra pounds here and there. It also means spending a considerable amount of time soaking up sunshine to produce that pale and wan appearance upon wearing the new bathing suit. The need for exercise is felt also by many, so the tennis courts become more popular as does golfing. Others, however, who for any number of reasons either can't take time out for these methods of exercising, get theirs from the daily-doers reported in the privacy of their rooms or from short walks after dinner. By way of keeping in the

College Girls Flock to Sessions of Legislature; Survey Representatives, Senators Hard at Work

By JANE SHARON

Students of Florida State Colleges for Women who are taking political science and economics are able to observe the government of the people, by the people and for the people in action, since 1937 has brought to Tallahassee the Florida legislature in which convenes every two years.

All the college girls dress up in their new spring outfits and make their way toward the state capitol. Many of these visitors have never been in the capitol before, while others have never had the opportunity to attend a session of the law-making body of Florida. With such excitement they are ushered into the Senate, which they find has been adjourned for the afternoon. Then they visit the House of Representatives here much to their amusement they find pages running around in much confusion and disorder. From observation and offered information, they hear several proposed bills and the arguments for and against them.

Even though the Legislature has been in session for over a short time many bills have been proposed. New acts of taxation or can race track wagering; prohibiting sale of intoxicating liquors except in certain districts and towns, and giving municipalities power to regulate by-laws and regulations to prevent marriages of persons who are insane or epileptic, or who are communicable tuberculous or venereal diseases are some of the new bills that have been introduced to the House.

A bill of much interest to the girls coming from the southern part of Florida is that which will establish the Florida Citrus Commission and the creation of a laboratory powers over the citrus industry. This bill was passed by the House with a 64 to 0 vote.

A constitutional amendment was also introduced which would prohibit sales tax levies in Florida. This proposal was caused much discussion among the students as some firmly believe that the sales tax in Florida should fall on all and not just the poor laborers for us.

In the minds of the college girls the House of Representatives seems much the more active legislator establishment while the Senate seems rather sedate and slow to win, many make trips to Camp Flastacowo for the week-end where they may enjoy the water and swimming technique. Then there will be those who are busy at work, taking summer jobs or attending summer school However, Betty Bryan, Mary Ellen Hall, also.

A renewed interest in the number of days remaining to be marked from the calendar becomes apparent. Assignments are slacked with a fervor in the hope that time will pass more quickly and exams will be passed with more ease. Term papers are pounded out on typewriters and the usual decline at the library grows in length while for the busy student, time races on.

Students May Attend Georgia Rose Exhibit

Arrangements have been made for college students to attend the rose show which is being held in Thomasville, Ga., this week-end.

A chaperon for these pleasure trips is necessary after 8:30 in the evening for freshmen and sophomores. In this instance a senior may act as a chaperon.

Students may go with legislators or friends from home if they have permission from the chaperon or the director. A special bus will be sent if enough girls sign up for it.

ing the year. It was decided to continue the study and practice of folk dances at the next meeting, which is to be held in Gainesville during November.

It was also decided that each high school teacher should be furnished with raising-sheets indicating various types of linguistic proficiency enjoyed of each student. This sheet is to be sent to the college that the student expects to attend. The purpose of the sheet is to help the latter in connecting link between the student's high school and college work.

Following the luncheon at Rollins College members of the Spanish Institute of Florida, of which Dr. Hay is director, gave a program of Spanish plays, dances and other types of Spanish entertainment.

Nance Chosen President Of Home Economics Club At Its Annual Election

At the annual election of officers of the Home Economics club held last Thursday in the lower floor of the science building Sara Nance was elected president for the coming year. Other officers elected were Irene Day, vice-president; Geraldine Alderman, secretary; Louise Wheeler, treasurer; Dorothy Broward, publicity chairman; Betty Harrison, social chairman.

The new council representatives chosen were: senior representative, Eleanor Ruff; junior representative, Bernice Overstreet; sophomore representative, Lois Watrous.

These new officers will be honored at a banquet given by the club May 7 in the tea room floor of the college dining hall. Virginia Duke and Margaret Delaney are in charge of arrangements for this affair.

Courage Displayed By Daring Visitor

A surprised table of girls was those whose gentleman-visitor accepted dare to walk around the dining hall Monday night.

Such bravery! Whereas men have been known to face a firing squad or an African jungle lion without flinching rare is the man who can face 1800 girls all by himself.

No girl imagined that such bravery existed in the male compose male visitors, until a case was brought to her attention.

The spirit of "I won't take a dare," was certainly in him, and he was determined to wait the length of the dining hall—row with the handicap of trunks hanging up and down the aisle.

He really deserved the band he got on the completion of his feat and even though he left the hall he could not enjoy the rest of his meal because of it.

No doubt he will live to greet heights some day. Any man who can face a dozen girls on the campus—what more are a party? has our admiration.

Odds Overcome Evens In Ball Game Tuesday

Well Maintained Batting Of Odd Team Causes Even's Downfall

A strong well-maintained batting average by the Odd Diamond ball team a smashing victory of 14-5 over their Even opponents in a hard-fought combat Tuesday afternoon. The Odds made a five-point lead in the second inning, which was only threatened in the third and fourth innings by a two-point gain each time for the Even team.

The Even team was in the field first, with brown pitcher Marjorie Palmer, first at bat for the Odds. Pete playing by the Odds put both Marrieson and Palmer on early in the inning. When at bat later in the inning he drove one to the left field, and went to first while Marrieson and Palmer scored for the first run of the game. Conrey came in for the second run on Hunt's single to left field which sent Pete to third and Conrey to second. Mary Ann Chesseus, next up at bat, walked to first and Pete scored for the first run by the Even team. Moore's fly caught by left fielder Wong, Marrieson made the last out of the first inning, with the score 4-1 in favor of the Odds.

Early in the second inning Palmer batted one far to the right field and went to third. At the same time Lesesy, first at bat, swiftly ran to first base and walked to first and Coburn's short fly caught by Pete Hunt, placing her on first base. Palmer came home when Agnus walked to first base in her next play. Following were Conrey, Barrington and Williamson, who batted up three more runs for the Odds. Lowery banged one far in the left field making the first home-run of the game. Lessey came in on Palmer's single to the left eighth run in the first half of the second inning while Palmer was put out on second, making the third out with the score 11-1.

The Evens at bat in the last half of the second inning changed their score steadily by consistent playing Prine. Waterhouse and Sprandlin scored the first three runs, followed by an out when Pryer was tapped on first. West came in for the fourth run and Marchesseau landed the first home-run for the Evens when she swatted one far out in center field, also placing Brown in at home. Five by Thompson and Moore were nabbed by Barrington and Lowery in the field, making three outs for the Evens, with the score at the end of the second inning 14-5.

With Helms pitching for the Evens, replacing Brown, two outs were made by the Odds early in the third inning, but they made the only run for her team in this inning. Outs were made when Barrington's close fly was caught by Helms. Coburn was out on first and Marchesseau was forced out. One point gained, the Odds still remained 13 to the Even's 6.

Viertel was pitching for the Odds and Coburn was in the position of right shortstop when the Evens with Prine at bat came in the third inning. Sprandlin, Waterhouse and Pryer bunched up three runs early in the last half. Chances for other runs were frustrated when Peacock struck out with Helms and Marchesseau on second and third, scratching three outs for the Evens and placing the score at 19-9 with the Odds still leading.

Hunt, first at bat for the Odds in the fourth inning scored a home run followed by a looping fly from Lowery that was caught by Sprandlin in the center field Palmer chalked up the second run but the Evens bowed in to put Viertel and Coburn out. The Odds added one score by two as did the Evens with runs by Prine and Moore, making the score at the end of the fourth inning 13-11, the Odds still retaining the lead. The fifth inning was marked by three runs made by the Odds early in play.

Freshman Team Suffers Defeat

Juniors Victorious in the Final Game, Scoring 12 to Frosh's 7

The junior diamond-ball team of the Class of 1937 defeated the freshmen through continuous scoring of runs in the game Tuesday afternoon. They began gaining in the second inning and kept it up throughout the game, scoring most in the second and fourth, but had individual runs were made during the second inning.

Freshmen were in the field first, with Rice at bat for the juniors. She and Helms were put out and Rice made a home-run. Four balls put Waterhouse on first with West at second and Clark up to bat. Clark made to first while West came in. Cooper made the third out, ending with one run for the junior.

Pryer, up first for the freshmen team, ran to first. Brown struck out and Marchesseau, strong at batting, landed a hard ball which brought Pryer in with the first freshman run. West caught Helms' fly ball and Thompson knocked a two-bagger, bringing in Marchesseau. Moore made the third out, leaving a score of two runs for the freshmen and one for the juniors at the end of the first inning.

Early in the second, Barrett and Raulerson went to first, Sprandlin scored a beautiful fly, assisted by Barrett. Mary Peacock made first safely as Raulerson and Sprandlin ran home. Jones

The Evens failed to rally and with two flys caught and Marchesseau struck out, ended no score, leaving the inning with a two-point gain by the Odds, the score being 16-11.

In the sixth inning with two outs at the odds, and Palmer on second base, Magnus knocked a ball which took her safely to third and brought Palmer in home. Magnus came in on the next play by Correy, Prine caught a fly of Williamson's, ending the inning and setting the Odd score up two more to an even 19. The Evens scored six players on bases but failed to make a run, leaving the score 18-11 at the end of the sixth inning.

The Odds made their final drive at the beginning of the seventh inning, Viertel coming in home on Viertel's high-flyer in the center field. Five more runs were made by the Odd team before the third out was called. The Even team, undaunted, made a last attempt but failed to score and left the game ended with the score 24-11.

Tennis Finals Scheduled For Coming Week

Victors of Semi-Finals Face Borton-Miller For Final Game

Having played off the preliminary matches during the past week, the tennis tournament has advanced to the semi-finals, the final matches which will be played next week. The victors of the Fisher-Rogers and Corey-Graham match will face Borton and Miller for the championship of the faculty student tennis tournament.

In the first match of the week Fay Corey and Dr. Viola Graham defeated Marie Joffre and Miss only borne run of the game but was called back to second. West ran home and Cooper, Barrett, Raulerson went to first, bringing in Clark. Sprediln ran as Cooper and Barrett came in. Mary Peacock was put out on first.

Frances Fryer, snappy catcher, made three strikes when the freshmen batted in the last half, fourth inning. Brown and Gladys Peacock went to first, Marchesseau hit a home-run, and Brown came in as Marchesseau was put out. Clark caught Moore's hit and ended the fourth with a score of 11-7.

In the fifth inning Jones made an out, Holmes and West made first, and Waterhouse made the second out as Marchesseau caught her fly. Clark and Cooper ran to first and Helms finished her run. Barrett was put out on first, discounting West's run.

Prine, swift freshman player, made first safely, Rice and Rogers were put out on first as Jewett socked one and got to first. Pryer struck out, ending the game with a 12-7 score.

Starting line-ups were as follows: Junior team, Jones, catcher; Helms, pitcher; West, first

The only substitution was in the fifth inning when Jewett took Brown's place as pitcher and Brown became center fielder.

Miss Betty Washburn and Miss Ray Fraser were umpires.

Awed "Red Cape" Often Thwarted in Attempts To Become Expert by Competition Swimmers

Clearing one lane for those practicing for the swimming meet does not eliminate all difficulties for either them or the more inexperienced swimmers.

Marie Davis 6-2, 6-3. Due to the consistency and speed of the Corey-Graham team, their opponents were kept on the defensive throughout both sets.

Corey started the match with her constant service. From then on the games were played by the Corey-Graham team with speed and depth and consistent control of shots. In the first set, three straight games went to the Corey-Graham team; but in the fourth game with Joffre serving her accurate service, the Joffre-Davis team rallied and took the game. Corey, by her serve, took the next game; Davis, the next, and Graham took set game; rapid second set was a steady struggle on the part of the Joffre-Davis team, but Corey and Graham took a love set.

The Helmlein-Horton, Miller-Borton match failed to produce the fireworks expected by campus tennis fans. Accuracy and consistency clashed again as the Miller-Borton team won rapid strikes in the first set to win, 6-0. In the second set, the Helmlein-

Borton team seemed to suffer most. Some stand around in awed wonder for a time, then gazing quickly in all directions to see how the chances are for getting across the pool safely, they take a deep breath to screw their courage to the sticking place and plunge. They may get a fourth of the way across the pool when bump—the gasping beginner appears on the verge of drowning.

Judy Flint led in the elementary back stroke and Merrydee Rosner and Gene Curry, 2nd for second place.

In the twenty-five yard breast stroke, Sarah Tidal placed first, Midge Marwick second, Irma Inman third, and Betty White fourth.

In the side stroke, an event for form, Ida Mae Mackemson took first place and Mackemson and McClain, Virginia and Ernestine Mackemson, tied for second.

Swimmer Breaks Former Record

Seniors Take First Place, Freshmen Win Second Place in Meet

Martha Mackemson broke her former record for the back crawl and led the seniors to first place in the inter-class swimming meet held Monday afternoon in the college pool. Freshmen took second place, and sophomores placed second, with the junior team placing fourth.

In the first event of the meet, the twenty-five yard free style, Martha Mackemson came in first with Florence Ward as a close second. Ernestine Mackemson placed third.

The breast stroke, for form, was a tie between Sarah Hethcox, Irma Ingell, Dot Marwick, and Margaret Wolcott.

In the twenty-five yard crawl in which Mackemson broke her record, the senior led about two lengths in the lead. Virginia Mackemson, second. Carolyn Collins third. and Dot Colburn, fourth.

Ran 2 Record-Smashing 440 Yd. Dashes in One Day!

RAY ELLINWOOD, sensational track star of Oklahoma University of Chicago, clipped a second off the world's indoor 440-yard dash record in his first college meet.

HE DUPLICATED the feat 20 minutes later as anchor man on the relay team. Ray's start enables him to pass into the lead at the crack of the gun.

Home Runs on Diamond-ball Field Strike Admiration to Heart of C Health Students

Some of the C health students who saw the Odd-Even diamond ball game Wednesday thought it would be the proper honor on campus to make Mortar Board or strike a home run in the Odd-Even game.

While waiting for the game to start one girl pretended her shorthand, another glanced over the all-powerful notebook, and one read a fashion magazine, people who strolled all the time.

Cheers from the sidelines? "Let's start over," "That would have been pretty if it had hit a little nearer the ball" or "I'd like to take that job out there 'cause they never do anything" were some of the remarks that were bandied about. The girl stooped to her shorthand; the notebook lay forgotten.

Even a C health student. "That was a ball an inning. I hope they don't hit that one." Back from the sidelines: "Edith went to Jacksonville to keep from taking her in the house for breakfast." "I'll be sorry when I graduate." "I won't; I want to live." "Well, I'm living now" and "Oh, you hush, you're not."

Then, more cheers from the sidelines, supporters hollering for loyal members of the team, yells mingled with remarks: "I've got to go." "Well, I'm required to come out here. Wait till the inning's over." "She isn't going to check the roll again is she?" "Look a home run."

"Do you know what the score is?"

up, struck out. Helms and West hit two-baggers, and Peacock and Helms came in. Waterhouse and Clark made the other two outs. The score was 6-2.

Louise Prine, freshman shortstop, hit a hard one and ran to second, but was sent back to first base. Rice and Jewett went to first, Rogers made an out, and Pryer ran to first, bringing in Prine and Rice. Brown and Marchesseau ran, Jewett came in, and Gladys Peacock hit a pretty one and ran to first as Pryer came in. Thompson's ball was caught by West on first, putting her out, discounting Marchesseau's run, and ending the second inning with a 6-6 score.

During the third inning Cooper was put out when Gladys Peacock caught her ball. Barrett, Raulerson, and Sprandlin ran to first and Raulerson was put out on second. Barrett came in with the only run for the juniors. Mary Peacock ran to first, and Jones was put out.

Sidney Moore, freshman, hit a foul, then immediately socked a hard ball and ran to first. Prine and Rice ran to first and Moore was put out on second. Jewett came to bat, hit a pretty fly, but was put out on first as Prine ran to third. Rogers was also put out and Prine came in. At the end of the third inning the juniors were winning with a 7-6 score. Fryer struck out, fourth inning, and Waterhouse was put out on first. Nan Clark, strong junior third-baseman, made the

Foreign Movies Help Peace Movement

Last week the Emergency Peace Campaign sponsored a new feature on the campus—a foreign motion picture. The film, "The Road to Life," a dramatic portrayal of the establishment of children's colonies in Russia, was the first in a series that the group will bring here if audiences to the first few pictures warrant their continuance.

The introduction of such a project to the campus indicates a little more than just another entertainment feature for college students. Last week's film showed that the movies do have a definite entertainment value. But the important thing is that the local peace group has realized the fact that a genuine international peace must be based on mutual understanding. Motion pictures are perhaps one of the most powerful agencies in promoting such international understanding. In the present crisis of international affairs, in the welter of conflicting political and social ideas, and in the rising flood of nationalism that is overflowing Europe even to our own boundaries any means of breaking down the hostile feelings that will inevitably lead to war are very valuable. The Emergency Peace Campaign acts in line with its peace objectives and does a definite service to the campus in sponsoring these pictures.

You Can Lead a Horse To Water, But—

In the last two N. S. F. A. forums the issue of compulsory convocation was the subject of heated discussions. The first forum's recommendation that compulsory attendance at convocation be lifted gradually was apparently interpreted literally by Senate which reached a decision that compulsory convocation be maintained next year with three cuts a semester permitted each student. Evidently the Senate considered the matter closed, although N. S. F. A. had voted to continue the discussion at its next meeting.

The second N. S. F. A. forum, following the Senate session, by a majority vote of fourteen to four suggested that compulsory convocation be abolished on this campus that student announcements be made by means of weekly or bi-weekly bulletins, with special announcements to be made in the college dining room; that the eleven-thirty hour on Tuesdays be left open for student body meetings, the subject of which to be publicized in advance. Beginning this week C. G. A. has authorized the use of bulletins for announcements during the remainder of the year, this as an experiment. The convocation question however, was not raised in the Senate meeting held Wednesday.

Opposition to the proposed abolishment of compulsory convocation is based upon the belief that the principal of compulsion is wrong but a necessity since convocation is of educational value and students would not attend unless compelled to do so.

On the other hand, those who favor abolishment contend that convocation cannot be truly educational as long as it is compulsory applying to the present situation the old adage. You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink. Supporters of N. S. F. A.'s second recommendation realize that with the lifting of the compulsory ban there would probably be a large decrease in convocation attendance at first. Yet they believe that in the long run interesting and worthwhile convocational programs would foster such a strong student spirit that the desirability of attendance would be unquestioned.

General inquiry among students has revealed a disheartening attitude hardly thought to be an educational merit. Voiced it is, if dislike being forced to attend convocation, but I am glad it is compulsory. otherwise I wouldn't go." This expression causes us to wonder if compulsory convocation is at all conducive to that development of maturity of mind, independent thinking, and discerning judgment which college supposedly gives a student.

The convocation issue is still with us. The Flambeau welcomes student opinions on this question in its pro and con column. The Reader Writes.

Co-education Again to the Fore

Much has been said about co-educational institutions of higher learning becoming a part of, the Florida state system of education, but always with an eye to the future, to some uptopian condition that will be arrived at many years hence. We talk about it with our tongues in our cheek, rather furtively contemplating what it would be like when men and women, egg mingle together on the same state campus, but actually we do nothing further about an idea of this sort, unless useless sighs and loose talk can be considered support.

Last week Representative Gray from Bay county introduced a bill in the house that if passed will permit male students to attend and have the same privileges and rights as are given to students enrolled at Florida State college."

Whether this proposal will go any farther than the committee room is of course a question, but the important fact is that co-education has come to the fore and has been brought to a place in the minds of the people by forces outside our own immediate circle. This should bring some of these nebulous and sketchy ideas of our own to a head and if we are interested in this subject, which we undoubtedly should be, we should make our interests known.

College women often fail to realize the power they might be able to exert in the direction that vitally concerns them, either now or in the future. Florida State college women also forget that their college is more fortunately located than many institutions—in the state capital, the hub of state affairs.

We don't propose to set forth here the pros and cons for co-education for this college or for the University of Florida, for they are immaterial. However this legislative proposal and other indications point to a time in the near future when something will be decided upon, one way or another, and the attitude of the co-ed college women want to stand on the sidelines and take no part or do we want to exercise our rightful privileges in furthering a plan or project.

It's easy enough to sponsor "causes" that have no direct bearing on ourselves, ones that need no thinking about or demand no deliberation, but when we are faced with questions that concern us directly we become blind to the fairness or we lose our nerve. It's an old story about preparing ourselves now to be independent thinkers for the time when we are set at large in the world, but it's one worth repeating. Now is the time to do a little apprenticing in the various fields that will have to be faced or ignored when we leave college and now is the time to set up values and principles that will guide us in those fields. In other words we can grow accustomed to selecting those "causes" that we feel, after some thought will effect us and therefore need our support or condemnation.

With the organization this week by the college government association of the Twenty-one club Florida State has another progressive step in women's education.

The club is for the purpose of stimulating an active interest in state and national politics. At a time when the world is steep with conflicting social and political theories it is vastly important that women leaving college gates have a knowledge of voting principle and of women's participation in politics which will enable them to serve their communities as intelligent voting citizens.

Open to all Seniors and to undergraduates twenty-one years of age or over, the Twenty-one club provides adequate opportunity for us to learn how we may take an active part in our government.

This Week Neutrality, Labor Hold Roosevelt's Attention

While stylettos here are celebrating May Day around the dances around ribbon-decked May poles, shouting with glee at the coronation of one of their number to the exalted position of Queen of the day, the outside world is also making preparations, or watching the preparations that are being made for the coronation of George VI. Only yesterday General John J. Pershing packed his 1890 trunks and embarked on the liner President Harding to attend the ceremonies of May 12 at Westminister Abbey.

May day will be less pleasant for many due to the rapid drop in the stock market which was occasioned by President Roosevelt's warning against the public's participating in speculation.

This year's market is declared by those who have watched its variations for many years, is entirely unpredictable as it is influenced so greatly by political action.

The Reader Writes

In regard to the masculine and feminine views of the Junior-Senior prom which were printed in this column last week there are a few points which need clarification.

The checking out after the dance was over was purely a mistake. The time for the dance had changed during the evening and there was a misunderstanding concerning the time instructions from one group to another. All students who left the prom before the evening was over were asked to sign out on leaving but this was not to be done at the conclusion of the prom. All those in charge of the Junior-Senior prom, including faculty and administration, were equally surprised at the signing out requirement at the exit, but did not learn of it until all students had signed out. The faculty decision on arrangements reserves this incovenience.Intervals will be fall or expressed when the causes of this mistake are explained.

As to the embarrassment caused to the students who were asked to report, themselves for coming in late it was only the duty of the directors as they were not aware of the unforeseen situation described above. However no one was asked directly from the prom to be place of residence was penalized.

The college authorities gave us the opportunity of having an intermission and allowing girls to smoke in the space between Bryan and the dining hall providing we would incorporate this with the dance at the affair. It was at first understood that an orchestra would be late over this area, decorating it and selling bottled drinks, but when it later came to the attention that this organization was unlicensed to sell drinks the committee found it impossible to include this area in the decorations because of lack of funds. It seemed to be the opinion of the juniors and seniors that merely to add this area with no decorations and no chance to sell drinks from various tables would lessen the formality of the occasion. Since the area could not be made solely a smoking and lounging room the actual part of the prom arrangements, the result was no information and no smoking.

The committee hopes that the juniors and seniors of F. S. C. W. and their dates of April 16th will overlook these unforeseen inconveniences and will remember only the music, entertainment, punch, and fun of the prom.

Signed,
—Prom Committee.

Collegiate Comback

One of THE events of the year took place last Tuesday night after the annual mortar board ceremony, "Mortified" (shall we say honorary?), a recently organized group, tapped a chosen few. Their sponsor is the ever mortified Jimmy Durante (any objections from Mr. Durante overruled) and their color is a blush red. Unlike some other organizations on campus, they admit they're dumb and don't have secrets.

We learn from the Cincinnati News Record that a very timely play was presented at the University of Cincinnati last week. The play, "Flowers of the Forest" by John Van Druten, coincided with the nation wide college anti-war strikes and is a protest against war. The board seems to correspond with our orientation program.

"Fundamentalism and the High Learning"

By John A. Rice

In answer to two articles publish Harpers last autumn in which Dr. Robe Hutchins, president of the University of cago, advocated a return to the study classics, Alexander Meiklejohn, a profes classics at Black Mountain college, Asheville, N. C., has himself put into practice a curriculum based upon the classics as divorced from experience.

Mr. Rice believes that education should be obtained entirely from any kind of ancient or modern, but should come through observation and experiment, also from things we are told all we need to know is how we cannot understand what it means until by living, he says.

The Black Mountain professor sums up ideas with this statement: "Education instead of being the acquisition of a stock of fundamental ideas may mean learning of a common way of doing things, a way of approach, a method of dealing with ideas or anything else. What you learn is what you know is the important thing to know is not enough."

"Consuming Education"

By Edward A. Richards

A second argument in answer to Pres Hutchins's two articles is set forth in the issue of Harpers by Edward A. Richards, associate director of university extension in Columbia university. Disagreeing with Dr. Hutchins, who says that the American society is confused because of its attempt to adult education, Mr. Richards thinks the greatest fault of the university is the lack of attention to non-professional adult education.

The author believes that the universities are genuinely creative that they are not as the point of production, but as the point of distribution. They exert much within themselves and not outside themselves.

When educational institutions admit the teaching of non-professional adults as important as that of professional students and organize adequate courses to be made available to the public, the universities will have a great step toward filling the needs of the millions of Americans who have left their thirties with little or no formal training.

Our Feminized United States

By Struthers Burt

The new world is a Woman's world, men think Struthers Burt in the Harpers article he has written under that caption. Burt adds further that it is his belief that the United States is, with the exception of Australia and New Zealand, the most feminized country in existence. It is his humble opinion that men have lost the power they once had as their men as the women of the United States.

Mr. Burt says that although women are supposed to enjoy all the advantages of life he thinks that all this is just surface phenomena. He states that this question of what is really important to women and to them and what they influence over them. The very fact, Mr. Burt writes, that society assumes that female domination exists in all natural laws, whereas it never does with women to assume a similar premise, makes us on the other hand, believe that man's still in his heaven and all's right with the world.

Every supposed manifestation of such dominance in the United States can be traced to her economic independence. Woman's parent importance in the home, the purse and our husbanding, the capitalistic system. The modern Cinderella's presents are either diamonds or pocketbook, and the rest can come out of it.

Maybe Parents Know Something

By Mary Everett

According to Mary Everett in the Forum, the world has been shifting rapidly regarding many things during the past period, particularly parents who are making surprising changes in their attitudes toward their duties as guardians of young lives. Parents of the present day mothers have come more and more to rely on the advice and direction of laboratories and the upbringing of their children is less and less on such wisdom and experience as they themselves may chance to possess.

The author is convinced that a terrible amount of damage has been done by ill-directed contemplation in various magazines certain people are preaching the doctrine several problems of adolescence. Miss Everett thinks that she is charitable to even the least of the advice given concerning these various aids to parents to be taken at the source, corrupted only in the minds by over-credulous and over-zealous writers and mothers.

Miss Everett adds that the reason for this system immediately from the pressure of admiration of the American people for the achievements of science, which, in the social and natural sphere, are well within the admiration lavished on them. But in the field of behavior and morals, will anything be the best understanding of science admittedly as yet hardly more than a

All the Glory Of Coronation Marks Exhibit

Campus Literary Royalty Honored by Display In Library

By BLANTON BARRETT

Wrath of purple ermine and cloth of sable with arms of gould and or, coronation ceremonies with all attendant pomp and circumstance, and on our campus the recognition of literary royalty of years past and present. The history of England in the week of the publications' jamboree gives evidence of the glory that may await the "cub" at the end of her college apprenticeship. It reminds the experienced old 'news hounds" of the standards that are considered of value. The razzed-edged papers bear names of students of the Chi Alpha and Chi Delia Phi and the scattered editions in the case revive memories of red letter achievements in the history of the Flambeau and the Rattler.

Pictures of handsome city editors, of dizzling wraps, of intense chats with reporters on the Clarion Call, flash into the mind as we scan through the files while she hears that friend Tap plans to enter the profession. Perhaps it was the pictures that lured Tap into the work. But it is the staccato beat of type setting, the steady roar of linotype machines, the clanking of rolling presses, the memory of long hot chases after a story that didn't turn out as well after all, the thrill of that copy that was deliberately mangered by the blue pencil of the editor, that will hold her in the game when she realizes that she is going to settle down with her ball of yarn and her cat in a village where there are no telephones and where the only newspaper is a weekly mimeographed gossip sheet.

All these latter pictures are dwelled with reverence by others. The significance of the press and its power, the defeats and disappointments which await the woman in the newspaper world, the beating of the pressure in the edition bearing a front page byline story is thrown off in copy after copy of beautiful, inky sheets, in the books on display in the exhibit. In them the outside world's version of the work is given. While above the writers of the "parads" rests the crown of the new All-American award.

Members of Newman Club Elect Joffre President

At a meeting of the Newman club, which was held at the Alpha Xi Delta house last Wednesday night, officers were elected for the coming year. Those chosen were Marie Joffre, president; Dot Hoffman, vice president; Bernetta Saunders, secretary; Honor Coleman, corresponding secretary; Martha Robins, recording secretary; Mercedes Garriga, parliamentarian, and Vernon Macfarlane, athletic manager.

In connection with the peace movement on campus a talk was given by Nan O'Shaughnessy concerning "The Catholic Church and World Peace," after which Father William J. Carroll, chaplain of the club, led an open discussion on the topic.

The tea served and an informal discussion was held concerning plans for the club next year.

New Students Register

Two hundred new students have registered for the school year 1937-38, which is approximately 100 more then were registered at this time last year, according to Miss McNeil in the President's office. There have also been 440 registrations from students now in school and there still remains available space in the dormitories for 452 students. Altogether the dormitories hold 1102.

No Escape Is Likely Where Germs Live

Micro-organisms Serve As Well as Hinder Human Beings

You may be able to escape probation list and avoid gymnasium classes, but the one thing you can not get away from is the 300,000 bacteria that you inhale daily, or the 50,000 bacteria that infect your coffee cup, whether it be an ambrosia or a purchase from the five and ten cent store.

These are only a few of the interesting facts that students become come in contact with every day.

It could be said that bacteria are everywhere except for the cold mountain peaks, glaciers and the ocean possess the only atmosphere free from germs and microorganisms, and since these places are hardly accessible for most college girls, they as well will resign ourselves to our fate.

Although football games, theaters, and dance halls are the scene of all collegiate entertainment, they invite microscopic unwanted genius, for moving wheels, hurrying feet, and talk lets from the mouth of the speaking individual all add their quota of bacteria.

In fact, anything increasing the suspended particles in the atmosphere usually increases the microbal contents. Where there is dust, there is bacteria, and dust is always with us, as is ascertained when those minute dust particles as they filter through a ray of sunlight; that streams across a room.

It would be impossible for us to list them hard to band, for the bacteria have no code such as limiting their classification to someone their own use. They vary from five to forty microns in length, a micron being one twenty-five thousandth of an inch. Their classification is capable of lowering itself to such a level. The Pfeiffer bacillus, for instance, was thought to cause influenza, is one of the smallest known, while the bacteria causing relapsing fever is the largest known. Bacters have also a choice in regard to habitats for they can make themselves comfortable in such a door knob, car straps, counters, books, money, clothes, and even skin. They inclined to establish a colony on that most superior of all animals, human girl.

Yet it must be remembered that they are not all harmful. They help us in a thousand and one ways which we little suspect. The germs upon Ukan barren rock into fertile fields from which man can gather his golden sheaves of wheat or his deep green loads of hay; bacteria give the soil its most essential element, nitrogen; they are the universal scavengers that lick up the dead bodies of plants and animals; they are the architects which have built and are building the chalk deposits of the world.

Bacteria give to cheeses, butter, bread and wines their characteristic flavors; they take part in the fermenting of skins, the retting of flax, the curing of tobacco, the flavoring of coffee and cocoa, and the making of indigo from the indigo plant.

On the other hand, bacteria are solely responsible for the diseases which are the curse of mankind. Only through years of work has man been able to check the scourge of small pox and yellow fever which bacteria have caused. Kidney troubles, as well as measles, rabies, all attribute their formidable power to these micro-organisms. If your condemnation is your major problem, if blackheads indicate a popular soul in the most conspicuous places, you may assign bacteria as the culprit, for they work their way into the skin, clogging the pores, and causing the blackheads that mar the countenance which the mirror so reflects.

It is with these harmful and beneficial microorganisms that the bacteriology students of the Florida State College struggles as she transforms them to culture media, inoculates them, and studies them under the compound microscope. The college girl in bacteriology is learning the vast influence and the importance of these germs.

Bacteria have an advantage in that they multiply so fast that in a generation every half hour, for such a record warrants no competition. With such rapidity, we can easily see that a battle of man vs. bacteria would prove even more interesting and influential than Braddock vs. Lewis. Bacteria could not be entirely checked, for they are far too beneficial, but we must learn what their processes are and how to govern them.

Bacteria rule the world and man, for man is dependent upon them from the day of his birth until the hour of his death, and even at that hour they come to take possession of him. Bacteria have defeated armies and destroyed cities. Nations which have been the glory of the world have gone down before them. They are no respecters of persons nor are they governed by the commands of rulers. The world is not the college girl's alone. She shares it with an organism from five to forty microns in length.

Compulsory Convocation For Two More Years is Assured

Students' Lack of Interest Causes Senate Vote Favoring Chapel

By RUTH ATKINSON

Compulsory convocation, which has been subject to almost as much complaint from students this year as Saturday classes, came in for another and deciding bit of attention recently when the student senate passed on a plan which favors compulsory convocation for two years, but which will work towards optional attendance at the end of that time. Meanwhile, in order to lessen the hardship which demands that students give one hour a week to their college government, and also to appease the Independents who rebel at the shouldn't have to be forced to do things, the senate plan includes a different type of convocation each semester for the next two years in preparation for finally accepting the ideal of an optional convocation which this year, in spite of the fact that the programs which have been presented have been on a decidedly higher level of entertainment. The rule which demands the payins of a twenty-five cent fine for every unexcused absence from convocation has also been in existence for an equal number of years, and has never been the cause of dissatisfaction until this year. All of this is due to the fact that the present administration is the first to actually enforce the rule and when students found that they had to live up to a rule that they had never been interested in before, the complaints started and the group favoring optional attendance has continually gained strength.

It would be impossible to improve the programs unless a capacity audience could be secured, since the administration declares that good speakers could not be invited to appear before a handful of auditoria.

As a practical example of the failure of optional attendance at a meeting which should have been of the greatest interest to students is the political rally which was held the night before campus elections. At the meeting candidates for offices were introduced and given an opportunity to make their campaign speeches. This meeting held more excitement than any program that could have been arranged for presentation in convocation, and yet only a disconcertingly small number of students attended.

The rule of compulsory attendance to a weekly convocation has been in effect at the college for a number of years, but has never been the cause of complaint until this year, in spite of the fact that the programs which have been presented have been on a decidedly higher level of entertainment. The rule which demands the payins of a twenty-five cent fine for every unexcused absence from convocation has also been in existence for an equal number of years, and has never been the cause of dissatisfaction until this year. All of this is due to the fact that the present administration is the first to actually enforce the rule and when students found that they had to live up to a rule that they had never been interested in before, the complaints started and the group favoring optional attendance has continually gained strength.

Essay Contest Is Announced

Held to Stimulate Study Of Russia's Position In World Affairs

The press department of the publication, Soviet Russia Today, has announced a $1,000 prize for an essay of 500 words to be written on the subject, "What the Soviet Union Means to Humanity." The contest begins now and ends September 15, 1937.

The purpose of this contest is to stimulate further study of Russia's place in world affairs and to develop a clearer analysis of its social scene and its significance. The contest is open to everyone and may deal with any phase of the subject.

A first prize of $500 will be awarded, a second prize of $150, a third prize of $100, and there will be thirty other prizes ranging from $25 to $5.

Among the judges who will pass on the manuscripts are Harry Elmer Barnes, American historian, author, and newspaper columnist; Erskine Caldwell author of "Tobacco Road," Oliver La Farge, author of "Laughing Boy," Clifford Odets, playwright.

All essays must be submitted on the subject, "What the Soviet Union Means to Humanity. They should be 500 words or less written or typewritten on one side of paper. The first page of the manuscript should include the author's name, occupation, and address.

Only manuscripts postmarked September 15 or earlier will be considered, and contestants are urged to agree to accept the decision of the judges as final.

Essays will be judged on the basis of content, and value in spreading among the American people a true understanding of the Soviet Union. Originality will count, and legibility is an asset.

In case of tie, duplicate prizes will be awarded. All essays should be sent to the contest committee Soviet Russia Today, 824 Broadway New York City.

Twenty-One Club Organiged To Instruct Young Voters

Irish Notes Importance Of Organized Groups In Politics

"I believe that membership in the Woman's club is perhaps the greatest potentiality in the women voters' equipment." said Miss Maxan Irish to a group of charter members of the Twenty-One club at their open forum, Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 in the Augusta Conradi little theatre. The Women's clubs have a decided advantage in the game of pressure politics for they are an organized group of such size that a politician anxious of his job cannot ignore them."

This address was the first of a series of four to be presented by the college government association to members of the Twenty-One club. Seniors and understanding over twenty-one, are eligible for membership in this organization of which the purpose is to give young women voters a practical knowledge of suffrage and citizenship requirements and responsibilities. The club will meet on Wednesdays at 4:30 in the Augusta Conradi little theatre. The speaker for the next forum will be Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey on "Women in Politics."

Miss Irish began her talk by outlining the rise of the women's suffrage movement from its beginnings in Kentucky in 1838 when widows with children in school were allowed the privilege of voting in school elections. Describing the slow process by which women began to acquire further rights, she mentioned Wyoming as a pioneer state because in 1890 it granted women the constitutional right to vote in all elections and to hold public office. She ascribed the upward turn of the suffrazist movement at the beginning of the twentieth century to the host of liberated housewives who joined the ranks. "The "movement suddenly became eminently respectable," she remarked, "and positively militant, and the great political struggle of the world was presumably ended in the United States with triumph for the women with the passage of the nineteenth amendment."

However Miss Irish pointed out in the four presidential elections and echt congressional campaigns since this amendment was once has the electoral power of women equaled that of the men. Not until the number of women's ballots approximates the number of men's ballots can women hope to make any effectual impression on our political order.

The second part of Miss Irish's address contained an explanation of the suffrage qualifications for voters in Florida, which include United States citizenship, a twelve-month residence in county, and a residence requirement of one year in the state and six months in a county There is also required registration and a poll tax of one dollar a year. The intricacies of the voting procedure, the long ballot, the system of primaries the practicalities of party membership and the provisions for absentee voting were outlined.

In concluding, Miss Irish remarked, "I do not know why women will not go to the polls. I think it is largely inertia and indifference coupled in many cases with some Victorian ideas of propriety. I consider it positively shameful if not criminal, for adult American citizens, men or women, to neglect the primary privilege of the democratic and to sell out the general welfare for their personal convenience."

Moore Directs Program Of National Home Week

Miss Virginia P. Moore, of the home demonstration staff at Florida State college, is directing the observance of National Better Homes week in Florida, April 25 to May 1.

Miss Moore said that the churches, civic clubs, and the merchants of Florida are cooperating in this observance. The program of the week presents projects which have been accomplished in various phases of home improvement, year-round orchards, beautified grounds, the interiors in old houses, and electrification and air-conditioning are among the developments to be illustrated in a series of tours in many communities in the state.

French Comedy Will Be Given Again Tonight

Big Audience Sees First School for Husbands" Performance

BEING SPONSORED BY MORTAR BOARD

Speech Students, Dancing Classes, Orchestra Are in Play

In answer to Mortar Board's announcement of "The School for Husbands," a speech department play which it is sponsoring, a large audience greeted the first performance last night in the Augusta Conrad theater. This production is also given again tonight.

Based on French manners of the seventeenth century Jean-French comedy by Molière, "The School for Husbands" has been given a modern twist by the authors Lawrence Langner and Arthur Guiterman. It is a comedy full of sly humor and clever situations which play is a delightful bit of entertainment. Using appropriate color and the musical interludes provided by the State Theater orchestra and the dancing scenes given by members of the modern dance class.

Betty Peck, senior speech student, leads the cast in excellent characterizations which have been enacted in the upper classmen of a French comedy. Betty wins the part of Sganarella who has been betrothed to Isabelle, who is shirley Pemberton, in addition, only to have her in the end after much intrigue and plays-on among the entire cast. Shirley Burnam, Valere, the right-hand-man, puts much spirit into the part of the lover who seeks to win favors to everyone but Sganarella.

Betty Ashton as the flippe si ering girl, Lisette, and Frances Cook as Leonor, sister of Isabelle and who is much more successful in her affairs of the heart, provide the other major

Summer Course Marks Jubilee

Twenty-fifth Year Of Home Demonstration Work Completed

In celebration of its establishment in Florida 25 years ago the demonstration work is now being its jubilee year, and all units of the year will follow the jubilee theme.

The annual short course, a series of instruction in home demonstration work, will be held at Florida State College for Women from June 7 to 12. Home demonstration agents in each county are taking 4-H club days in addition to the scholarship students who will attend the short course. It is planned to have some of the club girls who attended the 25th short course present during the one held this summer.

During the summer months 4-H club camps, miniature short courses in themselves, will be held by the state. There are two 4-H club camps, one in Tallahassee and one in Marianna.

This fall there will be a conference of all extension workers here in Tallahassee. The home demonstration work is carried on as a part of the agricultural extension service in connection with the University of Florida, Florida State College for Women, the various counties of Florida, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Home Demonstration work has for its main purpose the betterment of improvement of the homes and welfare and growth of rural life in Florida. The county is the unit of work for both women and girls and is organized to fit the needs of the farm family. Demonstrations are established and developed in the home by members of the family in food, clothing, the improvement of the home and its surroundings, the wise use of as well as the development of activities of community interest.

Home demonstration work, in addition to serving in every state, is serving in Puerto Rico, Alaska, Hawaii and the Philippines.

Rotary Club Invites Students to Luncheon

The Tallahassee branch of the International Rotary club will entertain college students who are daughters of Rotarians at a luncheon at a downtown hotel on Wednesday at 1:15.

All students who wish to attend the luncheon must register in Mr. J. G. Hollum's office in the James D. Westcott, Jr., Memorial building by noon on Monday. Transportation will be furnished from Bryan Hall at 1 o'clock Wednesday.

First Annual 'Honors Day' Is Sponsored

11 National Societies Have Special Convocation Tuesday Morning

The first "Honors Day" at Florida State college sponsored by the eleven national honorary societies on the campus was inaugurated in convocation last Tuesday. This program concluded a get-together banquet last Friday night when members of all these societies were in the lower dining hall.

Dr. Conradi Speaks

The program led by Miss Florence Tyson included introduction of representatives of the honoraries who gave short talks on the purposes of their organization. Dr. Edward Conradi led the devotionals, and Dr. R. L. Eyman spoke on "Our Broadening Horizon." The faculty trio, composed of Miss Alice Letts, violin; Miss Augusta Murphy and Owen Sellers, provided the music for the occasion.

Dr. Conradi used as his text, "Seek the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and then stressed the fact that the students of today must come to realize that "truth is the only real goal, that the measure of truth which is found in the life of any individual is the only standard of success. He pointed out a tendency to escape, and seeking for that truth never stops, for when he thinks that education he himself is finished. The great builders of the world have been seekers of truth, he stated. "Truth in the world of today is a commodity, principle or life," the speaker concluded.

Points to Twelve

Dr. Eyman in his talk pointed to the story of the twelve which sent the spies of the sea to lay its eggs and then returns to the sea. The twelve spies are likened to the little turtles, in their turn, back to the sea. The question then is why the turtles do not go inland. Several scientists found no reason except that the broad and bright horizon led them back to the sea. It is when the horizon is cut off and clouded that the turtles become confused.

Class Discussions on Peace Center Around World Trade

Students Believe International Dealings Of Commercial Factions May Serve To Augment Pacific Spirit

By HAZEL ADAMS

In the class room discussions, which were a portion of the program carried out on the campus as a part of the Peace day schedule, foreign trade was discussed as one of the means to peace and prosperity.

Foreign trade is a method by which not only strong ties can be formed between nations and races, but also a means of establishing jobs for a large percentage of the people in the world.

According to government and economic statistics, there are between 4,000,000 and 7,000,000 jobs would be created in the manufacturing while the countries involved in the inter-trade interests were benefited economically financially, they would at the same time be benefited in the more dependent feeling upon each other. Through this bond formed in exchanging merchandise countries would come to realize that life can be richer and more profitable when spent in friendly relations.

However, we can never expect world peace until we have first established peace at home among our own fellow countrymen. The world, shaken by the suffering jobless millions of America,

Students Pass Two Important New CGA Rules

Change in Methods Of Electing Chairmen Discussed

ALL OFFICERS ARE LIABLE TO REMOVAL

Petitions Must Initiate Any Action For Impeachment

Two important changes made in government rules by a student vot in convocation Tuesday were the provisions for impeachment of C.G.A. officers and the change in the rules regarding election of vice-house chairmen.

In regard to the rules for impeachment it was determined that all officers of the College Government Association may be elected at a general student body election and be subject to impeachment and trial upon the promulgation of the small minute, constant neglect of duty, marked inability to meet requirements of office, and disregard of C.G.A. regulations.

Petition Precedes Action

Impeachment proceedings may be initiated by a petition of twenty-five students. The application presented to the student senate, which must consider the petition within forty-eight hours after receiving it. Trial for impeachment must be held within a two-thirds vote of the members of the senate, if two-thirds fail to reject the request, a petition signed by one hundred members of the student body must be filed with Registrar Dickery.

The court trying the case will consist of the student senate, exchairs of the appointed members, the presidiary, Ruth Brachet of the lower court. The presiding officer of the court of impeachment judiciary, unless she is for some reason ineligible, in which case the vice-president will preside the president of C.G.A. in cases in which the president presides, the chairman will be the next officer in authority in the association.

The trial will be called by the presiding officer, and will be held within one week from the date of the filing of petition with the senate. The court will be in continuous session during the trial. The decision will be made by the court by secret ballot with to fix the penalty. If the penalty includes removal from office, the senate is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for filling the office vacated by the impeached body or senate election; the penalty will be left entirely dependent upon the importance of the office made vacant and the length of time remaining in the term.

The trial will be open to members of the student body and the faculty. An officer who is on trial will be temporarily suspended from office.

The presiding officer will appoint a clerk of the court. Mr. Marion Hay, Dr. Ralph Lee Eyman, and Miss Thelma Smith.

Doyle Becomes F.A.C.U. Head For New Year

Registrar Here Elected At Lakeland Meeting Of College Delegates

At the fourth meeting of the Florida Association of College Clubs and Universities in Lake land on April 23-24, S. R. Doyle, registrar, was elected president for the year. The next meeting of F.A.C.U. will be held on the campus in April, 1938.

Representatives from all colleges and universities in the state attended the meeting of the association, which had its beginning in the fall of 1936. The purpose of organization is to bring about better relationships between the colleges of Florida and better understanding of current problems facing the schools.

Dr. David Eyman, professor of education at Rollins college, was principal speaker at the first meeting of the association. His theme was what is expected of education in the high schools in the future. Dr. Barry Bingham, president of Southern college, led the discussions on what is expected of the colleges in the future. The theme around which each meeting of the association revolved was "What May We Expect of Education in the Future."

Representatives from this college at the meeting were Dr. Doyle, Dr. Ralph Lee Eyman, Miss Thelma Smith.

Dr. Cotterill Presents Paper Dealing With Timing Of History Association

Dr. R. S. Cotterill, professor of history, last Thursday presented a paper on the southern frontier in the northwest at meetings of 1790 and 1794 before the Mississippi Valley Historical association assembled for its annual meeting in St. Louis.

Dr. Cotterill's book, "The Old South," which he edited last year, is now ready for use in the text in the University of Virginia, where he plans to teach this subject next.

The convention, which was held under the joint auspices of Washington university and the Missouri Historical society, met in the Mississippi valley historical association.

Three Play in Recital

Miss Mary Reeder, director of the piano instructional department her, presented her three most advanced students in a joint recital on May 3. This was one of a series of closing recitals for the year.

The students participating in the recital were Vivienne Rained, of Monticello; Evelyn Ann Doyle, of Tallahassee, and Byron Bevis, Jr., of Quincy. Each student played a number from the classics and one selection from the romantic and

Rollins College Is Viewed by FSC Delegates

Convention "Trotters" Bring Back Varied Reports About Institution Where Convention Was Held Last Week-End

By NANCY ROGERO

Rollins college, viewed through the all-seeing eyes of Florida state delegates to the recent Intercollegiate Press association and state government association meetings held there last week is "beautiful," "all right," "lovely," "interesting" and "exciting."

Commenta of the returning delegates ranged from enthusiasm concerning the "hordes of Lincoln Zephyrs and even motor boats" belonging to members of the student body, to the "beautiful chapel and interesting faculty members," with general impressions varying as widely as the comments.

"Personally, I like the school," said one. "I like the serenity, the common and nonchalant air of the students, and the cordiality of the famous Rollins hospitality. Many of them are nationally known personalities and the small size of the student body makes possible a very personal relation between students and teachers. The few students we met were rather conservative, but very nice."

As another puts it. "The student body typifies the serenity-ities of what Yankee students are. They have, of course, more advantages and less financial restrictions than we have—but they seem to study a great deal, too. They attend classes six hours a day, so they must study some, even though they have a college like a country club."

"The campus is lovely," was a frequent remark. Delegates were favorably impressed with the picturesque Spanish style dormitories, the beautiful Knowles Memorial chapel, and also the "cute little cottages" as good as ours, of course, but attractive. Good food, too.

"You ought to see the cars," said one of the automobile-less Florida State students. "Simply hordes of them! Why, no one has to walk to class. And they nearly all have out-of-state license plates, and the latest statement that only a third of the student body is from Florida. They have motor boats and boat houses, too, and all of them have personal motor boats. That seemed a bit queer to us, too—to think that we live in Florida all year and have to take ski lifes, while they're down only for the winter and have that chance to look even whiter than we are."

Honorary Will Open Literary Contest Here

Purpose is to Stimulate Thought and Better Campus Writers

Alpha Chi Alpha, journalism honorary, announces the first annual contest for the best articles written by a student, Ar-line Lockhart, president, announced yesterday.

The purpose of the contest is to stimulate thought and good writing. The articles submitted may include any controversial issue connected with college life.

The contest, which is open to any student except members of the honorary, closes on Tuesday, May 18, when all articles to be submitted must be in the Flambeau office on the second floor of the Hinkle building. The winning article, which may be from 500 to 1,000 words, will be published in the Longwire Alpha Chi Alpha issue which is expected to be out May 21 issue of the Flambeau. Those receiving honorable mention will be published in the April issue of the Flambeau next fall. Only articles of high quality will be acceptable for publication and none may be anonymous.

The following members of Alpha Chi Alpha, will be Martha Baker, Jane Bass, Ann Bellamy, Norman, Virginia Early, Evelyn Fisher, Margaret Clare Lafferty, Arthur Mendonsa, and Sarah Leonard Sealey and Pearl Shepard.

Stevens Conducts Tour Through State Hospital Clinic for FSC Classes

Dr. P. F. Finner, head of the psychology department, conducted approximately forty students from the class in abnormal psychology visited the clinic of the Florida State hospital in Chattahoochee last Wednesday.

The clinic was conducted by Dr. Ralph E. Stevens, clinical director for the benefit of the students in those classes wishing to study social case work. Those who made the trip chosen. Dr. Robertson, associate chief physician, introduced the clinic. Examples of the four forms of schizophrenia were presented by Dr. W. E. Miles. Dr. Rogers presented patients in the manic-depressive group. Dr. Kupper introduced patients with organic disturbances and Dr. Hurley presented three mental deficient cases demonstrating the levels between the imbecile and high-grade imbecile.

After the clinic Dr. Robertson and Dr. Miles conducted the group through the occupational therapy department, demonstrating the work the patients do in fine arts as an aid to treatment. Later the visitors were shown through the women's ward and the new tuberculosis ward which has recently been completed.

CGA Delegates To Meet Here For Next Year

Joint Meeting of Student Governors, Presmen To Be Held at FSC

PEARLE SHEPARD HEADS OFFICERS

Representatives of This Campus Tell of Work Accomplished

Florida State College for Women was named the site of the next all-Florida convention of the Women Student Government Association and the Florida Intercollegiate Press Association at its meeting held last week-end at Rollins college in Winter Park.

Officers of next year will be headed by Pearle Shepard, who will be chairman of the joint convention, next year on this campus. The new officers of the women's government division include: president, Bob Collins, University of Florida; vice-president, Ann Waddell, Rollins college; second vice-president, Dolce Arrowsmith, St. Petersburg Junior college; secretary, Louise Gehan, Florida State College for Women, and treasurer, Tom Condon, University of Miami.

In the press group Robert Van Beynum of Rollins was named president; George Hoffman of St. Petersburg Junior college, vice-president, and Jeanne Rice of Tampa university, secretary.

Colleges having delegates at this convention were the University of Tampa, St. Petersburg Junior college, University of Miami, University of Florida, Stetson college, Florida State College for Women, and Rollins college.

A state-wide honor week was one of the most important resolutions made at the convention of the Student Government Association in their forums. This week will be observed the third week-end in February and the third week-end in March on the campus of every college that attends the convention. This will be followed by discussions on honor in various high schools throughout the state and by college student government officials.

The convention also went on record as favoring a constructive peace program for next year, the program to be fixed by each college to suit its own needs. They also favored the passing of a bill by the legislature to remove livestock from highways.

The outstanding feature of the press meetings was the awarding of honors for various publications.

In the college newspaper division the Florida Alligator of the University of Florida took first with the Florida Flambeau in second place and the Rollins Sandspur and the Miami Hurricane tying for third.

In the magazine awards, the Flamingo, published by Rollins, took first place, with the Florida Review, from the University of Florida, and the Distaff Florida Stetson.

The Isis of the University of Miami was given the annual award

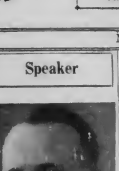
Peace Campaigners Sponsor Campus "Tag Day" for Funds

Money Contributed by Students Will Be Used To Send Peace Delegates to Institutes On Field Work During Summer



By ELEANOR WILLIAMS

"Tag Day! Tag Day! Help to send a peace delegate from F. S. C. W." is the cry of students accouring the campus next Thursday selling tags for "whatever you can contribute to the Student Peace Campaign."

Five names of the two thousand college students planning to attend the Peace Institutes and doing the field work necessary during the summer, the local committee has decided to send, Lucile Allen, who has been named as delegate, could be sent to represent F. S. C. W. in field work for peace this summer. It is hoped that faculty members and legislators by contributing whatever they can will make up the deficit caused by students who cannot afford eight cents for a peace program.

NSFA Defeats Recovery Act By Big Vote

Forum Discussion Results In Negative Decision For Legislation

N.S.F.A. forum voted nine to two Tuesday night that it be recommended that the Florida legislature reject the Florida Recovery act.

After a long discussion led by Rethe McElhannon, who presented a history of chain store legislation in general, Frances Waterhouse, who stated reasons for the adoption of the bill, and Ruth Meredith, who argued against the bill, the forum came to the conclusion that such legislation would injure the tourist trade in Florida, that it would hurt the farmers who could no longer sell their produce to the chain stores, and that it would add to the state unemployment problem.

The members at the meeting agreed that perhaps a small land tax would result from the proposed changes in Florida, law but that this boom would be short lived and would be detrimental to the security of the land-owners in the state. It was also pointed out that the act was unenforceable, that it cost a great deal and would bring in only a small amount of revenue, and that the act would violate the rights given in the Constitution of the United States.

Students speaking for the act said that its purpose was to eradicate the social and economic evils of the chain store and not to bring in revenue, and that it would help the small merchants who were constantly being forced out of business by the chain stores. It was pointed out that the consumers should be willing to pay the cost for the good of a large majority of the citizens of Florida and for their own ultimate benefit.

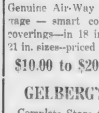
Faculty Senate Sets Down Rules for Giving Comprehensives

Details of the requirements for comprehensive examinations in integrated courses were discussed at the faculty senate meeting Wednesday afternoon. Definite resolutions both for the comprehensive tests to be given at the end of the year and for the exemption examinations at the beginning of fall term were set up by this body.

The senate decided that pending the completion of syllabi and further developments in the testing procedure in the integrated courses, it shall be the joint responsibility of the departments involved in each of these integrated courses to see that the final examination shall be weighted not more than one-third to the determination of the final grade; that the examination shall be designed to take not less than two and not more than three hours; that copies of the final tests, together with scoring arrangements or key, shall be filed with the committee on tests and examinations.

Exemption tests shall be provided for the integrated courses through the joint efforts of the departments involved, subject to several regulations. Definite provision must be made through syllabi, outlines, or sample tests to acquaint students desiring to make application for exemption with the scope and nature of the course. The departments involved in each of the several integrated courses shall jointly prepare for the freshmen a written book a statement of the nature and scope of the course with the purpose that only these students who have had work covering such fields shall apply for exemption. These statements shall be prefaced by a general statement concerning exemption to be issued by the registrar.

As much of the exemption test shall be as objective as the departments involved feel is possible. It shall be designed to take not less than three and not more than four hours and be made comparable, except for length (and subsequent difficulty) to the final examinations in that course; the exemption level shall be the proficiency equivalent of C plus on the final examination. The personnel director will be responsible for making examination deadline with time, place, and giving of the tests.



The departments jointly shall be responsible for the grading of the tests, determining who is entitled, and reporting such exemptions to the registrar who shall notify students as to exemption or non-exemption.

The exemption examinations shall be offered at the beginning of each semester and of each summer session. Application to take the exemption examination shall be made to the registrar. No student may attempt exemption in more than two of the integrated courses at any one exemption period. Any student who fails to pass the exemption examination at the first trial must take the corresponding course.

of armies on the move has bolstered alternative to the travesty of financial war; a restoration of natural trade among nations.

Secretary Hull has said we must have either of two things: elevation of living standards and a peaceful exchange of the fruits of the land, or else militarism, and outcrowth of decreasingly useful wealth, lower standards of living and dissatisfied multitudes. He has been quoted as saying: "There will be jobs for men in the fields and factories—or in the armies."

Foreign trade will be a means to end war by removing the principal cause of war; to end the struggle for colonies and raw materials that threatens the semi-peace of Europe today by making the colonial raw materials and markets available to nations that need them, without the necessity of fighting. It is held that demolition of artificial trade barriers which cut the international flow of goods and money by 75 per cent offers a sound foundation on which to rebuild processes of peace.

Six Students Receive Bids For Low Marks

Dis-Honorary Founded For Perpetuation Of Problem Lists

Perhaps on the night of Mortar Board lapping you noticed, in the rear wing of the auditorium, a long line of girls clad in red. This portentious gathering was the first sign on the campus of a new honorary organization. Mortar Board's purpose is to recognize leadership and ability and to continue its members to strive for scholarship during the remainder of their college careers.

It was founded on the night of April 27 during the dinner hour and time for the Mortar Board service, by six seniors who were informally "mortified" last year. Beth Deasa, Janice Borton, Mary Ann Pratt, Gara Nance, Peggy McMichael, and Betty Mack.

The taps, who received bids on the number of an arrow's shade of green and tied with yellow ribbons, were Mary Catherine Batterson, Louise Lingo, Mina Miller, Mina Spradlin, Mickey Conn, and Kathryn Pratt. After the lapping in the auditorium, they proceeded to the open air theater and marched onstage to the tune of processional. They were met there by the old members who promptly blew out the candles, charged the new members to grope in darkness for what is left. Because of the superiority of her scholastic record, Miss Gregory, Louise Rose, was elected president for the coming year. The guiding spirit of the group is Dr. Gregory, whose motto is Jimmy Durante, selected in recognition of his famous line: "Am I mortified? Am I mortified? Hahhhhhhh!!!" The principal sentiment of the club is: "For to the darndest things, Baby, That's why you're so mortified with it all."

After the candle-blowing-out ceremony, members entertained the new at the Sweet Shop with a appropriately enough, "dopes."

female roles. Mary Berryhill as Eugenie, Valrey's stenog, and Sara Hutto who has already humorous situation and Frances Cone, Adele Lamar, Mary Webber of Sganarelle.

An interesting method of stage technique has been employed. The three scenes of the play are laid in the same room. Chairs in and in order that the interior may be visible to the audience curtains are drawn to disclose the rooms of the two houses as well as the garden. Accompanying the characters across the wall will be shadows that they may be seen and heard by the audience and as soon as these scenes are finished they return to the rooms and the curtains are drawn again.

Other students who have parts in the play and who have succeeded in roles splendidly are Dorothy Barr as a street vendor and harlequin; Sara Mae Davis as Lisander; Reiss Waldo as Sylvester; Minie Frank as first lackey Beverly Brown, second lackey; Ruth Riddle, third lackey; Leonard Hall, manservant; Sara Lewis, notary; Rachel Seay, link boy.

Dance In Offers

The second scene is a dance interlude which takes the form of Sganarelle's dream. In addition to Betty Peck others in the scene are Marjorie Jones, Athnell; Dee Carroll, shepherdess; Elva Bonifee, Solomon; Marie Spurlock Socrates; Patty Hamilton, first Egyptian; Dorothy Hill, second Egyptian; Bunny Lowery, dancing master; and Elva Merrin, Egyptian.

and wander Inland. This has been true of America, the speaker said. At first, the way was clear and the ideals were simple, but as life has become more complex, Florida have risen to the horizon and the American people have become confused.

Formerly, democracy meant every fellow for himself, Dr. Eyman continued. It was a sort of rugged individualism. All that a man needed was to be willing to work hard, his success being gauged in proportion to his willingness and hard work. From that time of great resources and optimism, there has grown up a certain standard of success that ideals which perhaps no longer fit life today.

Horizon Is Clouded

The broad horizon of the early United States is now obscured by war, technological perfection and the complex organization, Dr. Eyman cautioned. Being willing to work hard is not enough now, if it means that the individual pushes on without regard for others. Today, people have set up a cooperative democracy which needs new ideals and new standards that will enable men to cooperate with neighbor, and not to take their neighbor as he loves himself.

The time has come when one must learn to live with others and think and much of many things, the speaker said. One must take time to think of the welfare of others, learn how to live well with others. Because of the superiority of her scholastic record, Miss Gregory, Louise Rose, was elected president for the coming year. The guiding spirit of the group is Dr. Gregory, whose motto is Jimmy Durante, selected in recognition of his famous line: "Am I mortified? Am I mortified? Hahhhhhhh!!!" The principal sentiment of the club is: "For to the darndest things, Baby, That's why you're so mortified with it all."

Convention Delegates To Report at Meeting

The Misses Davey and Mrs. Guy Diffenbaugh, board members at large.

Leaders Issue Call To Youth

Model Congress Receives Endorsement of Many U. S. Legislators

This week, seventy-three youth leaders, adult leaders of youth groups, and heads of agencies serving youth throughout the country issued a call to the young people of the nation to elect "senators" and "representatives" to a youth congress of the United States to be held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 2-5.

Eleven United States senators and thirty-two members of the House of Representatives have endorsed the model congress, the purpose of which, according to the signers of the call, is "to give the nation's youth an opportunity to participate in the solving of problems of their own solutions, and strengthen the co-operative efforts among organizations of youth and organizations serving youth."

The model congress will include a Senate, a House of Representatives, a Supreme Court, organizational caucuses, William W. Hinckley, chairman of the Committee on Youth Activities of the Youth congress, which is handling arrangements for the gathering, announced.

The senate, according to Mr. Hinckley, will be composed of representatives of national organizations of youth, each organization serving youth, each of which is entitled to four senators. The house of representatives will be composed of delegates from local groups, clubs, and types, with one "representative" permitted for each 10,000 of the membership of any fraction thereof in any organization.

Since the most part, the congress will resolve itself into six large youth committees which will hold hearings on the six major issues facing American youth. There will be committees on agriculture, democratic liberties, education, labor, peace, and recreation and leisure.

On the last day of the congress, the senate will meet separately to discuss the possibilities of cooperation among the various organizations represented. A forum of experts in youth crime and delinquency and to participate in a discussion on the problems from the floor. Nationally known speakers will also be invited to address the youth delegates.

During the next two months before the model congress meets, youth leaders throughout the country will be encouraged to discuss the problems confronting their communities and the nation, the country as a whole and to prepare bills which they will propose to be submitted in Milwaukee to the various committees.

"In this day of Mr. Hinckley emphasized, "young Americans will render a great service in leading in the ways of democracy and practical citizenship. Throughout the world autocracy is on its trial. This project is an effort to make it have effect. It is a pioneering thing for this generation of youth."

Those wishing to obtain further information may do so by writing to the Youth Congress Bureau, 55 West 42 street, New York city.

Story Characters Come To Life in Puppet Show

Captain Miles Standish again went a-courting the gentle Priscilla, Snow White and Red Rose went through their adventures with the wicked dwarf and Heidi lived anew in her Alpine home in the Demonstration School auditorium Wednesday.

At that time three marionette shows were given, the stories of "Snow White and Rose Red" and "Heidi" being presented in the morning at 10:30 and "The Courtship of Miles Standish" in the afternoon at 2:30. These plays were sponsored by the sixth grade of the Demonstration school.

The puppets used by this year's sixth grade and by the ninth grades of previous years, were of papier mache or carved entirely out of wood by the members of the present class made the clothes for the characters and reconstructed the scenery and stage. The project was under the direction of Mrs. Dora Skipper.

Peace Campaigners Sponsor "Tag Day"

Campaign is to test theory by action. After an intensive two-week training period at one of the five summer institutes in the United States, college students form in teams of two or four and go to an assigned district for two months or more where they join in the life of the community. They address clubs, young people, church, farm and labor groups; speak on radio programs, produce a radio; present or direct peace plays, movies, marionette shows; arrange library and trade exhibits; write newspaper articles, dramatic literature, interview politicians and persons in all walks of life; and finally establish peace councils so that interested members of the community will be enabled to carry on the program after they leave.

The theory behind the action is to "arouse thousands of citizens through widespread education to the danger of war, to create an intellectual and emotional background strong enough to resist propaganda; to direct the education toward effective legislation; and to organize representative peace councils. Through such means, established through the whole nation, public opinion can be built quickly in a crisis and the national will for peace made manifest."

At the institutes in June, the first of the two-week program is given over to an annual International Relations forum where representatives from all over the world speak. The second part of the program, besides being given over to individual study, is also concerned with the practical guidance for conducting the campaign. The delegates study "world organization for the world community, the turmoil in peoples-day Europe, from currents in the Pacific, the good neighbor policy, economic factors behind world unrest, the biology of war and peace, life of the spirit in a world of force, and an effective peace movement; legislation and organization."

will present the indictments to the court, keep an exact record of proceedings, and furnish the faculty committee on student affairs with the information. The dean of students will furnish material for any reports to be made public.

Concerning election of vice-house chairmen, it was decided that in the future vice-house chairmen, instead of being elected by the whole group, as has been done in the past, will be elected by members of the senate.

Church Groups Honor Leaders

Installation of Officers Conducted by Three Organizations

Campus church organizations this week feature meetings in honor of old and new student officers.

Tonight newly elected officers of the Methodist students will all be on the last regular monthly council meeting. At the reconstitution services to be held one week from Sunday, new officers will pledge themselves to their duties. Virginia Lanyon will speak on "Looking Backward," and Margaret Bolway, the new president will respond with "Looking Forward." After a chicken breakfast on the back lawn of the student house, the officers will be introduced at the students' Sunday school class.

Frances Howell will conduct the regular league meeting this Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, at which time eight college girls will present the girls' circle "Conversation." At the 8 o'clock church service, Dr. Pomeroy will speak on a special Mother's day program.

Installation of the new Episcopal Student Society was held Sunday by the Rev. W. J. Airfield at a candle-light service Sunday night at Russ Hall. This Friday night Bernice Owen will be hostess at an informal dinner-party at 6:30 o'clock. Students and their friends. Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock new and old members of the student society will have a picnic supper at the home of the Rev. G. E. Benedict. Tuesday evening at 10 o'clock a "Communion" service will be held at Russ hall. Friday morning at 7:15 o'clock a celebration of the Holy Communion will be made at Rogue hall, the Rev. W. J. Airfield to be celebrant.

Friday night at 7:45 o'clock in the music room the Baptist students are holding a street-supper social meeting. At that time work will be discussed for the rest of the year, emphasis to be laid on the South-wide Baptist Student convocation to be held at Ridgecrest, N. C., during June. Motion pictures of the ground meeting for the student house will be shown. All officers are especially requested to be present.

Installation services for the new officers of the Presbyterian student league will be held in the Presbyterian church Sunday night at eight o'clock. The installation candlelight ritual will be used, and Miss E. B. Caldwell will give a short talk. Special music will be presented by the young people's choir, with Elsie Mowry at the piano, Marryberry Rosser, and Eleanor Daniels forming a trio of violin, 'cello and organ.

Richards Addresses Club

Dr. H. F. Richards, professor of physics, will speak next Wednesday to the Alpha Kappa Psi on "Evolutions of Worlds." At the meeting, to be held this spring, he will explain the relationship of the various observations made through this year.

Sports Squints

It seems regrettable that we have to start off this week with "against" that is not exceptionally. Out of nearly 1200 girls on three have decided to take advantage of the chance to enter physical, static and local competition through the inter-collegiate relay tournament. If at least one more girls do not sign up in the tournament before May 12, Florida State college will be situated on the sidelines when the competition starts. We can't figure out whether the students of the school just haven't enough confidence in themselves to think they're capable of entering intercollegiate competition, or whether they just too dogpone lazy to bother—even if they are as good looking the old bulldog as Chas Tell was at shooting the genteel apple.

Going from one extreme to the other, we see these discouraging figures as a result of a "mighty" drive for future and instantly remind us of lost humor. And why not? Are we ourselves not the originator of play nights tv, the tune good music will be heard in the gym. Word has just the through to the effect that Bachelor Hall is going to have a that the gym is furnished in a contemporary radio-victrola with an attached lotus, speakers and all these "Never Gonna Rain" address will be given. Strategies, board a vote of thanks that will be floating their tune "Lets Dance".

We're beginning to believe that we'd adopt about history repeating itself when we heard about P.K.P club tradition—that is if a tradition can be formed in two years. It seems that Tuesday evening with last year's P club initiation, the time that Verna was elected to that office herself and this year. During elections was in the infirmary nursing a sore foot. Time marches on.

Although the chances are slim that P.E.C.W will actually have intercollegiate at the A. A. U. championship swimming meet which will be held at the Macfadden-Deauville pool in Miami on May 21-22, the college will have back in the refereed gloory days, one of her former stunts entered in the meet. Katie Ferris is in the swim again and will probably come out on top, as usual.

This week-end will see Camp Cherokee filled again with girls who have the desire to go "back to nature" and even stronger desire to get away from school and home for a few hours in order to make a free breath. With only one week-end left after this one in which to camp, the rush for good will be almost as great as the season rush for dormitory rooms for next year.

In case any of you tennis fans are intending on play tennis tomorrow you'd have to give up the idea and be satisfied to watch the tennis instead. It should be fun too because the courts have been reserved for tomorrow afternoon in order that the class teams can have plenty of elbow room to get in those base line drives, serving aces, and overhand smashes we're gonna be waiting for.

The Rams really were given a beating by the Odds last Friday afternoon when they were beaten 16 to 7½ in the annual swimming meet. Martha Makemson broke away with the individual honors when she beat two of her own former records and four pals headed together in the relay to walk away with another record.

The modern dancing classes are going up in the world. All the girls from practising in the gym are dancing at a swanky tea. Maybe if we cooped up a few pointers with the Martha Graham group—but we still like our home grown products and we thoroughly approve of our own modern dancers.

We wonder if anything is going to be done about our golf course before fall. We're still waiting for the grass to be cut so we can find the ball in case we've lost there while trying to fill the requirements for the golf class.

Members of the Flambeau staff will have a chance to spear chunders and eat steak tomorrow night when they go to the golf for a banquet. For a few hours our journalistic aces are going to forget Tom Dewey and that reminds me to go out for now.

Tennis Teams Begin Matches In Tournament

Intramural Games Start As Official Season Gets Under Way

Starters for the preliminary games in the intra-murals tennis matches of the season were the Delta Delta Delta and Kappa Alpha Theta doubles teams which played Friday afternoon.

By swift, seven stroking Helen Bates and Jewel Turner took the first set from Mary Watson and Eleanor Scott by the score of 8-1. The Theta's rally was insufficient to even cover their rivals in the second set and the Tri Delt's won it by the score of 6-1, 6-3.

Waterhouse Wins

Marie Joffre, singles player for the Catholic Newman Club and famous Waterhouse player for the Zeta Tau Alpha's held each other evenly during the three sets of their match. Speedy, well-placed drives by Miss Joffre won the first set for her by a 7-5 score. In the second set, Frances maintained the lead throughout to take the game to Mavis Lowe. Marie failed to coordinate her third set with her first and Frances Waterhouse player won the game on the score board again to Marie Joffre's four, ending the match, 6-3.

Fisher Later

In the games which played Thursday afternoon between Evelyn Fisher for Esteren and Betty Wells for the Emerson Institute, Evelyn failed to produce the tennis performance which she displayed repeat wielder. Betty took the first two games of the first set before the ace could get a game claimed by Evelyn. In the following games Evelyn settled down and placed aleck by her opponent who gained only one more game in the first set, 6-1. The second set found Evelyn Fisher's swift, gliding strokes too much for Betty who was forced to cede her first set at 6-3 in her favor. Betty White rallied in the third set and defeated Evelyn Hughes in a hard fought battle with efficiency. Either took two of the first four games in this set but Betty managed to take the third game making the score 3-3 so far in the match. Another game was drawn for the Episcopals and then Evelyn determinedly claimed the next two games. This evened the score to 4-4. Steady, even strokes by both players followed in the next two games but Evelyn fell under her rival's scoring to finish the third set at 6-4. The match ended with scores of 6-3, 3-3, 6-4.

Pi Phi Victorious

Sophomore Council, represented by Bidney Moore and Betty Bergquist, met the Pi Beta Phi's team of Marie Stewart and Julia Burnett Thursday afternoon in a doubles match. Marge Stewart's rapid serves won many points for the Pi Phis. The Sophomore Council played well but failed to come up to the winning standard and was defeated in the first set by the score of 6-4. A clash in the second set followed with the Pi Phi team claiming the first game. Then the sophomore council battled the second. Burnett took her game but Bergquist failed to chalk up her service for the count, saving the score at the end of the first four games 3-1 in favor of the Pi Phis. In the play that followed, the council struggles to regain their lost ground but the Pi Beta Phi team ended victorious at the end of the second set with the score for the match 6-2, 6-1.

U., Miami Beach. Gold, silver and bronze medals will be awarded for individual events and gold medals for winning of relays. Gold high point medals and team trophies will also be given.

Bugs Menace Junior Lass In Bed Room

Termite Bout Makes Night Horrible for Inhabitants Of Dormitories

Webster describes them as pale colored social insects found especially in the tropics, but one student at Florida State college could easily outdo this mild definition of that dreadful little insect called the termite

It seems that a well-known junior there is in need of rest—she had returned to her room with one thought in mind: to get into bed as quickly as possible. But this pleasant anticipation was quickly erased when she tiptoed open her door, stepped into the room, and fleeting something crunching beneath her feet, looked down to find to her horror and dismay the floor literally covered with probing termites.

Her first impulse was to grab the broom and begin to sweep the liver mass of insects out, but she had she reached the other side of the room she found that little creatures had flown around for a while and then fell to the floor to gasp over the floor.

The poor girl, becoming disgusted with the situation quit after this fruitless attempt, decided to go on with her former plans and turn in, termites at peace. But upon pulling the cover back she found the sheets and portion of her belongings also invaded by the termites.

This was the last straw. She valized rapidly from the room, and after much search succeeded to find a more suitable place to spend the night. The following morning the disaster was reported to the matron, who immediately had the room fumigated and the bugs exterminated.

Although the termites did leave the room, they found other boarders. they did not fall to find a boarder who furnished a delightful memory of their visit. It will take weeks for the numerous termite wings from under the beds and off the soles of her shoes.

Montgomery, Hurd Act As F. S. C. Delegates To Physical Ed Meet

Miss Katherine Montgomery, head of the physical education department, and Miss Eunice Hurd, Woman's Athletic Association president, recently attended several physical education conventions in New York city.

The state college officials first went to Boston for the Society of College Directors of Physical Education for Women, next to the Women's Division of the National Amateur Athletics Federation, and then to the National Convention of the American Physical Education Association. Miss Montgomery took part in a panel discussion on "Orientation Courses in Physical Education for College Freshmen at the first meeting.

The two ladies motored north with Miss Mary Settle, another member of the physical education department, here who is on leave this year, and who attended the conventions.

Students Discuss Stars At Astronomy Club Site

The Astronomy club held its second camp of the year last Wednesday for the purpose of studying the heavens over a long period of time than heretofore and discussing the relationship of the heavenly bodies.

Wednesday night, following a steak supper around the campfire, talks were given by Katherine Kirby-Smith and Edith Cromer on the Milky Way. Shortly after midnight these planets, being in suitable positions, were then observed by the campers, and later on the constellations, star clusters, and double stars were studied through field glasses from boats on the lake.

Gladys Ware supervised the obsservations and Evelyn Hammond took charge of the program.

Members of the college faculty attending the camp were Miss Edith Lyon of the physics department and Miss Ruth Lehman of the physical education department.

E. P. C. to Meet

"Economic Planning Under Socialism" will be the topic for discussion at the next meeting of the Emergency Peace campaign, to be held Monday afternoon at five o'clock.

Organist Guild to Meet

The Tallahassee chapter of the American Guild of Organists will give its annual guild service Sunday at 5 o'clock in the Presbyterian church.

Canaries React Favorably to Varied Experiments Performed by Students in Psychology Department

Thirteen' Unlucky as it may seem to most people, it has proved quite the opposite for the psychology department and the thirteen canaries, acquired at the beginning of the second semester of the department hasn't lost a one, despite the superstitions which holds that wherever thirteen people sit down together one will surely be murdered Still, all is not safe yet, for even now if the canaries are not watched closely at feeding time one young fellow is likely to be knocked out by a very black, cocky little bird, who puts up a strong battle in the competitions for lettuce—their favorite food.

These birds are kept in a large cage in one of the department's laboratories, where they are observed by the students in the comparative psychology class. Of greatest interest to the students is the behavior of the silverbirds when placed in the little tellow cocks his head in that "who do you think you are" fashion, one point is marked up for the canaries side, for the student is slightly taken back by this "I dare it all" look.

There is also an apparatus in the department by which the learning ability and discriminative power of the canary may be determined. This experiment is taken up in the more advanced courses.

The only failing of which the canaries are guilty is their lack of memory. The good little mothers They have too much of the spirit of fun in them; they can't stay on their nests long enough to keep the eggs warm so they will hatch.

Maybe when they become better acquainted with their new surroundings there will be a "Quiet Please" sign in the west side of the Education building so that the young babies will be able to get their required number of hours of sleep.

Tarpons Entertain All Guests in College Pool With Swimming Social

The ten charter members of the newly formed Tarpon club gave their first entertainments in the form of a swimming social in the swimming pool Monday night. The social was in honor of Miss Betty Washburn and Valerie Wilson who grew up the original plans. During the evening water games were played, and later refreshments were served.

Wednesday night the first practice was held for the swimming demonstration to be presented next year at Thanksgiving time under the sponsorship of the Tarpon club. These practices will be held until the end of school and will be continued next fall.

The second tryouts for the club will be announced the next Tuesday night in the swimming pool. About ten girls are participating in this tryout, after which the new members, chosen from this group, will be announced.

Orders have already been sent over for white wool bathing suits for the members of the club The emblem has not yet been decided upon.

The charter members are Frances Thill, Martha Makemson, Eleanor Scott and Virginia Makemson, Florence Ward, Dot Colburn, Sara Hudson, Mary Ann Mackey, Margaret Maxwell, and Mary Peacock

Odd Swimmers Break Records

Triumph Over Even Team In Meet With Score Of 73⅞ to 28½

Three records were broken Saturday night when the Odd Swimmers triumphed over the Even squad in the annual swimming meet with a score of 73⅞ to 28½.

In the 25-yard free style Martha Makemson broke her former record with a time 12.5 seconds. Florence Ward came in second and Ernestine Makemson third. In the elementary back for form Florence Ward placed first, and Polly Flint and Jean Gillies tied for second. Martha Makemson again broke her former record when she won the 25-yard back crawl, finishing in 13.2 second. Marion Weeks and Virginia Makemson took second and third places, respectively.

Eight More Contestants Are Needed to Sign Up For Telegraphic Meet

Unless at least eight more girls enter the inter-collegiate telegraphic archery tournament before May 15, Florida State College will not be able to compete in the tournament. Only three girls have signed up for competition so far, and the shoots must be completed during the period between May 12 and May 26.

The tournament has been sponsored annually for eight years by the N. A. A. and is conducted by districts as well as nationally; thus there will be local and district, as well as nation-wide competition between the teams. This year's rules permit a competitor to shoot several complete rounds during the prescribed period, of which they will report as the official round the one having the highest score.

The results of shooting are to be sent by telegraph to Louis C. Smith, Boston, Massachusetts, by noon, May 21. Official score sheets will be mailed the day that telegrams are sent. As soon as results are received and tabulated, a summary will be mailed to all colleges competing.

Girls who have signed up for entering are: Charlotte Kinsey, Katherine Bacon and Annie Laurie Polk. Miss Betty Washburn has charge of the contest on this campus.

Tennis Contest Draws to Close

Fisher and Rogers Meet Borton and Miller In Finals

The finals in the student-faculty tennis tournament will be played off between the Fisher-Rogers and the Borton-Miller team during the early part of next week In the semi-finals the Fisher-Rogers team was victorious over Corey and Graham by a total score of 8-3 and 6-3

In the first set of the semi-finals, both teams started out very even, each team making his own serve, but after about the third game the playing picked up. The Corey-Graham team broke Fisher's serve, then the Fisher-Rogers team retaliated by breaking Corey's serve. This seemed to be the turning point of the set for after this the games were definitely in favor of Fisher and Rogers The score at the end of the first set was 6-2 in their favor.

In the second set, Corey started the game and this time the playing was much closer The Corey-Graham team made a desperate effort to take the game and after four games the score was tied 2-2, Fisher-Rogers took the fifth game making them one game ahead of their opponents However, the Fisher-Rogers team rallied and took the set with a 6-3 score, thereby winning the semifinal tennis match

Honoraries
To the Fore Again

This week's observance of an "Honors Day," in which all honoraries of the campus cooperated to present a program in recognition of scholarship, brings the much debated question of honoraries before the campus eye. Again we are faced with the question: Are honoraries worthwhile?

There is always the grave danger that honoraries will degenerate into a name and honor alone. As such they can be little more than "dead wood" to a campus already over-organized and over-honored. Honoraries, we contend, should be more than a tapping ceremony, a pin, and a Greek-letter name to be pleaed on one's list of activities in the annual. Honoraries, if they are to justify their existance, should give something constructive to the campus.

This week's program of "honor" activities, sponsored by Phi Kappa Phi, is a definite recognition of the fact that honoraries on this campus need to be better integrated with the scholastic and intellectual life of the campus. Suggestions were made during the week for the establishment of a permanent honors council composed of representatives from all campus honoraries. Such a council would supervise constructive programs for each honorary, seek to prevent the overlapping of the work of various honoraries, and serve as an organization for the furtherance of genuine scholarship on the campus.

Honoraries can be more than the recognition of a chosen few. Through stimulation of interest in various aspects of the field they can touch many more than their own membership. Herein lies their value. As a group they have a chance to be a powerful factor in the stimulation of scholarship in the fullest sense of the word. But they can't do it by being merely names and empty honors. They must justify their existance on this campus. A permanent council, we think, could do much towards clarifying their reason for being.

What Value
In State Conventions?

College conventions "courting" has been pictured as a glamorous and exciting adventure. Conventions have been pictured as opportunities to exchange vital information between students, but often the true importance of these gatherings lies not in the information exchanged or the attending social affairs, but rather in some of the incidentals of the meeting. This is what the delegates to the press and government convention in Rollins last week discovered.

Enthusiastic because of the opportunity to talk over problems of government with students, the local delegates discovered that they had very little in common with the other colleges, that their problems weren't those of other schools. This was not an true of the press, for newspapers, small or large, are faced to some extent with the same major problems, such as policies and the writing and treatment of news and other phases of preparatory work. As for the magazine and year book, the absence of editors in this case detracted from the good that might have been gained.

However, the local delegates derived some good from the convention, especially through the programs which were contributed by persons outside the student circles. Members of the faculty of Rollins gave talks that contained facts pertinent to today's problems. Among the questions discussed by these speakers, all of whom had rich background from which to draw, were the motion picture and the question of sit-down strikes. Dr. Richard Burton, who was literary adviser for the screening of "Midsummer Night's Dream," made such interesting statements as: The motion picture is not the theater nor as immoral as the stage, no matter what the consensus of opinion is, and that the stage and screen should be compared, both serving a distinct need in the cultural life of the individual. The stage can present realism and the screen is better equipped to picture the more ephemeral and illusory qualities of literary endeavor.

Dr. Thomas Chalmers of the University of Boston, who is teaching this year at Rollins, deplored the violence that has come with the sit-down strike and the possibility that civilization is not as firmly fixed as it might be thought to be.

To meet students, to find new personalities, to compare the student life of the home college with that of other institutions are in themselves interesting experiences and may be counted as attributes of a convention. This is especially true of a state convention, where usually the divergence between the several schools is either small or so large that a great deal of the good cannot come from the information shared. At the same time there is certainly a distinct need for gathering ideas of state institutions, in order that a closer bond of good feeling can be created between the students of one state. And while delegates of a certain institution may feel that they have really gained something of value in addition to bettering their own fields, they may have contributed in some way to students of the other participating colleges.

Another good which can come from such a convention is the spirit of stand these colleges may take on certain timely subjects. During the recent meeting the students resolved that peace programs should be carried out on the several campuses represented, and, while this resolution of necessity had to be made general, a cooperative gesture had been made. This was also true concerning the resolution about the fencing in of highway rights-of-way cows from endangering the lives of motorists. To think collectively and to take decided action on such matters can only result in a better intercollegiate feeling and at the same time present to the state a unanimity of college student opinion that would be impossible otherwise.

Ousted Editors
And the Nobel Prize

Straws in the wind about academic freedom: An April, 1937, issue of a monthly magazine carries a "Saga of a King and His Jester." The saga quotes an editorial written by Morrie Ryskind which appeared in Columbia university's newspaper. The Columbia Jester, in 1917. The editorial called to attention the fact that, although President Wilson was trying to avert America's entering the World War, President Nicholas Murray Butler, Professor F. H. Giddings, and Talcott Williams, Dean of the School of Journalism, among others of the faculty, were publicly advocating war and stating that America was actually at war. The editorial then suggested the formation of a club of the Columbia university members of the Columbia Faculty, and nominated for charter members: Czar Nicholas Murray Butler, King Franklin H. Giddings, and Prince J. D. Talcott Williams.

According to the saga, Mr. Ryskind was asked to resign his editorship and when he refused was removed by the Board of Student Representatives. He was then expelled from the school of journalism.

The saga ends in 1934 with Morrie Ryskind, co-author of "Of Thee I Sing," awarded a Pulitzer prize, annual honor bestowed by the Columbia School of Journalism for distinction in drama; and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler presided at the dinner.

Keeping an Eye
On the Legislature

Last Monday night over seventy-five students from this college attended an open hearing of the legislature in which the unemployment bill and the social welfare bill were discussed. The fact that such a large group should manifest an interest in something beyond their own little circle of activities is, we think, a definite sign of advancement. As students of national and state affairs we can only manifest our interest in the affairs of the world that we will soon enter politically by taking definite steps to show our interest.

Such a bill as the social welfare bill demands the attention of the future women voters of the state.

Neutrality, Labor Hold Roosevelt's Attention

After all this campaigning for a perfect, or nearly perfect, neutrality bill the members of the Democratic house of congress must be fairly heartsick at the inconclusive and inadequate measures which passed Congress this week. The future review legislation which made its first hasty advent to keep the United States from being embroiled at the outset of the Ethiopian struggle has never since that time had enough "doctoring" to make it a really useful protection.

The main part of the act as it first passed Congress was comprised of the statement that, upon the President's proclamation that a foreign war existed, no one might export arms, ammunition, or war implements to a belligerent nation. Advocates of the bill who realized its need for revision included a clause providing for the expiration of the measure in February, 1936. At that time Congress was busy with other affairs of state that it re-passed the measure with a single additional clause to the effect that no foreign loans could be floated in this country by a belligerent nation.

This later enactment was due to expire Friday, but a week ago Congress took its third action on the measure, whereupon the House a bill which was rushed by plane to President Roosevelt who is on a fishing trip in the Gulf of Mexico. This most recent action extends the existing act and adds five main conditions. These conditions are:

1. The arms embargo would not, in time of war, apply to raw materials.

2. All trade with a belligerent nation would have to be carried on in a strictly "cash and carry" way, the warring country sending its own ship into the loading harbor, paying for merchandise with which the ship is loaded, assuming full title to all provisions, and carrying the purchase away.

3. Arming of American ships dealing with belligerents is banned.

4. No American citizen of the United States could travel on a belligerent country's vessel.

5. All contributions would be forbidden, save medical supplies or food to relieve suffering which might be tendered only when authorized by the President.

The Reader Writes

Why not do away with the conventional examinations? Can't we think of a better way to measure how much a student has learned?

Every year as exam time approaches, students and teachers raise such questions over the present system of testing students to determine how much knowledge they have acquired in various subjects. In some schools, efforts are being made to get away from the periodical exam-nation and to stress learning for the sake of knowledge rather than for the sake of passing an examination.

Teachers frequently, perhaps without realizing it, place too much emphasis on the examination causing the student to become more interested in what might be asked on the exam rather, than arousing interest in the subject matter. Some teachers in stressing certain points in a lecture instead of saying, "think about this because it is very important," use more effective words such as "you better learn this because I may give it to you as an examination." Ithis method seems to be contrary to thep rinciples of learning.

A student who memorizes facts solely for the purpose of passing an examination gains nothing from this procedure because too often after an exam is passed he strives to forget all about it. Yet this attitude toward exams prevails among students because they are brought up through grammar school and high school with the idea of learning enough to pass an examination. To these students, passing an exam is the most important thing about their school years, mainly because a person who flunks an exam is considered by his classmates and friends as being either lazy or not very intelligent.

The customary "cramming" before exams is popular among students because they wish their intelligence to be respected. A few cases where students have been stolen have been known to occur during the high school days. There are many other cases where the importance of having an exam took on such proportions that persons became dishonest in order to make a passing grade on the exam.

When a person enters college, that should be the crowning point of his interest in learnins and his willingness to work. Should he then be subjected to examinations which are inadequate in showing how much knowledge has been gained from his work in various courses?

If a system could be devised by which the teacher could test the student without the student being aware of it, such a method might prove to be more satisfactory. In such a method it seems that more emphasis should

The latest collegiate game is the pastime of "counting" lectures. Several students get together and compare notes. Then comes phase. Every time the professor uses the phrase the student gets a point. And Others Say—

A number of college papers recently have carried editorials on the prospects of employment for graduating classes. The Bull Dog, publication of the University of Kentucky in a survey just completed by the Investors Syndicate, of Minneapolis, employment prospects of this year's college graduating classs are only a little less favorable than those of the 1929 graduates, and substantially better than those the June, 1936, classes experienced.

Business administration, teaching, engineering, and general business classifications are offering employment in greatest number, while law, journalism, and investment banking are near the foot of the list. These conclusions are based upon analysis of questionnaires returned by 215 leading colleges and universities.

This should prove encouraging to our own graduates.

To quote from an editorial: "Ratification of the recenlty proposed constitutional amendment making a 'C' average a requisite for all elected student body officers is the only sensible course for thinking students to follow. The amendment should have been passed long ago."

With such an attitude toward this amendment on another campus, we have cause to feel proud of our own constitution.

Queen Victoria Is Dead
By William Zukerman

The elaborate preparations and extensive publicity surrounding the coronation of George VI to take place on Wednesday are making the empirical of all this pageantry and the insincerity of royalty-worship, according to William Zukerman's article in the current issue of Harpers.

The English people, trained by Queen Victoria to exalt the members of the royal house as paragons of virtue, are now coming to realise, due to the conditions caused by the abdication of Edward VIII, that kings are human, after all.

The glorification of the monarchy led to the greatest paradox in English social life, a country headed by and the same time an advanced political democracy and also a regressive social aristocracy, Mr. Zukerman says however, that the general modernity and decadence of the new king may help to establish the new, less glamorous position of the royal family, ushering in a period of real constitutional monarchy in the social sphere which England has had for generations in the political sphere.—P. Share-Cropping in the Delta
By David L. Cohn

David L. Cohn, in the May issue of the Atlantic Monthly, contends that the miserable conditions of the Southern share-cropper is due not to their exploration by the plantation owners as much as to the share-cropper's character, which is unfitted for the responsibility and cares of independent ownership.

Characterising the Negro share-cropper as greatly outnumber the white tenant farmer, shiftless and unsettle-men, Mr. Cohn declares that they must undergo a long period of social and moral rehabilitation before they are fitted for land ownership. The work of relief ing is now being undertaken by the Farm Security settlement Administration on a large plantation in Arkansas, where nearly 500 former share-croppers are being prepared for eventual ownership.

The author explains in detail the usual share-cropping, pointing out that it is not a relation owner who runs all the risks. The larger is the landlord's investment, the more he is cultivating the owner's land. After the harvest the owner gives the tenant farmer half of the money obtained from the sale of the crop. Mr. Cohn admits that there are enormous temptations for the planter to cheat the croppers, but he thinks, however, that more from the land owner's paternalistic attitude the strength of the farmers, making it hard for him to realize that no matter how much the planter will always take care of them—

This Mother's Day Business
By Eugene Pharo

Commercialism has become an integral part of the activities hinging on Mother's Day, writes Eugene Pharo in the May issue of Mercury, that Miss Anna Jarvis, its founder has become obsessed with it, and has dedicated more of her time to fighting commercialism than to evangelizing the festival's sentimental meanings.

It appears that the thought of Mother's Day first occurred to Miss Jarvis when she asked to arrange a memorial service for her departed parents. From 1911 to 1914 the idea spread. During 1914, it was brought to the attention of President Wilson who made the official Mother's Day to be observed throughout the country.

The author says that it should have its place with Easter and Christmas. Instead the day has been used in commercial ways by florists, candy and card companies, in view of the fact that we are only country that observes Mother's Day. We support Mother's Day because we are not infantile than the rest, and prefer to be always to an apron string.—B S.

The Junior R. O. T. C. Knocks at High-School Door
By Edwin C. Johnson

Edwin C. Johnson, in the April "Child's House," reports on the successes and failures of the movement to organize Junior R. O. T. C. units in our high schools. He reports, almost thirty Chicago high schools such units But in the New York City schools, this movement encountered embarrassing difficulties. Mr. Johnson, who is secretary the Committee on Militarism in Education, outlines the situation throughout the country today.

Mr Johnson says that this idea has met determining aspects in some communities, while in other communities it has precipitated much controversy. The author seems to think that objecting fact appears to be a general one on the part of the advocates of military training to avoid full and free public discussion of the R.O.T.C. issue. He also points out the equally disturbing tendency on the part of military groups to seek to disassociate the Junior R.O.T.C. of military training from the larger forces of militarism and nationalism and to set an integral part. He suggests that the militarizing of the high schools constitutes a certain drift in the direction of fascist regimentation. In conclusion Mr. Johnson says that only as the enlightenment in local communities have the opportunity to organize themselves for concerted expression of their views on this and related issues, in opposition to the threats and activities of their adversaries, can assure the effective adoption and defense of school policies and programs in harmony with their convictions.—B. Many political-minded students here have recently taken special interest in watching the reflections of national trends in the actions of the state legislature. The balancing of the budget is a problem which is facing President Roosevelt and the Governor. Congress, and both the Congress on Capital Hill, Washington, and the Legislature on Capitol Hill, Tallahassee, see the reduction of government expenses only ways by which somewhere seem alike loath to lay additional taxes on the people, additional taxes of course a natural target, and agitation in the Florida Legislature during the past week been lowered reducing the relief appropriation of $1,500,000 asked by the President, to $1-000,000 sop, while, in Tallahassee, many students were given leave permission to attend the hearing of the Social Security bills discussion in the Senate chamber last Monday night.

Its beneficiary life returns from the poll taxes have been turned in to the county for educational funds. Senate action on the bill has not been taken yet.

Ancient Garb Of Scholars Is Explained

Academic Robe's History Goes Back to Early Days of College

Let it not be said merely of the Freshmen that they do not know the significance of the variations in the academic dress of the faculty and that the shocking number of mighty upperclassmen who have no more than a vague inkling of the fancy fabrics and stuff means.

The history of academic costume reaches back into the early days of the oldest universities of Europe. The original question whether or not academic dress was derived from ecclesiastical or in civilian dress, Oxonia may have been necessary for a small group of scholastic buildings used by medieval scholars. The hoods served to protect heads until they were superseded by skull caps.

The American colleges and universities desired a suitable system of wearing apparel a hall a garb which would not only have a definite one for all schools, but also be economical. In 1895, a conference of representatives of the governing boards of universities was called to adopt a suitable code. In 1903 the regents of the University of the State of New York gave a charter to the Intercollegiate Bureau of Academic Costume to serve as a source of information and guidance in matters.

The American Council on Education, in 1932, appointed a committee to present a new code which sets forth the newest regulations. The committee was headed by Frank Aydelotte, president of Swarthmore College. It was the committee's duty to revise and modify the code of 1895.

The code specifies the material, shape, and color of the gown, the shape and length of the sleeves, the bar and facings, the cap and the color distinctive of the faculties to which belong the degree pertains, covering in full the color and the lining of the hood.

The colors associated with different subjects are: agriculture, maize; arts and letters, white; commerce, accountancy, drab; dentistry, lilac; economics, copper; engineering, orange; fine arts, brown; forestry, russet; law, purple; library science, lemon; medicine, green; music, pink; oratory, silver grey; pharmacy, olive green; philosophy, dark blue; physical education, sage green; public health, salmon pink; religious education, yellow; theology, scarlet, and veterinary science, grey.

The standard hood is of the following shape: length, 45 inches; black. The Bachelor's hood is three feet long, the Master's three feet and one half, and the Doctor's four feet. The hood is lined with the official color of the degree, or university conferring the degree, which in the case of Florida would be garnet and gold. The binding of the hood is in the case of Florida, one and five inches, respectively, in the case of the Bachelor, Master, and Doctor degrees. The color is distinctive of the subject matter in the degree given in recipient of the degree.

The caps are made of the same material as the rest of the costume, except for a Doctor's which may be made from velvet. They are in the shape of a black mortar board. The tassel is also of black, only Doctor's may be able to wear gold tassels. Contrary to the accepted belief, the tassels may be in any direction with equal meaning, since their position is often due to the direction of the wind.

Education Is Only Hope In Modern World

Present Changing Values Require Learning, To Progress

By BETTY HAMMOND

Why not let men repose in ignorance? "Ignorance is bliss." It is said. The unfortunates who believe in such a theme content to remain calmly satisfied all their lives, but those who believe otherwise think the ecstatic heights of accomplishment justify the depths of failure. Success from the dark ages to modern have been inspired by men with brilliant developed by use and education. peoples may be distressingly unpressed, but they do not realize it until a small minority rises and gives them leadership and a reprisal as lobes o hha ordwveedrdr ordinary mortals. Leaders of every field are those who have received specialized education in that field, and statutes, as used here, mean not only schooling but also experience and developed interests. Military training turned out excellent soldiers, titans and empirers. Feudal systems provided overlords who had knowledge of some sort of politics, economics, and society. Modern systems are more demanding. There is no overlord to protect, feed, and amuse. The individual needs an education which fits him for an intelligent part in politics, economics, and society.

The leading political systems of today include socialism, fascism, and democracy. No ideal situation can be found among them. Socialism with its dictatorship is exemplified by the national state—Russia. Fascism is Italy; democracy by the United States. Democracy, hallowed as a system

Eighteen Years Has Brought Many Social Changes to FSC

Nell Carroll Recalls Regulations of 1919 And Marks Differences in "Traditions" Of That Time and Today

"Traditions, social regulations, and the campus have all undergone a great many changes since 1919," said Nell Carroll who was a member of the freshman class of that year.

Nell returned to Florida State College for Women last year to continue her studies after an absence of 14 years. When I mentioned her first year here she smiled and settled back in the rocking chair in her little tower room in Bryan and began turning through the pages of her scrap book. As we looked at pictures and various little reminders, she hesitated here and there to comment on "what used to be."

"One of the first few weeks of school we set aside for Sophomore-Freshman week," began Nell. "During this week Freshmen were put through a period of grueling. They were seen about campus wearing their dresses backwards and doing many other ridiculous things. At the end of this week the "Junior-Freshmen Wedding," a ceremony which has since been replaced by frolic was held. Brides were chosen from the freshman class and grooms were Juniors dressed in men's clothes. Tradition centered with it the idea of uniting the freshmen class with its sister class.

Nell also said that a certain day was designated for "Field day" and was devoted to athletic competition. All classes were disinterested in that the events for those days there was a wide interest in discus throwing, track sports, and basket-ball throwing. It was on field day of her freshman year that Nell broke the world's discus throwing record and in so doing injured her arm so that she was unable to return to college the following year. What is now the music annex was then the gymnasium—with the swimming pool disclosed under the floor. The athletic field extended in back of the gym where this present day demonstration school and over the space where the nursery school now stands. The race track extended along what is now the familiar path from Spic and Span to Jennie Murphry.

Water sports were held at Lake Bradford. A pastorm was erected out in the water where the events sat to decide upon the winning contestants. Seeing a clipping from an old Flambeau, Nell recalled a humorous occurance. During a most exciting moment the platform began slowly sinking under water. There the judges stood waist deep in Lake Bradford waiting for the rescue canoe.

Nell had a mischievous look in her eye when she related this little April Fool's Day celebration. "Dr. Conradi was out of town, and the sophomore class couldn't resist the opportunity to try out a little mob psychology. Sophomores went to their 8:30 classes and walked out after roll call. At 9:30 they formed a line and marched into the classes, singing a ... little ditty and students in the class immediately got up and fell in line. They went from one class to another until classes were entirely disbanned. Their spirits were dampened when, after they had planned to attend a show free of charge, the entire student body received an invitation from the manager of the local theater."

Junior-Senior Prom was the only occasion to which girls were allowed to invite dates. No other time during the year were they allowed to dance with men.

It was compulsory to attend church on Sunday. Students signed up on a ball book where they left for church and when they returned. Nell has the page from their ball book that led to her notice to come up before student government. Opposite her name in three places was written, "excused in red pencil. It seems that she had had too many excuses from church and was warned severely that it shouldn't happen again.

Students weren't allowed to go to picture shows on Sundays.

There was no such thing as smoking areas. The only girl that dared smoke was immediately shipped.

No one slept through 8:30 classes because students had to go to breakfast. At regular intervals they drew for places. These places were kept for all three meals during the day until they had another drawing. The girl at the head of the table checked upon their attendance at meals.

Nell's room at that time, composed of only the south wing of the present day Bryan, formed a dingy hall. When I mentioned the dining hall Nell smiled and said, "This was in the good old time of sixth napkins when you rolled it and placed it in a napkin and in a hook under the table at your place where it stayed until the next meal."

Students Want Famous Stars For Programs

Fewer Artists Desired If Both Known as Talent Offered

More than 90 per cent of a number of students interviewed, at random, definitely prefer more famous artists and fewer programs to a larger number of programs of less famous artists.

The ones we have are good, but we do crave to have at least a few very wild and crazy artists to satisfy demand, they said. Many students mentioned Nelson Eddy who had been on a concert tour in this part of the country.

Another wish expressed by nearly everyone was for more variety in the artist series. Programs many pleas for more drama, and more for dancers, speakers and orchestras. Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers, the Vienna Choir Boys, the Group Theatre appearing in "The Sidewalks of New York" were the artist series of several years ago were especially liked. And the fact that we have here this year Cornelia Otis Skinner and Martha Graham is much discussed and appreciated. By having artists from every field of entertainment more people would appreciate and take advantage of the artist series, and each person's realm of experience and taste would be broadened.

At least 75 per cent of the students interviewed are very much infavor of having student representatives on the faculty committee for the selection of artist series. If a student or a number of students were appointed to listen in on the committee meetings the students could influence the selection of artists they really want, or at least make their wishes known. If an artist like Fritz Kreisler were as near as Jacksonville the student representative could find out through conversation or the forums if a large majority of the student body wanted very much to hear this artist.

If there were student representation actually on the committee they could be selected from students outstanding in the School of Music, of speech, of art, and in dancing. Very few students have anything to the whole student body; some say that we are not good enough judges. Others of the minority say that selection by a faculty committee is right, but that the committee should pick more artists that the student body wants.

And what the student body wants is more well-known artists. Let us influence in their selection, more variety in the artist series, more drama, dancers, orchestras, popular performers, and artists like Nelson Eddy. — Janet Pierce.

Students or Automatons?

Critic of Modern Era Feels Spiritual, Mental Values Sacrificed in Constant Rush Of Modern Living

By ELOISE ANDREWS

Many critics of the present era have brought forward the accusation that man, through the working of his increasingly mechanised civilization, has degenerated from an alert, thinking organism to a plodding, unreasoning machine. This charge, not without foundation in its larger aspects, may be restricted in compass and applied to that much talked-about element in modern society, the college students of today.

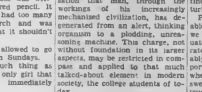
Evidences of our subjugation to a highly mechanized mode of living surround us on every hand. Each day our waking hours are filled with myriads of worrisome details which mean a serious drain upon our energies. Under this heading come the innumerable varieties of "rod tape" with which present day institutions are infested, the never-ending rituals of standing in line, "saving places" for comrades on any and all occasions, filling in blanks, signing up.

Perhaps when the great day of Judgment has arrived and the elect are permitted to file through the pearly gates, some former college girl will innocently query of good old St. Peter, "What, don't we have to sign up?"

Our days are ordered with the most meticulous precision. We rise with the rhythmical clanking of the bell in our ears—unless, perchance, we have been awakened at an earlier hour by that most relentless of monitors, the brazen-voiced alarm clock. And then the rush is on. We perform our ablutions with the utmost speed, strive to breakfast, and then are off to our first class. Throughout the day we rush to meals, to classes, to whatever duties may claim us as individuals, subject always to the soulless tyranny of bells. Our eyes, as we peer blither and yon, have a hectic gleam. Rush—rush —rush—that is the fevered tempo of our daily lives.

At first thought the hustle and bustle with which the collegiate atmosphere is charged may not appear to present cause for alarm; it may even seem rather amusing. If we penetrate more deeply, however, we are likely to find the situation somewhat disturbing.

Paramount among the inestimable benefits of college training, we are told, is the ability to evaluate, to think clearly and accurately. Why, the question inevitably arises, are we given any opportunity to develop this faculty, when we are being constantly swept onward by a current to frivolity, into a maelstrom of its consequence? To the latent significance, the extensive ramifications of the problems confronting us we are woefully blind; we are rushing about at top furious pace to be able to interpret these external phenomena. We are dazzled, bewildered, but not stimulated.



Doggedly we struggle to fulfill the requirements of the daily routine. Assignments, instructions, Class assignments, reports, term papers, parallel—the monotonous refrain sinks itself grimly over in our weary brains as we turn from one species of mental drudgery to another.

The often crushing weight of our academic problems necessitates our working under extreme nervous tension. Then, ever we think, woe! be in Wednesday. Frantically we invoke the inspiration of the Muses; but, alas! they, like many others of their sex, are creatures of temperament, and are not always amenable to the pleas of supplicants. We are hopelessly inconsolate in our importunate wailings, we have no recourse but to throw the Ripley paper airplay without inspiration. We work perfunctorily, mechanically, yet often breathlessly, like factory equipment, we must turn out so many units of knowledge a day to be considered of any value. In this process we may have no time to think, but need have machines for thinking!

Some of us once naively envisioned college as a place in which we should have leisure for intellectual and spiritual development. Here, in a setting of idyllic beauty and quietude, we would have opportunity to commune through books with the great minds of the ages, to commune with our inner selves, to see quite "into the heart of things."

To us bitter disillusionment we found has actually on the contrary an almost non-existent quality. Caught in the whirlpool of activity which makes the college wheels go round, we have little time for that quiet and peaceful pursuit which we might hope to gain a keener insight into the meaning of life.

We have forgotten how to utilize advantageously the few leisure moments which we occasionally have. At such rare intervals we seek relaxation through going to the picture-show or through dancing to the rhythm supplied by a radio orchestra—both products of the Machine Age which holds us in thrall. We are no longer sufficient unto ourselves; we are content only when we find

Florida High Holds Banquet

Senior Play to Be Given; Annual Banquet Is Event Tonight

Florida high school will sponsor this week two annual affairs honoring the senior class, the junior-senior banquet to be held tonight at the Dutch Kitchen, and the senior play, entitled "Song of My Heart," to be presented Wednesday night in the Augusta Conrad theater at 8:15.

The theme of the banquet is centered around the Coronation and the speeches will be listed on the program under the general heading of "The Realm of Flambeche."

Dr. R. B Parson, principal of the school, will speak on "The Royal Family" as "Prime Minister of Flashicha."

"Archbishop Conradi of Flashicha," Dr. Edward Conradi, will deliver the closing speech, "Crown Jewels."

Dining Room Breaks Into Public Print

The impression the college dining hall left on one of its male visitors was lasting and deep.

The young man, a reporter for the Tampa Tribune, had one meal in the dining hall, then rushed off to get his camera and take some pictures.

As a result of the visit the Sunday Tribune of May 2 carried a full page of pictures taken of unsuspecting students at dinner. The Tribune also ran a half-page feature on the planning of meals and the amount of food consumed by the college students.

An experiment in objective, rather than subjective pursuits. The wise use of leisure time is to too many cases a lost art on our campus.

Only through leisure properly used can we acquire in fuller measure poise, intellectual enrichment, wisdom. Jesus, we remember, sometimes left the multitude to go up into the hillside, alone. Let us hope that on some bright day this wise use of leisure will come into its own among us. On that day we will be no longer automatons, but students.

Campus Life Reflects Ideas And Attitudes of All Types

Personalities Lend Color And Note of Variety To College Scene

When questioned on almost any subject of general interest around campus girls will answer flippantly, consider first and deliver a well-worded and thought-out opinion, hesitate and say the first thing that comes to their mind, or answer with "Heavens, I don't know. I've never decided what I think about that." Their attitudes toward anything indefinite they express not so much in one deliberate phrase but in their whole personalities.

There is the typically modern young girl with her bobbed hair and the hall—her attitude towards her sorority, courses, clothes, roommate, and college rules all shaped by her definite personality. You can know from her remarks about the cut system and fire drills will be. Imposed to the point; that her lounging pajamas are tailored and very, very smart, and that she brushes her hair with quick efficiency. Her attitude towards life and the rest of the world is that whatever it may be like, she is prepared to deal with it, pleasantly, and without too much concern.

Down the hall a born-crimsoned spectacled, angular, serious young lady lives. Her hair is combed in set, waves, a little over one side of her forehead. Her walk is slow and steady; her voice serious, and her mouth held in a very straight line with a little moist red lip stick. She does most of her parallel reading studies conscientiously, letting nothing interfere with her work. She must be self-supporting since she leaves college, we learn, and must be well prepared for her work. Life is serious she explains, it is hard and not to favors, and to get along in it one must be dependable and prepared for all its pitfalls.

There are of course those whose ideas have not yet progressed beyond the time when they will leave college and perhaps home, as a part of their past. Life is a series of lessons, parallel reading, confabs with your best friends, special deliveries, and pictures on the desk and dance favors in a scrapbook "I shall marry—I don't know whom, but someone—a year or so after I graduate." one of these states matter of factly. A few D's are only to be expected, considering the dreadful amount of parallel and the horrible tests she had had.

The girl who reads editorials and non-fiction books which are not required, who talks about the World Court and Mussolini and International Law. we find with a tolerant smile for those less fortunate in intellect. She feels that "Life is a fight, and part of it made unfair by conditions and circumstances, that part of it is up to us to correct."

There is the typical, all-round girl, entering into every phase of college life from junior musicale and glee club to nightly jaunts to the Sweet Shop. Her conversation is local, the latest campus activity. She is very friendly, calling everyone she has met by name, Life is pleasant, because to look at the nice people in it. Something nice is always bound to happen, she will say, "So why worry?"

There are the few who are driving ahead to some definite and definite goal and profession; their purpose in life was to fulfill a certain way they had been destined to do; life was interesting, but it had to be controlled.

All these and many others, herded together with the same rules and regulations, books to read, the same ideas on the laundry, same food to eat and pictures shows to see, and general environment for the greater part of nine months of the year, comprise as many totally different personalities and qualities.

Speech Students Stage Joint Recital Tuesday

Students from the public speaking classes will appear a debate at 7:45 o'clock May 10, in 406 Diffenbaugh building.

The question under discussion will be, Resolved: That a Constitutional amendment should be adopted giving Congress exclusive power to regulate divorce in the United States.

Ruth Riddle, Florence Trunbin, and Becky Ashton will uphold the affirmative side, and Lillian Burford, Dora Irvin, and Elva Rentfroe will defend the negative side. The rebuttal will be given by Ruth Riddle of the affirmative and Lillian Burford of the negative. All are invited to attend.

Musical Recital Given Wednesday by Students

The school of music continued its series of Wednesday afternoon programs this week with a recital of piano, violin, vocal and organ numbers.

The program was as follows: "Le Coucou," Aimsky, by Veola Evans; "The Song of Desire Miller, by Louise Beavery, vocalist, accompanied by Edna Warren. "To Spring," Grieg, by Emily Blackwell; A Country Dance," MacFayden, by Catherine Davis. "Adagio from Sonata Op. 27, No. 2" Beethoven, by Jennie Sternkese. "Pastorale Varice" Mozart, by Betty Graves. "Prelude-Le Deluge," Saint Saens, by Eleanor Daniells, violinist. "Intermezzo Op. 117, No. 1," and "Ballade Op. 10, No. 1," Brahms; by Emma Lee Goodwin; and "The Kettle Boil," Clokey, by Dorothy Leach, organist.

The last two student recitals will be given May 12 and May 19.

Debaters from G.S.C.W. Make Plans for Verbal Assult on This Campus

Georgia State college debaters accompanied by their coach and the president of the student body will come to the campus on May 14 and will be the guests of the local debating team while here.

They will meet a Florida State team composed of Mary Nolia and Mickey Conn in a debate on the question, Resolved: That Congress should be permitted to regulate minimum wages and maximum hours of industry.

On May 21 Betty Wren and Nell Colvin will go to Milledgeville to take the affirmative side of the question.

Tracy Speaks in Alabama Before Doctors Assembly

Miss Anna May Tracy, dietitian at Florida State College for Women, will address the Alabama Medical association at its annual meeting in Birmingham May 20, 21, 22. She will speak at 2:15 on Wednesday afternoon on "The Dietitian."

On the following day Miss Tracy, who is also chairman of the administrative section of the American Dietetic association, will preside at the Florida State Dietetic association will address the Alabama Dietetic association at 3:30 p. m. on "The Old and the New in Administration."

French Club Dramatizes Play, "L' Habit Vert"

A modified version of the French play, "L' Habit Vert" by Gerard de Nerval and Musset, was read and dramatized by the French club Wednesday afternoon in Bronough lounge during their regular meeting. The roles were taken by the four French students who have shown marked progress in realistic expression as well as in dramatic ability. Those taking part were Sarah Jane Stanberry, Hazel Wilkerson, Harriette Tolar, and Elinka Makerenko.

After the play a shopping scene was played and several songs sung. It is the plan of the members of the French club to present each year one of the same type of their future meetings.

Age Often Overdraws Picture Of Modern Youth's Failings

Student Expresses Belief in "Spunk" of Boys And Girls Who Face Problems of an Era Of Economic Upheaval

By JO TAYLOR

Since in the midst of college age numerous rumors concerning us have come to our notice. These rumors have been to the effect that threaten our position and integrity. We, supposedly, are wayward and a bulwark of evidence behind us is would be a difficult matter to find an answer back to these would-be reformers of our.

Accusations as listed would fall this way: first that we lack spunk; that we are soft and unwilling who must have numerous aids to even get us moving; second that instead of being the experts of the day, we are the sit-patters; third that we've lost the knack to able asset of youth, rebellious ness and courage. Fourth that real importance are viewed with comfortable lethargy or ignored by us matters such as national and international affairs.

Rather is a senior in a woman's college. She is in love with a medical student who is studying in Atchison. He has two more years before he gets his degree and internship, then maybe for three years at a salary of about twenty-five dollars per month. Esther and this boy are planning to marry soon after she graduates. They have been through five hundreds of miles from home in a strange state. They have their studies and their families can help them very little. For years they have heard that early marriages ruined by financial difficulties. Their parents have warned them against stretching family incomes. Esther has been cautioned against ates he will be on duty at a hospital every other night and every day. Part of the time Esther will get to see him only every third night. Many times she will work until he is ready top ractice. This couple is determined to marry and make a success of it.

Lucy is another college girl. She is engaged to a young lawyer who has been out of school a year or two. However, according to income authorities, is enough for one person to live on very comfortably. Soon they will both be living on it as are many other married youth on the same amount who are very happy.

Betty intends to get a job as soon as she graduates. Her family has been inflancial straits and they were hardly able to

Students Show Particular Interest in Cattle Bills

Campus Action Has Succeeded in Informing Girls on at east One Issue Discussed At Legislative Session

The petitions sent by Junior Chambers of Commerce and other civic organizations to this campus to be signed by all those favoring legislation to do away with livestock on the highways have made the college girls more conscious about this issue than any other likely to come up before legislature.

Whereas the students are ignorant of and have little interest in many of the State's affairs which are being settled by this session of the Florida legislature, most of them can and do vote heatedly and with apparent intelligence about the cow issue.

Not only have they thought about the question, but most of them are in favor of fencing the highways of cattle, with differing opinions on how it should be done. Some believe the farmers should be responsible for fencing their cattle while others believe the state should finance the fencing of the highways.

So far bills of both these natures have been defeated in the house. Bills to fence the fence the highways—at an estimated cost of between $40,000 and $7,000,000 have been killed in committees. Such a sum of money would be a difficult if not impossible to get for new public expenditures at this time. Newspapers are believed to be about as burdened as they can possibly be with the government crying in every way to cut down its expenses.

Another bill, proposed by Dan McCarty of Dade county, gives owners of livestock liable for damages if their animals caused accidents on the highways.

The livestock committee reported unfavorably, 19 to 1, on the bill, however, and it failed to get an assignment on the calendar. Since rules provide that a bill is recalled when there is an unfavorable committee report, unless a majority of house members vote to give it a place on the calendar, this bill was dropped by the house.

More recently a bill to make cattle owners responsible for fencing in their cows was proposed in the house but failed to pass.

In defense of such bills are many points which there are likewise some against it. Florida is often called the last frontier state in the Union, and many believe it is best for that position to be abandoned—by getting rid of the cattle on the highways.

Many people considered one of the state's greatest potential sources—surpassing even the tourist and citrus industry.

Because Florida's soil is particularly adapted to grass root over large areas to get enough to eat. And these land-owners would not have large enough pastures for their own cattle to graze on if they kept on their land, their cattle didn't have a large enough area that farmers could lose out entirely.

Many bills introduced have no measure for the re-employment of those thousands of small cattle owners who would be put out of work as a result of the new legislation. Such a plan would probably amount to several millions of dollars and the money for such expenditures is not available to get in new or increased taxes.

Many of these thirty lives were last last year as a result of collisions between cattle and cars still remains. Perhaps some of them were also due to reckless

Juniors Give Senior Parties

Kid Party Will Be Event Wednesday Afternoon For Graduates

The junior-senior kid party will be an event of next Wednesday, beginning in the afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, when juniors with their junior sisters will appear at the open air theatre dressed in "kid" costumes. Here various games will be played, and refreshments of hot dogs will be served.

At 6:30 o'clock, juniors and seniors will assemble for a picnic dining room for dinner. During this time a program will be presented, and a short business session will be held.

Something new in the way of commencement announcements was settled Tuesday morning when the senior class held a "model election meeting" with Mary Miller, president of the senior class, presiding as the meeting chairman. After the reading of some far-from-convention-like minutes by the secretary, some "old business" was taken up, the first piece being two plastic telephones brought by Frances Smith. Next a recitation was given by Mary Berryhill. Under the heading of "new business," Marian Herbert brought forward a suggestion that the meeting was adjourned with the singing of "Garnet and Gold."

CGA Asks for Criticism

A box will be posted on the C. G. A. bulletin board to receive criticisms and suggestions on constructive criticism, rules, and projects pertaining to C. G. A. These statements need not be signed.

Panhellenic Elects Heads

Officers for 1937-1938 Chosen at Recent Meeting

With Ruth Garcia as president, representatives of the seventeen national sororities at Florida State College for Women elected a new members of the Panhellenic council at installation services held last night in the Delta Phi Alpha house. Others on the executive council were: Emma Kirkley Bell, secretary-treasurer; Mary Nell Pinckard, Eugenia Death and Lurline Goodman.

National President Of Phi Kappa Phi Society Dines at FSC Monday

National president of Phi Kappa Phi, Dr. H. L. Shantz, was a guest at dinner in the Florida State college dining room last Monday evening. Mr. Joe McCulloush, manager from the Ocala national forest was also with him. The latter is a member of the board of regent of the University of Arizona. He is Tallahassee on a short visit while on a tour with some forestry officials. Dr. Shantz is chief of the Division of Wild Life Management in the forest service of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Accompanying him to Tallahassee to confer with Frank Albert, forest supervisor, were Walt Tschirley, Washington, D. C., and Art Schilling, of Atlanta, other forestry officials.

Richards Tells Of Publication Date For Book

Van Nostrand Company Issues Pamphlets About Work

VOLUME CONTAINS 94 ILLUSTRATIONS

Scientific Soundness Of Text Assured by Many Experts

Printed pamphlets announcing the forthcoming appearance of "Our Physical Environment" by Dr. Harold P. Richards, professor of physics at Florida State College for Women, have just reached the campus. They are issued by D. Van Nostrand Company of New York, the oldest scientific publishing house in the country.

The publication date of the book has been set for May 26 by Florida State College for Women and contains 94 photographs and drawings. The quality of which are full-pass illustrations. The drawings were made by Burt Swain, of Tallahassee.

In their description of the possible contribution to the field of social science, which is intended for general courses of study in the college, the publishers state, "This book is as far superior to existing books as it opens new possibilities in every curriculum. It reads with the charm and fluency of a narrative and at the same time gives an exceptionally high type of scientific knowledge of scientific fundamentals."

The book is a unified treatment of the four great sciences: chemistry, physics, astronomy and geology, with the topics smoothly interwoven.

Soundness Assured

The publishers pointed out that assurance of the scientific soundness of every statement could be gained from the fact that the material has been carefully read and heartily endorsed by experts in each science. Among the eminent men who read the manuscript and endorsed its scientific soundness were: Dr. Hugh S. Taylor, chairman of the department of chemistry at Princeton university; Dr. Gerald Wendt, former chief of the division of chemistry and physics at Penn State and now director of the American institute and editor of Chemical Reviews; and Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, chairman of geology at Harvard university. Dr. Mather contributed the signed preface to the book.

One of the critics commenting on the book said in a report on the manuscript, stated: "This is the first one-volume text of physical sciences which has face the physicist, the chemist, the astronomer, the geologist, and the literary critic with equal confidence."

Declares Students Would Have More Interests If Professors Would Cooperate Further Leading Girls to Think

By ELEANOR WILLIAMS

For four years I have heard the criticisms buried at us by fellow-students for their gross indifference to national and international problems of national and international import, but I have never heard it well. For four years I have heard students accused of "anti-intellectualism" by professors who have even a few of the more "critical" characteristics. Perhaps even perhaps given lip-service to those criticisms. I know I have often heard them. Our textbooks were graduating from college, still teaching Colliers, still having the same tastes in movies, and still no better able "to critically evaluate" than they were in high school graduation; the mass of examinations and lectures have not able to them in this modern world.

One of my fellow-students who went to the task of having students fill out a questionnaire, the answers to which revealed how shockingly uninformed students were of national and international issues. However, since the low scores on the questionnaire did not reflect the grades in any course, I doubt if students even blushed at their ignorance. I know that if

Tyron Officiates Over Ceremony Held Wednesday

Fourteen new members of Phi Kappa Phi were initiated Wednesday afternoon in the History building. Both the faculty members and the initiates were garbed in their' academic robes.

Purple and white, colors of the honorary and larkspur, lilies, and roses were a part of the decorative scheme which was arranged by Miss Rowena Longmire and Miss Lois Chapman.

The feeling of the initiation was Miss Florence Tyron, chapter president, who was assisted by Miss Louise Richardson, Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, Miss Martha Chapman, Dr. Raymond Bellamy, and Miss Margaret Campbell.

Students' who were initiated were: Jo Binion, Marion Carson, Rosalyn Dasun, Sarah Myrvin Everett, Margaret Delaney, Frances Forth, Lottie Ruth Howard, Bertha Anne Mack Howell, Nancy Oliver, Daisy Parker, Hazel Sangster, Pearl Smith, and Martha Frank Wildman.

Serving on the initiation committee with Miss Chapman, chairman, were Dr. A. R. Seymour and Dr. Dewan Barnard Gaskin.

Following the open initiation ceremony was a banquet given in the Dutch Kitchen. "A Quest for the Beautiful" was the theme of the banquet and was effectively carried out by bowls of golden nasturtiums and baby's breath.

The retiring president, Miss Tyron, was toastmistress. She gave welcome to the new members to

GSCW Debaters Meet FSC Team Here Tonight

Noble and Cone Support Affirmative Side Of Chosen Question

GEORGIA STUDENT PRESIDENT HERE

Debating Coach and Wife Entertained on Campus Over Week-end

In its fifth intercollegiate debate, Florida State College will meet the .debate team of Georgia State College for Women on the Augusta Conradt theater at 7:45 tonight. The question is "Resolved that Congress should be empowered to fix minimum wages and maximum hours for industry."

Florida Has Affirmative

Mary Noble and Mary Cone will argue the affirmative of the question at Georgia's first debate team, who, with Jean Butler, president of the Georgia student body, and Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Cornelius, the debate coach and his wife, will spend the week-end on campus. Next week-end Betty Wynn and Mell Colvin, who debated with William and Mary in Tuesday, will argue the affirmative side of question in a return debate on the Georgia campus.

The Georgia State college debate team will be the second team the Florida team establish itself in inter-collegiate debate programs. It carried on correspondence all this year and made a total of six drawing up debate contracts with other schools in the state and nearby states in the South which might debate with Florida State and such an intimation as now here to get material for debates and how to get it. Dr. Raymond Bellamy is coach for the year. Pi Kappa Delta is the national debate society which sets the question for intercollegiate debate each year.

Other Debates Listed

This is the last debate of the season on campus. Other debates here have included one non-decision debate with the University of Florida, a decision debate with William and Mary college, which they won, and a decision debate with the University of Miami, which they lost. The Florida State college team argued against the University of Florida there in a non-decision debate. The two debates with Georgia State were held on the campus.

EPC Sends One For Field Work

Allen Chosen as Delegate From Campus to Peace Training School

With the money raised by the sale of tags yesterday Virginia Allen, president of the campus emergency peace group, will be sent to represent Florida State College for Women in field work in Georgia this summer.

The day was the last in a series of protests to make it easier to cover the cost of the delegate's training in an intensive interracial, administration course, supervised work, and literature during the summer. Three foreign movies which have been shown as a means of raising the needed amount.

The purpose of the youth section of the Emergency Peace campaign is to train a group in an intensive two week training period at one of the five summer institutes in the United States, the college students will train in teams of five or four and will go to assigned districts for two months or more, where they will live in the home of the community.

They will speak on radio programs, present peace plays and movies, arrange library and trade exhibits, and confer with farm and labor groups, write newspaper articles, make interviews, interview politicians, and finally establish peace councils so that interested members of the community will be enabled to carry on the program after they leave.

The first portion of the two week program at the training in Atlanta will be given over to an annual International relation; fo

Abbey Speaks On Democracy For CGA Club

Success or Failure Of This Form Depends On Three Lands

"Democracy is on trial today," said Dr. Katherine T. Abbey at a meeting of the Twenty-one club Wednesday afternoon. "It is not ready so old a form of government as monarchy, and it has failed noticeably in the last decade to deal with labor's problems. The success or its failure depends upon the success or the failure of those three larger democracies, England, France, and the United States."

This address was the second of a series sponsored by the College Government asserts on for the Twenty-one club, a organization composed of seniors and underclassmen who are literally one or over. The purpose of the club is to educate college women concerning the technicalities and responsibilities of citizenship.

Opening her talk with three questions, Dr. Abbey succeeded in giving the answers to: "What is Government? What is the American form of government? What are the most prominent problems of our government today?"

Government she defined as necessary social regulation. Stressing the fact that stark individualism is anarchy, she pointing out the necessity for individual loyalty to the group in laconic, Dr. Abbey said: "It is difficult, but important, to realize that the welfare and freedom of the whole is the greatest guarantee of the welfare and the freedom of the individual."

The type of government existing in America today is based on four assumptions, believes Dr. Abbey. The first assumption is the concept that government shall be by consent of the whole people. This implies an attempt to bring up the level of the understanding of the group and makes universal education necessary. The second assumption is that the whole people will be able and willing to give their consent; and, thirdly, that there shall be no taboo as to what the people shall give their consent. No institution, no individual must become too great to be examined.

No educator to my knowledge has, perhaps, brtte expressed my observations in his philosophy than John Rice, who says that we think that we want to think and we know it not enough. We must know what to do with what we know, otherwise there is little desire for knowing.

In line with his philosophy then we, as the only thinking on the issues underlying society today, I feel that we should take from our "teachers" on the average faculty, meaning by "teachers" those who are responsible for a student's understanding of life in terms of actuality — the attempt can grasp. Sleepy Guest Is Surprise For Partyers

Birthday Celebrants Are Confronted With Two Empty Chairs

The candles on a certain birthday cake in the dining hall burned brightly Monday night around the table were gathered eight girls. The two people missing at the head of the table were her roommate. The chimes sounded twelve times. Hesaing was sung but neither the honor guest nor her roommate appeared. Where were they? Could it be that they had been locked out?

Two hours and a quarter so the girls sat down and looked rather quizzically at the empty place at the head of the table. Certainly today was the day that the two had planned upon for this party but what caused the "slip" the girls felt rather awkward with a birthday table with no honor guest. People were beginning to eat at the table with amusement.

One of the girls finally said that she would go to see if the missing persons had been locked out. Upon her command she had kept the honor guest outside too long and by her being such a solicious of an already planned party.

The girl left and in several minutes she came back with the missing persons. All three were grinning rather dryly and then it became apparent why the two had been late for the party. They had been asleep.

The honor guest and her roommate had gone home for the week-end. Tired and full of sleepy, they decided to take naps before dinner. The faint rinsting of the dinner bell had awakened them from their deep sleep.

Hurriedly they got to dress and let your roommates miss or, rather, they let her own surprise birthday party.

facts alone will make us wise without interpreting them in the light of our personal lives.

In trying to meet "efficiently and economically" the need of an increasingly complex society educational institutions overlook the fact that the needs of the individ standing—and we students believe in understanding—is knowledge of facts exerge as they satisfy our desire for "grades." Our understanding of life becomes not ideal material" but also and naturally superficial for we think of it only in terms of our personal desires which in turn are seldom correlated with underlying forces at work in society today. I think the elements of these forces are expressed in the two philosophies of fascism and socialism, the trimumph of either of which will greatly affect our personal desires and the courses of civilization there. Yet how seldom in the classroom are we led from a purely personal point of view to understand how we may propagate the one or the other through indifference and through the associations and obligations we may assume later in life?

Graduation Changes

For many students after graduation we may suddenly see how our economic interests may be involved in "politics" and government and thereby a very real interest will be created in "politics." By this time, however, having forgotten most of the facts we learned in college as having little to do with us, we will probably be too blinded by our own immediate and selfish desires to see how we may be rearden the course of civilization.

Let us consider the case of Germany. I do not believe the German people would tolerate and pay reverence to Hitler if they could have interpreted the fascist trends in Germany before 1933 in the all-star dramatic performance to concentrate their personal desires in the now all-embodying ideals of State, Hitler and the Fatherland.

Before Hitler's entry, Germany, torn and broken by the war, was a people whose chief desire was security. The preservation of the "profits" system, financed indirectly by the state, was naturally the answer of the capitalists who had a large control in the government. When low wages, unemployment, and economic breakdown continued, however, it took an emotional appeal from Hitler to sidetrack social revolution. Instead of allowing the deep-seated contradictions of capitalism to out. Hitler so appealed to the emotions of the people as to make them believe the cause of their poverty lay outside the state and governments. The only enemy within the state were Shoes Jews and Communists who were trying to overthrow the government.

So instead of seeing their low wages and poverty as economic injustice, the German people are indicting themselves in their poverty as the supreme sacrifice next to life, they can make for the state. The state and Hitler will five-year plan, Miss Eaton explained, conditions of the country were better understood and reorganization of various phases of industry was accomplished. This time it was planned to produce more consumers' goods and l.ss capitol goods.

Plans Are Flexible

The Russian plan is flexible one and a great deal of revision is done to suit different regions and situations. Changes are made by the month and year. One of the points in their five-year plan is to develop the backward regions, even though production may b cheaper elsewhere. Russia believes in the equality of races and for that reason all sections of the country must be developed, the speaker said.

Russia also believes they have attained in Russia their three-fold goals—peace, bread and work. The aims of economic planning, Miss Eaton summed up, are: balance of trade, a stable government budget, no unemployment, no idle productive equipment and no possibility of over production.

So all they can to right the wrong and to help the people to control the state. In the meantime the people must sacrifice now for a "Greater Germany" later.

Germany Finds Way

To endorse totalitarianism's philosophy into their lives, there could be only "one" way and that was the Nazi way for the German people to interpret facts in educational institutions, in the press and Hitler, representing the small group of capitalists in Germany, had to exercise a control over all of the press, movie, and radio. Since war preparations absorb a great number of the unemployed and idle the private capitalist will be compelled to seek greater profits by acquiring new foreign markets in the form of colonies, urgent economic system from colonies, and by the only means in terms of "righting the wrongs done Germany fascism and private capitalism must grid their flagrant colors, only to meet war and self-destruction.

The lesson we may learn from Germany is not easy nor yet, say the least, popular subject matter in education, is it too difficult. In the final analysis the issue rests with the individual professor's philosophy of education. Whether he is intelligent enough to interpret the facts of the lesson in terms of the student's personal desires so that she may understand or whether he is content to let "memorize the facts" just for a good grade" will give the student little life for us or a decent bourgeois burial.

No professor can really "teach" his own particular subject unless he himself knows something of the underlying forces of society and can relate his subject-matter to them. Unless he can add to a student's understanding of life through his subject, the world will become better off without him and his subject.

Perhaps an over-use of the term "liberal" has rendered many a professor from thinking critically of his subject and its relation to life in general. Imbued with the philosophy of a "liberal education," the professor can say, "I give the student the facts; she can do whatever thinking she has capable of with the facts." He seldom asks himself. "What facts and in the student capable of grasping

Faculty Party Treks to Swamp

Go to Okefenokee Swamp Near Folkston, Ga., On Field Trip

A trip to the Okefenokee swamp near Folkstown, Ga., was made by many faculty members and students of the college recently.

The party contacted Earl Green of the United States biological survey stationed at Camp Cornells, at Folkston, Ga., at the eastern edge of the huge swamp, and with him and two guides set out in a rowboat and trucker. Green is an ornithologist and biologist and is in charge of the protection and rehabilitation of theswamp. The party went is deeper into the swamp, reaching Floyd's island, studying the wild life there. Jeans, sweaters and rain coats formed the expedition's costumes, since it rained all ten hours they were in the swamp, from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

The party saw many alligators and thirty-seven species of the 180 species of birds supposed to be in the swamp, including wood ducks, egrets, four species of herons, ibis, hawks, owls and cormorants.

Miss Delroy brought back a few insects for her classes to study, and Dr. Rurr got permission to bring back his fair trip pitcher plants.

The party were: Dr. Herman Kurz, head of the botany department; Miss Enda Devlney, assistant professor; Miss Katherine Irene Bolles, also of the zoology department; Miss Margaret Prince, biology teacher of Leon high school; Florence Evers, a history major; and Mr. Edward St. John, of Floral City, a specialist in ferns.

Yet if he is truly "liberal" he can't rationally escape the "ends" or motives of the person, group, or organization which provides the facts in question. And he will never question the facts and interpret them in any other way except to support the status quo, as the German people have been taught into doing by their own country. If he does not read and understand those facts interpreted by individuals and groups who have conflicting points of view. In a capitalist society he may find it difficult to discover any other facts than those which support capitalism; the true "teacher" who believes in democratic forms, however, cannot teach without uncovering for the student facts which reveal the effects of existing systems. Since man is not perfect, the society in which he lives cannot be so perfect, and the "teacher" can always lead the student, to "a better way."

Professors Won't Help

Perhaps a number of professors would agree with all that I have said, but they would be content to put their agreement into anything more than words. "You do not belong to the professor's position," they would say. I insist, with school-girlish importunance, that on the other hand I do understand his position. After all, the professor has probably the same binding ties the student has. He desires security, but so is the student's. She wants to be accepted by a certain group. Perhaps. She wants to make her rum where representatives from all parts of the world will speak. The second part of the program, besides being given over to individual study, is also concerned with practical guidance for conducting the campaign.

The theory behind the action is to "arouse thousands of citizens through widespread education to the dangers of war; to create an intellectual and emotional background strong enough to resist propaganda; to direct the education toward effective legislation; and to organize representative peace councils. Through such groups, established throughout the whole nation, public opinion can be laid steady in a crisis and the international will for peace made effective."

The position secure within that that group. She wants to feel secure in certain friendships. She wants to be accepted by her professors. She wants a certain measure of about her grades. If the security that must be admitted, though, that his ties to security may be materially stronger than the student's. He always has the family depending on his salary for security while the student usually has only her individual self. Family and social approval are hardly binding ties. "Bread and butter" for all the mouths which depend on the professor's income. As only a college student with a great deal of experience encourages within the student the idea that although professors act as though they mind him to do so, the underlying forces of society that is actual indifference and apathy to life inevitably is fertilized within him and passed on to the student in the classroom. . . .

The only proof I have of this rather broad and damning observation is the fact that so few professors have committed, and probably the greatest and only practical step toward understanding life in strong organization. Consider, for example, the American Association of University Professors, which supposedly stands for academic freedom and tenure. I wonder how many professors throughout the country actively support that program which should certainly be synonomous with their purposes if they so fulfill the functions of a "teacher." True, of course, that they would be in a better position to give support of such an organization's program unless a vast majority of the professors throughout the country were active members and supporters of its aims and points. On the other hand does not the professor look back to whether or not the individual professor prates deeply enough into life to see the relation between the underlying forces of life and his own personal desires? If he can't understand this relationship, then his attitude is naturally one of indifference. In a slightly less attitude in turn to infect his classroom. He is simply promoting among students the belief in medieval scholasticism—that thinking are is divorced from acting. After all, demand some explanation for the

Belated Fete Honors Queen

Long-Postponed Program Celebrates May Day

Florida State College's annual May day dawned sad and dreary with the sun hidden by gray clouds. By noon the gray clouds had turned inside out and rolled their silvery drops, so lest the fair maids' pastel gowns be dampened as well as their spirits, the traditional May day was postponed until the following Monday. Over the Associated Press wires flashed a message to kill the Florida State College for Women May day story. But it was too late, for some papers had already gone to press. The secret was out! The identity of the maids and the queen had been revealed.

Monday came and departed, but it continued to rain, again the celebration was postponed. The queen and her attendants carefully put away their new frocks and heaved a sigh of regret.

Finally the long awaited May day Saturday, arrived bright and clear. Birds sang as the decorating committee began to put the finishing touches in place. Freshmen ran to and fro carrying baskets of flowers. The maids pressed their dresses and shoes and waited at the sidelines for signs of clouds.

At last the long anticipated ceremony began. Miss Mary Jeanne McKay was supposed to have been crowned queen, but was a reporter who casually asked how she felt about the postponement of May Day, she replied, "I feel as though my reign were long, if not happy."

section is the rule of life. Without their acting to prove to students his belief in academic freedom and tenure, the professor encourages within the student the idea that although professors act as though they mind him to do so, the underlying forces of society that is actual indifference and apathy to life inevitably is fertilized within him and passed on to the student in the classroom. . . .

True, of course, that they would be in a better position to give support of such an organization's program unless a vast majority of the professors throughout the country were active members and supporters of its aims and points. On the other hand does not the professor look back to whether or not the individual professor prates deeply enough into life to see the relation between the underlying forces of life and his own personal desires? If he can't understand this relationship, then his attitude is naturally one of indifference. In a slightly less attitude in turn to infect his classroom. He is simply promoting among students the belief in medieval scholasticism—that thinking are is divorced from acting. After all, demand some explanation for the

Astronomers Hear Talk

World Evolution Forms Topic of Evening At Last Meet

The Astronomy club held its meeting on Wednesday with Harold F. Richards, head of the physics department, as the speaker. His topic was "The Evolution of Worlds." Dr. Richards said, in relation for an astronomer is that he knows anything about evolution in any world except his own; our world is only a small part of the universe, and we cannot say whether there are any systems like it. However, it is more likely that other systems exist and that our world is a unique.

The speaker continued, "In the formation of our world several two hypotheses have been made, the nebular and the planetesimal theories. In the list of scientific theories the planetesimal hypothesis—that the action of another star passing near our system caused the tides to make the sun and planetoids—is favored by most astronomers.

The speaker concluded that the two theories showing which hypothesis is incorrect or which one other theory was applicable.

driving, but it is known that several are unlicensed drivers operating. It is also known, and lamentedness by the local council that the nuisance of livestock on the highways is a source of much inconvenience to the tourist industry.

During the last two years a bill has been waged by the large stock and tourist interests against the small counties of cattle owners. Twenty-five states with organizations, newspapers, and 50,000 petition-signers have fought a drive for legislation that would get rid of the cattle on the highways. Several years ago, bills and intentions in newspapers, declaimed petitions, and held interviews in public halls. Then it was brought their ideas to the legislature. However, a bill has now been brought up in the house in favor of this legislation have been defeated.

They resent law makin the responsibility of the owner for what happens to him in the street—responsible for damage to the cow, hog or goat if he strikes an animal on the public highway. Therefore it seems Florida will have cattle on the highways for at least two more years, and it remains to be seen whether or not the cities and interests can put through the Augusta Rudi theater, Margaret Tyler Cornish special music.

The column starts off rightly this week by offering congratulations to the class of '37 for walking off with the swimming trophy for the third time. Not only that, but the seniors deserve double credit because they had fewer aspirants in the meet than any other class and still managed to pile up the largest number of points. Looks like our seniors are making up in athletics for what they lacked in diamond-skill.

We've heard that the road to camp is a bit bumpy, but you wouldn't prove it by the gang who went out early Saturday afternoon. We don't know whether the crowd should be attributed to the annual epidemic of spring fever or the desire for a last fling before leaving school for the summer, but in any case, as many as sixty crowded into the trucks in their way out to camp last week-end and even when the rough spots in the road were hit the ride was not enough to jolt the girls to be even half-way badly jostled. They merely all swayed together.

Good news has come to the effect that something is to be done about the condition of the golf course and it is hoped that what is made that the knee-deep weeds on the course will be cut, and there is hoping more than we are that the promise will be kept. Now all we have to do is wait for set of the natural hazards of playing golf over there on the hill, is to get rid of the added distractions such as the several chiggers, the snakes and the two boys who set their baseball bat which is now our course along with the players.

Last week-end's campers came home with a new suggestions for this summer's sun bonnets—none other than a good ole lily pad held in place with a rubber band behind, and not to keep in step with the almost as popular Parisian fashion, the long stem of the lily forms the streamer down the back. Several campers practiced modeling these new numbers last week-end, or so we hear.

The camp sail boat has a name, and it was decided right from that straw—as for camp, as for sail, and to be brief. Put them all together they spell "CASABO" and that's the name. Credit and some a prize went to Jeannette Reish for the idea.

Gosss our modern dancers had a perfectly beglamour-s excuse to emerge last Friday night after the the presentation of "School for Husbands," for that marked their seventh public performance, and that is really a record to be proud of.

One of the faculty players who had participated in the faculty-Robert tennis tournament was heard to remark the other day that before the final match that she hoped Fisher and Rogers would win because that would mean that she and her partner had been put out by the champions. We reckon that would make a slave somebody's pride, but it's enough that with came true, as Fisher and Rogers walked off with the honors of the tournament leaving the others behind to bask in the glory of having been beaten by the champs.

Either the president of C. O. A is getting too sport-minded or else the Home Economics club has suddenly changed from domestic to athletic interests, at any rate, according to the announcement made by the president of the student body at convocation Thursday, the next meeting of the Home Economics club will be held in the "swimming" lab instead of the sewing lab. Whats a change!

We've about decided that we're lonlier than we realized to have built a wonderful swimming pool out at the old alma mater—only. According to a story told in one of the classes the other day, a certain college in Kentucky also had a swimming pool only there wasn't any water put in it for a long time after it was built. When inquiries were made as to why and why the school was denied the privilege of using the swimming pool the fact was revealed that the builders had failed to put in a way to get the water, out of the pool if it were once filled. They could easily have filled it by simply running a hose in there, but the question was how to get the water out again. Who would be willing to empty a pool by dipping out buckefuls of water, even for the sake of a nice swim? It seems then that we are not only lucky to have a pool, but we are doubly lucky to have a pool that has water in it.

Juniors Lose To Sophomores In Tennis Tilt

Two Inter-class Games End in Odd Victory And 3-3 Tie Up

A combined team of junior and sophomore racquet wielders tied their class match with the sophomore team and went down in defeat in a second match this week.

The class line-up of this year was made necessary by the fact that the seniors did not enter a team in tennis competition.

Last Saturday's match gave victories to Evelyn Fisher, Felicia West single players for the juniors and to the two women doubles team of Connie Ash and Martha Robbins. Oil victorian Elizabeth Goode those of Valerie Hunt, Fay Corey and the doubles team of Ruth Wilson and Jean Nash.

Evelyn Fisher, junior, and Ruth Robbins, sophomore, started off the first match of the afternoon. At the beginning of the first set the first four games were divided evenly with two for the players. In the fifth game stroking Fisher claimed the reward of service and in the sixth the score for the first set 6-2. In the second set Miss Fisher again gained only one game to her credit not being able to resist the steady attack of her opponent in her rival. The match ended with Miss Fisher 6-1 and victorious.

Another junior-s o p h o more game was played by Marjorie Horton for the juniors and Valerie Hunt for the sophomores. The first game in the play was taken by Miss Horton and she proceeded in claiming the next three games.

In the fifth game Horton retaliated with a good service and with the score at 40-15 in her favor she took the game for the juniors. At the start of the second set neither side was tied with a score of 4 but Miss Hunt managed to win the next two games, to end the score for the first set 6-4. Playing was close again in the second set and at the end of the ninth game the score was tied at 5-4 in favor of Hunt. Hunt claimed the next game making the match 6-4, 6-4 with the sophomores the winners. Horton had beautiful form all during the play and made several nice drops over the net to score points. Hunt's consistent low balls chalked up many points for the sophomores.

Fay Corey and Yvonne Marcheseau representing the sophomores and freshmen teams for the singles met in a game Saturday afternoon. Marcheseau by hard, scorning strokes claimed six games to Corey's two in the first set, but Corey put out in the second set with excellent tennis skill and made good returns to the baselines which Marcheseau failed to return by netting many balls. The second set ended 6-3 in Corey's favor. Much the same circumstances followed in the third set, which set ended with the score 6-3 also in Corey's favor, chalking up another singles match for the sophomores.

A singles match between Nancy Williamson, sophomore, and Felicia West, junior, ended in a defeat for the sophomore. Williamson had good form and her service was well-placed, but she failed to return West's steady strokes, ending the first set 6-3 in West's favor. In the second set the playing was close at the beginning but West shot ahead to take the tenth game, finishing that set in her favor 6-4 and ending the match for the juniors 6-3, 6-4.

Two doubles teams played Saturday ending favorably for the freshmen and the sophomores. Connie Ash and Martha Robbins on the freshman team, played against Jean Magnus and Betty White of the sophomore team. The first two set scores were unevenly balanced, Ash and Robbins taking the first set 6-1 and Magnus and White retaining the second set 6-4. Robbins made use of well-placed backhand strokes in the play and Ash succeeded in making several good defensive strokes to add to their score. In the third set the games were close and both teams tied at five out of ten games with five games to their credit. Two steady games were played in this third set before Ash and Robbins secured the necessary two-game lead, ending the set with the score 11-9.

Another doubles team with Jean Nash and Ruth Wilson representing the freshmen and Marie Joffre and Nan Clark playing for the juniors, played off a match Saturday afternoon. In the first set Nash played steadily but set and scored many points by dropping the ball just over the net on her opponents' ground. Joffre and Clark failed to rally sufficiently to even up the score and the first set ended 6-2 in favor of Nash and Wilson. Swift, consistent playing by Wilson and the doubles match in the second set also went to a 6-2 score.

By DOROTHY BARCLAY

Passengers on a rocket ship from Marz landing on the Gulf coast near Wakulla Springs last night might well have wondered at the sanity of Earth's inhabitants had they come upon the Flounderers of Florida State. Wading through mud up to their knees, sinking into mud up to their waists, getting lost in the oyster shells—and providing meals for innumerable mosquitoes, this band of fifteen scoured the waters with lantern, gig, and sunny sack for the salty delicacies which edible crab.

Student journalists and faculty members usually considered mentally competent floundered in many ways this week-end. Their "foot slog-slogin" was fully repayed by the Gulf fish and two dozen crabs which found their way into the empty sacks.

The adventure on the search was remarkable for its variety; and, with the exception of the first 100 om. one group of hunters spoke of everything from labor unions to the Spanish revolution. The continuity would suffer a serious break, however, when the last lone one of the number lost her footing but the last lone one of the equilibrium was regained. The vanguard of the group, however, was unfortunate in having no opportunity for speaking an additional fish tale on returning.

Trekking back to camp through the darkness the party made attempts to ascertain definitely the position of the stars but after the attempts the party explored the shore, others investigated an abandoned hotel. The crowning event of the day was, however, the flounder party itself, and despite barked ankles and sand filled beds it is doubtful if any of the participants would have changed places with those members of the ill-fated car, who were not anxious to get to Carrabelle, lost the main body and had to content themselves with a comfortable night's sleep.

Miss Tyson then turned the gavel over to the new president, Dr. Seymour, and announcement was made of the other new officers who are: Dr. Jennie Tilt, vice president; Miss Marion Blanchard, secretary. Miss Dora Skipper was chairman of the banquet committee and was assisted by Miss Katherine Montgomery, and Miss Mary Etta Thurlebeck.

Line-up Given For Odd-Even Tennis Games

Horton and Corey Will Lead Players Into Final Matches

The height of Odd-Even tennis competition will be reached Saturday afternoon as Marjorie Horton, number one player for the Evens and Fay Corey, chief racquet wielder for the Odds, lead their teams into the annual Odd-Even games in the matches beginning at 3 o'clock.

Leading the line-up for the afternoon the match between Fay Corey and Marjorie Horton, tennis the consistent and hammering game of Corey, who has been undefeated this season, pitted against the smooth driving of Horton, who lost her single's match against Hunt in the class games.

Dynamite is expected from the match between Yvonne Marcheseau, Even and Valerie Hunt, number two players. Both players have hard serving strong drives and excellent form. Marcheseau was twice defeated in class games but both matches were hard-fought three set affairs with Fay Corey.

It will be chop against drive when Ruth Wilson meets Betty for the odds and Evelyn Fisher clash in the third match. Miss has the reputation for a consistent round steady game while Fisher has a sound drive and forehand credit. In the light of their playing in the class games the match should be a fast and even odds.

Jean Nash, playing for the Odds, will come up against Felicia West in the number four position for the Evens. Both players won victories in the class games and both have a game of steady consistent strokes.

Nan Clarke, Even, and Ruth Rubin, Odd, will be pitted against each other in the fifth match. Clarke has one victory to her credit in the class games while Rubin played once in the class games to be defeated. However both games showed good diamental scoring and the match should be an interesting one.

In the doubles big guns will fire again as Valerie Hunt and Fay Corey, the Odds team won a decisive victory over Marjorie Horton and Evelyn Fisher in the class games yesterday take the field again against the new combination of Marcheseau and Fisher. Fireworks are expected when "Connie's" long range and drives and Fisher's cross-court placing clash once again in the brilliant serving and steady stroking of the Corey-Hugh team. set to take it with sscore of 6-2. conferences. Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell and Miss Mary Crow Whitfield reported on the meeting as a whole, while Dr. Annie M. Popper, newly elected president of the Tallahassee branch, told of the progress made toward the national million dollar fellowship fund. Mrs. C. P. Heinlein, past president of the Tallahassee A. A. Thought and Action in Adult Education." She pointed out that throughout the program of the education division ran the plea for freedom in thought and the need for the A. A. U. W. to help promote this freedom.

The dinner was followed by a comedy entitled "Brother Bill," presented by Betty Boot and Ruth Riddle of the spoken English department. At the close of the meeting a social hour was held at which time coffee and cookies were served.

Fisher-Rogers Win Finals In Tennis Doubles

Consistent Playing Marks Last Game in Series Played This Week

The annual faculty-student doubles tournament came to its climax this week as Evelyn Fisher and Dr. William Rogers defeated Janice Borton and Professor Robert Miller in straight sets 7-5, 6-2 to win the finals match.

The first set furnished plenty of fireworks for the audience of tennis fans. Fisher clicked the service and took it. The other three players followed, each taking his own serve consistently. All four of the games were marked by consistency of playing on both sides of the net as each team "hit out" the other's striking.

With the games at two all the Borton-Miller team broke through both their opponents' serve and took one of their own to get what looked like an overwhelming lead of 5-3. In the following game set point was played several times in a heavily "deuced" game but the Fisher-Rogers team pulled through on a narrow margin to break the game and make the score 6-4.

After a few breathless close calls the English professor and his partner pushed back their opponents' lead for a second victory in the next game by taking their serve to tie the set at five all. Functioning smoothly, and aided by several "smashes" from the racquet of Dr. Rogers, the team fought through the swift service of Borton to take the seventh game and the set at 7-5.

The second set was much less hotly contested than the first. The Fisher-Rogers team continued to play a consistent driving game. Miller's feil below his usual playing. His stroking was brilliant in spots but erratic. Except for a brief rally in the middle of the set by Borton and Miller the Fisher-Rogers team sailed through the

"Gripe Night" May Be F. S. C. W. Feature

An idea which has a good chance of becoming an actuality on this campus comes under the heading of "Gripe Night." It was suggested recently by a faculty member in answer to queries made to him concerning student life on this campus.

Briefly, Gripe Night," would be designed to bring together once a quarter of the student body in a mass meeting. This body, however, would exclude officers of the College Government association or any of those who by virtue of an office are members of the student senate. In other words these meetings would allow students, without the interference of student officials who would be of necessity wish to defend different issues, an opportunity to air their grievances, small or large. These meetings would provide a means for students to "let off steam" and at the same time a means of vitalizing student opinion.

In order that these mass meetings not be in vain all these ideas and suggestions having substance and validity would be taken back to the College Government officials in the form of formal recommendations. Further action would come through those channels provided for student legislation.

The actual organization of these student body mass meetings would be comparatively simple. There would be no objection at least according to the suggestion as outlined, with the exception of a chairman who would be elected at each meeting. The necessity for a chairman comes from a need for some degree of order at the meeting underway a member of the faculty could call the group to order and preside until a chairman could be elected. Each meeting would elect a new chairman officiating. Each meeting would see the slate of the preceding meeting wiped clean.

In order to be effective and to serve the purpose of such meetings it is believed that questions and information should be the keynote. That students might unhesitatingly state their ideas about all sorts of campus subjects it is felt that the less formality the more frank and truthful would be the opinions expressed.

The student body, should "Gripe Night" become an established institution on the campus, will become united. It will be able to point to its ideas that are those of a homogenous whole and instead of a campus composed of small groups with conflicting ideas or even similar ideas which never become vital issues because of a lack of mass support, there is a chance for a united student body. There is a chance for the much-talked about student participation in College Government, for here is the chance for everyone to have a real part, an opportunity for each one to have her say.

Not only will "Gripe Night" serve the majority of the students but also that group elected to serve as the head of the College Government association. In order to represent the more than 1,500 students, it is necessary for these leaders to keep in touch with student opinion, a job that is not an easy one. Of course there are a number of well-established mediums of student opinion already on the campus, including N. S. F. A. which holds forums where subjects are discussed and from which resolutions oftentimes are taken to the senate, the student legislative body. The Flambeau has its open forum columns and the student senate meetings themselves are open to the entire student body. However, there is a need for another mode of student expression and "Gripe Night" should fill this need.

Nothing can be done this year because of lack of time but it is hoped that "Gripe Night" will be started at the beginning of the school term next fall.

Can't F. S. C. W. Be Represented?

While European youth convene this summer at the International Exposition in Paris, young Americans will attend the Model Congress of the United States, July 2-3, in Milwaukee, Wis. In a spirit of fellowship the Congress will offer youth a chance to learn from each other and from their elders how they can best work together to contribute to the welfare of their generation, their country and the world. It is a call to the youth to express opinions as to what we would do if we were members of the United States Congress.

The Fourth American Youth Congress will include a Senate, a House of Representatives, joint committees and organizational caucuses. There will be committees on agriculture, democratic liberties, education, labor, peace, recreation and leisure time. Caucuses will be held for farm groups, trade unions, church groups, peace societies, "Y's," settlement houses, unemployed organizations, student groups, athletic groups, social and cultural societies, and interracial relations groups.

The Model Congress is endorsed by many senators and representatives, including Florida's Senator Claude Pepper. In July 1936 President Roosevelt sent a message to the Third American Youth Congress, said: "Like the rest of our population, young people today are faced with problems both serious and perplexing. Their solution is not going to be easy. A real hope in the fact that young people themselves are coming together to seek through cooperative endeavor, a solution to these problems and a clarification of these perplexities. This is in keeping with the traditions of our country; it is a real evidence of the vitality of our democracy."

Many colleges and universities will send delegates to the Fourth American Youth Congress. It seems to us that F. S. C. W., one of the largest women's colleges in the nation, cannot afford to miss such an important event and should by all means have a representative there. We should like to see our C. G. A. take advantage of this opportunity to cooperate with our fellow youth on our mutual problems, by obtaining sufficient appropriations to send a student who will return here next year. In that way the student body would be able to share in the benefits derived from the Congress.

But the budget committee is clamping down on funds to be used for national and state youth conferences. According to rumor the committee's attitude is due to the disconcerting reason that such affairs are not considered worthwhile enough to overshadow the expense.

Campus Leadership Come in For Training

An innovation on the campus which promises to be a regular activity if Mortar Board members each year are willing to follow the precedent established by this year's group is the Leadership conference which was held last Saturday. In order to present something that would strengthen leadership and be of practical value to the future Mortar Board chose this as its service project this year. From the turn-out alone the conference can be considered a success and from observation the material presented should be useful to those attending the clinics.

The significance of a conference of this kind should be many-fold. In the first place new leaders should receive many helpful hints that may be used in succeeding administrations of their organization more efficient. But more important these conferences should make official positions stand for something and prevent them from becoming empty honors. Students, like all individuals, are apt to seek the honor or to accept the honor of positions complacently, resting on their laurels, so to speak. In addition, a gathering of this sort should prove a rousing if not a present a feeling of co-operation and convey an idea of the common problems besetting student officials.

Of course, the real test of the good of such a conference cannot be made now but can only be valued after these leaders have served their offices for a year. However, the fundamental idea of a training course is excellent and if it lives up to its ideal should find a permanent place in the college calendar.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glasser

This Week

Britain Takes Lead In International Activity

Although this has been the week of the coronation of a new king of Britain and the isles, young Anthony Eden has, by grace of his actions, become really the outstanding international figure of the English empire. In his statement to Parliament that the first 5,000 women, children and old men will be leaving Bilbao almost at once, he launched the United Kingdom on a mission of mercy that stands without precedent in the history of international affairs. Unwilling to stand aside and have the defenseless noncombatants in the Spanish city slaughtered, and unable to convince the besiegers that they should let the inhabitants who could not bear arms leave the scene of bloodshed, he resorted to unilateral action to get the full support of the British population.

Later, acting as referee in the London Times vs. German government bout in the matter of the bombing of Guernica—by German planes, according to the Times—he advocated a neutral enquiry into the matter. Not because we want to indict anybody, but if the facts are disputed—and they are in some quarters—then the only settlement solution is to establish the facts.

Naturally, Franco is screaming all sorts of insults about interfering and ignoring neutrality laws, but no action has as yet been taken by any of the other international powers.

The movie-going public is waiting in almost breathless suspense for the final verdict. Will Garbo strike? Will the Swedish recluse come out from retirement to join her sister—and brother-workers in the Hollywood picketing of film studios? With Robert Montgomery and Franchot Tone acting as collective-bargaining agents for the Screen Actors Guild, and with almost all the actors in Hollywood sympathy with the striking studio craftsmen, even to the extent of rendering them financial assistance, almost anything might happen.

"Hydrogen or Safety?" would be an appropriate title for a study of the recent Zeppelin disaster, for manufacture of any more of the great "lighter-than-air" craft would be utterly useless if a non-explosive gas were not procurable. The United States alone possesses it, and even the answer, it would seem, in its position, to deny the supply of helium, which is found in the western part of the country, available to all nations. The bill, which was presented to Congress by Senator Pittman this week, has not come before both houses yet.

What Are Women's Rights?

Student Discusses Relative Merits of Single And Double Standards as Applied To Feminine Progress

BY CLOTILDE CROURSE

"I had long wondered why the catch phrases as "women's rights" and "feminist movements" aroused such antagonistic responses from many generation enjoys and appreciates the great social, political and economic privileges which feminists have fought for so hard, it is odd that I dislike the terms of that era when women were still trying to "get their rights" were "as good as men."

For my political and economic rights, and for my privilege to become socially useful I can thank the feminists who fought for them from the bottom of my heart. But for one thing I cannot thank them, and that is the change they have wrought in the attitude of the modern world toward each other. When women were crusading for their rights they were, among other things, a finer companionship between the sexes and a more truthful morality. But somewhere along the way they must have dropped the mark, because those promises have remained unfulfilled.

Women first obscured their aim for more honorable relations with men by unfounded "single standard." This not only gave women equal rights with men to have sexual experiences before and after marriage with as many partners as they choose; it apparently gave them the right to drink as many cocktails as men, even if they passed out doing it; to listen to and to tell shady stories in public, and to visit burlesques or obscene night clubs without having refinement cast upon their taste or their character.

Today women are giving up these ridiculous notions and are reverting to a more "ladylike" attitude. However, the results of that era are reflected in the present day attitude of men toward feminine rights. In about five years we successfully lost what claims we had gained to their admiration and respect through hundreds of years. We regained them slowly, but they still regard us with a wariness that astounds my imagination.

Our most noticeable outward loss is in the field of etiquette. Men no longer pay any of the little courtesies that were so long a part of their code. They remember our battlecry for "equality," so they are treating us not as women, but as they would treat fellow men. They no longer rise every time a woman comes into a room. Neither do they hold our coats or give up their places to us on street cars or subways. We are not always escorted to the proper door of a club, but are left to climb in the farther door and slide under the wheel. Sometimes they appear for their hotdates without coats or ties and I have attended a dance and did not hesitate to take off coats and roll up shirt sleeves if it were too warm.

Perhaps I am old-fashioned in regretting the passing of small courtesies, but I still say that the changes are all to the good and that men are acting more naturally in our company. But it seems to me that their lack of courtesy reflects a more fundamental and a more serious change in their attitude toward us.

It is hard to make absolute statements in a discussion of the

Collegiate Comeback

The "dirt" of last week-end provided some much-needed excitement. An observing bystander might have noticed a few things—that in case of danger the boy friend's picture and other little knicknacks can take care of themselves—and that if there was to be a real fire the street would be so cluttered up with interested Tallahassians that there would be no room for the college girls outside the burning building.

The Flambeau staff had a good time on their founders-party despite the fact that one-fourth of the party (the fourth without the food) was lost. The barn yard atmosphere was provided by the presence of a few domestic cows and pigs who became annoyingly friendly in the course of the evening.

With exams lurking in the all too near future we wish to lodge a complaint against the teachers that take away pupils after school explaining worldly just what they want done and not leaving us time enough in which to do it.

The end of the year banquets are all very enjoyable but they have their bad points. What are we going on a diet before when we go home looking disgustingly well fed after sniping about the food all year?

The age of miracles is not yet past. The unheard of happened in an English class when a group of the more lowly pupils actually forgave a test as she'd know just who had prepared their lesson and who had not. It's time for the Pi! when people like that cease being merely annoying and become deadly.

The blame for this one goes to the Upper Iowa Collegian:

Humpty Dumpty sat on the wall.
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall.
All the King's horses and all the King's men
Came riding by on side-saddles—the sissies.

The faculty dinner was the last chance of the year to convince the prof that we're really much more intelligent than he would think. It's just that we get so awfully nervous when we take an exam. Hope we made the right impression.

The Junior Collegian defines broadmindedness as being able to smile when you suddenly realize that your roommate and date are not on the dance floor. Maybe so. On the other hand, considering the men that are flaunted around here it might be a smile of pure malice—especially if you're not of the roommate.

A Berkeley florist says that corsage buyers at the University of California are black irritable. The Don Juan gets the "usual thing"—three gardenias or an orchid. That leaves us speechless, we also have been so pathetically pressed with a bunch of sweet peas.

When lessons, meetings, plays and outside activities pile up on the calendars of the girls at Stephens college the president calls a "drop day"—all-day-long period in which the girls can do just what they wish.

We suggest a two weeks' "stop" right now—while we still have the energy.

A usually dignified senior was seen teaching one of the freshmen cadets the latest thing in spring dances in front of Gilchrist the other day. Those in charge of her education certainly have a few arts later when she get a box containing three orchids (real ones) bearing the inscription, "Three little orchids—Three little words."

The prize for this week goes to an upper classman who said that she had listened to the coronation ceremony and thought it was "awfully dumb" of them to play "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" at the end. And Others Say—

We see in the New Hampshire that the president of that institution has called the attendance in youth which he expressed aptly in an address before the New Hampshire legislature. He said the responsibility in solving the problems of the young people lies not only with the teachers of the university but with the legislature and that "the future will depend not so much on what youth thinks but in terms of the facilities and opportunities we give youth to grow and become men and women."

In an editorial in the Tulane Hullabaloo we are told what the attendance of America are fast tiring of anti-war strikes. The Tulane writer believes that the present unsettled state of the international affairs, the while what would be the reaction in the event of the declaration of war. He also writes, "The student demonstration standard was in New York, which usually acts as a barometer, attracted a smaller number than last year, and that half the attendance expected this year. This shows that even the students are both weary and leary."

From a Kentucky Kernel editorial we are interested in learning that Robert Maynard Hutchins and the University of Chicago associates have taken a significant step in the field of education. The new plan, which will be put into actual practice in September, will be an attempt to tie up more closely the gap between the high school and the university or college, and the practice of the new plan will be the combining of the last two years of high school and the first two years of college."

Another interesting bit of news obtained from the Kentucky Kernel is the fact that the college possesses the only known college student owned and operated printing plant in the country that is valued at more than $40,000. The Kernel covers the campus, publishes twice per week and furnishes practical newspaper experience for the students in the department of journalism.

What England Will Fight For By Lord Eustace Percy

Britain's traditional attitude of isolation toward the rest of Europe was overthrown in 1919, Lord Eustace Percy states in the May issue of Harpers, in explaining his country's foreign policy to American readers. Formerly England fought no war until the European pot boiled over and threatened to disrupt her in the process. But the experience of the World War taught England that to allow lawlessness to come to a head was too great a risk; therefore she determined to throw over her old policy and to assume a joint responsibility with other nations for checking lawlessness on its first appearance. For this reason Britain joined the League of Nations.

The Covenant of the League, however, contains one ambiguity which is not compatible with the British spirit. The bulk of that document implies that nations have no absolute rights, any more than citizens of a state have such rights. On the other hand, Article X of the Covenant seemed to confer on every member of the League an absolute right to be protected in the enjoyment of all its existing possessions.

Now Britain is not willing to guarantee the principle of nationality to all nations, Lord Percy states. She doesn't consider it her responsibility to protect China in the possession of all the territories conquered by Japan. What she does feel obligated to fight for is the integrity of the British Commonwealth of Nations, the invulnerability of the frontiers of Western Europe, the independence of Egypt, the preservation of the Mediterranean as an international highway.

But whether the definition of her policy functions means that England will cease to work for the international betterment of all regions, that she is retreating toward her traditional policy of isolation, depends upon a balance between the conflicting forces at work in Europe. The way of Spain and takes up the war between Fascism and Communism. England has simultaneously refused to fight for she believes in neither of these creeds. But many Englishmen today feel it their duty to realistically examine the international and social needs, and to make the League of Nations a true instrument of economic cooperation.—P. C.)

America's Pampered Parasites

Parasitism as the essential condition of the mass mind is the theme of the editorial in this month's American Mercury. The more modern man has come to depend upon the commands upon a culture to which he contributes nothing and which is gradually undermining his active powers, the author of the story states in his attack upon the "down-to-earth century barbarians," as he calls the masses.

The author of this article writes, "The question of whether every American citizen is entitled to "free" education. Does the control of popular education, in which the arts can do just what they wish.

Must We Have Another Boom? By Summer H. Slichter

It may seem paradoxical to discuss the danger of a boom when seven or eight million people are out of work, says Sumner H. Slichter in the May "Atlantic," yet the press is filled with warnings that the present rise in prices a boom is simply the kind of business expansion which generates its own collapse, and that we must avoid it. Only this kind of expansion cannot occur when millions are out of work. Mr. Slichter states that between the middle of 1933 and the middle of 1936 industrial production made twice as much progress as during the preceding two years. From the armament and durable goods industries, businesses of labor, forward buying has received a new impetus, and this in turn raises prices and stimulates new waves of demand and more forward buying. Mr. Slichter enlarges further upon the question of a boom and gives reasons and remedies why a boom is undesirable, and ways and means to control said booms.

In conclusion, he states that most of these policies will develop new sources of demand to offset the eventual drop in deferred demand which has accumulated in the last few years. This is the greatest problem of all and is one which only business men can handle. Whether or not stability is achieved during the next decade, Mr. Slichter says will depend upon how successfully the business men of the country discover new opportunities for investment by improving equipment and products and by developing new products.—P. better nor faster are good manners as they are used to a much more intense degree. Neither have we the family load when she graduates that her father has—difficulties and try to straighten them out. Betty is just twenty-two.

Paul is a boy who worked in a job. He is handsome. He wears a nice home. Paul graduated from high school supporting himself by working at the drug store. He completed a nice family which lost its father in the fall. Paul, though, turned an all-day job after he graduated from high school. He supported himself, sent money home and paid for voice lessons for himself. He has a fine tenor voice. He obtained his college degree by working after school. So Paul is beginning to earn a good living. Paul is twenty-two.

Donald comes from an intelligent middle class family. He received a substantial education from his parents. Upon graduating from college he insisted on finding his own job in another locality from his home. He is starting at the bottom and refuses help from his family. Donald is twenty-three.

Alice is a junior in college. She takes active part in campus activities and attend all forums and lectures by outstanding celebrities. She is very interested in issues confronting nations and citizens that are going on in the world. Alice finds her parents quite unable to see her viewpoint about Roosevelt, social security legislation, income taxes, and neutrality acts. Alice's father complains about all the money Roosevelt is taking from the country and the people. Alice's father earns an income of approximately $5,000.

Where he would have accused of failure a reviler, pain and for to us I wonder whether it is not rather evidence for their in found. Could it be that they become "solutions" in backing social reforms such as old-age pensions, aid to dependent children, help for the sick and the blind. Surely it is not weak to ask for financial security, investments and action to prevent another depression that will affect us. Because we want change, want reforms in giving every individual his chance in society are we found our bankers? The Nation-Bank, Our Government and the banks? Are we fickle, restrictions and unemployment of youth in a tense healthy environment and education for all youths—these are the ideal demand today. By trying to correct the evils of society in the past we are being ruined, so they say. All we are asking is freedom of the prejudices and narrow-mindedness that have held youth back in the past.

When we are upbraided for not being pioneers, for lacking the courage and determination that our forefathers had, we wonder what is meant by pioneers. Surely our duties do not expect us to go to sea and conquer new lands and destroy the wilds of Africa. There are no new lands to push into like the buffalo-lands of the West used to be. We are deprived of the opportunity to hew logs for dwelling and to develop a chance to live off our own wild soil. We are rich and not have babies in covered wagons nor can our boy-friends get Indian arrows through their chests by yelling red-skins. However, there is such a thing as a movement for international understanding between youth; there is the new era coming of social reform, change in governmental and economic systems. There will always be new fields to explore, new inventions and ideas to pro-mulate. How about the countless youth who are spending hours in research laboratories who are suggesting new ideas for politics and government, who are spending long hours and much energy in social work, who are facing poverty and other personal handicaps? There are thousands of youth everywhere who are spinning marriage with unsurmountable financial difficulties that would be theirs otherwise, who are making a living in business without the help of parents.

If statistics were taken, the percentage of youth actively engaged in important constructive work compared with thirty years ago would be astounding. In those days it was our elders who did all the pioneering. We were permitted to be rich children and become petted.

Some modern writers bemoan the fact that we have lost a valuable rebellion against social conditions. It has been proved many times in social experimental department. At least the legislators seem convinced that people by a majority vote. Practical considerations are that President Roosevelt's program is being made to be applied to relief expenses will be granted.

It will probably result in no official action. Ambassador Dodd reports from Washington. Although Senator Gerald P. The start of the nation's first steel strike in Pittsburgh, which is estimated to have affected 500,000 men in the industry, coincided in time but not intent with the announcement of a settlement of the strike in Tennessee. The strike order, issued by John L. Negotiations are under way between strike organizers and industrialists at this time, but as yet no definite arrangements have been completed.

Members of the committee in charge of twenty-four hour party, "the affair" and that probably fifty per cent of all young men and women attending the affair will be married or engaged before midnight, is the statement of Miss Dorothy Hopkins, chairman of the committee.

In my experience, the first general belief among men about women is that they are pretty, witty, greedy, and selfish. A man is fairly correct when he makes up his dates for the first time is "out for what she can get." He is always then in keeping the eyes open lest he be used to his disadvantage, continues Miss Hopkins. Church Groups Make Numerous Program Plans

Week-end Will Be Filled With Varied Services At Student Centers

The campus church organizations have a varied program scheduled for the coming week-end.

Sunday morning at 7:30 o'clock the Methodist students will hold their recognition service for the newly elected officers. Immediately following this a chicken breakfast will be served on the lawn of the student house. Afterwards the officers will be introduced in the Sunday School class. Miss Winnie Lee Davis, teacher of the class, will speak on the subject of the lesson, "Two Strong Men." Miss Lucille Plow will conduct the lesser services.

New Council Introduced

The new council to be introduced at Sunday school are: president of the Methodist student organization, Margaret Holloway; vice president of the Methodist student organization, Esther O'Byrne; secretary, Annie Laura Folk; treasurer, Charlotte Carlton; financial secretary, Mary Elizabeth Stevenson; worship chairman, Frances Rowell; publicity chairman, Carolyn Collins; music chairman, Sarah Martin; dramatic chairman, Henrietta Jacoby; house chairman, Newris Powell; social service chairman, Frances Lacy; recreational chairman, Marjorie Morrison; sorority chairman, Mary Allen; off campus chairman, Hettilu Niblack. The Sunday school class officers are: president, Sara Lewis; vice-president, Martha Hague; secretary, Sara Adams; treasurer, Lelie Watrous; league program representative, Pauline Flake; league social representative, Jane Dowdell.

Baptists Study Manual

Friday afternoon the Baptist council members will gather at the Alpha Gamma Delta house for the purpose of studying the Baptist student union manual and making plans for the coming year. A supper will be had at the house, followed by another session. Saturday a hike followed by a picnic is planned by the Young

Students and Teachers Will Leave on Boat Trip Down St. Marks River

Approximately thirty students and teachers will leave here Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock for a boat trip sponsored by the Classical club. Going down the St. Marks river, the party will head into the Gulf of Mexico for an afternoon and evening excursion.

Planning to go on the boat trip are Geneva Nelson, Marie Anderson, Virginia Hamilton, Dorothy Derrick, Miss Ruth Fairman, Kathleen Robinson, Julia Vanderipe, Mary Kathryn Gibson, Jewell Groover, Miss Mary Etta Thatcher, Miss Polly Ann White, Carol Ramage, Pearle Overbluts, Fredericka Roberts, Miss Charlotte Stevens, Miss Olivia Nelson Dorman, Miss Katherine Warren, Miss Maude Peveritt, Twilah Taylor, Gladys Ware, Elizabeth Smith, Justine Brumm, Shirley Emerson, Harriet McCoogan, Dorothy Emerson, Helen Shepard, and Carolyn Garvin.

The excursion was planned by Elsie Renfroe, head of the transportation committee; Pearla Overbulls, head of the entertainment committee; Gladys Ware and Twilah Taylor, heads of the food committee, and Marie Anderson, head of the finance committee.

Professor Samuel J. Hocking, of the University of Alabama and also of the federal forum, spoke to the Student auxiliary at Ruge Hall last Sunday night on the "United States in World Affairs." Friday night at 7:15 an after dinner coffee will be given for the students and faculty, and Saturday afternoon from 3:30 to 6:30 the Reverend and Mrs. W. J. Allfriend and Miss Julia Gehan will entertain members of the faculty at a garden party at Ruge hall. Sunday school at 7:15 o'clock there will be a panel discussion of student social service work.

P. S. L. Installs Officers

Installation of new officers of the Presbyterian student league took place in a candle-light service conducted last Sunday evening in the Presbyterian church of Tallahassee. Forty girls, both the old and the new officers, dressed in white, took charge of the church program. Music was furnished by a student choir and student organists.

Eaton, Allen Represent FSC At Conference

Two Delegates Attend Peace Convention At Rollins

Florida State was represented at the peace convention at Rollins on May 7, 8 and 9, by Virginia C. Allen, student, and Miss Mary Alice Eaton, instructor in history and geography. The University of Florida, Southern college, Stetson, and Rollins also sent representatives.

It was decided that the colleges of Florida should definitely form a peace organization, and this was accomplished at the convention. The new organization is the Florida Intercollegiate Peace council. The officers were elected for next year; they are: President, Richard Loveless, University of Florida; vice-president, Marita Steeve, Rollins; secretary-treasurer, Jack Johnson, Southern; publicity chairman, Virginia C. Allen, Florida State, and Orrin Prince, Stetson.

Virginia Allen and Dorothy Gibby lead discussion groups during the convention. Dr. Clark Rollins, Professor Trowbridge, Rollins, Dean Colzer, Stetson, the Rev. John H. Ranger, Winter Park, Ralph Gibbs, Rollins, Richard Loveless, University of Florida, were the speakers at the various meetings.

The students attending the conference were entertained with a reception at President Hamilton Holt's home. President Holt told of his personal experience in international peace making.

Liberal Displays Official Program

A brightly colored official program of the coronation of King George the sixth is the prized article among the displays featured in the library this week. The program was sent directly to this library by the British Library of Information. Within its covers are several pictures of the royal family and the contribution of the English poet laureate, John Masefield. The poem is called "A Prayer for the King's Reign." At the end of the program is a genealogical table showing the descent of the crown down to the present day.

Among other British magazines on display are the "Coronation Souvenir and Guide," and the "Illustrated London News" which shows pictures of King Edward's abdication. In one case there are several portraits of the king and queen and their daughters, the two princesses. On a bulletin board is a large picture of the royal crown, and in the center show case are pictures of Westminster abbey and Buckingham Palace.

Frances Lingle Reads Ibsen's "Doll House"

In a certificate speech recital given last evening at the Augusta Conradi little theatre, Frances Lingle senior at Florida State college, read Henrik Ibsen's three-act play, "The Doll's House."

The scene of the play was laid in the drawing room of the Helmer's house. The characters depicted included: Torvald Helmer, his wife, Mrs. Linden, Dr. Rank, Nils Krogstad, the three children, the nurse, and the maid. Others in the recital were: Dorothy Borden, Margaret Rogers, Betty Leach, Betty Wadsworth, Louise Rice, and Edna Faye Jett.

Tennis Matches Are Played Off

Sororities Compete For Court Supremacy

Intra-mural tennis continued this week with the Pi Beta Phi Delta Phi Epsilon singles match which was played Tuesday at 4:30. The two sets were taken by Pi Phi Martha Robbins, who won many points by hard aces to be back-hand court. Jeanne Mann of Delta Phi Epsilon, plays has only been on the courts for two years, and played an efficient game for such little experience. The match ended with a score of 6-3, 6-2.

Janet Kronenfeld and Jeanie Manken, playing for Delta Phi Epsilon, won the two sets Wednesday afternoon in the doubles match with Anne Donnell and Margaret Neff representing Theta Upsilon. There were the outstanding plays throughout the game, which was made interesting by some of Jeanne's killing for-hands, and speedy gracious serves by Margaret Neff At the end of the sets the score was 6-3, 6-1.

Janice Borton, Spinoma was two singles sets Wednesday from Nancy Bryan, Phi Mu, with 6-1 scores. Janice is a steady tense raquetter, and her crisp shots to the back-line help to score.

The Zeta Tau Alpha-Phi Mu doubles games was Thursday afternoon. Z. T. A. Esther Shore and Pinkey Herbert won the match from Libba Pierce and Elspeth Orffin. The score was 6-4, 9-7.

Alpha Gamma Delta defeated Alpha Xi Delta Wednesday afternoon.

239 Candidates Will Take Part In Graduation

122 Are Graduated From College of Arts And Sciences

KURZ NAMES TWO FOR HONOR WORK

Ninety-two Diplomas Are Granted to Two-Year Students

Two hundred and thirty-nine students are candidates for degrees from Florida State College for Women at the thirty-second annual commencement exercises to be held May 31. The College of Arts and Sciences will present 122 bachelor's degrees, the School of Education, 67, the School of Home Economics, 42, and the School of Music, 8. Ninety-two two-year diplomas will be presented at this time along with three certificates in music.

According to Dr. Herman Kurz, members of the Honors committee have recommended to the faculty committee that Daisy Parker and Frank Wildman, of the class of 1937 be graduated with honors. Daisy has worked in history under Dr Robert S. Cotterill; and Frank has done independent study in mathematics with Mr. Elmer Smith and Miss Olga Larson.

The following students will be presented with degrees:

EPC Ends First Year On Campus

State Organization And Purpose of Club Discussed

At the final Emergency Peace Campaign meeting of the year the newly formed state organization was further explained, and a report was made on the conference and its findings.

The fact that there is actually a state organization that meets and works, each local group cooperating toward common final aims, is immensely pleasing to E. P. C members and the conference representatives. E. P. C. aims to educate people as to the causes of war so that they may remain adamant against war propaganda. They wish to plant roots so firm that they can't be pulled up by the first wave of war hysteria.

Stetson, Southern, and Gainesville all have discussion groups. Southern's group is sponsored by Dean Elizabeth Skinner Jackson, dean of women, and Stetson's by Dean Robert Cotner, dean of men. Rollins has a four hour seminar led by Dr. Clarke, a theology professor, for which credit is given. There are two hours of classes and two hours of laboratory per week. Both Stetson and Southern carry their activities much more into the community than is done here. Gainesville has had by far the hardest time of all, due to the fact that they lacked the backing of the administration which the other colleges have.

At the conference it was decided almost without discussion that a state organization should be formed. The officers of the Florida Intercollegiate Peace Council are Richard Lovelace of Gainesville, president; Marita Stueve of Rollins vice-president; Jack Johnson of Southern, secretary and treasurer; and Virginia C. Allen of Florida State College and Or... Prince of Stetson, chairman of publicity.

Minister

The Rev. O. E. Rice, minister of the First Methodist church in Birmingham, Ala., will deliver the baccalaureate sermon next Sunday for this year's graduating class. Dr. Rice has spent most of his life in Florida and was graduated from Southern college, Lakeland.

Students Vote Against ROTC At NSFA Meet

Girls Believe Military Training Should Be Optional

Through a resolution passed in the local branch of N. S. F. A. at its meeting Tuesday night, Florida State College for Women will send recommendations to congressmen from this state that the Nye-Kvale bill making R. O. T. C. non-compulsory be passed.

The question was accepted after a heated debate between Hazel Bowman, speaking for the affirmative, and Betty Wynn and Ruth Atkinson, who argued for the negative. The group which attended the forum spent much of the discussion period trying to make clear the points which had been made in the debate. In some instances it seemed that the argument concerned not whether R. O. T. C. should be non-compulsory, but whether it should exist at all.

Affirmative Presents Points

Points made by the speaker for the affirmative, and later repeated in the discussion, were that R. O. T. C. makes automats of men instead of teaching them how to think. The training that makes for military discipline does not teach responsibility and self-control but rather unquestioned obedience, the speaker pointed out. That R. O. T. C. prepares for defense is a false idea she declared. Musket-toting on the campus is not training for the battle field. Military-drill is not good for young men. In some instances, it is actually harmful, and it is always inferior to individual physical education.

R. O. T. C. besides being un-Christian in its attitude of fight-

New Movements Apparent Here During '37-'37

Campus Sees Many New Organizations And Trends Begin

PEACE DAY MAKES DEBUT ON CAMPUS

Alumnae College Hailed As "Splendid Idea" Through State

Many innovations, of which a new curriculum for freshmen, a national Peace day, and an alumnae college were the most outstanding, have marked the school year of 1936-37 at Florida State college now drawing to a close.

At the beginning of this year the freshmen were introduced into the new general education program of integrated courses. Included in the new set-up are survey courses in biological sciences, physical sciences, humanities, and social studies, all of which must be completed by the end of the sophomore year. The purpose of the new curriculum is to provide a broad background for later work and to supply a general knowledge of the basic facts underlying present day society.

Peace Day Inaugurated

April 22 was designated as National Peace Day by the college Government association and the local council of the Emergency Peace campaign. Included on the program for the day were special forums and class room discussions, a parade through downtown Tallahassee at the conclusion of which Attorney-General Cary D. Landis spoke on "Peace Consciousness," a radio program, and two peace plays. This college, where the movement was inaugurated by Mary Jeanne McKay, was joined in the Peace day program by sixty-five colleges throughout the United States.

The "Alumnae College" held April 16-18, which took the place of the former Homecoming at Thanksgiving, was attended by a large number of graduates. In this "back to school" movement college faculty members held classes dealing with current topics of the day. Tours of the campus and social events were included on the program.

Parents Are Honored

The Thanksgiving holidays were devoted to acquainting students' parents with the college and to the ancient Odd-Even rivalry. "Parents' Day," as this time was called, began with the Even demonstration Tuesday night, November 24, continued through Wednesday night when Odd demonstration was held, and culminated in Odd-Even basket ball and volley ball games Thanksgiving morning, in which the Evens were victorious. Tours of the campus were conducted for parents Friday morning.

Martha Thomas, of Marseille, France, the first foreign exchange student to be enrolled at Florida State college, entered this year

Student Indifference Scored By Writer in Winning Essay

Non-Participation in NSFA and Elections Shown As Indication of General Apathy Towards Campus Reform

> Editor's Note: Judges in the Alpha Chi Alpha contest for the best controversial article pertaining to the campus, selected this article as the winner of the Longmire Alpha Chi Alpha prize, annual award presented by the local chapter.

By RUTH ATKINSON

In the last election of College Government Association officials on this campus, only 57 per cent of the student body voted; and approximately 200 students were present at the political rally held the night before elections. The average attendance at the N. S. F. A. forums, which are designed for the active participation of students, ranges between 20 and 25 members. Compulsory convocation is a necessity because students are not interested enough in the general school affairs to attend unless they are required to do so. Speaking with these things in mind, then, it seems that the students of Florida State have little or no school spirit, communal interests, or ability to organize in order to gain the things they may want. Complaints are plentiful against everything from the actions of the senate down to the food in the dining room, and yet when students are given every chance to do something constructive in the way of remedying some of the professed campus evils, they find it impossible to take the time to bother.

The night before the last general election, a political rally was held for the purpose of introducing the candidates to the voters, and for the purpose of giving the candidates an opportunity to speak about their qualifications for office. Approximately 200 students, from a college that boasts an enrollment of nine times 200, were present. Only 200 students cared enough about making a sane decision in their choice of candidates to give up their own pleasure for an hour and a half, in order to attend the rally.

When the polls were opened to students this spring, only 57 per cent of the students filed past the ballot box. The other 43 per cent were either too busy to take ten minutes off to go to the polls, or too dumb to recognize their duty to themselves, or too lazy to check a few names on the ballot and drop it in a box. Therefore, very little over half of the student body decided the set-up of next year's administration, and as a result, only a very little over half of the student body has any right to criticize or complain about the policies of that administration for it is responsible only to those students who used the ballot as a legal right in their choice of officers.

The small attendance at N. S. F. A. is another example which seems to show that the complaints of the majority of students mean very little, and that only a few students have any desire to work to reform the things about which they complain. The N. S. F. A. forum has been organized at this college for the purpose of giving students an opportunity to discuss either campus problems or world-wide issues. The N. S. F. A.

Flowers Tells Of Regulations For Graduation

Only Four-Year Students May Have Dormitory Guests for Event

Regulations governing commencement and the last days of the college term have been announced by Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls. Concerning guests during graduation Miss Flowers said that only four-year graduates may have guests in the residence halls, these to be registered with the director. Guests are invited from Friday night, May 28, through commencement.

Seniors who will have members of their family here during graduation and who have not found rooms for them are asked to see Miss Flowers immediately.

Other regulations follow:

Any student leaving before graduation day must sign in advance with her director, when, where and how she is going.

No student may leave college before graduation day and visit in Tallahassee.

All students must leave from their college residence and are expected to go directly home. Any other plan will be approved only upon a written request of parent or guardian.

Any student leaving Tallahassee by night train or bus, must arrange in advance in Bryan office.

No student will be permitted to withdraw from college after she has finished her final examinations, and return and stay in the residence halls, sorority houses or off-campus houses.

Beginning Friday night, a student may spend the night out of her room just as one week-end, signing up in the usual

IRC Awards Five Keys To Outstanding Girls

The International Relations club has recently honored five members who in the past year have volunteered service, leadership and loyalty to the work of the club. These members will have IRC keys, bearing the date of the founding of the first International Relations club in Great Britain in 1923, a symbol of the world, letters, IRC, and three stars standing for leadership, service and loyalty.

The girls elected to wear the key are Anna Marie Mitchell, Elizabeth Matheny, Agnes Stiggins, Mary Catherine Gibson, outgoing president, and Marguerite Browne, incoming president.

Changes Made In Class Day For Graduates

Traditional Exercises Will Take Place On May 29

Casting aside tradition in three instances this year's seniors will hold a class day different from those of preceding years. Unlike previous programs of this kind this one will be held at night on May 29, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Probably the most decided change in the program schedule this year will be the abandonment of the daisy chain for one of palms. A symbolism of victory is attached to the palm chain, those in charge said when the plans for class day were revealed.

The third change in the arrangements is that sophomore sisters will not take part, although the junior sisters will be included.

The ceremony will take place on the lawn in back of the Westcott building. Dr. Edward Conradi will stand on a platform decorated with palms and candles and the Glee club which will furnish music during the program will

Anise Pendleton Wins History Essay Contest And Awarded $50 Prize

For an essay on the life and untimely death of Henrietta Mary Croon, daughter of the Croon Croon family whose property dispute was before the supreme court of the state of Florida 20 years before settlement was reached, Anise Pendleton, senior history student here, yesterday received a prize of $50 offered by D. H. Redfearn of Miami.

The essay, which was compiled entirely from "original record" material and personal information, was more than 3,000 words in length, and was the winner in the first of what Mr. Redfearn hopes to make an annual essay competition.

Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, head of the history department, helped Mr. Redfearn on this campus and has announced the title for next year's contest. Although it will not be formally opened until next fall Dr. Abbey said that if any one wishes to start on research during the summer she may be registered ahead of time.

The subject for next year's theme is to be "Modes of Travel During the Territorial Days in Florida."

Committee Has Funds Changed In New Budget

Distaff Receives Larger Appropriation For Next Year

GROUP CREATES INCOME SOURCE

Faculty, Students Unite In Economic Planning For College

Increasing the funds of the Distaff, decreasing those of the College Government association and the Woman's Athletic association, and creating a new source of income for the general social fund, the College Council on May 11 approved all recommendations of the Budget committee concerning the prorating and budgeting of that part of the student activity fee which supports student extra-curricular activities. The College Council is composed of members of the Faculty Committee on Student Affairs and members of the executive council of the College Government association. The Budget committee, which prorates the student extracurricular activity fee and approves the budgets of the organizations subsidized by this fund, is a standing committee of the College Council.

Distaff Budget Increased

The budget of the Distaff campus magazine, was increased from $.60 to $.62 per student, estimated on the basis of a student enrollment of 1700. This increase is to take care of rising printing costs.

A new fund of $.125 was added to the general social fund of the college which is administered for the Executive council of the college administration by the dean of students. Out of this fund comes the money for student social events, with the exception of the dances sponsored by the College Government association.

W. A. A. Funds Decreased

The largest decrease in the amount alloted for an activity was that of the Women's Athletic association, which fund was reduced from $.80 to $.70 per capita. This reduction was mainly due to the accumulation of a large reserve fund by this organization and to a lowering of the amount set aside for conventions. The second and only other decrease in the rate of proration was that of the College Government association from $.93 to $.87 per capita, which was due also to a lessening of convention expenses, as well as a reorganization of the student social fund.

The Budget committee itself became custodian of the money from the prorations which amounted to $2537. This reserve may be used by any of the student organizations subject to the Budget committee, upon presentation and acceptance by the Budget committee of a petition.

College Sees Thirty-second Annual Commencement This Year

UNDERGRADUATES GO HOME EARLY

Alumnae Will Participate In Ceremony During Week-end

Bringing to a close another college year and following a week of examinations, the thirty-second annual commencement program at Florida State College for Women will begin Saturday, May 29, and will continue through Monday, May 31.

Undergraduates to Leave

Examinations, which were moved up this year in order to expediate the compiling of senior records will be completed Friday. During that time the campus will see an exodus of undergraduates who will leave for their homes immediately following their last test.

The program for the week-end is being designed not only for seniors and those students who are remaining for the ceremony but also as a gathering time for alumnae of the college. Three classes, those of 1912, 1932 and 1935, are planning special reunions.

Alumnae to Meet

The week-end's activities will begin with the conferring of alumnae medallions Saturday morning in the Augusta Conradi theater at 10 o'clock. These are being given in recognition of "notable achievement" in their respective fields to Mrs. George I. Davis, Tallahassee, one of the oldest alumnae, for recognized accomplishment in civic work and social service, Carol Perrenot Longone, New York city, class of 1912, for distinction in music, and Dr. Inga Olla Helseth, Williamsburg Va., class of 1914, now professor of education at the College of William and Mary for distinction in the field of education. Mrs. Davis was graduated from West Florida Seminary in 1880 and was later affiliated with Florida State College for Women.

At 11 o'clock all alumnae will meet and at 12 o'clock a luncheon will be held for these people. There will be a meeting of the faculty at 3 o'clock. That night the Class day program will be held by the seniors in back of the auditorium, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Rice to Speak

Girls Choose 9 Candidates For Year Book

Student Body Elects Most Outstanding Members For Recognition

The nine girls chosen to appear in the feature section of the annual as the most outstanding leaders on this campus have been announced by Frances Porth, editor-in-chief of the Flastacowo and one of the girls selected for outstanding work

Hazel Bowman, retired editor of the Flambeau, claims unusual distinction for having taken part in both Odd and Even demonstrations. She has also played for four different orchestras during her college career, and holds a record for belonging to three in one year. After graduation, she plans to write a book on college life.

Betty Ostlund, new C. G. A. president, considers her office of secretary to judiciary and her creative work in modern dancing of equal interest. She has divided her time fairly between student government activities and athletics.

Martha Makemson specialized also in both athletics and student government. She consider the latter work her most serviceable to the college, however, explaining that sports were mainly for her own pleasure.

Marjorie Raulerson, member of Mortified and freshman advisor for next year, served as head of Religious week and as second vice president of C. G. A Both athletics and general student ac-

Sophomore Denounces Fellow Students As "Pointseekers"

Believes Girls Lose Sight of "Educative Aims" In Struggle for Points Toward Final Degrees from College

Editor's Note: This article received first honorable mention in the recent contest for the best article pertaining to a controversial campus subject, sponsored by the local chapter of Alpha Chi Alpha.

To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield until some sort of wisdom and understanding is achieved—that should be the aim of a college student, but on this campus the fulfillment of graduation requirements unfortunately seems to be the main desire.

Self-analysis is the secret joy of every individual. Witness the interest with which each one of us delights in having our character interpreted, or our fortune told, or the way in which we relate incidents from our lives as if they were as intensely interesting to our hearers as they are to us.

Merely describing what I as a person am thinking is not my purpose in writing this. I am only using myself as an example in the belief that there are many others also in my predicament at this college. I am worried about us. I am afraid that we are not to be allowed to think, to probe, to wonder, because of the way in which we are being taught by those persons who are supposed to direct our minds into channels, not into ruts.

Ruts, I repeat. That cannot be said too strongly. This great beautiful school, a mother to us all, each and every one, stamps us with the official state seal and turns us out into society and we have neither the polish of a finishing school nor the intellectual curiousity of a scholar. We are completely negative.

Could anything be more damning? Only a few out of many hundreds escape this standardization. Some of them, as I, by accident stumble upon an avenue which we can clearly see will lead to a definite goal. What is this goal? A successful life, and one in which the troubles will balance with the glories.

But if we are given facts, if

Student Blames College Life For Girls' Prejudiced Ideas

Says Women's Colleges Are Cause of Supression Of Marriage Among Fittest Persons In This Country

By LOTTIE CLARK

Editor's Note: This article was awarded second honorable mention in the Alpha Chi Alpha contest for the best article pertaining to a controversial campus subject.

Women's college are chiefly, if not entirely, responsible for the suppression of marriage among the fittest. They are so prejudicing young women against wifehood that they are cutting off the next generation from its natural supply of first rate minds; they are qualifying the individual at the clear cost of race deterioration. Women's colleges fail to provide special cultivation of women's primary creative capacities; they minimize the biological appeal of those women who have most to give to the race.

As a natural concomitant to education, personal success of women is a psychological deterrent to marriage. The abler the women mentally the less often they marry. Personal ambition—in women— is the enemy of marriage, and the responsibility for this can be clearly traced to women's colleges.

There is no denying the fact that women's colleges actually disqualify their graduates for marriage. Such colleges are not conducted with a view to turning out wives, and we might as well recognize the fact that they have operated to lessen the number of marriages among the best class of women. The remedy for all this seems to be co-education.

The biological time for a girl to fall in love and want to marry is somewhere between the ages of 18 and 25. During this period her physical interest in men reaches its maximum. But, if a girl is kept at a woman's college for four or more of these years she doesn't and cannot have the same interest in men, or opportunity to fall in love with them that she would have if she attended a co-educational institution. And, when she goes home after graduating from a women' college she finds that most of the eligible young men have already married, and these

Music Students Present Annual Concert Sunday

Senior Recital and Yearly Program End Work Of Department

The annual concert of the School of Music and the recital of Emma Lee Goodwin, senior student in the school, will be the last two events of the musical year to be presented on campus.

The concert, which will be given in the auditorium Sunday evening at 8 o'clock will be opened with the playing of Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exposition by Louise Doyle, pianist. The numbers following this will be: Orchestic Variations, Op. 23, played by Gordon Epperson, cello, and Clara Martin Guerry, accompanist; Pyrche, Paladithe, Mandoline, Debussy, and Comtata to le peyo (Mignon), Thomas, sung by Josephine Bisco, who will be accompanied by Clara Martin Guerry, pianist, and Augusta Mozart Wilkinson, flute. Rosser will play a violin solo, Spanish Dance, and will have as her accompanist Mary Esther Winslow, Emma Lee Goodwin will then play Toccata, C Major, by Bach-Bauer. This number will be followed by L'Heure Exquisite, Scott Piccolo Snow, and To a Messenger, sung by Marian Carson, who will be accompanied by Mary Esther Winslow. The last number on the program will be a group of three numbers, Jagged Peaks in Starlight, When the Pines, and Dawn, Walk, played by Jessie Jane Mackey, clarinet.

Student Gives Recital

Emma Lee Goodwin, piano student of Isaac Opperman, will give her graduation recital in the college auditorium tonight at 8:15 o'clock. She will be assisted by Margaret Meiner, soprano, pupil of Rita Robertson, Miss Goodwin is a candidate for a B. M. degree this May.

The numbers to be played are: Toccata for Harpsichord, Bach; Intermezzo, Op. 117, No. 1, Brahms, Etude, Op. 25, No. 1, Chopin; Nocturne, Op. 15, No. 2, Toch; Die Lorrelei, Liszt; Der Jager, Brahms, and Concertstuck, Op. 92, Schumann.

Underclassmen Perform

Last week the final underclass recital of the year was given in the College Auditorium, Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

The first part of the program consisted of Prelude, Porter; Serenade and Fugue in B flat, Bach, played by Leslie Thrasher. Dances in the Water, Zeckwar, played by Jean McCord; Serenade, D Major, Chaminade, played by Pauline Morrow; Cradle Song, Palmgren, played by Mildred Hurst; May Had a Little Lamb, Ballantine, played by Lorraine Autry, and Clare de line, MacDowell, played by Lorraine Grahn. The last of the program included a violin solo Masurka, Mycrzawski, played by Betty Hall, accompanied by Edna Warren: Romance, Schumann, played by Edna Warren; Humoristic Study, No. 12, Liest, played by Isabelle Sands; Toccata, D Major, Bach-Bauer, played by Emma Lee Goodwin.

ing, bubble house emotions which help to keep war alive, and conscientious objectors who refuse to participate in the barbarous games have no redress, but must submit to expulsion where military drill is compulsory, it was said. Other reasons against this forcing of students to take part in the training a that it wastes money might better be spent in giving courses in friendly international relations.

Negative Argues

Betsy Wynn and Ruth Atkinson board their argument on six points. R. O. T. C. serves as a starting point for boys wishing to make careers of army or navy life; it instructs reserve officers in such ways that they become more competent. It encourages leadership by first teaching men how to follow. Every good leader must know how to follow, the speaker believed. It gives good physical training while teaching discipline and prepares for any national emergency which might arise.

In the discussion that followed, opinions were expressed that

Seniors Romp Around FSCW At Kid Party

Juniors Entertain Sisters At Annual Celebration In Dining Hall

Balloons, all-day suckers, and hair ribbons were the order of the day when the Junior class entertained the Seniors at the annual kid party Wednesday night.

Traditional senior dignity was forgotten as members of the two classes, attired in rompers and short dresses, gathered in the open air theatre at six o'clock for a program of kid games and refreshments of lollipops.

At 6.30 the "kids" marched into the lower dining room, where they were entertained during dinner with a short program at which Erma Lee Goodwin acted as mistress of ceremonies. The program consisted of two vocal selections by Edna Yeoholan and a reading by Marguerite Browne.

The tables in the dining room were decorated with Mickey Mouse favors and pink and blue streamers ran down the center of each table. Pictures of Popeye, Flash and other cartoon characters adorned the windows of the childish dining room.

Sara Nance and Mary Miller were announced as the winners of the lollipop for the best costumes. Sara wore pigtails, a round straw hat, and a red and white checked dress, while Mary's costume consisted of a blue dress, plaid shorts, and a sailor hat.

The Seniors were presented with address books by Joyce Joyce, following the dinner many of the "kids" scattered about the campus where they were admitted for second course.

Katherine Pratt was general chairman of the party. Other committee chairmen were Frances Spencer, Marie Elizabeth Spurlock, Mary Olivia Taylor, Frances Anderson Thomas, Mary Ellen Tiller, Bonnievere F. Tomlinson, Julia Washington, and Annie Laurie Ward, Beulah Hill Watkins, Elizabeth Anne Whidden, Grace Moody Whitaker, Eleanor Brown Whitaker, and Mary Wilson.

compulsory R. O. T. C. makes men who otherwise would not learn anything about drill receive valuable training in modern warfare. It was also shown that under the Morrill Act of 1862, it is not necessary for land-grant colleges to have compulsory drill units in order to receive federal monies. The Nye-Kvale bill would make it impossible for these institutions to have compulsory units unless they definitely started military training was their principal aim, if they wished to continue to receive these funds.

The question which was passed by a vote of 13 to 3 was Resolved: that the Florida State College for Women branch of the National Students' Federation of America recommend to the Congressmen from Florida that the Nye-Kvale bill be passed.

Florida High Shows Largest Work Exhibit

Display Student Material In Most Pretentious Show of Kind

The largest exhibit Florida high school has ever displayed, including material from five department units and three elementary grades, will be open to the public this week until Friday night.

Wood Carvings Shown

The Manuel Arts department of which Mr. Oral Harrison is instructor, displays wood handcarvings made by the boys from the fourth through the twelfth grades. Some of the largest pieces are cedar and cypress chests and Colonial console, and coffee tables, upholstered chairs, fireside benches, and floor, stool and floor lamps. Smaller pieces are mascara racks, hi- glasses, ash trays, call bells, and picture frames.

Many Crafts Represented

Many of the carvings were copied from original drawings of Colonial furniture, and the display of a Colonial table from a design of an original table of Thomas Jefferson.

The most individualistic piece on display is a hand-carved chest, made by Chew Duke. It is elaborately carved in an intricate design with flowers and trees and represents about 110 hours of work.

Art Department Represented

The exhibit of the Art department, under the supervision of Mr. Ralph Donaldson, shows a wide variety of paintings, drawings and models. In addition to scenic drawings in water colors charcoal, oil, and colored crayon pen and ink sketches, figure sketching, costume designing, and still screenings.

Four fire screens painted in oil, water color, crayon and three types of wall hangings, decorative illustrative, and realistic are done in oil and crayon batik.

Modeling Exhibited

Both clay and plaster-of-Paris modelling, cooled from charcoal sketches made first by the students, are displayed in the show.

The largest piece displayed by the art department is a decorative map of Florida showing the products and chief industries of different sections and cities of the state.

In the library exhibit, which is under the supervision of Miss Eileen Fletcher, are book covers of all the books received this year in the Florida, the school's new text book, completed to be the largest copy yet to be published in several years. "Time Marches On," the theme of the Flahlaco, is carried out in each class page. In addition to each page are silver screens, and photographs of each, in a new feature.

Special Records Charted

On a bulletin board a chart of the speed records of the commerce class is exhibited with the Commerce department of which Miss Evelyn Bulkley is instructor. The chart is in the form of "Watch the Fords Go By," and each student is represented by a Ford car. Speed is recorded in "miles per hour," and the number of errors are "Flat tires." A speed tournament and several sample budgets are also shown.

The Home Economics department exhibits a number of hand-carved of wood. The furniture including chairs, tables, bed, runs (one "bear skin rug" made of squirrel), and linens are all made in exact proportion to the puppets.

w.: are relaved to textbooks. If we are given evasions as answers to questions that are a source of irritation to us, then our desire to learn will be dulled and finally defeated. From women, then will come that surging enthusiasm to discover and to explore the ways of humanity to offer perhaps to arrive at a better solution of the many problems that are daily becoming more important to our lives?

During this entire school year my mind has been a constant "why?" Why does he say such? How does he know? Does he really exist as he believe that, and the like. I have been of necessity leading a double life, I prepare my assignments, take notes, learn them, and hand them back to the college on Blue Book and pray that I have said what the professor means that I should say, and that I am passed over course. There are few subjects worth repeating. The: the real questions remain unanswered. I have come to a conclusion which may in the morrow be revised. What a situation.

I am wondering how long I can continue this sham existence. There are times when I feel that I am about to pass out in class and shout, beat on desks, break vases —anything to let, it be known that I am sick and weary of trying to combat the specialized drivel which is being presented which site before me. Why not speak out? I have, and my answers have been: Professors are examples of fence-sitting, and not even mild agnostics. Students are saves from two or perhaps three instructors who have not allowed themselves to become completely stagnated and who are truly interested in their work.

We students need to be pricked and prodded and we cannot accomplish this when the profs are compelled to pinch ourselves to keep awake. So why not lash us both sides of a question and thus force us to decide for ourselves what is truth instead of I am choked with dry facts. I want to learn things that are vital and that can be applied to life. I want to see how to develop the parts of my mind that are neglected and dusty. I want to be taught how to discover the truth that is known about my smocks made by the girls in the wreath through the wealth girdle.

Drawings and examples of personality sketches by the fourth grade's exhibit, while the fifth grade's exhibit includes small woven baskets and little books.

Puppets Made

Three types of puppets, puppet furniture, and drawings are shown by the sixth grade. The puppets are divided into "fairyland," with figures from the story "Golden Heidi," historical, using the story of "Miles Standish," and geographical, with figures from "Heidi."

Some of the puppets are made of cardboard, some of wood, and hand-carved of wood. The furniture includes chairs, tables, beds, runs (one "bear skin rug" made of squirrel), and linens are all made in exact proportion to the puppets.

Drills Cause Wild Evening

Excitement of Alarm Has Dormitory Girls in Proper Dither

At midnight on the night of April 13 the school was startled into varying degrees of mess-ines closely akin to nightmare.

In upper Bryan, hearing a continued burr and drill hall was heard the girl started frantically scrambling in the dark for her alarm clock. She found it, when she had heard it is about ten times and was making a pass at it in the dark. By that time the burr seemed to have become an ear-splitting siple.

Freshmen in Reynolds, startled out of a sound sleep, frantically tore around thinking that at last the real thing had arrived—the dormitory must be on fire. Some carried out their some heads and some faces in the great look that invariably results when one tries to dress in the dark.

Sophomores in the Cawthon Annex, after a few moments of the Jangling again stirred the sleeping maidens.

This time some of the possessors of Bryan hotel also tore themselves from their beds and hurried through the halls before the realized the call was for Bryan.

A little later Reynolds was annoyed, they were awakened a second time by the same sound from the room from the open window.

Some still thinking "much ado about nothing" and "a bad dream," went to bed for the fifteen and one minutes that elapsed thickly over the campus.

Sports Squints

Here comes the last "squints" of this year, and we're hoping that by the time next fall rolls around and we are all returning to the old alma mater, that there will be plenty of seats of tan left to carry us through those early games, and that reserves of energy will be stored up and ready to go after three months of vacation. By the way, don't let the old seats spoil the dress that one you've gonna be away from gentle and will have the chance to take things easy.

While on the subject of Oddest rivalry we might remind the fact that next year's crop of children will be a whole new batch of Odds for Evens to contend with, so fighting spirit will be very much needed because the freshmen have a reputation for their enthusiasm and pep. It's too bad that by the time a senior year arrives students seem to give up the first fine enthusiasm and replace it with things such as dignity, and lack of interest.

We have a new herd of "goats" on campus—it's all Odds to be sure. This is the largest number of goats the P. E. club has had in several years. We wonder if this indicates more outstanding athletes among the Odds, or a new and unusual revival of interest among the upper-classmen. In any case, it sounds like a good ambition to start those Odd-ites on work-outs as early as next fall.

We can't help but envy 'those co-eds who can still find the time to be true to their favorites summertime sports, in spite of parallel reading, term papers, and aggravating exams. There's still plenty of gals to be found golfing suits, stretched out on tennis, and calmly paddling canoes while the sun beats down in friendly cooperation.

A bouquet goes to the Juniors this week for managing to rank their senior sisters out of their chairs and last Wednesday afternoon at their annual ball party—although the seniors seem to be clear prejudiced against the rougher sports such as diamond ball and the like, they really broke down and enjoyed a few rounds of "go-around-the-roses. No doubt they did them good, too.

We wonder if it's the hot weather that's governing the athletic trend these days. According to the leisure time survey that the physical ed students have been taking recently, the most popular outdoor sport seems to take the form of letter writing. That may be explained by the fact that it's nearing time to go home and to smart gals are trying to remind the contacts that they've left any during the last few busy months.

With all of this hot weather that's descended on us recently, it seems a shame that the regular plunge periods had to be cut off the first three days of this week due to the examiners returning term that were given at that time. Year-round swimming enthusiasts as well as the new fans that have been persuaded to take to the pool due to the hot weather were all frustrated in their desire to get cool in the most advantageous way possible. Cheer up, though, because plunge periods will be held during exam week so don't discouraged students can cheer their troubles between exams.

With a kaleidoscope of diamond-ball games, tennis matches, hockey and archery contests, basketball and volleyball games, and swimming meets behind us, and with memories of odd-Even rivalry, and intra-mural and inter-class competition things of the past, we close this column with a "squint" into the future. Here we can see the renewed zest of ye old athletes on the campus again, ready, now, and a happy summer! L.

New members of the Life Saving corps are Fay Corey, Elizabeth Edwards and Kitty Ford.

Odd Team Wins Final Matches Of Tournament

Courts See Last Strong Even Opposition Saturday

Winning four straight singles matches and two doubles, the Odds outclassed steadily to a hard fought victory Saturday afternoon over their smooth playing Even opponents, by a seven point gained.

In the first match, one of the most closely contested of the whole afternoon, Horton, playing for the Evens, took the first set, and the first three games of the second from Core. The latter rallied then and banished the remaining game in time to come out victor by the tune of 4-6, 7-5, 6-2, establishing a lead for the Odds which the Evens were unable to overcome. Hunt defeated Schneider, seen, 6-1, 7-5 in the second match. This match was marked by hard services and stinging drives on the part of both players, but the third, set by set, 6-4, 6-0 for Wilson over Fuller, despite the fact that Fuller's opponent Hunt and Nash kept up the mounting Odd spirits by defeating West in two sets, scores 6-4, 6-3.

Clark came through for the Odds in the fifth match over Bolton, 6-2 6-3, but the rise was only temporary. Hunt and Core came through for the upper-classmen. Even players Marchesseau and Bolton presented the closest match with scores of 8-6, 6-2 and Williamson and Wilson continued the Odd's victorious way defeating Horton and Glazier 6-4, 6-4. Brilliant drives and heavy stroking did the trick. Players were evenly matched all afternoon, but the Odds were merely playmates for her leisure hours, but Fuller, Core and Hunt were real sharpers in the vicissitudes of four years. Here, on the co-educational campus, a girl's environmental exercise will not be thwarted by shunning her up with either females, and she will. In all probability, be entirely free from such connections. Unlike the unisexual school, the co-educational college does not make also the central element in the relations between men and women. Rather, the woman with whom the "coed" is educated will not be afraid of her. They form too large a part of her acquaintance. These men will not sense in her attitude an indifferentiation often characteristic of the girl who has learned to think of men not as a part of every day life, but as something esoteric, to be cultivated in moments of recreation. Also, the "coed" will on the average, not be consistently to keep herself attractive. She will look her best at all times. Mutual respect will demand it.

Then too, there is the matter of divorce. Recent statistics indicate that while the preparation of divorces for the United States as a whole for a period of years was one in nine marriages, those among co-ed who had met in college were only one in seventy-five. One co-educational school observed that among its 8000 alumni only five were divorced.

Other statistics indicate that marriages fall because one or the other party has not had wide enough acquaintance among the other sex to serve as a basis of choice. In a co-educational school, this is certainly not true of any boy or girl who has spent four years in a campus community of a thousand or so young men and women.

Another frequent cause of unhappiness in marriage is the disillusionment following a brief idyllic courtship. "Coed" college is no Arcadia. It affords plenty of opportunity to discover the worst as well as the best in one's friends. Nor is abnormal jealousy apt to poison the heart of any one who is used to seeing all his friends, men and women alike, meeting daily in the camaraderie of college.

The "coed" will never be the woman who fails to hold her husband's interest because she has ceased to grow and study, but she is used to "keeping step" and she will progress hand in her husband that dangerous "sense of inferiority" so fatal, for such as he ever had must be shaken by the time he has met equals for four years and seen their achievements, intellectual and otherwise, as well as his own, or even higher.

Nor is "lack of community of interest" likely to prove a dividing root, for both boys and girls will find too many common interests developing through these four years. Also, a college-made marriage, overemphasis of any but not the best in any. Under the old system there was too much of a political line-up and a feeling that only juniors and seniors were really participating in the year-book. By using regular C. O. A. election procedure and making all classes eligible, these two grievances were eliminated.

Class of '37 Captures Trophy for Third Time

Two athletic awards were presented in convocation Tuesday as Viola Brooks, president of the Athletic association, presented a silver cup to the senior class for winning the swimming meet. This is the third time that the class of '37 has won the cup, and is engraved on the trophy.

The other award went to Jean Nettle Core for running the camp sail boat. The winning name was "Camp Sail Boat," and the word "camp sail boat."

few of her own age who are similar unalterable and see to him dull. Besides, young men under 30 don't care for women unless they are afraid of them. They know too much and want too much. They are not yielding and gracious—not completely wrapped up in their own. They want to be gregarious, and want to do something besides play around with women. Still worse, they have opinions of their own which are sometimes contrary to experience with the views of young men. They are in the habit of being sociable and malleable than their rarely social sisters.

Another of the woman's colleges which turn out harsh, stiff, formidable graduates, whose chances of finding a husband are greatly decreased by stay-at-home sisters who go to the co-educational college on campus of a co-educational school provides the opportunity for early marriages. In the first place, a girl is not segregated for four years from the society of her own age. On the contrary, she has the opportunity to choose from the most excellent opportunity for constantly enlarging her acquaintance from all sections and those young men—and this is important—who are merely playmates for her leisure hours, but real sharpers in the vicissitudes of four years. Here, on the co-educational campus, a girl's environmental exercise will not be thwarted by shunning her up with either females, and she will. Tests Exempt Gym Students

Proficiency Examinations Given to Judge Ability Of Athletes

Exemption tests in golf, under a new system of testing, were completed yesterday. In this method, which was used this year for the first time, grades for the activities have no bearing on the exemption of the student, although the exemption test is conducted in the regular curriculum of class work. The authority of stress is placed upon the individual's knowledge and record of ability in the sport in which she is being tested.

The golf exemption test covers four class hours with the first three hours being devoted to practical tests in the use of three clubs, the driver, the mid-iron, and the mashie, and the fourth class hour an oral or written examination covering the rules of play and the technical terms of the game is given.

In the practical test each student is given four trials in which to pass the stipulated requirements with each club, and if she fails any part of the exam she fails the examination test, but does not necessarily fail the course.

To obtain exemption in physical education previous to the new rule, a student was required to qualify with an A or B grade in health and posture, and with at least a C grade for two years in Field Hockey or the following team sport, or an individual sport. Activities covering dancing, a team sport, or an individual sport.

dependence on the physical element is extremely uncommon. An absence of any consideration is the rule on the campus of a co-educational school. Private petting parties, soul communing and public sayings are looked upon with definite distaste. It is becoming increasingly difficult, with the location of individuals in our modern public society, for many persons to meet their own "kind." The campus of a co-educational school offers a natural opportunity for real acquaintance between intelligent educated men and women.

Co-education is of particular value to the determined ascetic—whether male or female. It is an excellent thing for a man who wishes his masculine superiority to remain unconcussed. For normal healthy young women who expect some day to marry and spend the greater part of their lives in close association with a man, and who hope to establish that relationship on a basis of mutual reliance, understanding and interest, in the modern shoulder-to-shoulder conception of husband and wife for these the co-educational campus offers an incomparable schooling in the development of exactly that sort of mutual-to-be-desired adjustment.

Prof. Grows Gray With Exam Worry

The proverbial worm turned last week when one of our professors tore his hair and got a few extra wrinkles because of an exam.

The professor left his exam questions on his desk while he was out of his office for a few minutes. On coming back he found no exam. He searched high, wide, and notably for about two hours with the help of his student assistant, muttering all the time about the fiendish devotions he would make for the new exam if he found that the original paper had been stolen by students.

After another hour of worrying over the time it would take to make out a new set of questions he called his colleague, who searching among her material, found the missing exam which had accidentally picked up with her books.

This marks the third year of existence for the Budget committee, which is headed this year by Dorothea Marsh. For the first time since its creation, budgets and recommendations have been approved within the specified time, which the chairman believes is due to better cooperation of the treasurers and business managers of organizations and to the better plan of procedure for the committee.

Leisure Time Survey Check Made By Hurd

Letter Writing, Visiting Top Diversion List Of Questionees

According to a tentative checkup of the leisure time survey distributed among 744 people, it would seem that the students of Florida State College would rather spend their free moments indulging in quiet recreation rather than the more strenuous sports.

Of the 744 students that filled in the cards sent out by Miss Hurd of the physical education department, 397 write letters frequently, 186 write occasionally and 91 would write more frequently if they had the time.

Visiting ranks next on the student's list of how to do away with leisure time. A mere 67 students would visit more if they had the time, 123 find the time to do it occasionally and the other 280 visit whenever they feel the inclination, whether they have the time or not.

Naturally the movies take a high place on the score of popular. Students who can't possibly find money for the necessities of life manage to beg or borrow it if there is a good show in town or if they feel that they "need the recreation." The rate of movie-goers is slightly less than that of letter writers and visitors but this is probably only natural because free trips to the movie are not often forthcoming.

Social healthy young women who expect some day to marry and spend the greater part of their lives in close association with a man, and who hope to establish that relationship on a basis of mutual reliance, understanding and interest, in the modern shoulder-to-shoulder conception of husband and wife for these the co-educational campus offers an incomparable schooling in the development of exactly that sort of mutual-to-be-desired adjustment.

"F" Club Taps Twelve In Dining Hall Tues.

Twelve new members were tapped for the "F" club Tuesday in the dining hall. Immediately following lunch a short meeting was held for the benefit of the new "goats."

Those who were tapped were: Margaret Valcott, Sarah Lytle, Helen Daniel, Nancy Williamson, Ruth Agnes McClain, Ernestine Makemson, Merrydee Rosser, Jean Gillies, Evelyn Fluker, Mary Palmer, Sidney Moore, and Frances Waterhouse.

Friday night tables will be reserved in the dining hall for all "F" club members and the "goats."

There are 267 girls who attend the movies frequently, 216 who attend less frequently and 189 who would join the ranks of these other two if they had the time and the money.

Hobbies including writing, art, music, photography and collecting have 206 disciples who spend their spare time in one of these occupations. 277 who spend less time, and 466 who would like to spend a great deal of time but can't seem to get around to it.

It seems a bit strange that in a place of higher learning reading should be fifth on the list. There are two hundred people who when whenever the occasion comes their way, 170 who read it times and 166 who would like to read more if they had the time.

The records also flock to "recovery night after dinner to allow the movie-goers to slightly rest their feet to be stepped on, and their anatomies shaken up in a general way are the girls who give social dancing its place on the list. 149 girls dance frequently, 137 do so occasionally, and 137 would if they had the time.

Of the less strenuous leisure time activities physical activities rank next, followed by singing, music, cards, and art.

In sports the individual sport seems to be more popular with those that play than the group games Swimming is first with 97 that make frequent use of the pool. 171 that make use of it upon occasion and 190 that have a passive liking for it. The skating

Journalism Class Hears Helvenstein Discuss Ladies of Press

Interpretative news writing, especially in the weekly field, is coming to be the most prominent place for women in newspaper work, according to Mr. Charles Helvenstein, editor of the New Oak Democrat, who spoke to the Sophomore journalism class last Friday.

Mr. Helvenstein pointed out that the demand for college graduates in the field of journalism is steadily growing larger. Newspapers are developing a greater sense of social responsibility, Mr. Helvenstein said, adding that there is every reason to believe that this trend will result in attracting the higher type of person in journalistic work. The hostile attitude of newspaper editors toward college trained journalism students is changing as editors realize that the broad training of a college education is a valuable asset to a writer. The universities, also, will find that the number of openings for him in newspaper work is constantly growing, Mr. Helvenstein thinks.

Mr. Helvenstein spoke of the possible mechanical improvements that will facilitate the publication of a paper, stating as an example the typewriter that will set type while being used as a typewriter.

In referring to the technical branches of publication, the speaker described the modernistic trends of make-up and stated that radical changes in newspaper make-up are under way. He pointed out that the two papers winning the contest sponsored by the American Newspaper Publishers association were both "modernistic" in make-up and that both had a markedly different appearance from the conventional paper.

other sports in the order of their popularity are tennis, golfing, riding, golf, bicycling, canoeing and sailing.

Looking Backward And Thinking Forward

The end of the year is an exceellent time to look back over the finished school term to judge past events and plan for the future. In all the hectic activity of the year it is difficult to keep one's mind out of the rush long enough to realize the significence of the major movements, the trend of events, the interplay of ideas as they fill in the college calendar. When students are for most over the dust begins to settle and the campus scene begins to emerge at least a little clearer.

It is at this point that those who are graduating begin to see the college panorama in something like normal proportions again. Those of us who will be here next year should profit by the mistakes and achievements of those who have worked with campus organizations this year. It is time for us, too, to look at this campus of ours with something like normal eysight.

This last year hasn't seen any earthquakes in the campus set-up, but there have been, we feel, some faint flickerings that would indicate that the hugabear of apathy might be losing its tenacious hold on the minds of students. Out of this undercurrent of ideas such things as the Peace Day sponsored by C.G.A. and the Emergency Peace Campaign have grown. The value of Peace Day has been questioned. Some feel that it was based too much on demonstration rather than intelligent study of the problem to be faced. Be that as it may, the fact remains that students on this campus took a definite stand for Peace. Other years have seen no peace activities of any moment on the campus.

There have been other events, too, that have jolted the campus from its sleep-walking attitude. Such speakers as Mr. S. K. Ratcliffe, Mr. David Cushman Coyle, Dr. Sherwood Eddy brought a broader viewpoint of the coutemporary scene to the campus. Discussions such as the Youth Conference earlier in the year gave students a chance to receive the stimulating ideas of men like Dr. Arthur Raper, Dr. Hurrey, and women like Miss Muriel Lester. All these side thinkers made us realize the narrow confines of our own campus and our own thinking.

Looking back at the activities of the College Governmeut Association for the year we see there the college-old struggle of their officers to make the student body as a whole realize their responsibility as an active member of college government. Leaders this year have been progressive. They have honestly tried to see beyond the mass of petty detail that surrounds the government that we as students support. They have done a great deal, too, towards the clearing out of that petty detail so that the broader prinejples of student government may be seen by all. They leave, ocessarily, a great deal of work for their successors to carry on.

With thoughts turning toward the future it becomes necessary to ask ourselves several vital questions: Are we willing to accept our responsibilities as members of a student government? Are we willing to make it our personal responsibility to see that the principles of student self-government remain a reality and do not become a sham?

Next year we are the ones that are going to have to answer these questions. As members of the student body they will be of the utmost importa: e to us. In line with this idea we should take advantage of every means of expression available to acquaint ourselves with the machinery of ideas on this campus and to express our viewpoints as to what should be done about them. College Government Association is even now calling for all criticisms pertaining to anything within the jurisdiction of C.G.A. Don't answer—had in criticisms. Sneering won't get you anywhere, but intelligent criticism might.

Many other ways of crystallizing student thought are available. N.S.F.A. forums exist for the student body. It should be the student body members who take advantage of them. Compulsory convocation, student rights, movements on other college campuses, effective student participation on such committees as the Budget committee and the Artists Series committee are all things that should be brought before the student body in such forums.

Next year as never before members of the student body must wake up to the fact that they have definite responsibilities to the group and that in order that student government remain a reality they must begin to take their responsibility seriously.

We Give You Three Gifts, Seniors

And as you're going to graduate, seniors.

No doubt this is the time to speed you upperclassmen on with stirring valedictory addresses. This is probably the time when we should become somewhat sentimental over your leave-taking, we underclassmen who soon will see you seniors marching out of the auditorium, diplomas in hand.

But this isn't going to be a stirring valedictory or a sentimental farewell. In behalf of the students you are leaving behind, we bid you a brief goodbye, but we don't do it with tears in our eyes, for we have more important things to talk about before you leave.

We have some gifts and well-meant advice to give you. We know that few of you will probably make a great name for yourselves, in the eyes of the world. We don't wish that on you anyway because we don't feel it's the important thing. Neither will many of you make a great deal of money. That's not the important thing either. Instead of wishing these things for you we are going to give you three gifts with which we want you to arm yourselves as you leave us for the world.

We give to you a set of eyes, just average eyes as far as looks go. They are eyes that will see below the surfasee, eyes that won't be blinded by artificial brilliuce, that won't fail to see beyond the walls of your homes through the walls of others. Eyes that will see beyond racial colors, and above all eyes that will see wheu there's darkness as well as light.

Next we present you with a mind. It's not a very big mind, just average size, but we think you can use it. It'll help you judge people, to know a good man when you see one. It'll help you deside about social problems. It will save you from suffering. It will sometimes disregard your longings for those of another. It will fight against other minds, small narrower ones. It will be brave it will be free. It will not be afraid fight dictatorship, it will see many sides and ehoose the best one. It will become weary, this mind, but it won't die.

And last we give you a heart. It is a richer big heart, but our gift should be the mind. This heart will beat quickly when it hears good music: it will hammer when it reads the lines of a great poet; it will be touched by sheer beauty—beauty in nature, in people, in other people's hearts. It will respend with a special flntter to a heart like its own. Sometimes it will weut to do things that the mind will not let it, but it will be quite cooperative with the mind, this heart.

And with these gifts we say goodbye to you seniors.

A far-flung plea for student representation on the faculty artist and lecture series' committee has been answered. Yesterday it was decided that three students will get as an advisory body for this group, a body that will reflect, it is hoped, the entertainment tastes of the students, mingling of course good taste with amusement wents in their recommendations.

This should prove a judicious step, for if the responsibility for choosing programs is lightened for the faculty and if the students feel that they have a part in selecting the artists who are to appear here there should be created undoubtedly a better student-faculty relationship, and more diversified programs should result. It is only natural that programs which are brought here for the students' benefit and entertainment should represent to some degree the tastes of these students.

Investigation Begun By State Legislature

The legislature will get you if you don't watch out!

Only this week the Senate and House of Representatives agreed to start an investigation in the state to discover the insidious buzs of communism, bolshevism, and—horror of horrors—socialism that are even now rampant. Students here are probably inoculated against the first two degrading diseases, but it is to be greatly feared that, through the mistaken sentiments of their extreme youth, they have actually contracted some objection to the thought of their fathers, brothers, and sweethearts being made into white rows of crosses by a passing cannon ball.

Another "fighting Roosevelt" seems to be leading the destiny of the United States this year, for Franklin D. Roosevelt seems to be putting quite as much energy, if nevertheless less noise, in his battle against impossible working conditions in factories, poor living conditions on farms, and poor care of the unemployed, as Theodore expended in bombasting Spaniards and the Associated Press.

Students of the inter-racial relations group are the most interested in the progress of Rep. Arthur W. Mitchell's suit which has just been brought against a north-western railroad company for having him put off a Pullman car while he was on his way to take his seat in the House at Washington. Mitchell, who is the only negro member of the House, says that this suit is the "first gun in a campaign I am starting to clean up Jim Crow cars in the South."

These cars, which are admittedly in better condition than they were ten years ago, are still inferior in comfort to cars supplied for white travelers, and they are often found to be very unclean.

Mussolini's son-in-law, Count Ciano, offered the olive branch of proposed alliance to France at the beginning of last week, but made it quite clear that any tie to Britain was unwanted. In fact, no word of the coronation procedures appeared in Italian papers, for Britannia is being boycotted and ignored by the peninsula.

The Reader Writes

There was a time in the history of this country when even the citizens of the republic had to vote in elections and could not hold offfes unless they were the possessors of a certain amount of property and could speak a certain income. Universal manhood suffrage ended all that, however, and now anyone who can meet the bare requirements may vote and hold any elective office he can corral.

Universal suffrage is a theory and a reality on this campus. The right of any normal student to hold office is another theory; but it is one which comes far from being realized in fact. It would be appalling if anyone were to hold that there were not definite property income requirements set up for all candidates for major campus offices, yet such is the case, certainly the case. The recent elections for College Government and publications offices were unique for their lack of candidates—lack of candidates, that is to say, who were in a position to accept their nominations.

For one who has never found herself in such a position it would be difficult to imagine the feelings of a student, who, when offered a position, for which she feels herself competent, must decline the nomination because her need for a $200 dining room work scholarship with its three point load of necessity precludes her acceptance of any office carrying more than a four point evaluation, if she is a B student, or a three point rating if she has a normal average. The temptation to run and pray for defeat

Honor is defined by Webster as " a delicate sense of what is just and right; a scorn of meanness, deceit, or unfairness."

This description does not make this trait too idealistic for each student to attain it. In fact, the college student sincerely believes within herself that she has this "sense." She feels that she is honorable; perhaps she is honorable; perhaps she is.

Let us consider, however, the conception of honor on the campus. Th honor code as stated in the college handbook includes four pounts.

The first is concerned with honesty in academic work. The attempts to change this has brought about the introduction of various systems of "lapping" and the like. Toward actual cheating on examinations the group attitude is good; of this there is very little. And the student body as a whole do not slip into it inadvertently on the spur of the moment when they perpeditated cheaters" who nevertheless play fair at anything. But the student body as a whole is lax toward little things. After due consideration of such matters as writing words in the foreign language readers and copying down the numbers of parallel books which have not been read, can they be termed anything less than cheating?

Let us pass quickly over the second and third points, stealing and lying. These are not violated except on rare occasions and, surprisingly, do not appear to need emphasis.

The last point concerns "upholding the best interests of the

Collegiate Comeback

Dark days are ahead for us—and may the faculty enjoy themselves. We're beginning to wish we had smothered a few of those yawns and not flaunted the latest issue of Collyers as openly in classes that "didn't appeal to us." After all, teachers do have feelings and are easily hurt sometimes. Too bad we've not farsighted.

We hate to dwell on a painful subject but just another bit about exams. What we'd like to know is, why not have the final moving exams up to Friday? Awfully clever and all that but there ARE a few people who have classes until 4:30 Thursday. But then if we had kept up with our work, reading over our notes from day to day, we wouldn't have a thing to worry about.

This is logic:
All things in the world are passing.
I am in the world.
Therefore— . . . but we can't go on.
Finish it up for yourself.

Within the next few weeks we'll be home and already we're beginning to regret the fact that we stopped writing to "the boys at home" deciding that it was better to sit home and read a good book than to go out with "some people we know." Even now we can see long summer nights of good books and an occasional bridge game with the family to break the monotony.

For you who are bidding a sad farewell to a local "gentleman friend" try not to make it too tearful—it's bad on the makeup. And you, let yourself, in a moment of weakness, suggest that he drop by and see you during the summer. Your mother will should be a long spell and it's apt to prove amnoying to have it drag over into the vacation.

Now that it's almost over we feel safe in printing this, from the Kentucky Kernel:

If professors were made to listen
To their own lectures,
If professors were made to laugh
At their own jokes,
If professors were compelled to look at
Their own faces,
Professors would go crazy,
Just like us stoogents.

A nice, tall glass of arsenic to the people that found their exams of this morning "really quite easy"—also to the people that have their term papers in—and have their reports all—and are just waiting for exams to be over so they can rush home—knowing that mother will be pleased with their grades.

Did anyone notice the group of not-so-dignified seniors dressed in prune coloreu bathing down the library steps last Friday night? It seems there was a treasure hunt and the last clue was in front of the library. Those that knew where it was wouldn't move until those who didn't know would go away. Harsh words were spoken and a three-for-all ensued by the librarian, who suggested that they all go elsewhere as soon as possible. Reports of silence to the contrary we think that seniors are still just kids or have passed the childhood stage and are going back to it.

The worm has turned. We hear that the seniors are going to express their views to the faculty. Said views won't be made known until the girls are in possession of their sheepskin. We've already had glimpses of some of these reports are apt to be rather bitter, Remember, girls, your children will probably be here some day, so control yourselves.

A late issue of the Collegiate Digest featured a picture of the Stanford Theory. The article's association formed by the Long Beach Junior College—in action. Each student was given an official card which was to be held in sight of the passing autoist, probably for the protection of motorists against dangerous hitch hikers. The Tallahassee police force are sorry we are in good standing with the authorities of the college should be given similar cards so that the citizen girls might feel safe in business rides to town.

And Others Say---

Much more ominous than the fearful growth of crime, intemperance, or divorce is the appalling increase in the number of graduates being turned out annually by our colleges and universities.

Twenty years ago, there were so few students graduating yearly that they could easily be thrust into obscure niches in the social structure, where they could do very little harm, consequently college graduates were not much more of a nuisance than were the feebleminded or delinquent groups.

Today, however, with millions of formerly normal, healthy American young men and women enrolling and graduating from our institutions of learning, it is imperative that society take steps to protect itself from this plague of culture and learning.

Recently, for instance, the president of the United States himself has confessed that in a moment of weakness, when he was too young to know better, he matriculated at an Eastern university. Pessimistic observers wail that it is only a matter of time until Congress itself —that mighty bulwark of ignorance—will be tainted with the deadly fumes of education by the presence of college graduates, who will seep like poisonous gases into the pure ethereal atmosphere of the national legislature. Wobble our fair land if we should ever be afflicted with a Congress capable of adding, sub-

A Priest Warns the Church By Peter Whiffin

A Catholic missionary, whose pen name is Peter Whiffin, casts a severe indictment against his church on the grounds of commercialism in an article appearing in a current issue of the Forum.

The Catholic church's loss of prestige in America, Mr. Whiffin states, is due to the fact that the priests have been devoted away from the working poor and casting their lot more and more with the ruling powers of big business and politics. The church had a chance to redeem itself during the crash of 1929, by making religion "a blessed means of living for the poor instead of a commercialized racket for living off the poor," but it failed to take advantage of its opportunity.

"If only we had tried then, in the poor's hour of direst need, to pay for all that the poor had done for us—even if it meant giving all we owned . . . we should have won the respect of the rich and the hearts of the poor for generations to come—if," laments Mr. Whiffin.

But the priests, accustomed to soft living had become too selfish to think about the poor and left the decision to look to the government for charity. Thus today priests as a class are discredited men, the author believes, men who have lost the zeal and confidence of the great masses of people because they have proved themselves lnaincere.—(P. C.)

This Supreme Court Muddle By M. E. Tracy

The real issue in the Supreme Court controversy, M. E. Tracy says in a recent issue of Current History, is not whether this body should be so manipulated as to change its attitude toward the constitution, but whether it should exercise the power to declare laws unconstitutional in such a way as to preserve public confidence.

The way public confidence in the court may be achieved, the author believes, is through a rule of unanimity in declaring laws unconstitutional. In cases of a five-to-four or a six-to-three majority decision against a law, people have had time and opportunity to study the justices who expressed the minority opinion were just as able, just as patriotic, and just as loyal to the constitution as were those constituting the majority.

Mr. Tracy concludes: "The practice of allowing the Supreme Court to declare laws unconstitutional by a mere majority decision is inconsistent with our theory of justice As a general proposition, we insist on unanimous jury verdicts for the conviction of even minor criminals. We do this in order to be as sure as a human court can be that the innocent should we be less exacting with regard to the validity of laws passed by the national legislature?"—P. C.)

Why Do Air Liners Crash? By C. B. Allen

Public interest in the tribulations of aviation has been stirred to an unusual pitch this winter by the most persistent run of accidents that has harassed American air transportation since the army's tragic attempt to fly the air mail three years ago, says C. B. Allen in the May 19 issue of the New Republic. In less than two months beginning last December 15, fifty-one persons have been killed in 16 air-line crashes. This excludes the ill-fated Macmillan disaster.

Mr. Allen asks, "Is it the Airplane Designer's Fault?" The chief charge is heard frequently that airplane builders are putting speed ahead of safety, that the army's tragic attempt to fly the air mail three years ago, says C. B. Allen in the May 19 issue of the New Republic. In less than two months beginning last December 15, fifty-one persons have been killed in 16 air-line crashes. This excludes the ill-fated Macmillan disaster.

Mr. Allen asks, "Is it the Airplane Designer's Fault?" The chief charge is heard frequently that airplane builders are putting speed ahead of safety, that airplanes are increasingly complicated and difficult to fly, but the author cites several facts which disprove the latter theory. The author asks in his article "Is it the Government's Fault?" Blaming the Bureau of Air Commerce for aviation disasters on the ground that it maintains inadequate radio facilities and other airway aids to traffic is a favorite theme, Mr. Allen says, but the assan gives proof that it isn't true. Mr. Allen asks if it is the operator's fault and then tells why more blame for this is not. A consideration of this winter's crashes has been attributed to the mistakes of the pilot although it cannot be proved. However, Mr. Allen gives many facts which indicate that more than likely it is not true. Other demands from non-technical sources ask for lower rates of travel for the pilgrs, and parachutes for passengers and plants. These things, according to Mr. Allen, are apparently only for the future. The most practical firing men who operate the country's air lines probably will go ahead pretty much as they are now, knowing that the risks are small and flying disasters, and adopting safeguards here and there in the light of experience that sometimes bound to be unique. The main question to which they need pay the most attention is the age-old principle dealing with safety —that in price is eternal vigilance.—B. S.

Teaching Engineers

The task of training the engineers has taken to throttle Education was the formation of the N. Y. A., but this National Youth Administration is a rather odd-bloodied method of accomplishing the desired end.

What can be done with these huge numbers of graduates who are boiling off yearly from the witch's pot of higher education? Our prisons and feeble-minded institutions are already over-crowded; besides, all humanitarii would cry out in sympathy with the criminals and feeble-minded, if they were forced to share their cells with college graduates.

Some experts suggest the founding of a college graduate colony on some South sea island.

State Alumnae Honor Seniors

Breakfast Welcomes New Class Into Ranks Of Association

Approximately 200 seniors of Florida State College for Women were welcomed into the ranks of the Alumnae association Sunday morning May 1 at a breakfast in the college lower dining hall.

Speakers included President Edward Conradi; Mrs. George Lofton president of the Tallahassee F. S. C. W. Alumnae club, and Miss R. H. Leslie, alumnae secretary. Miss Florence Tryon, senior representative at large on the alumnae board, led the seniors in the pledge to the Alumnae association.

Mrs. Lewis told the seniors that they as educated individuals will be able to serve as messengers of peace and can spread the seeds of good will throughout the nation and the world." In closing she said, chi.dren are being brought up to serve as "cannon fodder."

The purpose and activities of the Alumnae association were presented by Mrs. Leslie who said that this association represents a bond between the alumnae and the college. Among the activities of the Alumnae association mentioned in particular, the Alumnae loan fund through which an interest free loan is provided for a worthy student each year; the Alumnae college week which was attended by more than 200 alumnae, commencement activities of the association including the presentation of alumnae medallions, and the class reunions. Mrs. Leslie told of the Institute held each June in cooperation with the Florida Federation

Alumnae Plan Constitution Revision Soon

Only Graduates Who Pay Dues to Be Allowed Membership

Only those alumnae who apply and pay their dues will be allowed membership in the Alumnae Association next year, if the revised constitution drawn up this spring by the alumnae committee on the revision of the constitution is passed at the annual alumnae meeting on May 29. In the past any graduate of Florida State College has been granted membership in the association whether or not she has paid her dues.

A change has also been made in the Alumnae Board, according to Miss Dorothy Dodd, chairman of the committee on revision of the constitution. The Alumnae Board, as set forth by the committee, includes the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer of the Alumnae Association, together with five board members elected at large and the retiring president of the association. The eight district directors will not serve on the board. In the past the Alumnae Board consisted of the president, vice - president, secretary, treasurer of the Alumnae Association, together with five board members elected at large and the retiring president of the association. The eight district directors will not serve on the board. In the past the Alumnae Board consisted of the president, vice - president, secretary, treasurer, two representatives-at-large, and the eight district directors.

In the revised constitution, the term of office for each member of the board may be re-elected for a second term. Half of the officers of the board will serve one year, the other half in odd years. Eligibility for membership in the association will be lost by graduates of college for a specified length of time. The district directors will be elected each year, and any alumna is eligible for election as director of when she received her degree.

Annual dues in the Alumnae Association are $3.00, and life membership $30 00 under the revised constitution. It was also provided that 75% of funds derived from the payment of life memberships should be placed into an endowment fund which would not be used for current expenses.

Standing committees as set up by Miss Dodd's committee, the finance committee, the duty of which would be to secure funds for the development of the association; alumnae fund committee, to secure money for the loan fund; scholarship committee, to award alumnae loans; publicity committee; membership committee on alumnae club policies, and constitution committee. The revised constitution will be distributed to alumnae before the May 29 meeting, at which it will be held May 29, in order that the alumnae may familiarize themselves with the changes before the constitution is presented for adoption at that time.

Alumnae chairman for the senior luncheon will be Miss Edna May McIntosh. The senior breakfast will be held on May 1, 1937, prior to that time the seniors were invited to the annual alumnae luncheon during commencement week.

Speaker for this occasion will be Dr. Clifford F. Lord, chairman of the department of English at the University of Florida. Miss Tryon will present the medallions on this occasion.

Reno Interesting Carvers

Mrs. Davis, one of the college's oldest alumnae, is also one of the best loved figures in the entire community and state. For fifty years she has been known for her deeds of charity and benevolence and for her work among Negro humanity. At the age of 73 she still holds the commission of probation officer in Leon county to which she was appointed by Governor Martin. She is also the director of the valuable service she had rendered in many years.

It was largely through her efforts that the public school of Tallahassee was materially changed and modernized and county prohibition was secured and kept in force. She also was instrumental in making possible the operation of the King's Daughters hospital by freely giving her services as nurse and by a share in the organization of a county board of public welfare upon which she served as director for five years.

Even from childhood, from the time she brought six hungry, little, ragged children from school to have dinner with her, Mrs. Davis has been known for her generosity and kindness to man and beast. Today still stand, by the Martin building, those same trees she planted years ago on the public pitching steam to protect the horses from the blazing sun. More than once she has taken a desperately ill child into her home and nursed him back to health.

Mrs. Davis has made Tallahassee her lifelong home with the exception of a few years ago when born Eugenia Cornelia Tatum on December 13, 1851, at Tallahassee and was one of two who first received a diploma from West Florida Seminary in 1880. Through a competitive examination she won the Florida scholarship which was possible by Georgia Peabody's bequest to the University of Nashville, now Peabody College, from which institution she was graduated in 1882, receiving her A. B. degree on May 30, 1883. On October 30, 1883, she married Robert L. Davis of Mount Pleasant, Fla. To this union were born four sons and a daughter, Mrs. Annie Davis Reno, living, K. M. Davis of Midway and Mrs. D. A. Avant of Mount Pleasant.

Carol Perrenot (Mrs. C. P.) of Longwood, Fla., is interested in being the first Bachelor of Music graduate of Florida State College having received this degree, with piano as her major, in 1912. Previous to this she had been consistently appointed studio facing Central Park in New York city. She has had a large class of piano students and for the past three years has been very successful in presenting a series of operalogues, these being analytical, illustrated lectures in detail of the Wagnerian operas. Mrs. Perrenot has been soloist pianist in concerts for the following Metropolitan and Chicago Opera singers: Lucrezia Bori, Evelyn Scotney, Graziella Pareto, Anna Fitziu, Bentiamino Gigli, Rosa Raisa and Edith Mason. She is playing for the last two for most of their concerts this season.

After eaving Florida State College she was awarded a complete scholarship by the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music for continued study in that institution. She has appeared in semi-professional clubs as pianist and accompanist and becomes a member of the faculty a; the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Mrs. Longone and her son, Tom Perrenot, live in Longwood, Fla., where she studied accompanying and has been active as accompanying. She studied piano several summers with Busoni in Berlin. Mrs. Perrenot has made a tour of the principal cities of the United States, frequently playing leading artists from La Scala Opera, Milan, who played with the Tampa, Florida Symphony Orchestra, Alfredo Gandolfi, violinist as well as accompanist.

Dr. Lillian Carpenter graduate of Florida State College to receive the decree of doctor of philosophy from Columbia university, New York city, in 1926 at Teachers College, Columbia university. She was also awarded the highest rank of scholarship, both as a graduate and undergraduate. She was awarded a fellowship in 1924 which gave to the School of Education of Columbia University. She has had an great service in teacher-training, in school management and supervision, and in child study in the minds of students. She has specialized in education in the Florida as principal of one of the large high schools, as an instructor in the summer schools and as supervisor.

Miss Lucile Carpenter, sister of Dr. Helseth was president of her class in 1924 and received in that year the Buckman Medal for oration. After her graduation she served as president of the Alumnae association for two years. She was largely instrumental in establishing chapters of two honor societies. Kappa Delta Pi and Phi Kappa Phi, on this campus. In 1935 Dr. Helseth was one of the organizers of the Florida State Key. Kappa as one of the charter members of the first Florida chapter.

Three of 5000 Alumnae Will Receive Honor Medallions

Singer, Educator, Social Service Worker Are Called Most Outstanding Graduates Of Florida State College

A civic and social worker who first received her diploma from Dr. Wilson, Florida educator, in 1880, a musician and an educator who will be honored here May 29 with medallions to be presented by the Florida State College Alumnae Association for special achievement in their respective fields.

Mrs. George T. Davis, of Tallahassee, whose long career in public service is known far and wide in the civic and social worker.

Carol Perrenot Longone, of New York City, class of 1912, is the musician, and Dr. Inga Olla Helseth, of Williamsburg, Va., class of 1914, now professor of education at the College of William and Mary, is the educator.

These three were chosen from the ranks of more than 5,000 alumnae after careful consideration by an award of honor committee headed by Dorothy Johnson Nelson, Orlando, former president of the Alumnae association. They will receive handsome bronze medallions on one side of which is a replica of the Westcott Memorial building and on the other side the symbolic three torches.

The alumnae medallions will be conferred at a luncheon at 12:00 o'clock here Saturday morning, May 29, in the Augusta Conradi theater during their second annual Commencement Week.

Miss Julia Gehan is serving as local chairman for the fifth-year reunion activities of the class of 1932. Permanent president of the class is Miss Clementine Newman of Columbus, Missouri.

College Sends Alumnae Into Welfare Work

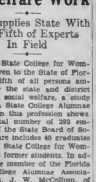
FSC Supplies State With One-Fifth of Experts In Field

Florida State College for Women has given to the State of Florida one-fifth of all persons employed by the state and county boards of social welfare, a study of Florida College Alumnae Association engaged in this profession shows. The total number of 392 employees of the State Board of Social Welfare includes 40 graduates of Florida State College for Women and 30 former students. In addition, one member of the Florida State College Alumnae Association, Mrs. J. W. McCollum, of Gainesville, is a member of the state board of seven members which directs the welfare activities of Florida.

Prominent among the positions held by Florida State College graduates are those of field representatives, district directors, supervisors and assistants generally. Other F.S.C.W. graduates are employed as visitors and on the office staffs.

Miss Eunice Minton, '30, who after graduation from Florida State College for Women studied at the Rockefeller School of Social Work, is one of the three field representatives of the State Board of Social Welfare.

Among the district directors is Miss Mildred Bowden, who studied at the School of Applied Science, Western Reserve University, and who is now located in West Florida. Miss Mabel Stark, '31, is another alumna who studied at the New York School of Social Work. She is in the Tampa district, and Miss Martha Parrish, '32, who studied at the University of Chicago in Administration of the University of Chicago, now has headquarters in Live Oak.



Of the 26 supervisors on the state staff, six are Florida State College alumnae. Miss Sada Boone Bozeman, '31, of Tallahassee; Miss Elizabeth B. Pierce, '34, of Volusia County, who studied respectively at the New York School of Social Work and Western Reserve University; Miss Ruth Nelson, '34, Palm Beach County, who studied at the New York School of Social Work; and Mrs. Georgia Colburn Quinan, '22, Dade County, who studied at the New York School of Social Work and the University of Chicago, and Administration of the University of Chicago.

Miss Lena Story, '22, who attended the New York School of Social Work is a supervisor in Hillsborough county.

Assistants in the state office are Miss Lelia Mae Hubbard, St. Cloud; Grace McKee, Valparaiso; Virginia Clayton, Jacksonville; Mrs. Elizabeth Cresent City, Elizabeth Leach, Delray; Inri Edna Smith, Jacksonville; Holly Waker, Vero Beach; Ruth Myrick, Ft. Church Groups Will Give Teas

Series of Social Events Are Planned For Coming Week

All church groups are planning teas from 4:00 until 6:00 o'clock during examination week.

Tonight from 7:15 to 9:30 the old and new rectries will be entertained at a garden party at Ruge hall. Sunday night Sue Farmer and Betty Ortlund will be in charge of the Auxiliary program which is the last to be given this year in Ruge Hall.

Two Episcopal students have been accepted to do summer volunteer work. Louise Lingo of Panama City will do special work at Columbia university, New York; Miss Charlotte Kamper of Cocoa will be at Dante, Virginia, a mountain mission under Deaconess Williams.

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion Friday morning at 7:15 o'clock.

Miss Winnie Lee Davis will talk to her Sunday school class during the "Two Miracle Men." This is the last of a series of talks to be given this year. Next week will also be in charge of the league program at which time she will speak on "Race Relations."

Punch and cookies will be served to Methodist students and their friends during examination week on the lawn north of the Methodist student house. The Methodist social chairmen are to serve as hostesses.

The Baptist Sunday school is having their day Sunday in the Sunday school class. Tea will be held at 4:00 during examination week.

Student Indifference Scored by Writer

is a possible mouthpiece from the students to the senate, for when the forum reaches a decision of reorganizes the plan of some campus law or activity, the forum sends it to the senate in the form of a recommendation. Here is an opportunity for students to voice their opinions on compulsory convocation, the cut system, three day classes, or any of the numerous things about which student opinions complain, but never seem to make any effort towards changing. Here is an opportunity to offer constructive criticism and helpful suggestions; here is a chance to voice opinions and get rid of pet 'gripes,' and yet only 20 to 30 students attend these meetings and do their complaining in a legal sort of way which it is likely to get the best results. Instead, practically all of these students get in couples or groups and complain of things vaguely or sometimes basically, but seldom usefully. The way is open, but the students fail to exert enough push things to attend an hour meeting or Tuesday and, instead, there just as half in school has no justification for complaining about the offices they didn't vote either for or against, so, also, the majority of students have no justification for complaining that they fail to try to do anything about.

Compulsory convocation, which seems to cause students so much unhappiness, is a necessity on this campus just because students have not yet reached the point where they are interested in their own government. Convocation is the only time of their week that contact with C. O. A. and it seems that the main reason that convocation is due to the 25 is the fine which is charged for each absence from the weekly meeting, and most student allowances cannot stand many such fines. Complaints have been made all year concerning compulsory convocation, but have been made in small groups, at the dinner table, in hall meetings, but when the N. S. F. A. brought up that subject for discussion prior to a recommendation to senate, only 19 students were interested enough in the matter to view point to attend the meeting. On such grounds what justification can the remaining students have for complaint?

The student body at any college is the most important factor in the success of the college. The curriculum is built around student needs; outside activities, such as sports and plays, are planned for the student benefit; and school laws are made for the student welfare. Therefore, it is obvious that the student votes in.

Talks should be prominent, college students should give up the days of children and stop complaining; similarly where it does more harm than good; they should turn to the ways of men and women and learn to consider problems maturely, and organize to decide them sanely.

Art Students Display Tiny Model Village

City Buildings, Homes, Shops Included In Minute City

Complete from its public school to its own tiny city jail is the model town on display by the Industrial Arts department in the Education building. The little village, which was made by the freshman Industrial Arts classes, contains all the essentials of a small community.

The red brick court house, around which the town centers, fill an entire block and is surrounded by grass of the dyed sawdust variety and trees of the genus all spoons. Various city officials are seen hurrying up the steps to the court house and over way to their business of the day, while the janitor works on the lawn.

Business District Seen.

The business district of town occupies eight blocks surrounding the court house. A drug store, a dress shop, and a moving picture are in which a new feature is not showing occupy one of the corners of the block by the court house, and a large modern hotel with an adjoining cafe and filling station occupy the other. A telegraph office for the convenience of the guests completes the block. The city hall is on the block next to the court house, and next door to the Chamberlain church. A wedding has just taken place, and the guests are pouring out of the church through the parked cars, one of which is decorated with "Just married."

A large gift shop is one of the features of the little town, and the Model Home occupies one of the building. Next door are the beauty parlor, the police station, the laundry, and the barber shop. The city bank, windows barred against burglary and with various law firms and medical offices occupying the upper stories is next door to the ever-present five and ten cent store. An up-to-date post office has the box rents and a modern parcel post delivery truck is constantly leaving for points.

Filling stations selling various brands of gasoline dot the town, while Bennett's Cafe and Grocery supplies a place of its own near the court house. The police headquarters and a bakery completes the business district.

Modern School Displayed

The school building is near the residential section, and contains the modern equipment. The youngsters' children are seen playing on the swings, slides, and see-saws, while the older children play basketball and baseball on the well kept lawn. A fine diamond, and large school bus is on its way to transport some home of the students who live far away from the school. Light Company, with its rows of electric wiring, is clearly marked and fenced-in. Here looms the water tank, overlooking the city depot. The railroad tracks run through the district of the public utility works, and nearby is the commissary which carries a full line of merchandise for the convenience of the travelers. Here are seen several trains, ready to speed them to the hotel.

Around the corner is the ice plant, with a delivery wagon pulled by two sturdy horses. The city jail looms tremendously above the negro quarters which are near the public utility works, where many of the negroes are working.

Across town is the large white frame house, the ambulance is seen speeding in, while an efficient looking hearse is about to meet it. Nearby is the Methodist church with its tall steeple, and further down the street is the palatial home of the town bank president, a fine residence. His home is equipped with a private pool, and covers a choice corner lot. Next door is a large house of Spanish architecture, with a tile roof, complete with a rug and chairs for sunbathing.

Great Prosperity Seen.

Private homes and apartment houses fill in the residential area which surrounds the business district. The little town boasts paved city streets and sidewalks, a system of white way lights covering the entire town, and well-marked streets. Cars of various modern makes are seen on all the streets, showing the presence of great prosperity.

The crowning touch is the community club, a large comfortable log building surrounded by spacious lawn, a golf course, and a pool. Here the residents of the town seem to be enjoying themselves playing golf, sun bathing, and strolling through the trees which shade the club.

All in all there seems to be nothing lacking in the little model town. If only we could be sure of an agreeable climate, life would indeed be pleasant here.

manner. In sorority houses where the number of guests and alumnae makes it inconvenient to house the students, it shall be the responsibility of the president of the chapter to see that the students to cooperate and not fill the house to more than the number that can be taken care of adequately.

A student not a candidate for a degree who has not used all her week-ends may go away for the week-end before commencement and return for commencement, provided she makes the proper arrangements. She must, however, return to her college home, whether residence hall sorority house or off-campus house.

By making proper arrangements, a candidate for a degree may leave college a day or two after she has completed her final examination. But she must remember in time to be at every commencement exercise, rehearsal, and performance in which she is to take part. The college expects this cooperation.

Academic probation will be lifted after the student's final examination.

Arrange with your director about storing trunks, be sure there is only one address on the baggage. If you are returning for summer school, do not send your storage at that time please arrange for it in the package.

Arrange in the business office when you buy your ticket about sending express trunks and packages.

Tailored and bus representatives will be in front of the auditorium in the Westcott building, beginning Monday, May 26, at 9 o'clock for the purpose of selling tickets.

stand directly in the balcony of the building.

The seniors with their junior sisters that night will form a line in front of the Westcott building and from will march through the auditorium and out the side doors to form a small circle on the lawn behind the auditorium.

Mary Miller, president of the senior class, will conduct the ceremony of the burning of the books and the planting of the tree. This will be followed by the reading of the last Will and Testament.

The juniors and the seniors at the end of the semi-circles following this part of the program will march up to the improvised altar and exchange caps and gowns. Dr. Conradi will then present each senior with a pink tea and they will march away from the platform, through a line made by the juniors.

When the exercises are over the seniors will march back into the auditorium and bank their palm branches in front of the stage for the baccalaureate sermon Sunday morning.

something of a race order of the leper colony. A ship could stop near the island every June, to leave fresh graduates and exchange mail, which would be carefully fumigated to prevent the education virus from spreading to the outside world.

Then human authorities believe that college graduates should be sanctioned for the rare and guinea pigs commonly used in laboratory experimentation.

But these plans make no attempt to cure the disease at its roots. The process of getting an education is similar to that of becoming addicted to the use of opium. We must prevent our young children from getting their first taste of the deadly weed education, if we are to prevent their degenerating into puny-willed, driveling, educated wrecks, with uncontrollable craving and appetite for Brahms, Michelangelo, Browning and Shakespeare.

In regard to our own seniors, who have already slipped so far from the straight and narrow path of ignorance, we can only choke back a sob, solemnly promise that never shall the world learn the black secret from our lips and urge the seniors to try to get along somehow, in spite of the handicap of a college education.—Highland Echo.

Senate Elects Phillips To Fill Hendry's Place

At a meeting of the college Senate yesterday afternoon, Virginia Phillips was elected chairman of the off-campus committee in Barbara Hendry's place. Barbara was forced to resign because of an excess point load.

Margaret Stout was elected house chairman for Jennie Murphree in the place of Elizabeth Pierce. Elizabeth was also forced to resign because of an excess point load.

Seniors Will Submit Criticisms of Profs To President Conradi

college." First, this would have to do with attitudes toward the regulations. These attitudes are naturally affected by rules which are considered senseless, unnecessary, and unmodern. Nevertheless, the honor system does not give the student to din is to go to a member of the senior class or some minor official and instigate the removal of the rule in question. Instead, rebellious and unborn, deliberately breaks the rule because that "knows it isn't wrong." The examples of such rules let me cite two: First, the one concerning riding to and from town at night, and second, restriction to rooms after last light final. With these are a number of other regulations for which the student body as a whole has little respect. This makes for a very poor attitude toward the regulations; a lack of confidence in the association is the inevitable result. The code of honor in the handbook does have the students change the rules of which they do not like, but few students will do so.

Secondly, this lack on part of the honor code implies reporting other students when they break any of the rules. This is the point where ninety-eight per cent of the students body falls down. Each girl has her own opinion or her own scorn and hatred for the "tattle-tale." She is not going to her roommate, to her friends, to her sorority sisters with loyalty to the student government group, but she would give the matter serious consideration to see how she might inure others in this way. Such a practice will make her unpopular, and possibly will result in suspended from school; many thought the punishment too severe for the infraction committed, partially on the fact that a number of writers had written stories things and that in comparison the offense did not warrant suspension. Of course, the student who have an essentially poor attitude, who have no appreciation, or only are seldom reported. This is the fate of the entire student body. It is too unconscious of its responsibility; it needs to be taught a lesson. It is not conscious of exactly what its attitudes are, but it has to be made conscious of them. A truly honorable student will report any knowledge she may have of a breach of the rules and regulations even if it means severe criticism and the loss of popularity.

After discussing all that being an honorable student includes, Miss Meacham made the suggestion: among student officials there is really room for a vital matter is impressed upon them and as an every day issue with them; but when they go to bed at large, with its prevailing atmosphere of indifference, they are no honorable students.—Alicia Meacham.

is almost insurmountable, but any organization or person or force forbids such a procedure.

It is easy for other individuals, safe in their elevated positions, to say complacently that the student must be fair-minded and look at the whole affair in the light of her future, but who can say what light such a future will shed. Shall the physical education major decline to run for the presidency of the athletic association? Her election would mean that instead of working for athletics when she would be otherwise "messing" and make up for the file assistantship which will keep her at a desk ten of her previously free hours a week, she forces from $100 to $110 a year. A great sacrifice, indeed, when one considers the usual financial status of such students. Just what is the far-sighted girl to do in such instances and future professional prestiges be worth the debt she must inevitably contract?

And the student interested in journalism? May she dismiss the opportunity for practical experience at some paper that will help her? Or may she not be essentially poor athlete, who have no appreciation, or only are seldom reported. This is the fate of the entire student body. It is too unconscious of its responsibility; it needs to be taught a lesson. It is not conscious of exactly what its attitudes are, but it has to be made conscious of them. Florida High Holds Commencement Rites In Auditorium Here

The graduating exercises of Florida high school will be held Thursday night in the college auditorium at 8:15 o'clock with Honorable J. M. Lee as the principal speaker.

After the invocation by the Rev. Oersald Culberson, Miss Mildred will play a xylophone solo and the graduation address will be given. The girls' glee club will sing under the direction of Miss Cora Strong, will then offer the selection, "At Twilight."

Dr. Ellery Parsons, superintendent of the school, will present the graduating class with the diplomas. Awards will be given by Dr. Edward Conradi for his private information. However, he will not open them until after graduation.

The College Government association asks that if anyone wishes to give any suggestions, criticisms or offer any criterions in regard to this idea, to put them in the box in the College Government association box.

Burnly it would be an interesting experiment, and just as valuable as any class taught members of the House of Commons, if a selected number were to go as representatives to the Parliament, this plan would enable students to actually participate in their own style of government.

At least a few young Americans have not been stunted with the bestial doctrines of pacifism. The word comes from Spain that sun-third of the United State volunteer troop that has been fighting in the government ranks has met its demise and is buried in the battle fields of Spain.

The scora in the Roosevelt-Browne Court match now stands two down and five to go for the President; for Junior Van deVeer not banded in his resignation at the beginning of this week. While this has happened to relieve the strain of the battle for a while, the main combatants have not lost sight of the main issue. Roosevelt still aims to force the court change bill through without revision or compromise of any kind, while the opponents are ready as best on stopping the whole project.

At last the U. S. S. R. has come through with the plan to do away with espionage and sabotage. Just hand the dirty business over to the army, seems to be the utilitarian of the officials. for the secret army is being increased enormously, presumably to the cost, and many of the secret service and civilian population are being supplied with neat notebooks defining espionage and sabotage so that any may recognize and quell it.

After the ceremony, a cookie shine was given, at which the seniors read their last wills and made their last requests. The seniors honored were: Marion Heper, Eleanor Williams, Frances Morrow, Jean Clark, Martha Lee Thompson, and Marjorie Hall.

The seniors of Chi Omega were entertained at a formal banquet at the Dutch Kitchen Monday night. The sorority colors, cardinal and straw, were used in the decorations, the center piece being a horse shoe filled with flowers of those colors. The seniors were presented with bookends as a gift from the chapter. The seniors honored at the banquet were: Pauline Spenser, Sally Anthony, Martha Goddard, Emily Davis, and Betty Hamilton.

Next Thursday the seniors of Kappa Alpha Theta will be entertained by Miss Mary Ruth Hannah, the faculty advisor, at a buffet supper. Sorority members will attend are Mary Veach, Virginia Hamilton, Banks Wood, Mary Lee Johnson, Mary Ann Moore, Miss Emmets, Barbara Bandy, Marjorie Morris, Marion Tuten, Miss Ann Hill, Madge Williams, and Kitty Craney.

Saturday night the members of Phi Mu sorority will entertain in honor of their seniors with a spread at the chapter house. Gifts will be presented to the seniors. Those are Lillian Simmons and Helen Stewart.

Higher Education Eradicates All Traces of Originality

Student Believes "Thinkers" Have No Place In Mundane World of Hide-Bound Conservatives

By VIRGINIA DAVIS

The modern institutions called colleges are turning out in mass production atecocype graduates who are unable to think for themselves. However the colleges themselves, are not entirely to blame for this condition. It takes what type of graduates the colleges release. Since man decided that it was better to live in groups, society, as a whole, has called individuality the freedom of thought or individualistic thinkers. A thinking man is one whom society has set himself up as a menace. And conventional society has made individualism itself is right in suppressing undirected thought.

Thought is so dangerous as a thinking man, because he will not accept things at their surface value. He wants to dig down and examine the root for himself and has the courage of any man is able to bear critical inspection? The institutions of learning today do not that our colleges are not teaching their students to think. Each year mores young men and women graduate from colleges, interest if this is allowed to continue.

Imagine the consternation of those yapping for a thinking product of an education if they actually expected that they are safe ing for. Where would governments especially those who would release education, the home, stand? Where would be the stability of the nation's offspring would stand up and say, "Why should I vote for Mary Smith, she's a nice girl?" or "Mary Smith, who's she?"

What would keep the nation from a heart attack if its youth or "Young" stood up in meeting the matter carefully and if refuse to belong to any church that called on the Lord for salvation of souls, but as a get-rich-quick proposition. If one, in short, refuse to allow theology, who does not even know how to put on its collar, to minister to them? Where would the church want to be examined by critical thinkers?

What of the schools themselves? Are they equipped with professors who are capable of inspecting a system of dishing out knowledge and of digging for truth and having is mouthed back at them in the same way, or will be to leap into high-flown words a student's paper which say s"The book says that" in answer to question he vaguely or at least it takes only one side The trouble does not know what he is talking about." Do the schools want thinking students, and are they able to produce professors who will promote independence of thought?

Even in the home, the process of independent thinking is not encouraged. How many members of his parents if junior should dismiss as nonsense? Parents are not always right in telling me what to do. Parents do not always know what is wrong in many things. Why should I look on you and think you are right because you not want to be accepted unquestionably as superior beings because they happen to bring children into the world?

Then who wants education to produce free thinkers? Only a very few who have tasted the illegal joy of thinking things through themselves. Only a minority who would like to see the world free from political bosses, dirty politics, insincere "men of God," and professors unconcerned as to how they mold young minds The

Russian Girl Recalls Days Of Uprising

Memories of Revolution Still Retained By Mina Agreez

By ALMA WARREN

It was the winter of 1917. In the streets of Arzalay, Russia, the snow fell, covering the smoke-colored roofs of the houses in a white shroud. The sound of carriages wheels crunching over the hard-packed snow in the streets mingled with the shrill cries of groups of refugees huddled in a cellar just off the streets. The Bolshevist infantry would be passing through Arzalay in a few hours.

Down there in the cellar, a Russian family who had not seen fit to be in accord with the incoming Bolshevist regime were living on borscht and black, heavy black bread. They were waiting for a more favorable time to get out of the country.

Among the fugitives were a little girl and her mother. The father had gone out to get food. The little girl was so hungry that she cried. The mother caressed the curls broke into the cellar and shouted that the Bolshevists were on the helpless little group. The child's mother pleaded with them to spare her child's life in a way, threatening to return and tell the party that they were Bolshevist firing squad.

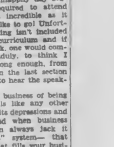
All these but of a typical scene in Russia at the time of the "Red Revolution" are part of the early life of Mina Agreez, senior in the Florida State Colleges for Women, Mina Agrees.

When Mina was a child fled from Russia they went to Poland. There they remained for about six months, and although Mina was only six years old she saw on the dock was a big "black devil." Mina's mother was afraid of the monster she would not take Mina out at all for weeks, until she learned that the "black devils" were harmless.

Before coming to America they went to Siam for several weeks Mina, whose home is now at Daytona Beach, remembers Poland when she was five years old.

Mina's parents are now dead, handed down in her family, of

Foreigners Visit Here On Way to New Orleans



Marquis Glan Gerolano Chiavari, Italian consul to New Orleans, Prof. Linda Lenna, consul to Tampa, and Enrico Contucci, a student of Italian at Columbia, visited office in New Orleans were visitors on this campus last Saturday and Sunday. The visitors stopped by on their way to New Orleans from Miami. Their interest in the work this college is doing in teaching Italian.

Miss Marie Davis, who held the Duse scholarship in Italy, and who is teaching Italian work at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, has been here. This is the only college in the state where Italian is taught.

More than anything else when I visited Italy, I was impressed by the spirit of friendship with which I was received. Everywhere I went I found people willing to help me in every way they could. I was treated with courtesy and kindness by everyone I met. I shall never forget the hospitality I received in Italy," Miss Davis said.

Happily or unhappily day sits down aren't required to attend convocation. As incredible as it seems, I would like to see a wonderfully hip-reading isn't included in our college curriculum and I'm sure that a graduate work as the University of Wisconsin, might stick it long enough. From the back set, on the last section in the balcony, to hear the speaker by.

After all, this business of being a "college girl is like any other business: it has its depressions and its highs, and when business slumps you can always jack it up by the "co!" system. That magical plan that fills your business with color, and features the most important and dearest things

Girl Records FSC Flashes With Camera

Freshman Says Pictures Best Recall Scenes Of Yesterday

Snap shots are the only way to bring back yesterday, according to Evetta Mann, a freshman at Florida State College for Women. Equipped with a 616 Junior Eastman camera, Evetta has been taking pictures of campus life, but these pictures are the type that the average amateur photographer does not take.

Recently she took pictures of about sixteen girls that will appear in the annual. As yet the exact purpose of the pictures and the names of the girls are a part of the mysteries surrounding the annual.

Evetta loves her hobby. With this, her first good camera, she is trying to capture some unusual bits of campus life. She has had an extra reporters' eye finder attached to her camera in order to make it possible for her to hold the camera higher and take pictures at closer range. She next wants to get a cloud filter and hopes sometime to use tenlsed films.

Contrary to the common belief that pictures taken in the shade are unsuccessful, Evetta finds that she obtains her best ones in the shade using verachrome films. Another common belief is that one can not get a successful picture facing the sun. By experimenting Evetta has found that one can shade the lens with one's hand in such a way as to secure unusually good pictures that otherwise could not be taken.

She keeps all the pictures she takes in scrap book, and has a print of every picture taken with and her camera and every film she has exposed.

Two or three years ago Evetta, entered several pictures in an Eastman high school nature study contest. Her picture of a blooming rose bush won for her a book on photography and another of her snap-shots was highly approved by the judges.

Government Will Aid Youth

$71,250,000 Allotted to Help Young People All Over United States by Expansion Of Many Work Projects

By MARGUERITE BROWNE

What are the possibilities for American youth today? What projects are being made for us in the way of opportunity and employment? Has Roosevelt included us in his 1937 program? These are the questions asked by youth all over America who have gone unanswered or practically so until recent years.

During the year 1937 there will be available $71,250 000 allotted out of the $1,625,000,000 Deficiency bill, $21,500,000 more than the fund for the fiscal year 1936. This money will be used to help young people all over the United States by an expansion of student aid, par-time project employment and the vocational guidance and placement service for needy young people between the ages of 20 years of age. There will be no increase in the year-round average of 400,000 persons aided, however. The chief expansion will be the vocations! guidance and the student aid.

Restrictions Abandoned

The new bill has abandoned the work projects to community development and recreational projects, youth development and public service and conservation projects. Applications for any type of useful work on any project for which there is sufficient demand will be considered.

National Youth Administration

The National Youth Administration not only gives employment to young people but keeps them out of competition in a labor market that is already seeking employment are far in excess of those necessary to do the work available. Abandonment of radical curtailment of the activities of the N Y. A. would work a hardship on students who have engaged schools and colleges.

Roosevelt wholeheartedly approved of the way in which the youth program was carried out and conducted during the year 1936 and in an answer of appreciation he stated: "One year ago I signed the executive order creating the N. Y. A. and predicted that the return on investment would be high. I am happy to see that this prediction 12 months later has been fulfilled.

"I am still more gratified that Congress has seen fit to include additional allotment for the N. Y. A. in the Deficiency bill for 1937. No greater obligation faces the government than to justify the faith of its young people in the fundamental rightness of our democratic institutions and to preserve their strength and loyalty and idealism against a time when they must assume the responsibilities of citizenship."

Girls' Camp Planned

Not only will the C. C. C. camps for boys be continued along the same plan as before, but forest camps for 5,000 unemployed girls are being erected. This is the latest plan of the National Youth Administration, heartened by the success of the C. C. C. camps for boys and young men. This plan is also the latest development in the Federal program for unemployed. The first of such camps was organized under the the auspices of the New York State relief board and sponsored by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Frances Perkins, secretary of labor.

Camps will be located in vacated school buildings, summer hotels, abandoned C. C. C. or transient camp barracks. Women directors, a work project supervisor and a small corps of teachers and counselors make up the staff of each camp. Girls selected for the camps must be in need and between the ages of 18 and 28. They have the status of N Y. A. employees and earn their subsistence and $5 a month for personal use.

Estimated over-all cost of the camps for each girl is $30 a month N Y. A. officials explain that girls will ibe taught to perform useful community services Besides being taught along industrial lines the girls are given an opportunity for instruction in English, domestic science, hygiene and public health, and simple economics. During the hours between school and work, athletic contests, hikes, musical and dramatic groups are enjoyed. Libraries are available in most camps.

Relief Started in 1933

Special relief for women was started in September, 1933, and was organized on a national basis. Last year 216,700 were given jobs through the C. W. A. Work relief has given thousands of jobs and the W. P. A. has given 400,000 women work.

Through the C. C. C. the girls who have been in poverty all their lives will be offered an opportunity for occupational and educational training in a wholesome outdoor environment. These young women will be given a new outlook on life through work, education, and healthful outdoor life.

The camps will give the girls a chance for a better environment which will stimulate the qualities for cooperator and citizenship. Opportunity for individual development in character will be fostered, as well as an understanding of community responsibility They will become better adjusted to their environment and better equipped to find jobs, also in a position to exercise a wholesome influence within their community.

Besides the N. Y. A. and other opportunities open to young people, the general education board has recently granted $800,000 for the work of the American Council of Education.

Adults Asking Response

Many adults are heard asking and practically demanding people of today to offer in return for the aid they are given. They contend that in their home and boyhy days they were not handed opportunity on "silver platters." Our answer is this: let us say that we face the necessity of major adjustments in our world today of which young people in the gay nineties were entirely unaware We are becoming increasingly conscious of the social upheaval of our times and are out to do something about them. we are becoming more interested in our economic structure and are learning its functions. We are demanding a part in the events that are to determine our future.

How can a straight thinking person say that our boost from Uncle Sam is "silver platter aid" any more than any other work relief? We do not ask for such opportunities; all we want is the right to push forward. Anyone with a will to do should be given a little boost. We deserve a right to express our opinions and should get in return all that we as citizens are entitled to. We do feel, however, that we are no longer pushing against a stone wall of opposition but are about to enter that "golden gate of opportunity". Are you among those who wish to close the gate in our faces and put us in the mind-forged. All.

Youth Asks Chance

Our hopes and ideals are mirrored in connection with our environment, background, and the opportunity given us. All we ask is a chance for a betterment of our environment so that we may build a stronger and better foundation. Life is an adventure to us and civilization will be advanced through our courage and resourcefulness.

Youth has been encouraged during the past few years and the following years have in store more encouragement. Through this encouragement we are able to look on America as a land of hope and opportunity rather than a place of haphazard doubt. The problems of our race can only be solved by perfecting and readjusting our social and economic structure. It takes intelligent people to solve difficult problems. Through higher education we are given broader views and can help solve the problems and work toward perfection. The nearer we get to perfection the greater the opportunities will be for even greater cultural monuments in the future.

We feel that there are greater possibilities for us now than there ever have been before. Yesterday we were neglected and today we are considered. Social and economic changes that have prevailed in the United States during recent years have caused certain difficulties to arise in the care and education of young people. The existing built up are not capable of cosing with these difficulties nor are they in a position to deal with them adequately or justly. This means that there is more than ever a need for education of youth.

We realize that our obligation is as great as our opportunity. We are not content with contemplative inaction. Youth is out to serve the world, not to complain about it. Our aim is to change the world, not to destroy it. Our American system of government can be kept working as successfully.

The College Nurse's association has elected Miss Lorena Simms of Jacksonville as president for next year, the association's third year on campus. Miss Jane Floyd, also of Jacksonville, was named temporary vice president. The faculty adviser and the rest of the officers will be elected this fall, the latter to come from the incoming graduate nurses.

Kenning Trains Girls In Examiner's Course

Mr. Harry Kenning, a representative of the National Red Cross, conducted here an examiner's course in swimming on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Instructions were given in the college pool every afternoon from 4:30 to 6:00, and every night from 7:30 to 9:00.

Instructors and students who took the course were Miss Ray Frazer, Miss Ruth Lehnad, Miss Nelle Bond Dickinson, Miss Betty Washburn, Frances Thill, Vanie Hunt, Martha Makemson, Ruth Agnes McClain, Dot Colburn, Bunny Kenny, Janet Cook, Peggy McMichael, Sarah Hethcox and Marion Weeks.

Brides Share Table Honors

Dining Hall Is Scene Of Double Wedding

The first double wedding in the dining hall of Florida State College for Women took place Tuesday night at the last faculty dinner of the year. The brides were dressed in white lace with long trains and carried bouquets of baby's breath. The attending bridesmaids wore picture hats and lace dresses of pastel pink, blue, yellow, or green and carried colorful nosegays of Lunaria. When the chimes sounded, each bride was escorted to the altar by her best man, and a preacher.

The pretty bridesmaids carried individual place cards on their sashes, for these weddings were performed on two tables in honor of Miss Katherine Walker and Miss Margaret Smith, two of the college librarians who are engaged to be married. Each of the honor guests was given a piece of white Fostoria glassware.

Seven other college librarians also guests at the tables were: Miss Louise Richardson, Miss Dorothy Day, Miss Pearl Nelson, Miss Etta Lane Matthews, Miss Annie Lee Yates, Miss Velma Golden and Miss Frances Haynes.

Girls who work in the library and acted as bridesmaids on the occasion were: Hazel Viertel, Tess Brown, Mary Stevenson, Katharine Autrey, Elizabeth Boyd, Evelyn Glazier, Lucia Munnerlyn, Emily Olsen and Betty Lou Ingraham.

Theta Kappa Meets

Theta Kappa, local French honorary, held its last meeting of the year Tuesday night, May 18, at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Arthur R. Seymour. Evelyn Glazier was in charge and after a short business meeting a program was presented. Gerelle Perry gave a survey of French education and Dorothy Crews led a discussion of the modern trends of education in France. There was also comments by Pearle Oneblutts on two articles concerning the movement in France to fix secondary schools from failing a social hour followed.

Chairmen Elected

Tuesday evening at the last freshman class meeting, chairmen of the various sophomore social functions for the coming year were elected. Frances Moss was chosen May Day chairman, Dot Smith chairman for the sophomore tea and Lucy Grant, chairman of the sophomore-senior breakfast.

Sidewalks Completed

The sidewalks now being built on the campus are expected to be completed this week according to C. G. Kollum, business manager. He has expressed the hope the students will walk on the side walks instead of making trails over the campus since these walks are being built where the trails were.

Varied Program For Recreation Made Available

Play Night Is Scheduled Friday Evening Among Other Activities

A varied program of athletic and hobby activities have been arranged for summer school students, according to information released this week by Miss Katherine Montgomery, head of the physical education department, certain recreation activities, such as swimming, croquet, and golf may be indulged in daily, in addition to field sports which will be carried on each afternoon near the physical education building. In answer to a demand made known on questionnaires issued by the department when students registered, hobby groups have been arranged.

The regular week-end feature of the physical education department is a play night held every Friday evening from 8 to 9 o'clock in and around the gymnasium. Many activities are planned for participation, including swimming, table tennis, croquet, carnival, a track games, checkers, anagrams, horseshoes, shuffleboard, archery, skating, tennis and social dancing.

To this regular program are added special features. There will be one next Friday, the showing of an educational film, "The Story of Swimming" and will be presented by Dr Marshall Taylor Hanson. Another will also speak. The public is invited to attend.

Another feature of the physical education program consists of the week-end activities open to students. The college camp, Floatabout located on Lake Bradford, provides a week-end vacationing place. Free transportation will be furnished on the afternoon, Saturday morning, Saturday afternoon and early Monday morning. Parties must apply to Bryan Hodge for permits to use the camp. There food is served at the dining room supplies this at a small fee, but the groceries must be ordered by orders through the room who they desire for the week-end.

Library Regulations, Facilities Announced For Summer Students

The library will be open for study and recreational reading from Monday through Friday in the mornings from 7:55 to 12 o'clock, in the afternoons from 1 to 4 o'clock, in the evenings from 7:30 to 10 o'clock. It is open Saturday from 7:55 to 12 o'clock in the morning and from 1 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon. On Sunday afternoons the reading room will be open from 2:30 to 5 o'clock. The hours for the summer session have not yet been arranged.

The library is equipped with reference material to be loaned on the main floor in the south wing. A current event room in the west wing has 379 periodicals of various kind of which 215 are bound and filed. Books put in reserve are found in the lower floor of the west wing. The total number of volumes is about 65,500. Miss Lemon is librarian in supervising. There are nine librarians and five student assistants.

The library also houses the offices which are heard the hour and the half hour, beginning at 7 o'clock in the morning and continuing until 10 o'clock at night. These musical bells were installed on the campus last summer and are a gift of the class of 1934 which left a sum to be used to buy chimes.

Excuses Granted Only for Illness

Cut System is Same Used During Winter Term

No absences, except those coming through the infirmary for illnesses there, will be excused, according to Dean Dorothy Dodd. All other absences will be counted as cuts and the case of students who live in town absences for illness will be granted by the college physician who is to report his judgment him by the student's doctor. If a student wishes to consult a physician in town she must get the permission of the infirmary.

Concerning cuts, the same system is used as that maintained during winter quarter. All students with an average of "B" or better are allowed 3 cuts a quarter. Those with a "C" may have four cuts, while those with six hours of or more of "D" are allowed no cuts whatever.

Those students who attended winter school or their last term at this college, either in winter school or summer, will be given grades to base their cuts upon. New students or transfers may have their cuts basing them on the grades that they will have made at the close of the present session. These will be deducted from their number of cuts when they attend college here again.

Dorothy Leach Given B. M. Degree in Organ

The first night of summer school's concert of music presented Dorothy Baker Leach in an organ recital at the close of the concert President Conradi conferred on Miss Leach the B.M. degree in organ.

The following selections were rendered in the program: Prelude in D major (Bach); First Movement from Sixth Trio Sonata (Bach); Piece Heroique (Cesar Franck); Finale from First Organ Sonata (Guilmant); Scherzo (Vierne); Toccata on a melody from the Geistliche Lieder (Schumann); Ketzle Bells (Clokey); Souvenir (Dupre); and Finale from Second Symphony (Widor).

Women's Institute Will Gather Here During Next Week

Two Nationally Known Will Be Speaker For Entire Convention

Adopting the theme "At Work for Better Florida Homes" the annual Women's Institute will meet here during the week of July.

The institute women plan to study not only physical needs such as housing, food, and clothing but education and mental hygiene for the home. Speakers of national importance as well as educational figures and officials of the state Chamber of Commerce and other departments will join in the discussions. Exhibits will be a special feature at the institute also. Among those exhibits are ones from the American Medical Association, the Foreign Policy association, and the state home demonstration departments.

Scheduled to speak during the entire institute are two nationally known figures—Dr. Ben D. Wood, of New York city, director of the cooperative test service of the American Council on Education, and Mrs. Hampton Fleming, of Richmond, Va., chairman of club activities for the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

On Tuesday morning at 11:15 o'clock Harold Colee, president of the Florida state Chamber of Commerce, will speak, and at the same time on Wednesday morning Dr. Fred C. Bell, head of the department of agriculture will give an address.

The organization presidents who will be heard at the institute include Mrs. Ralph Cooper, of Women's Clubs; Mrs. J. O. Kellum, Tuesday Musicale; Mrs. Lee of Parents and Teachers; Mrs. C. P. Parvin, Manatee; state federation advisory council; Mrs. Nellie Murphy, Miami; and Florida Belle Reed Embry, Florida Association. Mrs. Frank D. Moor, Tallahassee.

Included on the institute is Mrs. J. Ralston Wells, of Daytona Beach, Mrs. Wells is chairman of the Florida Federation of Women's Clubs; Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers; state home demonstration council; and Florida State College Alumnae association.

Dem. School Opens With 225 Students

The Demonstration school, a department of the school of education of Florida State college, opened its summer session Monday with an enrollment of 225 students.

Several students from the college of the class work and do practice teaching in the Demonstration school during the summer session. The members of the faculty for this summer's term are:

Miss Ruth B. Parsons, superintendent; Miss Evelyn Bulkley, secretary and principal; Ward T. Bertholf, instructor; Miss Florence Fletcher, mathematics; Miss Dora Skipper, seventh and eighth grades; Miss Ramsey Cawthon, English; Miss Josephine Hendrix, French and languages; Mr. Lind, manager of shop; Ralph Hollis, shop and speech instructor; Miss Helen Richey, home economics; Mrs. Bonald Parsons, first and second grade; Miss Eugene Ellis, kindergarten; Mrs. Cecile Strong, music, and Miss Kathleen Fletcher, librarian.

2 Musical Groups Are Being Formed

Two musical organizations have been formed—the college orchestra and the chorus. However, the membership of both of these has not been closed, the directors have announced.

The summer school chorus which is under the direction of Miss Gladys Koch meets on Monday and Wednesday afternoons from 4 to 5 o'clock on the stage of the college auditorium.

The orchestra meets on Thursday afternoons at the same time and at the same place, under the direction of Owen Sellers.

Six Instructors Are New Faculty

Music Enrollment Asks Two Extra Teachers

Six new instructors have been added officially to the faculty for the summer session and more than three former Florida State college faculty members, as well as two who have been on leave this winter for the study of Ph.D. work, been engaged to teach here this summer.

The school of music has the largest enrollment it has ever had. In addition to the four teachers drawn from the faculty, have been added Miss Marion Beall, who will be teaching the viola and violin and assisting in the public school department and Miss Mary Wilson Johnson, B.M. of 1932, who teaches piano.

The six new faculty members include Dr. A. R. Geiger, associate professor of education, who is supervising principal of St. Petersburg high school and who received his doctorate from George Peabody college; Mrs. Rainey Cawthon, Tallahassee, instructor in the demonstration school, who holds her master's degree from Peabody and who has studied with Robert E. Lee high school in Jacksonville and also at a summer session at the University of Florida; Miss Rose Chiarmonte, instructor in Spanish, who holds a librarian at Hillsboro high school, Tampa, and who is a graduate of Florida State college and Emory university library school; Ed Lind, instructor in the demonstration school, who is teacher in the manual arts department at the school and senior high school at Jacksonville; Miss Virginia Johnson, B.M., instructor in the demonstration school, who holds her degree from the University of North Carolina, and who has been considerable teaching experience.

Three former faculty members returning are Dr. Elinor Nims Brink, assistant professor of education at the Knight Clark, Miami, instructor in education, and a graduate of Florida State college; Miss Helen L. Pragin, St. Petersburg, instructor in art and industrial art, who is a graduate of Florida State college. While three returning from leaves are Miss Henrietta R. Styer, associate professor of textiles and clothing, and Miss Edith West, assistant professor of education, who have been studying the past winter at Columbia university.

First Enrollment Passes 900 Mark For This Term

Last Day for Registration Of Students Will Be On Monday

With an enrollment of approximately 100 in advance of last year's at this time, the twenty-fourth annual summer session of Florida State college opened Monday morning. The registration now is about 921, according to S. D. Doyle, registrar, while it was little more than 800 last year.

The last day of registration will be Monday. Until then reliable figures of this year's enrollment will not be available. So big has been the number this year, however, that Reynolds hall has been added to the list of dormitories occupied by students. A number of students live in town, while others have taken homes in Tallahassee for the summer.

The student body is made up for a great part of teachers from throughout the state who are doing work toward extending their teaching certificates or toward various degrees. A number are doing graduate study. An unusually large number of young women who attend the winter session are in Tallahassee for the summer term. There are also the usual number of men students enrolled.

Plans for extra-curricular activities are underway. Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite is chairman of social and religious activities for the summer. In addition to the usual recreational facilities provided, there will be concerts and musical programs and informal dances.

The first of the lecturers will be Dr. Ben D. Wood of New York city, director of the cooperative test service of the American council on education, who will appear during the next week when the annual Women's institute will be here.

A new feature of the summer school this year is the offering of integrated courses which are open to entering freshmen and sophomores. They cover the following fields: biological sciences—botany, zoology, physiology, and bacteriology; humanities—English, art, music; social sciences—sociology, economics, geography, history and political science. The three integrated

Two Faculty Members To Teach at Duke And Syracuse Universities

Two members of the Florida State college faculty, Miss Lella Gene Watson and Dr. R. E. Hanson, will teach this summer at Syracuse university, Syracuse, N. Y., and Duke university, Durham, N. C.

Miss Venable, of the school of home economics, will teach a course in budgeting and clothing summer session ending August 14 at Syracuse university. She is chairman of the division of the home in the American Home Economics association.

Dr. M. R. Hinson, who is associate professor of education here and former state director of instruction with the state department of public instruction, will teach two graduate courses dealing with high school administration and high school supervision, at the summer six-week term of Duke university. He will also represent Florida State college at the inter-racial conference being sponsored by the Conference of Educational Inter-Racial Relations at Blue Ridge, N. C., from July 31-August 7.

Student President

Betty Outhwaite, who, as president of the College Government association, heads the executive council, which yesterday announced its policies for 1937-'38.

Council Sets Policies For Current Year

Cooperation of Students And Administration Asked by Body

The executive council of the College Government association yesterday made public its policies for the coming year. Based upon the cooperation between the administration and the student body, these policies stress active participation by the undergraduates and advocate continuance of the council's educational programs.

The council first stated its belief in the agreement between faculty and students concerning the founding of this association and wished to express a willingness on its part to accept the responsibilities embodied in this assumption.

Also as a part of its policies, the council declared that "We believe in the educational program carried on by the past executive councils and desire to build a progressive continuity in our organization. We shall endeavor to bring about in the student an increased interest and participation in student government.

"We shall attempt to represent student opinion at all times and we desire to increase the student's capacity for usefulness as a citizen. We shall carry on our work with the highest degree of efficiency possible."

Dietitian Has Story Printed

September Forecast Has Article by Tracy On Dining Room

An article by Miss Anna M. Tracy, head dietitian of the Florida State college, is a feature of the September issue of Forecast, educational magazine for home economists. The article, entitled "Feeding the Family" describes Miss Tracy's task of providing meals for approximately 1,000 and running one of the largest kitchens in the state of Florida.

Illustrating the article are pictures of the main dining room and of Miss Tracy; another illustration shows how meals are served family style with 10 girls at a table.

F. S. C. W.'s dining hall and kitchen were featured also in a recent issue of The Hotel Monthly, a magazine of international circulation.

Library Adds New Members to Staff

There are three additions to the Florida State college library staff this year. The new members are: Miss Henrietta Howell, cataloguer, Miss Christine Thompson, assistant reference librarian; and Miss Sarah Graham, general assistant.

Miss Graham is a graduate of Florida State College for Women class of 1934.

Freshmen Week Followed By Beginning Of Classes Monday

Latest reports from the registrar's office yesterday afternoon showed an enrollment total of 1749. Some students may register through next Monday, Simeon R. Doyle, registrar, expects a few more late students to come in, however. Mr. Doyle estimates the freshmen class at about 600 and predicts that this years' registration may exceed last year's total by a few.

Classes Begin

Beginning of classes Monday brought the opening of Florida State college down to business after a busy week devoted to freshmen activities. The first three days of the freshmen dominating the college scene but upperclassmen mixed freely in the number the remaining three days.

Introduction of new students to Florida State college got underway at a meeting Monday night with Dr. Meredith Conradi, director of Personnel and head of freshmen week. Later that evening freshmen were entertained with floor parties in three dormitories, Reynolds, Jennie and Reynolds.

Freshmen Entertained

Tuesday morning President Conradi welcomed the new students and followed by the oath to be recited by college as "builders of truth and goodness" and a recognition that the state furnishes as "an investment, rather than a debt." In connection with the freshmen "a very happy and successful stay," Mr. Karl Ahrendt, the new head of the department of violin, played a solo. The rest of the day the freshmen were in starline registration and in taking the English placement and modern language tests. That evening President and Mrs. Conradi gave the President's reception in the Jennie Murphree sunken gardens with the faculty and freshmen a background of music for the occasion.

First Convocation

Wednesday morning a second convocation College Government association President Betty Outhwaite followed by the students that each one was a part of the government of the school and was expected to be a good citizen. Betty introduced Louise Cleland, president of the faculty who explained the function of that part of student government. Other speakers were Marjoria Mueller, freshman class president and Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, Dean of Students. Later that morning Dr. F. P. Fenner, Head of the Psychology Department, conducted the psychological examination for those whose record of taking the examination in high school was not on

Nino Martini To Sing Here

Joos European Ballet And Noted Organist Also Scheduled

Miss Mistral, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera company will appear here, Monday, November 22, as the first presentation of this year's Artist Series. Mr. Martini is well known to concert, radio, and motion picture audiences.

The Joos European ballet will appear at the college on February 7, as the second feature of the year.

On May 26 Cortebon, organist is scheduled to perform. At the same date the American Guild of Organists will hold their convention on campus.

The ballet artists who are natives of Australia, England, Hungary, Poland, Switzerland Germany, Bohemia, and Holland received first prize at the International Congress of Dance in Paris 1933. When they appeared in New York, Cleveland, Washington, Montreal, Boston, Chicago and other American cities they received favorable comment.

Summer School Starts Minus Fanfare

It's another summer. Colleges and universities have emptied themselves of thousands of graduating students at impressive ceremonies made so by black gowns, brilliantly colored cowls, gleaming mortarboards, silky tassels, oratorical speeches and yard after yard of sheepskin. But now the halls have been hung back with the moth balls and higher education has rolled up its sleeves for another summer session.

How inauspiciously summer school gets under way! While there is a steady hum of activity there is a difference in the tempo. The whole campus is pleasantly unorganized. At least what necessary organization there is is not obvious. Outside of the usual and necessary confusion of registering there is little red tape to follow. Life just goes along, except for an occasional difficulty encountered by the new students who have not become accustomed to finding a place in the dining room or discovering the intricacies of the library.

Without exaggerating, although there are no figures to be offered as evidence, summer sessions are as profitable as winter school sessions. It is a matter of providing needed educational facilities. And yet it is a fact that most summer school is usually considered the country cousin of the nine months' term. There are no trumpets to announce its beginning or its closing, no wide-spread publicity.

Perhaps we should be glad that summer school is so unheralded, that the university becomes almost impersonal, that there are no traditional out-customs to follow, all of which are an integral part of the regular college year. Students, young and old, for summer school, is no discriminator of ages, pursue their schedule of studies, schedules that are usually easily carried. For those people who are attending winter school this session provides an excellent opportunity to do some of the things that have escaped them during a busy term. For some, summer school provides a way of substituting, pleasantly, for the leisurely scholarly pursuits. For some it provides not only a holiday for ouesself but for the family also.

Summer school seems to be an American institution. There are no summer school facilities for Frenchmen in their native land, although foreigners are given opportunity to study in colleges and universities. This is probably true of many other European countries, but even if there are such institutions, they could not approximate those in this country, the parodoxical set-ups which allow scholars to pursue avidly their chosen fields and at the same time provide an easy manner filled with a minimum of study and recreational facilities.

These facts reveal nothing new. And Florida State like hundreds of other schools opened with little ceremony this past week. And just as quietly the Flambeau has gone to press and will continue to for the next six weeks. And as is customary the Flambeau welcomes the students. Ho hum.

News of the Week in Review

This week President Roosevelt lifted the veil and gave the public a glimpse of the chief aims of his second administration. At first glance it might seem as if the late Mr. Huey Long went "brain trusting" with the president for Mr. Roosevelt has pledged his second New Deal to "end social and economic waste" as are supposed to increase the national income and stimulate business by spreading out the country's wealth among its forty million "ill-clad, ill nourished, and ill housed" citizens.

Mr. Roosevelt's plans, so he says, will not necessitate any overhauling of the federal tax structure and does not contemplate discriminatory taxes against the rich to help the poor. He does say he will have to expand on the money to finance the new program.

The greatest political purge in the history of soviet Russia moved forward with all the fervor of a Salem witch hunt. Thousands of people have recently been denounced as traitors. Many of these have stood near the top of the state organization. The last flood of charges of treason centers in White Russia, alleging a huge conspiracy against soviet agriculture.

Foreign observers do not believe most of the charges in full but that is evidence that many persons are desiring if not actually plotting the movement into history of Josef Stalin.

One way to take a pill painlessly is to sugar coat it first. Evidently democratic leaders think that other aims may well be attained via the sugar coating of a new deal in party rules. The president and the entire democratic membership of the house and senate have been invited to spend three days in the Jefferson Island club, noted for its informality and good fellowship. There they expect to iron out through friendly chats intra-party difficulties. If they can do this peacefully in those three days it will be a great advantage to the republicans in the congress who probably do not like to hear the family quarrels of the democrats anyway.

Summer Scribblings

The blessed grind has begun again. And it's the same old thing in the same old way. "The Romantic Poets" and "Marriage and the Family" are the two largest classes. It seems that romance and marriage remain the supreme interests of the female species.

While we're talking about the same old way, the subject of classes floats across the horizon. The weltering heat is not conducive to sleeping through even the most juicy lectures. We have all sorts of remedies to offer from individual fans to air conditioning—or maybe classes on the lawn.

Listen, freshmen are always dumb but the newcomers this year have outdone themselves. The worst yet is the little blond at dinner the other night. She inquired around and around a big fuss until she was allowed to speak to Miss Tracy. Then in a confidential tone politely inquired, "Could you find me a place to eat?"

Let's see anyone slipping furtively around corners or the like don't be alarmed—it's not a fugitive from justice—but one of our timid coeds! Where's all the bold spirit of the freshmen year? What's a poor girl to do when she can't get one to even look at her? We don't know either.

Early to bed and early to rise makes a healthy, wise or sick! Our study bugs can burn the midnight oil for some time. All lights out at 12 o'clock.

And in case anyone asks you, those are signs of dawn: Birds upon the lawn;
A pink grow in the sky;
Not one more breeze gone by.
While open one by the flowing
To the tune of rusty showers.

Florida State College Inaugurates New Two-Year Program of General Education

In line with educational progress throughout the country as manifested by the induction in colleges and universities of new general college plans, Florida State college last September inaugurated its new program in general education for freshmen and sophomores. Freshmen students were the first to participate in the college's program of integrated courses and by September the sophomore phase of the curriculum will go into effect and the two-year division swings into its second year of being.

This revised curriculum was drawn up after two years of study by a faculty committee of seventeen headed by Dr Jennie Tilt, professor of physiography, geology and nutrition. The purpose of this year curriculum which includes every division of the college except the school of music is to give a broad basis of training during the first two years of college and to supply a general knowledge of the facts and underlying present day society through the study of a series of five integrated courses covering large fields of thought.

Under this system the student does not pick her major subject until her junior year, but by entering the survey courses in the order best suited to her case she may begin specialization much earlier. By taking achievement tests the student who can show a thorough knowledge of the subject matter of required courses may be exempt and use the time thus gained for electives in the field of her own interests.

In order to complete the four required integrated courses by the end of her sophomore year the student will take one each semester. These courses carry five hours credit and comprise one-half of the fifteen claim hours required as graduation.

The biological sciences include a study of botany, zoology, physiology and bacteriology designed to give students a knowledge of the fundamental structures, principles, and processes of living organisms.

The physical sciences are presented by the chemistry and physics departments and are intended to provide the student with a sound conception of the physical sciences in its entirety and her own relation to it.

The humanities are given by the department of English, art and philosophy for an introduction to these courses as mankind's attempt to express and understand the experience and to give outward expression to his thoughts and feelings.

The social studies are under the departments of history, economics, geography, political science, and philosophy and seek to explain the emergence and development of our human society.

A course in family life, also required for graduation, will be given next year under the supervision of the departments of economics, home economics, hygiene-psychology and sociology.

At the same time that this plan of procedure was presented by the faculty committee there were also given some recommendations to aid and measure its progress.

Contempory Thoughts...

Education and Propaganda

By Carl Joachim Friedrich

Liberals the world over are prone to maintain that any interference with educational freedom is obnoxious because it hinders the development of truth, so writes Carl Friedrich in the June issue of the Atlantic Monthly.

Such liberals are prone to write that teaching in a university must be faced in the light of propaganda as well as education, particularly in all things involving international and domestic national conflicts. As an example to this statement he cites the critical onslaughts of Marxian and Fascist ideas have brought into the daylight the problematic nature of education and not propaganda. What they call education we call propaganda and vice versa.

Startlingly true, the author reveals that the educator scorns the propagandist, just as the propagandist fears the educator.

"Fundamentally this whole problem transcends the purely personal question of what you and I are able to do or even why we are doing so," he points out. The real crux of the matter lies beyond these personal worries, in the realm of social values: is all education propaganda?

Mr. Friedrich says the unfortunate answer is that today he is entirely free to say whatever comes into his head, for only ideas in accord with such an academic freedom are apt or are apt to come into his head. If he were entirely in agreement with communist or Nazi ideas should be no more free to say much freedom is in Soviet Union or in Nazi Germany. He believes that the answer must be in the affirmative.

How much freedom should be have to express himself? What are the sanctions in America today? he asks. Not a great deal.

He thinks that propaganda always aims at getting people either to do or not to do some particular thing. Education, on the other hand is fundamentally concerned with moulding and developing the personality in terms of an ideal, and that if we are to maintain them, we must not be afraid of the education or even of the propaganda implied in the maintenance of the human ideal whose general ethic they express. "Who is not for me is against me" is a false, and profoundly evil, maxim. It may not be allowed to be monopolized by the various Antichrists of the present time.—J. T.

Apology For Man

By Earnest A Hooten

After a study of a century of studies of anthropology, the science of man, Earnest A Hooten says in the June issue of Forum that he believes the anthropologist should apologize for man.

In a defensive and pessimistic apology for man Mr Hooten apologizes in the first case for man's appearance, physique, and biological habits, and in the second case for man's behavior, his use of articulate speech, his attempt to control nature, his social habits, and his system of ethics.

The writer says that an anthropoid ape, who man sometimes claims as his nearest relative would be shocked at man's appearance; his lack of dark bodily hair, his large brain space in proceeding a bony shield with which to enforce feet and misshapen and useless toes, his abbreviated jaws and his entanglement in articulate speech, and while the new length legs and arms are of more value to terrestrial protuberans than would have been the short limbs of the ape, and the new bowsteller ancester, the disappearance of his hirsute coat of hair necessitated his slaying other more protected animals in order to get clothing for their furs, or weave fabrics from their shorn hair or vegetable fibers to make inconvenient, unhygienic and generally ridiculous garments.

As possessors of a written and spoken language men have as yet been unable to unite, but instead have developed a deep-seated tendency to dislike, distrust, and adjudge inferior any individual or group speaking a language different from their own.

Mr Hooten believes that the human institutions of government needs an apology. Although we are all nominally republics and democracies, with a dictatorship or communistic government, it would probably not understand a democracy which involves the essential principle that all law-abiding adults have equal rights and privileges and an equal voice in government. "Such a democratic government should imply an approximate parity of intelligence in the electorate or a majority of individuals of superior intelligence if it is to function capably and successfully," says the Writer.—D. B.

TWO RECEPTIONS ARE FIRST SOCIAL EVENTS OF SUMMER SCHOOL SESSION

Honoring the summer school students and faculty members, the first social event of the term was held Thursday night when an informal reception was given in Conrad hall.

Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, in charge of entertainments this summer, introduced the guests to the receiving line which included President Edward Conrad, Miss Louise Conrad, Dean Olivia Durman and Miss Maude Ayers.

Presiding at the punch bowls were Dr Elizabeth G. Andrews and Miss Anna Mae Tracy. Those who were Monday hostesses were Dr McRae, Marjorie Raulerson, Mrs Elizabeth Ramsey, Shirley Thornton, Lois Bowen, Christian Love, Mary Katherine Gibson, Hazel Underwood, Vera Belcher, Ida Dickey, Ruth Eyman, Alicia Bacon, Frances Lane, Lisbeth Scully and Margaret Stout.

Hostesses and hostesses for the second were Miss Margaret R. Smith, Dean Ella Scoble Opperman, Miss Lucy Lester, Miss Ruth Le Duffey, Dr. Anna Forbes Sneed, Miss Ruth Lynn, Miss Grace Richardson, and Miss Sadie Orr. Dr Guy Diffenbaugh, Dr. Ralph Eyman, Mrs. Josephine Mrs. Flossie Curry, Mrs. Mc-Tyler, Mrs. Margaret Saylor and Mrs. William H. Rose-Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Doyle, Dr. Mrs Fred Hunter, and Mr. Mrs. J. G. Kellum.

The second large social activity for the reception given Wednesday next Tuesday night in honor of the graduates attending the institute of Federated Women Clubs and their guest speaker, Benjamin Wood.

Dean Margaret R. Sandels will receive the guests to the reception for luncheon Dr. Conrad, Mrs. J. Louise Conrad, Mrs. J. Louise Wells who is chairman of the institute, Mrs. C. P. Parvin, president of the Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers, Mrs. J. G. Kellum, president of the state Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Frank Moor, president of the state P.S.C.W. Alumnae association; Miss Mary Ellie Keown, state home demonstration agent, and Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students at Florida State college.

Mrs. Guy Diffenbaugh and Mrs. Ralph Eyman will preside at the punch bowl while the feature of the refreshments will be a unusual ice cream furnished by the college trio under the direction of Owen Bellers.

Hostesses for the event will be Miss Anna Mae Sikes, Dr. Anna F. Liddell, Miss Florence Tyron, Dr. Verla Lovins Haines, Miss Sadie Young, Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, Miss Maude Flowers and Mrs. Paul Pinner.

Plans Are Being Made By Religious Groups For Summer School

The churches of Tallahassee are making plans to provide for the religious life of the summer school students. Miss Winnie Lee Davis, student secretary of the Methodist church, will be the only one of the student religious directors who will remain for the summer school session. Miss Mavis McMillan will have charge of the religious activities of the Baptist students during summer school.

Mrs. V. A. Phillips, will teach the Sunday school class of the Presbyterian summer school students. Miss Julia Gehan will have charge of the religious activities of the Episcopalian students during summer school.

The Methodists are planning a party and formal dramatics for the summer school students. The subject for the Methodist Sunday school for the coming Sunday will be, "What Does Religion Mean to Me?" Cars from the churches will meet all students wishing to go to church in front of Bryan Hall Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Kappa Delti Pi to Meet

The first meeting of Alpha Delta chapter of Kappa Delta Pi will be held Monday night, June 21, at 7:30 o'clock in the Demonstration school library. All members are urged to be present.

McRae Chosen Head of Chairmen

Eight Elected Dormitory Officers on Council

Miss Ann Jane McRae of Chipley was elected Friday to the office of chairman of the dormitory men from a group of students who were chosen earlier in the week to act as chairmen of the four dormitories.

Miss McRae will act as chairman of judiciary when this group is the body before which all cases for court are tried. The members of this council are also responsible for their respective dormitories.

This group consists of the following: Sara Tyler, chairman of Bryan; Bell Davis, vice chairman of Bryan; Miriam Frye, chairman Broward; Mrs Kate Smith, vice chairman Broward; Miss Ann McRae chairman uper Gilchrist; Edna Sims, vice chairman upper Gilchrist; Francis Williams chairman lower Gilchrist; Cuba Higdon, vice chairman lower Gilchrist.

FLAMEAU ISSUED FOR FIRST TIME

This edition of the Flambeau marks the first of a series of summer school editions to be printed weekly. The regular day for the publication of the Flambeau will be Saturday of this week. Editor of the paper is Pearle Shepard who will be coeditor of the winter school paper next year. Sarah Beth Davis, special student in Florida was graduated from this college in May, is business manager. She was in literary editor of the Flambeau last year. Jewell Turner and Lucy Kelly, both of whom have worked on this publication in the winter, are feature editors. The columnists are Una Umphrey, Dorothy Belamy and Alicia Meacham. Martha Thomas is typist and Mary Catherine Scott is the art editor.

Reporters include Mrs Jason M. Gainous, Mrs. Lillian B. Fraser, Hazel M. Phillips, Polly Eveleth, Zuilme Russell, Agnes Martin, Juanita Ingram, Marie Joffre, Agnes Martin, Mary Ann Moore.

Will Attend Conference

Dr. Ralph Eyman, dean of the school of education, and Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel, will attend the state superintendents and teacher training conference in Gainesville next week, beginning Monday. President Edward Conrad will leave Tuesday afternoon for the same meeting and return Thursday evening.

Summer Students Find Ad. Building Changed To Read James Westcott, Jr., Memorial

Summer school students returning to the campus of Florida State college after being away for a year or more find that the familiar "Ad" building no longer exists. In its place stands a partly new red brick building, the James Westcott, Jr., Memorial building. With the addition of a new wing to the old building, the Administration building was rechristened.

The offices that have moved into the new wing of the building have been equipment and up-to-date conveniences that the old offices lacked. These modern appliances and materials make for more comfortable working conditions as well as a greater degree of efficiency. Acoustic tile ceilings and linoleum on the concrete floors help eliminate noise from the halls and the overhead fluorescent lights.

An improved electric lighting system has been installed in the new wing, and all offices are equipped with Venetian blinds.

The postoffice, formerly in the multigraph department have still been enlarged and newly equipped. Improvements over the old system of receiving and storing freight is made possible by the new freight room in the basement of the new wing and the special driveway from the main street to the door of the store room. This driveway eliminates much traffic confusion and the freight is safer than when it was stored along the sides of the south hallway.

Five new rooms, to be used eventually as classrooms, have been built in the attic. During the last part of the past year the W.P.C.A. and the C.W.A. worked on of these rooms as offices.

The change in the name of the building was made in December by the board of control and was made in honor of the late Judge James Deament Westcott III of Tallahassee, one of Florida's prominent jurists and one of the college's chief benefactors.

Judge Westcott, a bachelor, who died April 29, 1887, and who is buried in Tallahassee, willed that the bulk of his estate, now valued at approximately $100,000 be held in trust for the benefit of the West Florida seminary, which he at one time attended and which later became Florida State College for Women. He provided that only the interest upon the principal be used, one-half being expended for the benefit of students of Leon county. According to the will, none of the money was to be used for buildings or improvements of the grounds.

Included in the Westcott estate is a section of Tallahassee's principal business property, on the corner of Monroe street and College avenue extending from The Vogue on Monroe street to the Leon Electric company on College avenue. The estate also includes residential property on East College avenue. Half the income from the property is being used to pay salaries of teachers at the demonstration school who instruct practice county students. The remainder is being used for other teachers' salaries. Part of the income is in bonds.

Three major divisions were divided into four departments to be judged. The Flambeau received 80 out of a possible 100 points. It was especially commended for its selection of timely and adequated coverage of news and the make-up.

The National Scholastic press association was founded 20 years ago at the University of Wisconsin but transferred its office nine years ago to the University of Minnesota. It is an organization of the leading newspapers published by the students in institutions throughout the United States. The association judges normal school and high school publications as well as those of colleges and universities.

Of the several newspapers from the state the only other to be so awarded was the University of Florida Alligator which also received All-American.

Interest Groups Being Organized

Hobby Classes Will Start During Next Week

As a result of the hobby questionnaire given students when they registered, interest groups are being organized for students. Miss Katherine Montgomery has announced. Leaders have been selected and meeting places and hours arranged.

Included in this list of activities are amateur dramatics, amateur photography, art, handicrafts, social dance, camp singing, life saving, swimming, tap dancing, foil fencing, archery, baseball, basketball, volleyball, badminton, shuffleboard, horseshoes, golf, tennis and folk and clog dancing.

Dramatics will be directed by Mary Berryhill and will meet in the Augusta Conradi theater on Tuesdays at 5:30 o'clock. Mrs. Branch has charge of the amateur astronomy group which will meet on the north terrace of the physical education building Thursday nights at 8 o'clock.

Miss Montgomery will instruct the first aid class every Tuesday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at the entrance of the physical education building. In charge of handicrafts in the physical education lobby are Frances Jackson and Frances williams. This class will meet 5:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoons.

Students will be instructed in social dancing by Margaret Wiginins in the physical education building Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Immediately after dinner each night and until dark camp singing will be enjoyed on the steps of the physical education building. Leaders assisting, under the direction of Mrs. Hazel Royal Stevens, will be given in the pool Wednesday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock. Mrs. Stevens will also instruct swimming daily from 5 to 6:15 o'clock and Saturday from 10 to 12 o'clock in the pool.

Elizabeth Lounds will instruct in tap dancing every Wednesday at 5:30 o'clock in the physical education building. Foil fencing will be demonstrated and instruction given by Marie Joffre Wednesday afternoons at 4:30 o'clock on the physical education building north terrace. Archery will be available at the field house and range Monday afternoons at 4:45 o'clock, under the direction of Ruth Agnes McClain.

Ruth Agnes McClain will instruct in basketball and Margaret Maxwell in volleyball Tuesday afternoons at 4:45 o'clock on the courts and at the field house. Baseball practice comes Monday afternoon at 4:45 o'clock on the courts, under the direction of Margaret Maxwell. Ruth Agnes McClain will lead the badminton, shuffleboard and horseshoes enthusiasts on Thursday afternoons at 4:45 o'clock at the field house and courts. Golf practice comes at the same time and place, under the direction of Margaret Maxwell.

Wednesday and Friday afternoons at 4:45 o'clock tennis instruction will be given by Ruth Agnes McClain and Margaret Maxwell on the tennis courts. Daily, except Friday, at 4:30 o'clock, Mrs. Stevens will hold a folk and clog dancing class in the physical education building.

Outings as listed on the questionnaire will be planned from time to time and will be announced on the physical education bulletin board.

Flambeau Solicits Literary Material

Since there is no literary magazine during the summer, the Flambeau would like to fill a certain journalistic need by printing stories, essays, and poems written by summer school students. Contributions may be submitted in to the Flambeau office. Since the paper is tabloid size, it is suggested that the prose material be fairly short. The best of these contributions will be printed from time to time.

Varied Program For Recreation Available

following Friday, Saturday or Sunday in camp. If parties wish to spend the night at camp they must carry their own sheets, blankets, and towels. Beds, stoves, cooking utensils, and dishes are furnished.

Camp offers opportunities for picnics, swimming, canoeing, hiking, games, and riflery. The latest and most popular addition has been a sailboat which has become one of the main features of the camp. The physical education department plans to organize special hiking and picnicking parties for camp and students interested are urged to watch both the bulletin board of this department, and also that of the social committee.

There are 13 tennis courts west of the gymnasium, four of which are equipped for night play and the key to the switch box may be obtained at the Bryan office. Players are requested to turn off the lights and return the key to the office after they have finished playing. They are warned not to disturb the key over to other parties as the office holds responsible the person checking it out.

The college pool is open for men and women daily from 5 to 6:15 o'clock and Saturday from 10 to 12 o'clock. In order to be admitted to the pool, however, a physician's certificate must be secured from the college infirmary. This is to be exchanged at the bank for a free swimming ticket good for 12 swims. After using all of this ticket another, also for 16 swims, may be purchased for $2. Suits and towels are furnished free to all swimmers, but they must be returned

Ornithology Class To Hunt for Birds

Miss Deviney Plans Other Trips with Students

Next Saturday morning at 4:30 o'clock the six members of the ornithology class, accompanied by Miss Enda Deviney, will search for birds at the gulf coast. Miss Deviney, head of the zoology department, announced that the students will eat breakfast at the bus station in town and go from there by car to Wakulla Beach and Shell Point.

The main object of the trip is to search for water birds although en route several ecological bird haunts will be visited. Dr. Deviney expects to find at the coast such unusual birds as the man-of-war, clapper rail, Wakulla seaside sparrow, Bachman's sparrow, sand pipers and ruddy turnstone. Students planning to take the trip are: Pegrie I. Underwood, Mrs. Emmaiu Brown, Winifred Grace Hunley, Florida Harding, Mrs. Lucile Bell, and Mrs. Lucile Trott Randol.

Much Friday morning at 5 o'clock during the summer term, the class will make a field trip. A number of long trips to last all day are being planned for Saturdays. At one of these trips Miss Deviney will search for egret nesting sites.

The zoology class 406 studying methods of collecting will take several trips to the coast in search for mollusks and crustaceans. Those in the class are Sarah Beth Davis, Edna Mosier, Edwinna Jordan, and Gretchen Everhart.

Croquet equipment is available in Reynolds, Jennie Murphree and Broward halls. Golf balls and tennis are to be found in Bryan and Reynolds halls, and the balls and paddles may be obtained in the offices of these halls.

Additional games are offered daily on the athletic fields near the physical education building from 4:45 to 6:15 o'clock. They are: baseball, diamond ball, badminton, quoits, volleyball, volley ring tennis, basketball, field hockey, soccer, horseshoes, croquet, shuffleboard, paddle tennis, hand ball, clock golf. All equipment needed may be checked out of the field house during the above hours.

Tournaments in tennis and other sports will be organized during the summer according to the interest shown. Students are asked to watch the physical education bulletin board which is located on the lower floop of the

Cellophane Now Protects Birds

Specimens Easy to Study In Transparent Tubes

Two hundred dollars worth of stuffed bird skins are being saved in transparent cyralin cases by members of the zoology department. Some of the birds in the collection were bought, although many of them were contributed by members and friends of the department. As a protection against damage done to humidity and by insects each bird is wrapped and housed in its own little cellophane case.

Miss Enda Deviney, head of the zoology department, obtained the idea of protecting the birds in this manner when she saw a collection owned by Dr. Travis, ornithologist at Purdue, planning on the Thomasville road. The slender tube is made of the best cellophane-like pyralin and put together with a special cement. The tube is reinforced at each end with a narrow strip of muslin and one end is sealed. After a bill-holder has been inserted the bird is gently slipped in place with a long glass rod. The bon bon/pipette is admitted into a pipette into the tube to kill dermatic beetles or other insects. Finally the tube is sealed.

Gilchrist Sends In False Alarm

Fire Drilling Realistic When Trucks Arrive

Fire drilling became realistic last night at Florida State college when the siren and fire truck roared up College avenue through the gates and around to Gilchrist dormitory where a call had been turned in. Ladders were off the trucks and the girls were ready for action before it was discovered that it was all a mistake—false alarm.

There was going to be a fire drill, but the wrong switch in the circuit was pulled, one that which connects the college with the fire department, instead of attempting filling out of the dormitory registered and the fire department students remained inside as cars and people streamed on to the campus to find out about the alleged fire.

Those who stared from every room and heads peered out of the windows. It was not until the fire drill alarm which was to have sounded for the entire college registered that the dormitory Murphree where those attending the summer session are housed.

Clothing was hastily donned and bags were grabbed in readiness for the usual excitement.

It was believed that the wrong switch was pulled by mistake and that after it was pulled wire trouble caused it to continue ringing for 45 minutes before it sounded another one came in. The fire department on this night was trying to fix the switch

Abbey Will Sail

Dr. Katherine T. Abbey left Wednesday morning for New York. On July 2 Dr. Abbey sails for France where she will spend some time before going to the British Isles. Dr. Abbey expects to return to the States the last of August.

Skipper Is Chosen By Kappa Delta Pi As Its President

Other Officers Elected At First Meeting Of Honorary

Mrs. Dora Skipper was elected president of Alpha Delta chapter of Kappa Delta Pi, education honorary, at its first meeting Monday night. Mrs. Eugene Ellis, in the absence of last year's president, Miss Margaret McCurdy, presided during the meeting.

Other officers chosen were: Miss Edith Griffin, vice president; Mrs. Lillian Cross Redding, treasurer; Mrs. Eugene Ellis, secretary; Miss Ernestine Tryon, councilor. Miss Tryon acted in the absence of the regular councilor, Mrs. Paul Painter, who is planning to spend the summer in Japan.

Among those present were: Dr. Edward Conradi, Dr. and Mrs. P. P. Claxton, Miss Ada Bessie Coleman, Dr. Mark De Graf, Mrs. Ruth Kidd, Miss Edith Dillon, Tryon, Mrs. Ruth Ellis, Pat Priest, Miss Ruth Conner, Miss Dorothy Hall, Miss Mary Painter and Mrs. Dora Skipper, Miss Florence Alsop, Miss Gertrude Money, Miss Mary Clare Kimball, Miss Opal Gray, Miss Sara Wells, Miss Sara Lou Hamilton, Miss Kitty Cranor, Miss Frances L. Nippert, Miss Ruth Hall, Miss Edith Gilmore, Mrs. Kate McSween Smith, Miss Carrie V. Lee, Mrs. Grace B. Hatfield, Miss Ruth Hunt, Miss and Miss Vera Barefoot.

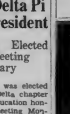
Program Is Presented By Instrumental Trio



An instrumental trio of the school of music presented a program consisting of several selections in the Augusta Conradi theater Wednesday night. The participants were: Mrs. Hallie Patterson, violin; and Miss Mary A. Johnson, piano.

Mrs. Cecile Strong, of the public school of music department of the Florida State College, has directed community singing for the daily meetings of the institute.

Asked to Sign Board

Miss Enda Devlney, head of the zoology department, has asked students who have been using the hikes and the study of native bird life to sign the register book committee bulletin board on the lower floor of the Westcott building.

Elected

Hazel (Red) Bowman, who was graduated this spring from Florida State college at which she was elected vice president of the student body at the University of Flor.da this week. Last year she was editor of the Flambeau.

Hazel Bowman Elected Head

Local Graduate Chosen University Officer

Miss Hazel Bowman, of Brevard, editor-in-chief of last winter's Flambeau, is vice president of the student body of the University of Florida summer school according to word received this week. Preceding the election Monday, campus politics attained a high peak as nominations for the eleven elective offices were filed.

Racing with Miss Bowman for the office of vice president were Miss Dorothy Anne Hill, Tampa, and Howell Musgrove, Port Pierce. Miss Bowman was presented by the Students Teachers league.

Graduating from Florida State College for Women in 1937, Miss Bowman received a B. S. degree in journalism. She was a member of Mortar Board, national honorary society; Alpha Chi Alpha, journalism honorary; Chi Delta Phi, literary honorary; the International Relations club; and was selected for Who's Who in American College and Universities. She also played trombone in the orchestra.

Pictures to Be Shown

Dr. F. C. Moor will present a film on "The Development and Treatment of Tuberculosis" Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock in the Augusta Conradi theater. Members have been invited to attend.

Institute Ends Today Following Week's Program

Annual Meeting Brings 150 Members From Four Groups

Florida's third and best attended annual Woman's Institute held at Florida State College will end today. Approximately 150 members of the Florida Federation of Women's clubs, Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers, state home demonstration council and the College Alumnae association have been college students for almost a week living in Jennie Murphree hall and taking their meals in the college dining hall.

Many Speakers Heard

They have heard such speakers as Dr. Ben D. Wood, of New York City and Columbia university director of the cooperative test service of the American Council on Education; Mrs. Hampton Fleming of Richmond, Va., chairman of club institutes in the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Harold Colee, president of the state Chamber of Commerce; Phil S. Taylor, of the state department of agriculture; college faculty members and others in addresses and discussions.

The program for the week was developed on the theme "At Work for Better Florida Homes." From the standpoint of health, economics, housing, clothing and food this subject has been approached by specialists in those fields.

Last Program Today

On the last program today Miss Isabelle S. Thurby, food conservation economist with the state home demonstration staff, and Miss Annie Mae Tracy, dietitian at the college, will speak on the subject "Food for the Family;" also Mrs. Myrtle Taylor Pentecost, of Miami will talk on "Art in the Home."

These topics will be taken up in addition to the lectures features by Dr. Ben Wood, of the American Council on Education, and Mrs. Hampton Fleming, of Richmond, Va., who have been discussing "Making the Florida Homes" and parliamentary law the entire time.

Dr. Wood, in his regular morning appearances, has stressed the need for individualized education urging a greater elasticity in curriculum planning.

Dr. Taylor Will Show Pictures on Swimming As Play Night Feature

As a special feature of Play night tonight at 8:30 o'clock in their physical education building, Dr. H. Marshall Taylor, of Jacksonville, well known head specialist appointed by the American medical association to serve as chairman of a committee to study the problems of swimming and drownings, will give a showing of moving pictures on "The Physiology and Hygiene of Swimming."

These moving pictures which have been shown in various parts of the country before colleges, biology departments and medical societies, deal with drownings and water animals, as well as swimming betals. Some of the under-water pictures were taken at Silver Springs. Recently the pictures were shown before two societies in New Orleans, before students in the University of Minnesota, and the Richmond Academy of Medicine. Some institutions have esteemed them so highly that they have requested copies of the film for place in their motion picture library.

American Hand-Blown Glassware Is Exhibited In Library This Week

An exhibit of hand-blown American glassware is now on display in the library.

Two glass paper weights dating back to the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century are among the pieces displayed. A rare finial, lent for display by Emily Wilburn, was made in the first American glass factory at Jamestown. The Victorian period is represented by a tall glass stand of clear glass. The uses of American bubble glass are by the collection of Mrs. Calhoun Wayman.

In addition to the American glassware, there are several Japanese fishing floats. These were picked up on the coast of Oregon by the daughter of Mrs. Clara Harden, who is in charge of the exhibit. The floats of iridescent green glass, which is characteristic of Japanese glassware. Four books concerning the glass industry have been placed on a table near the display case.

Another exhibit prepared by Mrs. Harden consists of illustrations from her personal collection of over 1,000 pictures of the ex-libris, and gardens of historical interest. Pictures of ancient Grecian and Roman gardens, as well as those of early Florida are being featured.

TWO F. S. C. W. PROFESSORS, WHITE AND RICHARDS, TURN AUTHOR AS BOOKS ARE PUBLISHED THIS YEAR

Two Florida State college professors, Dr. Sarah Parker White, professor of education and associate professor of hygiene, have collaborated and each has written books. Dr. White's book "A Moral History of Women," is expected to come out late this summer, while "Our Physical Environment," a book on general sciences, by Dr. Richards came off the press in May.

Traces Women's Lives

Dr. White's book which is being published by Doubleday, Horan and company, is the result of seven years' work. It gives an account of the readjustment that has taken place socially and economically in the lives of women from the days of nomadic tribes to today's highly developed and complex civilization. The book is primarily intended for library study or for advanced readers of sociological or historical literature. Dr. Richards sents a history of woman's life touching the physical, mental and spiritual sides from prehistoric times.

Rector Writes Foreword

The Rev. Elwood Worcester, rector emeritus of Emmanuel church, Boston, well known writer and theologian, who gives the foreword for "A Moral History of Woman" has this to say about the volume which may be regarded as one of woman's serious attempts to understand and explain herself. The historical portions of the book are rich in instruction and in examples of various phases of woman's life in the great civilizations of the past . . . few modern writers, I imagine, can command the resources and the combination of gifts which Dr. White reveals in this little masterpiece."

Dr. White is recognized as a scholar and psychiatrist. She attended Syracuse university where she decided on a medical career. Later she studied philosophy and went to Curtis Scholar to Columbia university becoming assistant to Professors John Dewey, William Pepperall Montague and others. In 1914 she was sent to the University of Aberdeen, Scotland, as transfer assistant from the department of philosophy of Columbia university. Upon her return to the United States she

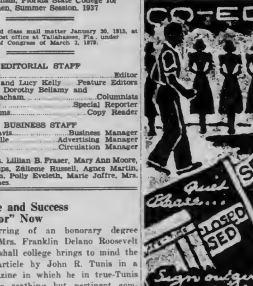
Prominence and Success Spell "Honor" Now



The conferring of an honorary degree recently on Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt by John Marshall college brings to mind the provocative article by John R. Tunis in a current magazine in which he in true-Tunis fashion passes scathing but pertinent comments about "Honoris Causa." The mood which he strikes in this article can be found best in his last sentence in which he says: "These unrealities which should be the possessors of our civilization, which should search for and discover the real servants of the country, pass them by."

Mr. Tunis feels and he is not alone that the awarding of a doctor of laws, doctor of humanities, or any other degree should come in a result of some special work that merits such honor. Too often the degree is tied up with success and prominence, with how much publicity the college or university can be given, not with what the person has contributed to society. It's not the man or woman who has given his or her best in a very unobtrusive fashion, but it's the person who has made the newspapers and has done something, perhaps even given his best, but in a flashy sort of way. For instance, Tunis says the majority of these degrees go to bankers, manufacturers, chain store executives, presidents of utility companies, politicians and corporation lawyers, with a "few professors tossed in to add respectability to the roster." Authors are remembered when their laurels are in their hands, but they're strangely silent.

Tunis isn't condemning the idea of conferring honorary degrees, for the idealogy back of one has action by colleges and universities is splendid. The United States has no peerage, no Legion of Honor, as Tunis points out, and this approaches the nearest to a distinction of that kind. It's only the misuse of this custom that brings the criticism, for not only are the awarding of these so-called legion bit standards are so variable that they are fast becoming empty honors. Money can buy them, if necessary.

Here are some interesting facts about giving honorary degrees, but first let it be known that Florida State college has awarded one honorary degree, that a doctor of laws, to Ruth Bryan Owen. The person and the number should speak for themselves in the following figures: Out of 1,500 recognized colleges, 120 have endowments of $2,000,000 or over and usually from two to eight degrees are given by them each June. . . . Six hundred degrees are given from the 1,500 schools of learning annually. . . . Dartmouth led in number over a period of 10 years with 103, Bowdoin next with 82, Brown third with 78, and Boston university fourth with 70. . . . Herbert Hoover's name leads all the rest with a grand total of 34; A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard and John H. Finley of New York Times are fighting it out at second place, both with 28, and Owen D. Young is third with 25. . . . Nicholas Murray Butler probably has one of the most alluring collection of foreign degrees,

The strike in the steel industries does not seem to be any nearer settlement than it was a week ago. In Youngstown, O., the four steel plants were prevented from re-opening on Wednesday by the action of Governor Davey, endorsed by President Roosevelt, in calling out national guardsmen. This move was made in order to prevent bloodshed as the C.I.O. men were prepared to defend the plants against the "back to work" movement by force if necessary. It is believed that a settlement will be reached soon and if the situation is left as it has been the last few weeks.

So far the mediation board has not been able to negotiate a contract satisfactory to both the steel companies and the union. The latest effort to settle the controversy has been accused by Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana of interfering too much in favor of the C.I.O. So far these accusations seem to have little basis in fact.

Europe is facing its weekly crisis—again the civil war in Spain threatens the sorely pressed peace of Europe. The four powers —Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany could not agree on a plan that would satisfy Germany over Spanish attempts to torpedo the German cruiser, Leipzig. The Nazi government is expected to take some action to defend its "honor" and Mussolini has given curt orders to one or more generals of the fascist regular army to have their names ready for service abroad at a moment's notice. It is feared that Mussolini might take advantage of the internal unrest in France and the weakness of the non-intervention policy to affect a radical change in his policy toward Spain.

England and France are blamed by Germany and Italy for the failure of the non-intervention policy because England, backed by France, refused to help stage a naval demonstration against the Spanish government and insisted instead that foreign troops be re-

At last a use has been found for garlic. Recent experimenters in Portland find the fumes will kill certain bacteria. They indicate, however, that the odiferous substances in the garlic are not the bacteria-killers. Other less prominent smelling substances constitute the antiseptic quality to the fumes. In view of this discovery we move that all of the garlic be moved from the kitchen to the infirmary without delay.

According to a recent question-naire more Wheaton girls are concerned about their future husband's height than are worried about his wealth or any difference in age. Guess they've had some painful experiences with biting dates, too.

Contempory Thought...

China's United Front
By Fred V. Fields

In the Far East, China's United Front movement is pointing the way to actual Chinese unity and the frustration of Japanese imperialism in the direction of China, says Fred V. Fields in the June issue of Current History.

It is true, he says, that the political events of the past year, as the loss of Manchuria, the setting up of autonomous and semi-autonomous regimes in Hopeh China, the Japanese penetration of Inner Mongolia, the wholesale Japanese smuggling of North China, and the political activities of the invaders in Nanking and Provincial capitals, would make China appear to be seriously contreating before Japanese advance.

But the recent agitation by the Chinese people, especially of the Communistic Party, to bring about a united China may eventually result in such an end. The beginning of the United Front Movement was marked when the Chinese Communistic Party proposed a revolution for liberation when the Japanese occupied Manchuria in 1931.

It was not until several years later, however, when the implications of the Communistic Party came out, that the world began to realize the significance of such a development.

Several times the Reds have made appeals for and demonstrations showing their honest intentions for co-operation. Even when Chiang Kai-shek in Shanghai in 1932, the Communistic Party volunteered assistance to the famous Nineteenth Route Army and the same year the Red Army's commandment issued a statement declaring war on Japan.

Although no actual amnesty exists between the Communistic Party and the Kuomintang at Nanking, the United Front, not yet completed, is in the process of negotiation.

Such a development will have significance both to China and internationally. It will assure China's democratization, preserve the welfare of her people and establish China as a power able to deal with foreign countries in terms of equality.—D. B.

"Have You a Talent for Parenthood?"
By Margaret Widdemer

The following article encourages creative ability is described in this month's Parent's Magazine in an article entitled "Have You a Talent for Parenhood?"

Margaret Widdemer, who is a poet and fiction writer, in this article says, "I shall never cease to be amazed at the number of people who are willing to do their children by parental lack of talent. Children are so at the mercy of their environment and their environment is so at the mercy of their parents."

If the home is to encourage the creative ability of its children she declares that it must provide plenty of encouragement and the expression of uncreative abilities that the child may seem to be trying to express. The talented child should not have the feeling that it is being overseen or overhandled. And while it should be given time for the development of aptitude, it should not have too much solitude forced upon it because of the feeling that it is different. The parents should be respectful of the peculiarities of genius in the child but at the same time see to life has social balance. They should be careful to see that there is balance between mind and body, and initiative in responsibility, persistence, and coordination.

The article ends with the declaration that "parental talent for parenthood can start a creative child but only parents with a talent for parenthood itself can carry a child through to a successful career and in spite of it to a normal, balanced successful life."—H. P.

French Girl Names "Cute" as Most Used American Word But Has Found No Satisfactory Definition

By POLLY EVELETH

The most difficult American pronunciation to become accustomed to is America's slang," So said Marthe Thomas, Florida State College French exchange girl, "Cute," she believes, is the most frequently used word in America's vocabulary, but has not yet found the American who is able to satisfactorily define the word for her.

Bullied by Word

When Marthe first came to State college last fall, she was puzzled several months until another often uttered word, "Some girls seemed to half shout, and half swallow it. At first I did never understand it well enough to know what to look for in the dictionary. One day in person she stopped a girl on the hall speaking the word. What is that word you use?' The student obligingly answered that 'hey' is short for English hello.

Although Marthe's home is in Nice, she has lived in France, Spain as well as in America. She also enjoys travelling, her last suggested when she graduated from the College of Cannes that Marthe go to America as an exchange student. In February she applied to the international office for students in Paris and then studied for ordering where she might be sent.

One day came she received an important-looking letter from Florida. She sailed for the United States two months later.

Marthe's first impression of New York City was "that all the people must die very young, they grow so fast."

In Studying Commerce

Marthe is studying commerce. She believes it is a good thing to become accustomed to the climate and will be helpful to her in earning her way in her work, for she expects to continue travelling. Then, too, some day she may take a position in the international business where she will need to know languages and commerce subjects.

Marthe smiled when asked if it were true that French girls could not choose their own husbands. "Most French girls and boys do it just like Americans," she replied. Frequently the boy asked the girl's family for her hand and her father made the bargain with him. Her family also invited the suitor to dinner where he was formally introduced to his future wife. At that time she was asked by her father if she accepted, and if so, all well and good. If the girl did not care for the boy, she politely declined on grounds that she was too young or gave some similar excuse.

Marthe said she has thoroughly enjoyed her year's stay at Florida State college. She has not yet learned to enjoy American chewing gum and dopes, but by next September she will be a perfect American, speaking slang as fluently as English."

Dr. Ben Wood Has Had Interesting Life Since Youngster in Texas to His Work in Columbia

By DOROTHY BELLAMY

An interesting life of varied experiences has been that of Dr. Ben D. Wood of New York, who spoke here several times this week to audiences of summer school students and members of the Women's Institute.

Remembers War

Born in South Texas in the early 90's, he just remembers a little of the excitement of the Spanish American war. As there were no schools in that section of the country, his early education was received from reading Shakespeare and the Harvard classics under the instruction of his mother.

At the age of ten he became a cowboy on a cattle ranch in West Texas where much of his time was spent in digging for water and killing rattlesnakes—often as many as a dozen a day.

After three months of high school at Brownsville, Texas, with a diploma, and two weeks later entered the University of Texas.

In 1917, on graduation from the university, he enlisted in the army and was stationed at Camp Lee, Va., and from there he was sent to Fort Oglethorpe, N. M.

Immediately following his dismissal from the army in California, Dr. Wood became an employe of the National Research Council in New York. On this council he helped construct the National Intelligence tests which were used until 1935.

He wrote the book, Measurement in Higher Education, which was published by the World Book Company in 1923, while he was taking his graduate work under E. L. Thorndike. On the completion of his graduate work, he became assistant to the Dean of Columbia college. In 1930 he was granted 90 per cent leave of absence for work on the cooperative test service for the National Council on Education. The purpose of this test service is to make a set of comparable tests to measure the progress of students from year to year, and to use the results as a means of a guidance for the students as well as to determine grades.

Dr. Wood said that the most interesting experience of his life occurred during the war when he met his life-long hero, General Gorgas, one day in a field in Oglethorpe. When he had saluted the General, whom he recognized from pictures, the general, noticing his epaulets, asked him what division he was in. He told him that he was with the psychological division of the medical department, and the General said, "Yes, yes, you are a pioneer, too."

Graduate Group Elects Gilland

Club to Be Entertained Tonight at Finners

Ruth Gilland was unanimously elected president of the Graduate Student club at its meeting Thursday noon. Burtis Tyler was appointed secretary and members of the program committee chosen were Emily Porter, Gertrude McAllister, and Eleanor McMullen. Mrs. Helen Pope, Hazel Gilmore and Dorothy West were appointed on a committee to investigate membership requirements.

Tonight Dr. Paul F. Pinner and Mrs. Pinner will be hosts for the club's first social event, a reception at their home at 8 o'clock. The faculty graduate committee and Dr. Edward Conradi will be special guests. During the evening several members of the club will give a synopsis of their thesis.

A discussion of the purpose of the club was led by Miss Gilland. It was decided that the purpose be not only a study of the fields which are open for experiment but for the enjoyment of social activities, including picnics, breakfasts and luncheons.

been a millstone around the neck of faculty and students," Dr. Wood said.

"In the home we should remember that school is only an aid," he also stated.

Exhibits Featured

Exhibits from the American Medical association and the Foreign Policy association have attracted considerable attention during the institute.

Acting as institute chairman has been Mrs. J. Ralston Wells, of Daytona Beach, first vice president of the Florida Federation of Women's clubs.

Social affairs have formed a prominent part of the institute also. A reception in the college open air theater was given Monday night by President Edward Conradi and his daughter, Miss Louise Conradi, while a picnic supper was had last night at Camp Flastacowo.

Final event of the institute's five-day program is a P.-T. A. school of instruction at 3 o'clock today where the subject of county councils will be studied.

Religious Groups Start Activities On This Weekend

Five Denominations Plan Events for Students Of Summer School

Religious groups on the campus are completing organization activities with the announcement of week-end parties and Sunday church services. Five denominations have taken plans to take care of religious activities of the students this summer, including the Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, Catholics and Presbyterians.

Methodists Plan Party

A party will be given for the Methodist summer school students on the back lawn at the Methodist Student house tonight at 8 o'clock. The purpose of this party will be to help the students who are attending summer school to get better acquainted with one another and with their student secretary and to give them some party ideas to take home with them after summer school and put in practice in their own communities. Two of the features of entertainment for the evening will be games and story telling. Among the story tellers will be Miss Elizabeth Thompson, instructor in the speech department and Dr. Raymond Ballamy, professor of sociology both from the college. A faculty trio will play several numbers, and there will be group singing. Refreshments will be served.

The Methodist summer school students are invited to go to Carabelle and Dog Island with the local Methodist League Saturday at 1 o'clock to enjoy a swim and a picnic supper.

"Practical Religion" will be Miss Wynne Le Davis' topic in Sunday school Sunday morning. Miss Hope Yon will be leader for the Methodist Student League which will be held at the Methodist Student house at 7:05 o'clock Sunday.

Rugg Hall Open

Rugg Hall, the Episcopalian headquarters, will be open all summer for the Episcopalian students attending summer school and their friends, Miss Julia Gerban who is the Episcopalian student secretary, will be at Rugg Wing for a few more weeks. All the Episcopalian summer school students and their friends are invited to an informal at-home at Rugg hall tonight from 7 to 8 o'clock.

Two of the Baptist senior unions entertained a group of the Baptist students who are attending the summer session with a picnic social at Wakulla Springs Monday night. The Baptist students who were included in that group were Percy Hughes, Ruby Ellis, Eula Barber, Helen Jerry, Edna McInnis, Violet Walfgang, Essie Hogan, Elizabeth Jamyn, Olivia Bradley, Margaret Bradley, Dora Solomon, Elenor Meggs, Lynnette Patten, Syvelle Remington, Frances Green, Essie Nell Black, Alicia Graham, and the acting student secretary, Mavis McMillan.

was assistant in the philosophy department of Barnard college and later professor of philosophy, psychology, and education at Agnes Scott college in Decatur, Ga. She became resident physician at Syracuse university and in 1925 received her Ph. D. from that university.

Dr. Richards' book, which is intended for courses of survey character in the high schools and of the four great sciences: chemistry, physics, geology and astronomy, with the topics smoothly interwoven, it consists of 720 pages and contains a sixty-four photographs and drawings, the majority of which are full-page illustrations. Bruk Sauls made the majority of the drawings.

In the preface to the book the publishers, D. Van Nostrand Company, of New York, the oldest scientific publishing house in the country, said: "This book is so far superior to any similar text that it opens new possibilities in every curriculum. It reads with the running fluency of a narrative and at the same time gives an exceptionally broad and well-co-ordinated knowledge of scientific fundamentals."

The publishers pointed out that assurance of the scientific soundness of every statement could be gained from the fact that the material has been carefully read and heartily endorsed by experts in each science. Among the eminent men who have read the manuscript and endorsed its scientific soundness were: Dr. Hugh S. Taylor, chairman of the department of chemistry at Princeton university; Dr. Gerald Wendt, former dean of the division of chemistry and physics at Penn State and director of the American institute and editor of Chemical Reviews; and Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, chairman of geology at Harvard university. Dr Mather contributed the signed preface to the book.

The cut system being used this summer is the same as that used during the winter school. All students having an average of "B" for the work immediately preceding their summer school study this year are allowed a cut, while those with a "C" average may take eight. Those students having up to six hours of "D" are allowed four cuts, those who have six hours of "D" receive no cuts.

Th's system applies to those who took their last school work at this college. New or transfer students may take cuts, basing them on the grades they will have made at the close of the summer. These will be deducted from their number of cuts when they attend the college again.

Dr. Daniels to Speak At Vespers on Sunda

Dr. J. H. Daniels, pastor of the Methodist church will speak at vespers Sunday night at 7 o'clock on "Jesus the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

Miss Martha Reddick will play violin solo and Miss Wynne Le Davis will have charge of devotionals.

In last Sunday's vespers program Dr. Edward Conrad spoke on "The University of Life." He said "Professor Experience" was include such questions as these: the examinations that he will give his students: "1—Can you look into a child's heart and tell there a hunger for joy? 2—Can you look into the heart of an adult and see the presence of God expressed in heroic, saintly virtues?" Dr. Conrad said that we would have to answer these questions in terms of life. "We had to assume nothing and our scores would be either plus, minus or zero depending on the way of life we had chosen."

One of the critics comments on the book after reading the manuscript, stated: "This is the first one-volume text of physical science which can face the physicist, the chemist, the astronomer, the geologist, and the literary critic with equal confidence."

Dr. Richards who is a native of Dayton, O., received his A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Cincinnati and was a member of the faculty there. Before he came to Florida State college in 1925 he was a fellow in physics with the National Research council at Princeton. He is a member of many leading organizations, including the American Physics society, American Association of University Professors, American Association of Physics teachers, Florida Academy of Science, and Phi Beta Kappa.

No Cuts Preceding And After Holiday

Students are not allowed to cut those classes immediately before or after a holiday, Registrar S. R. Doyle has announced in connection with the holiday at Florida State college Monday. This ruling follows one enacted last year in winter school. The penalty for cutting the last class on Friday and the first one on Tuesday will be that the student is placed on academic probation. This means that the student will not be allowed any more cuts during the remainder of the summer.

Meeting Called By State Board

7 Florida Institutions Are Represented

The state board of public instruction called a conference at the Florida State college last week from Monday through Friday. Seven Florida institutions of higher learning were represented, including Florida State college, Dr. Ben Turnbull, state office of public instruction in Washington D. C., Rollins college, Stetson university, Tallahassee's college, New Jersey, were the out-of-state visitors.

Problems of the school training courses and the certification of teachers were the problems discussed during the conference. Frazier and Dr. Hatch made addresses. Dr. Hatch declared there should be fewer certificates granted by state universities, that two or four year degrees should be professional training was emphasized by Dr. Hatch. Dr. Turnbull stated the integrated courses now offered in the public schools should be for grade teachers. It was suggested that elementary teachers receive degrees in education only.

President Edward Conradi, Dr. Hugh Wilson, Sarah Blackwell and G. Andrews attended the conference.

Elizabeth Finch Chosen

Presbyterian Young People's league elected Elizabeth Finch president at the meeting Monday night. Other officers chosen were Betty Johnson, vice president, and Jane Hogg, secretary-treasurer. Sunday night there will be cars in front of the dining hall at 6 o'clock for all college girls wishing to attend the league and evening services.

Lecture Series Opens With Talk By Mrs. Lewis

Speaker Calls Mexico Land of Contrasts In Discussion

Describing the country as a land of contrasts, Mrs. Leland Lewis spoke on Mexico Monday evening when the first of a series of summer school lectures was held in Reynolds hall. Mrs. Lewis who spent last summer in Mexico announced during her talk that she and her husband will return again this summer for a short visit.

Is Land of Beauty

Mexico, she said, has the one hand century-old customs and beliefs and on the other the more progressive spirit, particularly in education. The speaker stated that she knew, she pointed out, for to the casual visitor it is a land of beauty, charm, and color, she said, but to those who get to know her, Mexico offers more than that.

Its first aim, she said, is to give the country's illiterate people, then to teach people to read and write. The speaker noted the marked decrease in illiteracy from 75 per cent a few years ago to 50 per cent at the present time. Sixteen per cent of the nation's people are receiving some training it second only to defense. The third aim is practical training, she said, and are called "The House of the People."

Telling of her visit to the pyramids she said that "from an artistic standpoint they are possibly the most interesting ruins ever built." She also described a peon's home, constructed mainly of straw and leaves in which many of the people live, she said, and the difficult farming methods used by the Mexicans who sometimes climb to the mountain's crests on the mountains to keep them fairly level for the soil and where they grow corn mostly.

Has High Standards

Drawing attention to the high death rate, Mrs. Lewis said it is here that Dr. Percy Ellis is

State Geography Group Will Have Semi-Annual Meeting Next Saturday

The Florida State Council of Geography Teachers will convene here Saturday, July 10, for its semi-annual session. Membership in this organization is open to all mostly of geography teachers and is affiliated with the National Council of Geography Teachers.

The high point of the day will be a field trip to the country where the council members will study the adjustments that man has made to his environmental conditions. A meeting will be held Saturday night at which the use of visual aids in geographical study and research will be emphasized.

The officers of the council are as follows: Dr. Percy Ellis, president; Mrs. Amice Davis Elkins, Tarpon Springs, vice president; Joe Mackery, Tallahassee, secretary and treasurer, and Miss Gladys Foster, Pensacola, corresponding secretary.

Demonstration School Has 250 Registrations

The demonstration school pupil enrollment at present is approximately 250, while the number of college students enrolled for observation and practice teaching is about fifty.

In addition to the routine activities, plans have been organized in woodwork, industrial arts, handicraft, creative expression, and directed reading.

Attends Meeting

Miss Margaret Whitney Dow, of the music department of Florida State college, who has returned from the national convention of the American Guild of Organists held in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Miss Dow Attends Music Convention

Tells Many Interesting Features of Meeting

Miss Margaret Whitney Dow, of the music department of Florida State college, has returned from the national convention of the American Guild of Organists, which was held in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Outstanding among the organ recitals which she heard was the one given by Alex Schreiner, first organ department of Curtis institute, Philadelphia. Others of interest were a concert given at Music hall, using two organs, a large and a small, and played by Mr. Shrimer of California; a concert given in which the ancient instruments—a lute harpsichord, clavichord, and recorder, were used; some typical church services by Mr. Titus of Cincinnati; and an impressive Catholic service held at Price Hill.

Among the interesting discussions were a clinic conducted by Mr. W. Krone of Cincinnati, one day; an interesting talk on "Service Planning and Playing" by Mrs. Clarence Dickenson of the school of sacred music in New York, and a discussion of the examinations which A. G. O. gives for the degrees of associate and fellowship. Only four people in Florida now hold these degrees. Miss Dow holds both of them.

First Flastacowo Comes Off Press It Is Announced

Miss Richardson Reports Students to Receive Annuals July 12

Color and originality of make-up mark this year's Flastacowo Florida State college's winter school annual which is coming off the press this week and next. Several hundred copies have been sent out to the college in preparation to be mailed to students all over the state.

Ready Here July 12

According to Miss Lucile Richardson, chairman of the Flastacowo faculty committee, students attending summer school who are eligible to receive annuals will be able to get them Monday, July 12. Before they can be given out to students who attended winter school here last year and who are also enrolled at Florida State this summer more than 1,000 must be mailed all over the state. Only about 100 annuals a day can be run off the Rose Printing Shop press, it has been announced.

To Dr. Elisabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel and placement, this year's book has been dedicated. In commenting upon Dr. Andrews the editors have said, "We dedicate this book to one who has held the torch high against surrounding darkness."

Torches Are Theme

The three torches—Learn, Aztec, Mores, symbols of the college, provide the theme for the whole book which has been divided into these divisions, headed by one of these torch symbols. In the foreword the editors have explained their interpretation of the torch. "We meant this book to be personification of a spirit which by the very silence of its indefinableness may too often suffer forgetfulness, incomparable as all time's bauhinia our lives with justice and kindness."

"Lest we fail to read its symbol in classroom, campus and good fellowship alike, we set forth this Flastacowo of 1937 in the light of its traditional forces—Virve, Aztec, and Mores."

Included under Virve, book one, are campus views which contain a galaxy of unusual and at the same time beautiful scenes of the campus. Administration is second, and again originality is found for informal views of the faculty

Brazilian Student Studies Here to Learn About New American Methods in Kindergarten Education

A bit of the picturesque atmosphere of tropical Brazil has been brought to the campus in the person of Dulce Peres of Sao Paulo here. She is studying after having been in the United States only six months. Although she has had only two years of English in school before she came to America, Miss Perres speaks English much more readily than most American students would be able to after Spanish or French after just two years of study.

When she first came to this country she was with friends who spoke Portuguese, her native language, but since she has been on this campus she has had to make use of her knowledge of English. Words having the same spelling and even the same pronunciation but different meanings seem a little perplexing to her as does the choosing of an exact word or phrase to convey her meaning.

Miss Peres is particularly interested in studying the kindergarten. In Brazil the German method is used, so she hopes to learn something of the differences and likenesses of their method that of the American schools.

She did not come here to obtain credits, for she holds a degree from a college in Brazil in that country. Here Miss Peres hopes to learn something of the practical life of American girls and women. She plans to bring three of her nieces to Old United States to study. At present they are studying English with this end in view.

Miss Perres finds Florida a great deal like parts of Brazil, for here she finds many of the same trees and flowers. The people, she thinks, are very friendly and kind and she has no difficulty making friends or obtaining any information she might need.

How to Stay Healthy During Summer

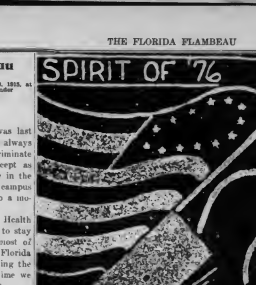
The first official day of summer was last week, but to the people of Florida this always is a sort of joke, since it's hard to discriminate between one season and another, except as some say it's hotter for a longer time in the summer. On the Florida State college campus summer seems to have settled down to a monotonous quietness.

Several days ago the U. S. Public Health Service issued a number of ways how to stay healthy during hot weather. While most of us have learned, if we have lived in Florida long, the most expedient ways of getting the maximum of comfort in the summer time we are still open as a rule for suggestions.

The first rule that the U. S. Public Health Service sets down is rather ironical, but at the same time may help some of the students realize about the work they have to do. It is—don't work too hard, inclining both physical and mental exertion. This advice comes from doctors who shake their heads at people hurrying to get somewhere or those who have such ambitions as trying to plot another "Gone With the Wind." It doesn't say anything about a master's thesis, so this point will be left to the individual.

The diet must be watched next. Meats, fried foods and pastries and sweets should be cut to a minimum. Foods recommended for 90 and 100 degrees temperatures include fresh ripe fruits, leafy garden vegetables, salads, cereals, milk and other bulky filling foods which satisfy the hunger without contributing much to heat production. Fortunately the food problem is in the hands of experts for summer school attendants. However, caution would be suggested for any in-between-meal eating.

Water, six to eight glasses or more, according to the kind of work performed, atmospheric temperature, and the humidity, should be drunk by a person each day, the Service reports. With the body losing its water content through perspiration, physicians explained, it is important that these losses be replaced, something that may prevent heat exhaustion in a dash of salt since it replenishes salt lost by sweating. But this isn't the only water necessary for the individual who must also have it externally. Doctors pointed out that a daily bath not only cleanses but refreshes the individual.



As for clothing, experts say it should be light in weight as well as color. Permitting evaporation and allowing air to reach the skin readily are the porous fabrics. Frequent changing of clothes, especially those near the skin will allow more comfort.

The next suggestion should be happily accepted by summer students. It concerns sleep and the experts have said it is more important to have the requisite amount of sleep in hot weather than when the temperature is close to zero, even though one must toss and turn on a warm night. Doctors suggest electric fans when it is difficult to sleep, but with the wind currents directed off the body.

All those suggestions made available by the physical education department follow suggestions made by the Service. In addition the hours for sports should be confined to the early morning or late afternoon when the heat of the sun is less intense.

The last warning concerns swimming, particularly that done in large bodies of water. Don't go into water of any depth within an hour after eating because of the danger of cramps, experts caution. Especially apropos to those on F. S. C. W. campus is the point brought out concerning the summer tan. Don't try to acquire it in one single day, since sunburn is painful and may be sickening.

All these do's and don't's represent just good common sense, but in the summer some of the most astute become enervated.

NEWS OF THE WEEK
IN REVIEW

By UNA UMPHREY

It looks as though the strike situation is to be front page news for all of this week in spite of high hopes to the contrary. The strike has passed its thirty-fourth day with 13 fatalities, dynamite plots and rumors of plots, the calling out of national guardsmen, and the discovery and undoing of an alleged terror plot. The strike covers such a vast area that many observers fear the loss of control of strikers by C. I. O. leaders. It might be well that national guardsmen are mobilized in the strike regions.

Secretary Perkins admitted that the mediation efforts of the government have failed because the four big steel companies—Republic, Bethlehem, Inland Steel, and Youngstown Sheet and Steel—have refused to deal with the C. I. O. The federal mediation board thinks that a round-table round table discussion would clear up certain matters and make a settlement possible. This idea sounds all right and should work providing both sides are willing to give as well as take.

Great Britain is at last ready to recognize officially that a state of war exists in Spain. Until now General Francisco Franco has not been a belligerent as far as the British government is concerned. According to Anthony Eden, England's foreign secretary, the recognition about to be granted would bring about a speedy close of the civil war in Spain. Other British statesmen say, however, that the move is a bit of back slapping on England's part in exchange for the cooperation of Italy and Germany in the interests of world peace.

Last week the non-intervention policy of France, England, Germany, and Italy was discontinued. Now both Italy and Germany have declared themselves not unwilling to serve to another such policy. Mr. Eden will probably be a very happy man when the war in Spain is over.

Along with blasts of dynamite from the strike areas and explosions of rebel and loyalist shells in Spain, the sound of wedding bells is heard in Delaware, where Miss Ethel DuPont became the bride of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., this week.

We're getting catty about now and enough has been said week before last. One more remark on the subject will be printed and it's positively the last or there'll aroused females will swamp me with their tirades against the colleges. Here goes for the last received: "In answer to the remark by Mr. Timid Cool, that he hadn't seen anything worth looking at so far—. Wll fair damels haven't seen anything worth looking at either." Well, fair damels present coeds to make us wish they would look. Perhaps that accounts for our lack of the use of curlers and eyebrow pencil. We're saving them for something worthwhile."

Now come on, only five weeks left you better buy the hatchet in a great big hurry.

Only I will say that I like the above is any indication, that our girls are getting bored. In fact, the other night three of them became so terrified-sally bored that they decided to make their own excitement. On the way home from town they proceeded to take off their shoes and stockings and sauntered down College avenue in their bare feet!

Then as if that wasn't enough they insulted the Odds by wading in their fountain! Boredom has mighty queer results; but their little adventure was most satisfying according to the girls.

Contemporary Thought...

The Importance of Loafing

By Lin Yutang

In the July issue of Harper's magazine Lin Yutang has an article comparing Oriental and Occidental philosophies of life. He says, "The American is known as a great hustler as the Chinese is known as a great loafer. I do not know eventually the West and the East will meet; the pain fact is that they are meeting now, and are going to meet more and more closely as machine civilization spreads and makes communication easier. The problem in China will be as to how the two cultures, ancient Chinese philosophy of life and the modern technical civilization, will be merged.

He thinks that even though in America we think the future of the world will be dominated by the machine, it is not at all impossible that there may be a revival so well described in Walt Wyck Brook's new book telling of the period of New England culture. And with stirring, energy respite, there will be new Whitmans, new Lowells and Thoreaus; and that the temperament of America will be quite different from that of the present day.

There is a philosophy in China, that was first expressed in the eighteenth century and which follows: "Time is useful because it is not used." Chinese leisure arises from a combination of culture, if it is a temperament. It gives not an intense love of life, was actively sustained an understanding current of literary romance throughout the Americas. The Chinese romantic tales were on the whole men sifted with a high sensibility and a vagabond nature, poor in worldly possessions, but rich in their sentiment. They had intense love of life.

Lin Yutang says the three American vices are due to efficiency, practicality, and the desire for achievement and success. They are the things that make the Americans so unhappy and nervous. He says the American's inability to get out directly from his desire for doing things and enjoying action above being one. We should develop that art of being able to do nothing at all and not worthy of the name. Like the mellowness of old wine, it is acquired by standing still and by the passage M. time."—M. G.

Medical Progress
By Ogo Caldron

In the June 23 issue of the New Republic Isaac Galdston summarizes the most outstanding scientific discoveries that have been made in medicine in recent years.

Although medical progress does not move by waves of discovery, but in place, says Mr. Galdston, it is nevertheless well occasioned to take look at the advances that have been made.

In recent years the danger of death from heart disease has been decreased by two new means of cure, says the writer. One, in the surgical field, was devised by Claude S. Beck of the Western Reserve University School of Medicine at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1923, which now makes it possible to operate on the heart without exposing the patient to undue risks. Dr. Beck's thirteen years study and experiment of necessity on animals now makes the treatment of stab wounds, the removal of scar-tissue bands which bind and embrace the heart and the removal of adhering and restricting the pericardium all established surgical procedures.

As for the medical cures of heart diseases there comes important news with hardly a per cent age of the mortality of coronary thrombosis (formation of blood clots within the blood vessels of the heart) can be reduced by the new "rest and diet" method of complete and absolute rest in bed for several weeks with limited amounts of food intake.

The treatment of diabetes has been simplified by the combining of a basic protein of simple carbohydrates combined with insulin, discovered by Professor H. C. Hagedorn of Denmark. This compound has to be injected only once a day as compared to the two to three injections of insulin formerly used, thus enabling the body to utilize the sugars more evenly and for a longer period of time.

Since 1918 therapy has been used successfully in the cure of gonorrhea, syphilis, St. Vitus dance, pneumonia, cerebro-spinal meningitis, arthritis, multiple sclerosis, and dementia paraecox.

Another fever therapy, as yet only accepted conditionally, is that used in the cure of dementia paraecox, a mental deterioration, by the treatment of insulin shock.

A cure for streptococcal meningitis seems to have been found in the use of prontosil, essentially a red crystalline dye, a very complex chemical structur synthesized by Mslanch and Klarer in 1932.

If this treatment is as effective as it seems another triumph of modern medicine will have been made.—D. B.

Program Is Arranged For Graduate Meeting

An interesting program has been planned for the meeting of the Graduate club next Friday evening, July 9, in the Auditorium-Annex theater, Dr. Guy L. Dirstine, chairman, who has been selected as the sponsor for the club for the summer will give a short talk. Dr. William H. Rogers will render popular books and the instrumental trio under the direction of Owen Sellers will give several selections.

Story of Trees

The second book, Aries, includes features which carries pictures of the nine most popular girls on the campus activities, as seen through the medium of snapshots. Book three, Mores, is devoted to sororities, athletics, and advertisements.

Garnet and gold, the college's colors, have been effectively used, not only on the cover but on all the pages, including the section pages and the class pages. Three torches of garnet and gold occupy each senior page and bands of the colors sweep across the top of the other three classes. The cover itself is garnet, with a band of gold carrying the word, Flastacowo, across the width of the cover. Below the edge is a gold torch, the only other touch of gold.

Frances Forth of Punta Gorda and Julia Vanderipe of Manatee are the editor and business manager, respectively. The book was published by the junior and senior classes.

Miss Richardson has announced that there will be no extra copies available, only those allotted for already.

China. "Where we lose two from typhoid, they lose 71," she remarked, stating that similar comparisons could be made in other diseases.

The Mexican people have tasted the advantages of freedom, she said. Although they have been a persecuted lot they will never be content to give up freedom. Mrs. Lewis gave credit for the high moral outlook they have maintained despite bitter persecutions.

The term socialistic, Mrs. Lewis pointed out, which has been applied to Mexico's land venture has no unfavorable sting. It was simply a case of giving land back to the Indians on a communistic basis like it had been formerly.

Mrs. Lewis' talk was made even more interesting by humorous tales of Mexican life which she told to illustrate certain descriptions of her stay in Mexico.

Among the most enjoyable of these were an al fresco supper given in a home overlooking the river, and the closing banquet given at the Netherland-Plaza hotel, headquarters for the convention.

Among those attending from Florida were Miss Dow, Mr. Gerard Mr. Colvin, Mr. Murphree, and Miss Barbara Stimmel, St. Augustine, and Miss Lucille Petronia, formerly of Quincy, now of Cincinnati, both graduates of Florida State college.

Miss Dow has the honor of being chosen the dean of the Florida chapter of A. G. O., of which Mr. Murphree is sub-dean.

Plans are being made to hold the district convention of the A. G. O. in Tallahassee next May.

Romance Marks Exhibit Of Tallahassee Scenes Displayed in Library

The leaves traced lacy patterns on the cool mossy ground. Gay voices of picnickers filled the woods with merriment. But suddenly the sound of galety ceased, a beautiful lady had lost her dainty slipper in the depths of the spring. And then, a handsome Prince stepped up. Plunging into the icy water, he recovered the small slipper. To the beautiful young lady he drank a toast from the little slipper, before returning it to her.—And they lived happily ever after.

So goes the legend of Prince and Princess Murat's meeting. The scene of the legend was the spring at old Ft. San Luis which is one of the many illustrations now on display in the library of historic Tallahassee. Fritz is a picture of a romantic spot on the old stage coach road, with moss hung oaks spreading over it, the home of the Tallahassee girl, heroine of a story by that name, and many other views of interest to those who plan to take sightseeing trips around the city.

Also of interest to booklovers will be the displays of old best sellers, which still remain popular today.

Gym-Cracks

By MARIE JOFFRE

After a great deal of preliminary planning the physical education department is now running smoothly, and the gymnasium and surrounding grounds are the most active spots on campus.

Tennis is about the most popular sport for, not only are the courts filled during the day, but until usually long after all of the lighted courts occupied, too. Don't forget that instruction is available.

Poll fencing has an interested group of participants composed of both men and women, and a young man from the University of Florida has been studying at the university, and has such interesting comments to make that we quote them as being very profitable. One meeting a week has been announced, but at the request of the members of the group there are now two meetings, on Monday and Wednesday afternoons at 5 o'clock.

You should have seen the hikers last Saturday morning! They hiked out to Lake Ella and Westcott building at 6 o'clock in the morning, so into Mrs Katherine Monigomery's car and prodded the golf course. There they left the car and hiked for five minutes; finding a cool spot, they stopped and had breakfast after which they trudged back to the car and returned to the campus. Other "hikes" are being planned.

You never can tell how things will turn out. On the trip to St. Mark's had to be called off last week because not enough people had signed up to go. Now Miss Montgomery states that there is a chance that not many people might want to take the Carrabelle trip this week! They are almost all faculty members, too. Nice work, faculty.

Can it be the weather? Very few people have turned out for volleyball, basketball, and golf although instruction is offered. All students are invited, and this is a fine opportunity for any who are interested in learning something about these sports.

Besides these and other athletic groups there are others for those who may not care to be so active. Astronomy, dramatics, handicrafts, and current events are some of the subjects studied. And let's not forget the dancing groups, social dancing on Monday nights, and tap on Wednesday afternoons. These are popular classes, and the students are

Florida State college's kitchen and dining room which can accommodate 1,550 students are the subjects of the article entitled "Food Service in a College for Women," appearing in the June issue of the Hotel Monthly.

The Hotel Monthly, established in 1892, has an international circulation reaching 32 countries. The June issue has a circulation of 8,200 copies.

The magazine is produced for people who are interested in the hotel and kindred businesses and has always been educational.

The article written by Miss Louise Wiley, associate editor of the magazine, describes the dining hall, noting at the start the absences of girls who dine in the main dining room which is of Mobile architecture. She calls attention to the fact that everyone is served at the same time. In speaking of the kitchen equipment she electrically equipped kitchen, Miss Wiley says, "everything that can be is placed on wheels. The lower dining room is ceiled with Celotex." It is sound absorbing material. She commented on the fact that the kitchen keeps on hand a week's supply of perishables, which requires careful planning. She mentions the carcass, flour in 100 box lots, and cocoa in 50 pound cans.

The article is illustrated with photographs of the dining room and kitchen, and in addition to these there appears the floor plan, a copy of departmental organization, and a typical weekly menu.

Florida State College for Women as a student dietitian training center in the states are pictured in article. The college has the distinction of being the first educational institution in its state and one of several in the entire country offering student dietitian training in administrative food work which has the approval of the American Dietetic association. During the winter session Miss Alma Mae Tracy, college dietitian, is assisted by four student dietitians in addition to the three staff dietitians.

Kappa Delta Pi Group Given Meeting Report

Dean Ralph Eyman gave a resume of the convention called by the state board of public instruction early in June, Gainesville at the meeting of Kappa Delta Pi Monday evening. Following his report a round table discussion was held on the qualifications of a good teacher.

This honorary society will have a dinner meeting at 12 at 4 o'clock in the library of the demonstration school. Following the dinner the service members will sit at special tables in the college dining room.

Library to Close On Monday All Day

The library will be closed all day Monday, according to an announcement from Miss Louise Richardson. Reserved books borrowed Saturday afternoon are due Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. Library books due July 1 should be renewed July 2 or 3. Fines will run as usual on books not renewed and on books overdue.

Editor's note—This column will be a weekly feature of the Flambeau. A timely subject concerning not only local questions but those of both national and international import, as well as questions of lighter nature, will be the topic each week. As a beginning this week's question is:

Why did you choose F.S.C.W. for summer school?

Vera Barefoot: In the first place, this is my Alma Mater. It is cheaper for me to come here because my home is not very far away. I also have many other interests here, such as, church and library work, and my many friends among both students and faculty.

M. Luther King: I've been coming here for the past seven summers. It's near my home; but, I guess the main reason for my choice is that I'm majoring in geography and no other geography department in the state compares with the one here."

Albert Yates: It's good summer recreation!

Elizabeth Becknell: This was the most natural place to come to. I might have gone to Tampa U., however, except for the fact that it doesn't offer the advanced psychology courses I want.

Auvis McMullen: I'm here chiefly because of the encouragement of a very good friend of mine (Mr. Fyvie) who is a member of the faculty. However, I think I will get as good training here as in any other place.

Mrs. Grace B. Hatfield: I started here. It is near my home.

May Register Next Week

Those expecting to receive their B.S. degree certificate in summer may register at the placement bureau next week according to Dr. Elizabeth Andrews. This registration is optional.

Inquiring Reporter

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of minute interviews with people around campus on literary happenings since Amelia Earhart's disappearance has been a topic of concern and interest the two morning Reporters has asked this week's question on this subject, "assuming at the same time that perhaps by the time this is printed Miss Earhart and her pilot may have been located.

Question: Do you thing the excessive emotion in attempting to rescue of Amelia Earhart is justifiable?

Dr. Raymond C. Bellamy: Yes, sure they allowed to go, but it's the most disarming thing in the world that they allowed her to do. However, it is no more justifiable than to save an ordinary person's child from peanoville.

Anna Jane McRae: I was against it. I hadn't thought of it not being justified. She's dead herself more valuable than the ordinary person to the field of aviation.

Elmbeth Pinch: It seemed like unnecessary trip to the public but now that she's out since I don't think money should be considered.

C. G. Lind: It depends on one's point of view. It is unfortunate, and to satisfy public opinion, it should be justifiable. It ought not be justifiable, when you consider that other people in the same circumstances are not permitted over out receive the same consideration.

Liesbeth McCully: She gave her best to us. We should do our best for her.

Florida Harding: Looking at it from every angle, I'd say it is. If it improved aviation and saved lives sometimes, it would be different: but so far we know every expedition on her wouldn't be used to aid any particular persons, so I'd say they should put forth every effort.

Stamp-Sized Fish Has Department Stumped As Far as Name Goes

A fish about the size of a postage stamp has the zoology department at Florida State College temporarily stumped. The animal was found in the Suwannee Shoals by a graduate zoology student, this week on a field trip to St. Thomasville.

After they brought the miniature number back to the college there it is now sporting about in a glass jar filled with salt water and some seaweed, its discoverers couldn't classify it.

The fish resembles some of the smaller aquarium fishes in shape and color of its ventral fins. The little fellow is black, with white spots, is rather slender and has a distinct black band around its head back of the eyes. The students picked it up near the shore with a scoop and brought it back to the college.

His diet? They're planning to find it since it eats copepods, which are small crustacea.

Rogers to Read Poetry

Dr. W. H. Rogers will read selections from the works of the American poet, Robert Frost, in the Auditoria Conrad theater Monday night at 7:30 o'clock. A shorter reading number school assemblies, Dr. Rogers began reading poetry before groups in 1922. At the after-college coffee in Dec. 1935 he had last summer more than 200 guests were assembled.

Faculty, Students Will Have Dinner

Students and faculty will dine together in the college dining hall next Thursday evening when the first faculty-student dinner of the summer session will be held. Those desiring to have guests for dinner are requested to sign on the social committee bulletin board in the Westcott building before Tuesday. The list of tables will be posted on the dining room bulletin board after that date. Any one desiring to have guests make reserve tables at the dining room desk. This will be a formal affair.

Miss Davis Is Given New Personnel Job

Methodist Student Head Will Leave F. S. C.

The Methodist student secretary, Miss Winnie Lee Davis, who has been on the campus of Florida State college for the past six years, has been transferred from her position here to that of personnel worker in the Methodist office in the Mississippi church which has its headquarters at Nashville, Tenn.

This is a new position which has just been created and will consist of contacting and working with former students of Scarritt-Kendall college, interviewing students who expect to give full time service to the Methodist church, and assisting in their foreign fields. Miss Davis will also attend state student conferences and visit various colleges as part of her duties.

Miss Davis is a graduate of Mississippi State College for Women and following her graduation from there she entered Scarritt college in Nashville, where she received her master's degree. She has visited many of the south who are interested in giving full time service to the church she has trained here.

Miss Davis is a native of Yazoo City, Miss. She will attend a leadership conference at Junaluska, N. C., after she leaves here and before she goes on to Nashville to assume her new duties.

Miss Davis' successor next school term will be Miss Frances Baker, Davis, Miss. Miss Baker has taught physical education at Vashti School for Girls at Thomasville, Ga., for the past two years. She is also a graduate of Scarritt.

ART OF FLOWER AND FRUIT ARRANGEMENT FOR HOME TOLD BY MRS. SAYNOR WHO ILLUSTRATED TALK WITH EXHIBITION

The art of flower and fruit arrangement for the home was demonstrated Wednesday evening by Mrs. Mary Saynor Wilson, director of Bryan hall, before a large audience of students and faculty in Reynolds hall. As Mrs. Saynor described the various ways of arrangement flowers and fruit bowls she referred to the display which had created a theme for her talk.

Punch is Served

Preceding Mrs. Saynor's talk the guests were served punch by Miss Jane McRae, Madelyn Duncan, Elizabeth Davis, Helen Sheppard and Shirley Pemberton. The speaker was introduced by Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, chairman of social activities for the college.

Explaining that it is hard to tell anyone how to arrange flowers since it depends on the mood of the individual and that every arrangement is different, Mrs. Saynor pointed out, however, that there are as many rules as there are people or individuals. Every flower arrangement is the personal expression of the thoughts, she said. "We find it exciting as well as calming and it is for these reasons that arranging of flowers has an irresistible appeal," the speaker explained.

Main among the directions she gave were that the flowers should stand in cold water in a dark room for several hours before they are arranged, and flowers change their shapes after standing, especially tinnias and nasturtiums. The correct proportion for height is one and one-half times the height of the container and for a low bowl the height is one and one-half times the diameter.

Cut Stems Slanting

In cutting flowers Mrs. Saynor instructed that the stems be cut slanting and not straight across, for slanting they drink up more water. Leaves are to be cut from stems except those needed for arrangement. This, she said, avoids crowded and confused appearances.

When arranging flowers each is stuck to the container one at a time. Mrs. Saynor warned that stems should never be crossed, beginning at the center with the longest stems, this as the backbone. The bowl should be branched so as to have balance, with one line heavier than the other side. This will avoid the appearance of tipping over.

Design Is Harmonious

Design, the speaker said, must be harmonious and not contrasting, in order to avoid monotony and to hold interest. Tying up flowers in layers of different colors should be avoided. It is better, she pointed out, to place flow-

Foreign Students Visit This Campus

6 Young People Surprise Martha Thomas Here

Six foreign exchange students paid a surprise visit to Martha Thomas, French student here, last week. In the party were an Italian now a German girl and boy, an Australian girl and boy, and Miss Marthe Salomon, a French girl. All were students at northern universities this past winter. Miss Thomas' especial friend, Miss Molsson, studied at St. Lawrence university in Canton, Maine. Although she is of Basque parentage, she was born in Shanghai, China, and has traveled over most of the world.

Miss Thomas became acquainted with the students at International House in New York before she came here.

Desiring to see America before they went home, the young people put their money together and bought a car and camping equipment. Starting at the St. Lawrence river, they went to Boston, New York, Washington, Savannah, and toured Florida. Miss Molsson said that Florida State campus was the most beautiful they had seen.

From here the group plans to go to New Orleans, Mexico, through the Grand Canyon to California, stopping at Los Angeles and San Francisco. They will then return to New York by way of Chicago and the Great Lakes, September nine they all will sail together on the liner Paris for Le Havre, France.

Geography Group To Have Meeting All Day Saturday

100 Persons Are Expected To Attend Session Here Tomorrow

Approximately 100 persons are expected to attend the Florida State Council of Geography Teachers which will convene here Saturday for its semi-annual session, according to M. Luther King, president.

Field Trip Scheduled

Saturday morning a field trip will be conducted for the purpose of studying map's adjustments to the natural environment of Leon county. The field trip is open to all who are interested in geography.

In the evening at 7:30 o'clock there will be a meeting in the Augusta Conradi theater at which time a summary of the field trip will be given and methods of planning a district excursions will be discussed. In addition a demonstration of visual aids to the teaching of geography will be given. It is not necessary to have gone on the field trip to be eligible to attend this meeting. Anyone who is interested is invited. The discussion will be directed by Henry F. Becker, head of the state college geography division, who is also acting in an advisory capacity to the organization.

Membership Is 400

The membership of the Florida Council of Geography Teachers consists of about 400 persons. Many of the members are in attendance at the summer session here at Florida State College for Women.

Officers, besides President King, vice-president, Mrs. Annie Davis Elkins, of Tarpon Springs; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Jon Gentry, Tallahassee, and chief corresponding secretary, Miss Gladys Foster, Pensacola.

Cap and Gown Received By Alumnae Secretary

An example of cooperation between Florida State and its alumnae was shown last week.

Mrs. R. H. Leslie, alumnae secretary, received a cap and gown through the mail from a state college graduate, Marie Nee, Miami, of the class of '34.

The owner said she wanted to lend it to the alumnae association for some worthy senior to wear.

Most of the seniors borrow or buy their caps and gowns which they wear all year to convocation and, of course, at such occasions as investiture, Class day, and for the Commencement activities. In many instances caps and gowns are handed down from sister to sister or from sorority from one girl to another.

Anita Leonard Elected Broward Hall Chairman

Anita Leonard was elected house chairman of Broward hall in the meeting of the junior council held Tuesday afternoon. She will take over the duties of Susan Fry on the first day.

The judicial council will hold a model court, with fictitious cases similar to ones, one of the students body in convocation, Tuesday at 12 o'clock.

Banquet Date is Changed

The date for the American Association of Childhood Education organization banquet planned for July 15 has been changed to July 21, since there will be a students-faculty dinner on the first date.

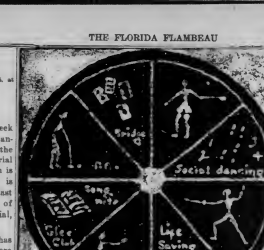
Are We Informed About Lynchings?

While Amelia Earhart has usurped this week the front page from other news sources, another item, local in character, has attracted my attention. It is concerning the trial of Robert Hinds, Apalachicola Negro, which is being held here in Tallahassee. Hinds is charged with attacking a white woman last winter. And with the trial has come talk of lynching, of racial prejudice, the right of trial, of mob emotion.

However sympathetic the average person has felt toward the safety of Miss Earhart, there has been an evident lack of kindliness toward the fate of the Negro, insofar as one can ascertain from conversations among students. It seems that students who are usually classed among the country's thinkers, by virtue of their educational opportunities, are prone to resort to wishful thinking along questions near at hand. They can clearly and unbiasedly comprehend a European situation or even one of national import, but they are apt to resort to traditional ways of thinking when faced with local problems, such as racial discrimination which in its turn brings up the question of lynching. The main quarrel with the people, including myself, is, that we are not informed. We talk in vague generalities of facts that we don't know to be true but which we accept as valid because we have heard others repeat the same phrases, high sounding words which are nevertheless full of pernicious lies and innocuous half-truths.

There are a multitude of facts concerning lynching for those who will take the trouble to find them. Arthur Raper who was on the campus last year and who is a professor of sociology at Agnes Scott after a survey in 1930 of lynching published a book, "The Tragedy of Lynching." This book was the result of a study he did as research head of the secretary of the commission on interracial cooperation. Another book on this subject is "Rope and Faggot." The Christian Century, Time, The Living Age, the New Republic, among other magazines have carried in the past to time pertinent facts about lynchings or lynching legislature.



Strangely enough the best writing about lynching lately comes from the pen of a student who was the editorial in the Purple and White, student publication of Millsaps college in Jackson, Tenn. We quote as follows:

"Arguments against lynching are unnecessary. Any sane person can realize that lynchings are no more than barbaric murders and are never justifiable. The fact that most people lynched have been Negroes proves the practice the most cowardly of acts. Eighty-one Negroes have been murdered by mobs simply because the frenzied rabble thought they had insulted a white person; the poor victims have died for bringing law suits against white men or for disputing a white man's word. One poor, defenseless Negro was lynched for having small pox.

"Contrary to the popular belief that lynchings are caused by rape charges, statistics show that only one-fourth of those entertained in the 'oecktie party' were accused of sex crimes. And a large number of lynchings claim as victims persons who are entirely guiltless.

"And yet some people sanction lynchings; some people eager to participate in them. Those who see no wrong in lynchings, those who take part in them, establish themselves just as guilty and possibly more savagely ignorant than the poor victim whom they murder.

"Certainly no one can deny that every citizen black or white is due a fair trial by jury as provided in the constitution. A mad mob cannot judge a person's guilt or prescribe his punishment. A mob has no mind, unless it's the insane mind of a power-crazed leader."

NEWS OF THE WEEK

IN REVIEW

By UNA UMPHREY

The president's compromise court plan seems to be causing an upset in the senate where it was introduced for better or for worse this week. Three senate senators threaten to stage a filibuster to slay the bill before the senate gets a chance to vote on it. Older heads look upon such tactics as decidedly juvenile, especially if advertised in advance. They say that such a move would show a lack of strength in the opposition and would benefit only those in favor of the bill. These older senators much prefer a court fight first and then a motion to send the bill back to committee where it will be sure to die silently. This plan is conceived to please those who don't want to vote against the president and yet are not in favor of the bill.

The opinion at the White House is that a filibuster is just the thing to swing the pendulum toward a more favorable attitude to the reform of the Supreme court.

Can it be done?

1—President Roosevelt this week ordered various heads of government bureaus to save 10 per cent of their appropriations to help balance the 1937-38 federal budget. Also, in view of the tax evasion further investigations the investigating committee is prepared to draft legislation designed to plug the more usable loopholes in the revenue laws. This legislation if carried out would add huge sums to the treasury if reports of investigating committees are true.

2—This week the senate voted on a wage bill designed to fix a minimum wage limit at $12 or $13 per week and a maximum week of from 36 to 44 hours. In addition President Roosevelt would be given the authority to increase the tariff 50 per cent if after investigation it appeared that the wage-hour act was harming an industry by cutting down its production.

3—A British commercial flying boat of Imperial airways and an American flying boat of Pan-American airways spanned the north Atlantic this week. One flew from east to west and the other from west to east. The purpose of the flights was to survey a route for regular service between England and the United States. Navigation enthusiasts see this survey as a forerunner of continent-to-continent air service.

Summer Scribblings

Always saying the wrong thing and getting somebody annoyed. This time it's some little old blonde (could tell by the way she dotted her i's). She wrote a fiery note of protest against the innocent little remark about blind dates to the effect that she and her Romeo on a blind date and couldn't help but find us a man if we didn't give her half a chance and a girl without a little something back is what's known as "spunk" in poltier circles and often described as the old "guts" and—et cetera. Pardon, madam, but we still feel that a girl's got to be mighty blind to enjoy a blind date.

While we're on the subject of blind let it be said that in these days of coeducation a lot of us are finding out that our swell roomie and that cute girl across the hall certainly have no qualms about double-crossing and the like and that Fair Play to them is just a horse's name.

The bet has to do with just where he'll strip himself of one of the annoyances of convention and take off his coat. He usually removes it in the vicinity of the second light post but there's just enough variation in his performance to make it all very exciting. Contempory Thought...

College Women Face a New Century

By Mildred H. McAfee

This year marks the end of the first hundred years of women in higher education, and since this is a women's college, a fitting time for progress, changes, and possible future of higher education for women, be given note.

Mildred H. McAfee in an article titled, "College Women Face a New Century" in the Journal of Forum, says that the problem is not one of existence, but of the possible threat to the quality of the educational opportunity offered to women.

Those who were instrumental in founding Mount Holyoke Seminary in 1837—the first women's college—had a cause. That cause runs the risk of losing some of its original assets. Women, in higher education, have worked to prove their equality—or possible superiority—to other educational groups, mostly men.

There is a scarcity value of education—as anything else—which may be lost when women take higher education for granted. The modern college woman knows she is one of a large social acceptable group, and therefore feels little pressure to justify her decision to go to college. She may just say, 'Everybody is doing it."

With the changing status of women in public life, there is presented a new problem to those interested in higher education. When women were socially inferior and politically disenfranchised, anybody cared what they believed or said as long as they behaved like ladies. Now, however, women must find themselves free to make decisions and express their ideas, and also more difficult to hold to their scholarship objectivity and impartial judgment and their intellectual idealistic standards for more practical considerations.

Students undertake to discover and discriminate in order to make their contribution. Once they are in school and on graduation become the carrier of such values. As discriminators, it is important that they be convinced of the worth of the write asks, "Who dares to argue that women can share this task?" She says they have and do.

When college women have comprehended the world as being old as time and wide as space, they will find it hard to be caught in a narrow-minded attitude, no matter how close they come to practical things, and if they can spread familiarity with values out into the world, there are never too many alumnae in public office.

Perhaps the first hundred years are the hardest, but "the second hundred years of women in higher education will be interesting and challenging enough to make life exhilarating for anyone interested in higher education for women—and men. —D. B.

Wanted: A National Lottery

By Anthony M. Turnao

According to authorities estimates more than $5,000,000,000 a year is invested by Americans in illegal lottery, so says A. M. Turnao in the July issue of the American Mercury.

According to the author, contrary to the general impression, the supposed immorality of sweepstakes is a sanctimonious concept of comparatively recent origin, recognized only in Anglo-Puritan nations.

Mr. Turnao goes on to say that ever since the first modern lottery was started at Bruges Christian nations have recognized the sale of chances and cash prizes as a harmless and easy system of voluntary taxation.

In our early history the business was considered so far beyond religious concern that Jefferson disposed of some acres by a lottery and Congress Washington purchased the first ticket in a lottery authorized by the Continental Congress to defray expenses of the Revolutionary War.

Then we came into the great wave of decency and morality which the Stowes dashed was impressed on all forms of diversion.

In our characteristic American response, churchmen and states banished lotteries by constitutional provisions.

The author, taking the current legal definition of lotteries, says, "Any contest because in which when it involves three elements (1) a consideration paid for participation, (2) a prize in money or other property, and (3) the winner must be determined by lot or chance."

Last year $6,000,000 was paid out to Mickey Mouse clubs. Some individual prizes alone ran as high as $2700.

This is only one of the many puzzle or lottery forms—Bank Night, picture puzzles, Irish hospital, and Kino are all among the most common known.

Mr. Turnao believes that the whole simple question of lotteries boils down to one point: Shall an irrepressible human impulse be exploited for the sole benefit of foreign and local racketeers, or shall it be legally protected, as a harmless source of pleasure, for the incidental benefit of the public treasury.—J. T.

Timitd Souls Unite To Organize Front

BY PETE McDONALD

The timid souls of the campus needs to you, realizing the safety of life among amazons without the guiding hand and discretion of numbers, met yesterday afternoon in the Union building to organize and thus present a more formidable front to the members of the opposite sex.

The club will not only protect but will also promote action in the direction of safety in numbers, shrinking, cringing, and other social accomplishments.

The following officers were elected: Pete McDonald, grand inquisitor; Jimmy Ballou, protector in embryo; Ellis Layton, guardian of the mystic scroll; Jack McCollum, guardian of the door mat.

The amoebas include: Hurley Agrovard, Collins, Pewter, Hudson, McMullin, Peadin, Sanders, Vases, Hall, King, Hall, Strickland, Williams, Priest, and Kendrick.

Those interested in any of the above is asked to get in touch the grand inquisitor since all girls must be approved list. The organization is also considering starting a column of advice to the lovelorn. The name which is Please Notice Me." The policy is to be ably represented by Dr. Fisher of Plaster of Paris.

Annuals Available Beginning of Week

The Flastacowo for 1937 will be available to all students eligible to receive them Monday and Tuesday, according to Miss Lonnie Richardson, chairman of the Flastacowo copy committee. More than 1,000 copies are ready to be mailed to students in the state.

Those eligible to receive annuals may get them at the supply store in the northwest corner of the Wescott building. It will be necessary to have each student to whom an annual is due call in person for it, as no one will be given another student's book. The supply store will be open Monday, from 2:30 to 4:30 o'clock, and on Tuesday, from 2:30 to 3:30 o'clock.

ers of the same color in groups. The lines should be varied with ones of heavier growth which should not be combined. For instance roses and gladiolas should not be used together or a delicate flower with a coarse flower.

Roses, more than any other flowers, look their best in crystal. Their stems, Mrs. Saynor said, which are very attractive with the red thorns should not be hidden. In using transparent vases, they are more attractive if the level of the water is visible. For crystal, only roses and delicate colors should be chosen, she said, and added that silver is appropriate also for roses.

Graceful material should not be put in receptacles of heavy weight, Mrs. Saynor established. She also said that coarse flowers in heavy containers are not suitable for finely polished furniture. Appropriate for a dining table for fine cut crystal, while the coarse flowers are used in pottery containers.

In arranging lilies, she directed that their foliage always be used, never with fragile fern. Brass and smooth pottery are suitable for calla lilies. In hot weather many of the leaves of flowers decay faster than the stems and for that reason should be cut off especially in the case of marigolds and zinnias. A little charcoal, she also said, added to the water will sweeten it.

Cut Leaves Before Turning

We should consider choice in selecting flowers for patients," Mrs. Saynor pointed out. Flowers of dazzling colors, she warned, would not be restful. A more delicate choice would be better adapted to the purpose.

Concerning leaves, the speaker said that for winter the fall leaves live longer if cut just before turning. If put in water they turn to magnificent tones of bronze, scarlet and wine. Toad stools arranged in wooden bowls

EARNING ONE'S WAY HAS ITS DRAWBACKS

Dining Room Girl Still Likes Work Of Serving Tables

"Just leave the knife on the floor," said the lady to her neighbor. "The waitress will pick it up and set you another one."

Hastily I set down my tray of hot tea and coffee cups and made sure from the hem of milady's evening dress. Back through the pantry and beyond to the end of the long kitchen I went to find a clean knife in one of the silverware trucks. When I returned all irate elderly woman plucked at my sleeve and demanded "I want my buttermilk."

Drawbacks

Simultaneously a heavily painted young school teacher snarled, "Well, don't we get any butter today?"

And so it goes. It has its drawbacks, this business of earning one's way through college. Even I received my first scholarship, awarded on the basis of scholarship, character, leadership and worthiness, I was filled with a noble purpose. How I could help shoulder the responsibility of my education and relieve my parents of much of their strain and sacrifice.

I like work. Strange as this may seem coming from a member of the pleasure-seeking younger generation, working gives me a large measure of satisfaction. It makes me self-confident to know that my services are desired and needed. My grades have improved remarkably since my mind and are attractive and form an odd decoration.

An interesting procedure was outlined by the speaker for Thanksgiving table arrangements. She directed that nandina berries be painted gold and silver, with some of the natural berries added to spots. After one has arranged a bowl with a variety of fruits these red berries touched up with silver and gold are placed between the fruit. The edge of the bowl is touched up with yellow berries, if available. Mrs. Saynor said that the decorator will find that all the colors harmonize.

As her finishing suggestion the speaker recommended for the kitchen earthen pots and baskets filled with parsley, water-cress and tops of carrots.

Children Hear Stories

Last Tuesday Miss Maude Schwalmere held a story hour for the fifth and sixth grade children out on the lawn of the demonstration school.

The story hour will be continued next Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

been relieved from worry about finances. It gives me a sense of security to hear the shrill ringing of my alarm clock at 6:30 every morning I hurry in and out of an icy shower, hastily dress and run to the dining room. Quickly I set my two tables, section twenty grapefruit, and eat my breakfast.

Back to the Pantry

At 7:30 my sleepy-eyed, grouchy guests arrive, some mumbling a half-hearted "g'mornin," and many more grunting as to see if everything is on the table. After the blessing I must go to the pantry for cocoa and hot tea, back again for biscuits and butter, and then to the kitchen to push out the food-laden truck. After I despoil the scorching hot bacon platter among the glasses, cups, fruit, and cereal dishes inconsiderately shoved into the center of the table, and place the hot coffee pot at the foot of the table, I must return to the pantry for "seconds" on cereal, cream, and biscuits. Then I must get extra cocoa and tea for people who have changed their minds about their orders. "Those little green pitchers are so cute I think I'll take two ice tea instead of one."

Finally comes the period of waiting. For what seems like hours I stand and watch people chew and hear their shallow gossipy chatter. Occasionally I wink or make a face at the girl whose tables are across the aisle from mine, but that is my only diversion. At five minutes before 8 I begin to remove fruit and cereal dishes and cups and take all the food back to the pantry. Then I hang up my apron, emblem of the waitress, and run to my 8 o'clock class.

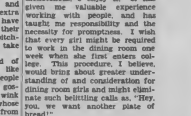
Dinner is Hardest

Noon brings a repetition of the monotonous mechanical, efficiency of the food mill. If the girl cannot set my tables, push out the truck, serve the steaming food while the perspiration runs down my arms and legs, get second, third, fourth, and even fifth servings of bread. The only difference is that at noon I carry hot tea, sweet milk and buttermilk instead of hot tea, coffee, and cocoa.

Dinner is the hardest meal to serve. I report to work at 8 o'clock and rarely leave the dining room before 8. It is at night that the trays are the heaviest, the waiting the longest, and the guests most inconsiderate. Thoughtless people have toyed with their food and talked for 45 minutes while I stood swaying faint with hunger by my serving table.

Although the work is hard and monotonous, I enjoy it. It has given me valuable experience working with people and has taught me responsibility and the necessity for promptness. I wish that every girl might be required to work in the dining room one week when she first enters college. This procedure, I believe, would bring about greater understanding of and consideration for dining room girls and might eliminate such belittling cries as "Hey, you, we want another plate of bread!"

87 Students Given Chance to Do Work



During this summer session eighty-seven students are employed in various types of work on the campus in order to help pay their expenses.

Dining room scholarships are held by thirty-nine students. Some are assigned to the trucks that bring food from the kitchen to the dining room. Each of the others set up two tables and serve the food to those tables.

There are five assistants in the pantry, six in the dormitory offices, one in the post office, and thirty-six employed in various departments. These students receive weekly salaries.

Women Do Not Marry As Much As Sisters

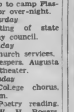
By MARY NOBLE

Do college women marry? It has been assumed that they do. It has been stated that they don't. Are we, as college women lessening our chances of having a "vine covered cottage" and a family of our own by aspiring for a degree? That is the question.

Statistics from an article by Henry R. Carey in the North American Review gives the percentage of graduates of some of the leading colleges who marry: Vassar 55.5 per cent, Smith 50.1 per cent, and Bryn Mawr 48.1 per cent. Why are these figures the typical American colleges so low?

They Don't Think They Marry

It's not that we don't want to get married. Is it then because we are undriven? Unkindly given? Indifferent? Hardly. Is it because when we come to college we lose contact with the boys we used to know? Because we become so preoccupied with the thought of careers and jobs that we place marriage in the background temporarily? Or because men are so anxious to keep the upper hand that they have had all through the ages that they won't marry their intellectual equals? Probably all of these reasons contribute to the appalling results. I don't know. I can only theorize.



When a freshman enters college gates for the first time, suitcase in hand with sandals starry-eyed looking at the vast buildings before her, and in that moment she resents her ambitions to herself. She will work in college; she will graduate; she will graduate; she will get a job or start on her career—and maybe when she has decided that she is able to earn a living, some day she'll get married. But she isn't preparing most in her mind—however, she will be a wife and mother—some day. As she goes through college the thought stays with her—she'll get married some day. Her friends that stayed home get married as their economic status permits. The ambitious one is not entirely in a rut. She goes to Gainesville; she has dates, but the boys she knows are struggling for an education and an opening in the business world. They aren't able to get married for a long time. Miss Ambitious graduates. She has a job teaching school in her home town. She plans to marry some day—but does she? Often not. She has a job. She is independent. She has an apartment with another girl. There is no man that she is particularly interested in, and if there is, nine times out of ten he is besotted by his affections on some empty-headed little girl who makes him feel sure that she is the most wonderful man in the world. School teachers aren't convincing at all. It is simply that they, too, are wonderful. They, too, are earning a living so why does that make the man any better than they are? Men don't go for that. They are too conceited.

Maybe Man Is Wrong

If college women live alone and like it, my hat is off to them. If they prefer the freedom of self support to being tied down to a routine of housework and child bearing; that is their business, and that makes it obvious that woman's domestic tendencies are being replaced by the desire for the glamour of a career. If so is often the case, with a college degree, a woman can't find a man she would like to marry, then something must be wrong with the male of the species that he can't meet the standards imposed by the weaker sex.

I want to get married—most of us want to. It is certain that by coming to college we will have a richer, fuller life, single or married. It is also certain that by spending four years in a time-honored institution the "vine-covered cottage" becomes more unattainable. Will we achieve it, or will we be among the contented Misses? Time alone will tell.

Gym-Cracks

By MARIE JOFFRE

The Fourth of July week-end was an active one, for some people, anyway. A group of faculty and students made the much advertised trip to Carrabelle on Saturday, and from all reports, it was quite a success. Excitement was provided by the Sunstrand rain cloud that persisted in following the boat load of friends wherever they had prepared for a hot, sunny day by wearing long sleeves, slacks, sweaters, and all the other necessary paraphernalia. The bathing gave up and put on bathing suits!

Three fishes were caught incidentally, by the way. Shoreham's young nephew was responsible for one of them. Even greater success was had by the more ambitious cooks who were in their glory when they had fish to make a beach. They must have found many new specimens, for enthusiasm was high.

Another ambitious group, eager to really celebrate the holiday, planned a hike out to some place for lunch and a swim. After taking the right roads almost all the way, they had to hike out to their last choice and included a neat little three-mile hike in their program before they finally reached camp. The only thing that saved

Snapshot Contest Opens

Monday, July 12, a snapshot contest will begin on Florida State college campus.

The purpose will be a roll of films to fit the winner's camera and free development and printing of one roll.

The only requirement is that the snapshots must have been taken since summer school began.

Those interested in competing may mail their prints to or have them in room 426 Gilchrist by next Thursday noon.

their peace of mind was the fact that the lake was in sight.

Although they had gone with the intention of hiking both ways, they had more than a weak hope that the once truck would make its regular 5 o'clock trip and they would be able to include themselves in the number of passengers. Imagine their chagrin when they discovered that the parties at camp would not return to school until the next morning. Well they finally got back, but with sunburn, tired muscles, and other complications to contend with. We have reached the conclusion that they are just a bunch of sissies—so they have decided to do it again some day, now, in an effort to toughen up!

It really is a lot of fun, so they say, and we recommend it for whatever ails you. I think I get their point of view. It seems that you set so tired from the hike that you are bound to forget everything else the matter before. Not bad, eh?

If you like gruesome sights, come up to the physical education office some Tuesday or Thursday afternoon between 4.30 and 6 p. m. The First Aid class has been working on bandages and it really is something to watch. Splints will come next and that should be even better!

All volleyball, basketball, and archery enthusiasts will be interested to know that the physical education department has been receiving many additions of new equipment, and there is still more to come.

What's the matter, tap dancers? Can't you take it? Lib Lounds reports a decrease in attendance and hopes that it is just temporary.

Coming events: Boat trip to St. Marks on July 10. See bulletin board in lower Westcott Building. Boat trip to Carrabelle and other points on July 24. See bulletin board for further information and paper on which to sign if you wish to go.

Investigation Finds 60 of Cist Enrolled In FSC are Teachers

Of the 946 summer students enrolled in Florida State college, 60 or 63 per cent are school teachers and of this number 275 are married and 26 are men students, according to a survey made this week.

The largest age group is the 20-year-olds who number 100. The runners-up are students 21 years of age, 84 in number; 19-year-olds who are 83 strong; and there are 62 22-year-olds. This fact can be explained because many winter students come to summer school also and because many students with two-year degrees who have been teaching are coming to continue work on higher degrees.

The age limit at one end is 17 years, while that at the 16-year-old student registered. Further investigation found that a mother and son and a man and wife are enrolled for the summer session.

Probably the strangest fact brought to light through this survey was that 37 students listed their birth dates in 1937, making them mere infants.

Poetical Thought

THE SNAIL.

I wish that I might, like a snail
Carry, as I passed, a silver trail
Along my way.

As humbly, crawling endlessly
The shining silver trail we see
That marks his way.

So as we struggle through the Winning sure fame, or unsung
Along life's way.

And if the end we cannot tell,
Nor whether we build ill or well,
As on we go.

It matters not the trail is there,
All shining silver, bright and fair,
Where we have gone.

Methodists Will Leave Today for Camp Visit

The Methodist students who are attending the summer session will leave for camp Flastacowo with Miss Wimberly on Friday at 4:30 o'clock and will return Saturday afternoon.

The subject that Miss Davis will talk on next Sunday morning in Sunday school is "What Must I Believe About the Bible?" Mary Claire Rimbell will be the leader of league Sunday evening.

Culberson to Speak

The pastor of the Christian church, the Rev. Hugh Culberson, will speak at Vespers Sunday at 7:15 o'clock. His subject will be "The Light of Life." A solo will be sung by Lois Bowen.

Urged to Meet Cars

All the college students who wish to attend the Presbyterian Young People's league are urged to meet the cars which will come to take them to the church immediately after supper Sunday evening. League will begin at 7:15 o'clock.

By POLLY EVERETT

The zoology department of the Florida State College is fast becoming a zoo.

Since the beginning of summer school an amazing collection of animals has been added to the laboratory by people who have facilities to care for the creatures they found.

Miss Elizabeth Thompson, instructor in speech, was the donor. She brought a baby rattlesnake which she found in back yard.

A pocket gopher, often erroneously called a salamander, was on the Stark Farm near Lake Iamonia when found. It is a destructive rodent which lives underground making the small runways seen along Florida roadsides. The animal lives on starchy roots, cutting them off just as the roots and ruining the plant.

Miss Rachel Pitchford, public library director, found a snake crawling into the men's lavatory in the Westcott building. Practically she called Miss Ruth Devinney, who removed the creature to the laboratory.

Another "snake," caught Miss Elizabeth Lyons, instructor in physics, on the Gulf shore boulevard, proved to be a mouse.

Miss Katherine Morrison, head of the physical education department, captured a rare pigmaea crab over the trip. She planned to eat it but Miss Devinney claimed it for laboratory.

The latest addition to the list is a three-foot alligator brought in by Percy Underwood, a student. The reptile is still alive and Miss Devinney dead, and his task represents a table in the zoology laboratory.

Paging through the books now on display in the library is like looking at two hand daguerreotypes. The editor carries out the theme of "Old Yesterdays."

Also there are best sellers yesterday. Most of these remain among best sellers. probably will continue to be for nurses with many when modern prize books have gone into decline on sales. There is "The Fair," "Thrush in the Leaning Glass," "David Copperfield," and mostly "Little Men" and "Little Women," which will never grow old.

Dormitory Matrons Leave for Holiday Period of 4 Weeks

Different Group Assumes Duties for Rest Of This Term

Following four weeks of summer school service the house matrons of the three dormitories, Carrie Gilchrist and Reynolds left this week for vacation trips throughout the United States in their places are taking the winter session staff of assistant matrons who have just returned from a four-weeks' holiday.

Visiting Children

Mrs. Margaret Saynor of Bryan is visiting her sister in Copeland, Fla., and Mrs. Josephine Gray, also of Bryan, is visiting her son in Richmond, Va. They have been replaced by Mrs. Lollie Gregory of Tallahassee, and Ida Rowan who has been acting in Biloxi, Miss., and New York city.

Mrs. Levey and Mrs. Mellanie Turner of Gilchrist motored as far as Richmond together. Mrs. Turner is going on to Baltimore where she will be the guest of her sister, Miss Rose Denmark. Mrs. Levey of Gilchrist is combining her visit with relatives with sightseeing. She will visit in Jacksonville Atlanta, Nashville, Chattanooga and Montreat, N. C., before returning in the fall.

Miss Rowan Leaves

Taking the place of Miss Denmark and Mrs. Gregory at Reynolds are Miss Katharine Byrd and Miss Esther Pumphrey. Miss Byrd has returned from attending Kappa Delta sorority convention in Richmond and Miss Wadkins. Mrs. Ferguson has been visiting in Demorest, Ga., Jackson and Miami.

Mrs. Flossie Curry of Reynolds will leave today on a vacation trip to a short time with relatives. Among Miss Maude Andrews is Continued on Page Three

Library Shelf Exhibit Now on Display Rivals That of Mistress Mary

Mistress Mary Quite Contrary with all her cockle shells and silver bells and have had a more pleasant display than those now on exhibit in the library. But besides the books about fairly, reading the way from the great cockle to the yellow and rose cockle, there is a section devoted to interesting seashells.

The little Chinese alphabet which resembles a scroll, and the Australian fails into lines which approximate Chinese characters, being in appearance. The pectunculus sinuspa, a darling of the angel family, make a colorful display with their delicate basic pink orange, violet, yellow.

Finally the gray and white Roman venerupis, which look like butterflies with their wings outstretched. It is hard to believe ever thought that there are fairies in the sea with shells as beautiful as those of the lucky oyster and the chest rock shell.

You will find many other shells such as the ear shell, the cat's eye, the purple dwarf and the conch shell. Slightly less realistic are the angel wing and the paper wing shell.

The display has been arranged with a collection of shells lent to the library by Miss Etta Lane Stevens.

The bulletin board is attractive, with a vacation poster, and Miss Veneh's printed suggestions for vacation reading under numerous topics such as religion, science, mystery, biography, travel, and fiction.

Last Distribution Of Annuals Monday

For those students who are eligible to receive a Flastacowo and who were not able to call for it at the hours of distribution this week Miss Louise Richardson announces that the distribution room will be open on Monday from 12 to 12:25 o'clock noon. This room is the supply store in the northwest corner of the Westcott building. Approximately 1200 copies of the annual are being mailed to students throughout the state this week.

Zoology Division Given Bird Skins

Presentation Comes From Travis Collection

Dr. Bernard V. Travis, of the bureau of entomology located at Pondhala plantation near Thonasville, has presented the zoological department at Florida State college with approximately 1,000 specimens of bird skins from his collection. The birds are mounted on wooden cylindrical tubes ready for study and display.

Birds in the collection that migrate into Florida include: Wilson's phalarope, cowbird, Swainson's sparrow, swallow, least flycatcher, blue-winged teal, loggerhead shrike, red-eyed vireo, and screech owl.

The following birds that build their nests in Florida, were given: immature coot, least bittern, hairy woodpecker, and red-bellied woodpecker.

Mr. Travis gave the laboratory specimens to be used in Florida. Among them are: snow bunting, northern bobwhite, ring-necked pheasant, and a male ring-necked Continued on page four

League to Have Services

The Presbyterian Sunday evening church services will be in charge of the Presbyterian Young People's League, Elisabeth Finch will lead the devotional part of the service, while Walter DeMilly will speak on "Prayer." The young people's choir will be directed by Mrs. W. A. Davis and Miss Betty Johnson will act as pianist. Cars will come out to the college for those who care to go to the evening services at 7:45 o'clock.

FLORIDA STATE GRADUATE LIVES ON "TREASURE ISLAND" WHERE SHE TEACHES CHILDREN IN ONLY ENGLISH SCHOOL

By AGNES MARTIN

—And she lives happily on Treasure Island.

Treasure Island, almost like a fairy story, but this is the situation of Miss Ruth Robertson, a graduate of Florida State college who is now teaching on Treasure Island, the Isle of Pines for further study at her alma mater.

Teaches Children English

After receiving her degree from F. S. C. W. Miss Robertson entered the Baptist Training school at Louisville, Ky., where she graduated with the degree of master in religious education. She was offered a position in the Isle of Pines and accepted it, seeing in it opportunities for mission work When asked if she enjoyed her work, Miss Robertson replied, "I could teach in Florida, but I have been so happy in my work that I expect to return in the fall."

Miss Robertson spoke interestingly of her school. She has charge of the primary work and in addition teaches all the children of the school how to speak English. Many of them have a knowledge of the English language but by the time they reach the grade for which they are prepared.

This is the only American school on the island and although it is supported by an English colony, Miss Robertson states that not more than three American citizens are enrolled. Practically every nationality is represented. In addition to a very small number of children of strictly Spanish extraction, there are German, French, Spanish, Swedish, Italian, English, Scotch, Canadian, Japanese, and Chinese pupils.

In telling of some of the incidents which have occurred to her, she mentioned the way in which the school children used to treat animals. If a dog or cat should happen to stray on the school grounds, the boys and girls would stone the animal to death unless a teacher interfered. They are not by nature sympathetic toward pets as American children are, she added: "Kindness to animals is one of the attitudes we try to encourage."

And now the reason for the island's being called "Treasure Island".

Parrots Are Found

Years ago, the Spanish Pirates used this little West Indian island as a base where they buried their treasures. The leading family on the island at the present time discovered thousands of dollars worth of treasures. Today there are those who still have hopes of unearthing gold and precious jewels. They are living in poverty, hoping that their treasure hunts may prove successful. Treasure hunting, however, Continued on page three

Geography Council Advocates Better Land-Use Program

Resolution Is Drawn Up Following Meeting Here Last Week

Yesterday the Florida Council of Geography Teachers, following a meeting here on Saturday, went on record as favoring an education and legislative program "which will eventually assure a better land-use policy in Florida." This action came as a result of discussion at the meeting on the problems of utilization of Florida's 10 million acres of idle land.

Resolution Drawn

In a resolution drawn up by the council and legislative committee headed by M. Luther Kling, Miami, the council called attention to "millions of acres of idle land, tax delinquent land, and other lands which present problems of land-use readjustment" and states that there must be expected a more definite policy of land-use readjustment."

At the meeting of the council's semi-annual session, Henry P. Becker, head of the geography division at Florida State college, told members that Florida's "most serious problem is the subjugation of her 10 million acres of idle land."

Out of the about 35 million acres of land in Florida, at least 10 millions is "idle land," Becker said, this mostly flat, pine woods land with poor drainage.

In many cases such land has almost been "logged off" for its timber and like resources leaving "stranded population" to try to make a living from farming or land unsuited for that purpose, he pointed out.

Legislation Needed

Reforestation is the answer to such timber-cut land, he said, but until some legislation is Continued on page four

College to Spend Money on Repairs

$40,000 Improvements Are Being Started

Approximately $40,000 will be spent for repairs and improvements at Florida State College for Women during the next few weeks. The administration is preparing for what is expected to be a record size fall enrollment. This was announced by J. G. Eidson, business manager of the college.

The largest single item of the improvements will be installation of a boiler at the power house plant. This will relieve the two already overloaded boilers furnishing additional heat in time of emergency or upon the construction of new buildings on the campus. All the college dormitories, class rooms, offices as well as the dining hall, gymnasium and infirmary, at Florida State college are steam heated, insuring comfort with any sudden change of weather.

Other repairs and improvements will involve construction of new fireproof roofs at the college demonstration school, nurses cottage and Reynolds hall, which have been very much needed and which work has been held up prior to this time owing to lack

Plans Being Made For Graduation And Baccalaureate

Holland and Culberson Will Be Speakers At That Time

Plans for the twenty-fourth annual summer school commencement are underway, an announcement of the two speakers for graduation events comes from Dr. Edward Conradi, dean.

Holland to Speak

Senator Spessard L. Holland of Bartow will deliver the graduation address and Rev. Gerald Culberson, pastor of the Capitol Christian church of Tallahassee, will preach the baccalaureate sermon. This service will be at 11 o'clock Aug. 1, while the graduation exercises are scheduled for 9 o'clock the morning of Aug. 6.

Approximately 140 people will receive two-year and four-year degrees, 40 in the first division and 66 in the second division, at the termination of this session. In addition five masters' degrees will be awarded at this time. Four of these are masters of arts and one master of science.

Alumnae Plans Party

In the school of arts and sciences nine will receive A.B. degrees, one a B.S., two a B.S. in commerce. In the school of education 29 A.B. degrees will be awarded and 15 B.S. degrees. The home economics department will give five B.S. degrees and one B.S. in nursing. Ten of those who will receive two-year certificates will go into the junior high school work and 59 in elementary.

The Alumnae association of the college will entertain in honor of the summer graduating class for graduation July 23 from 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock in the garden of Gilchrist hall. Miss Mary Lois Gill will be in charge of the function.

Janitor Finds 'Possum But It Escapes During Taking of Photograph

A baby 'possum hanging onto the banisters in the top floor of the Westcott building was what a janitor found early yesterday morning while he was going about his chores in the college cloisters.

The 'possum, estimated to be about three months old, was turned over to the zoology department and kept in a barrel on view for awhile. Plans were made to turn it loose on the campus, it is said.

The creature made its escape earlier than was planned, however. It got away while having its picture made outside the building.

The animal, which resembled a large rat, is of the order Marsupialia comprising the lowest existing mammals except the Monotremes (duck-billed and the echidnas).

The 'possum episode recalled other instances when small animals have been found in the campus buildings. About three years ago a raccoon was discovered on the floor of the West-cott building, and rabbits have been seen on other occasions, outside.

Pledge Service Held

Pledge service for the newly elected members of Kappa Delta Pi was held Monday night in the library of the Demonstration school. The officers presiding over these ceremonies were Mrs. Dora Skipper, president; Miss Edith Griffin, vice president, and Miss Florence Tryon, councilor. They were assisted by Dean Ralph Eyman.

S. K. Ratcliffe
Views Changing South

Last November Florida State college was visited by S. K. Ratcliffe, English lecturer, who talked to reasonably sized audiences of students and faculty members on conditions in Europe, particularly those of England. And now in the July issue of Contemporary Review, conservative English monthly, is an article by Dr. Ratcliffe, an article that strikes home to us southerners or even those of us who "live" in the South. Entitled "The Changing American South," this article is a clear analysis of the South by one who is able to stand off and view the situation with an impartial eye.

"The New South," Dr. Ratcliffe writes, "is a product of forces that have been operating with increasing weight for little more than a quarter of a century. The results make a remarkable spectacle today and offer a fascinating field for social study." He deplores the exploitation of labor in Southern industry and the continuance of approximate serfdom of the cotton farmers and sharecroppers but contends that while there is no strong force of public opinion in the new South that "the accident of birth and environment of the unfortunate therefore seem to be thrust chiefly upon the men and women who are responsible for the institutions of higher education and upon those increasingly the community life must depend."

In the light of his experience as a lecturer for the Institution of International Education, New York city, to 18 colleges and universities in the "Deep South" Dr. Ratcliffe gives his impressions of higher education in the south, of which there was an "agreeable variety." It is hard for us to realize, we especially who are in the very midst of educational endeavor, that the South's educational field is considered as backward as many of its other social institutions. So it comes a little baldly when he says that although he was warned not to expect the interested audiences of the north-ern and western colleges provided as a matter of course that he was pleasantly surprised. He adds that no speaker "could wish for a better hearing than these students aroused to a visiting lecturer, and if some of the questions asked in public and private disclosed wide spaces of ignorance concerning England and Europe, why need we be surprised? What degree of knowledge upon American affairs of Asiatic would a speaker look for in an audience of English graduates?" he kindly asks.

And Dr. Ratcliffe gives the "backward South" encouragement when he notes that the interest is here and that a "larger and larger number of students are demanding and receiving instruction in world movements as in the history of government, the play of economic forces and the possible agencies for keeping the peace." He was a little amazed at the continued social power of the church, either through the denominational institutions or by the church organizations on the campus of state institutions, groups that dictate to a great extent the life of the student.

The article is well worth reading, for whether it is an entirely valid evaluation of conditions in the South it is an interesting study of the sincere reactions of a foreigner to our section of the country, a place that we usually consider invulnerable to criticism.

NEWS OF THE WEEK
IN REVIEW

By UNA UMPHREY

For a time a split between President Roosevelt and John Lewis of the C.I.O. was expected due to the fact that both seemed to be irritated with each other. The president thought Lewis too aggressive and Lewis considered the president too luke warm in giving his support to the C.I.O. program. The opinion now held is that such a break will not take place since there is no hope for peaceful relations between the American Federation of Labor and C.I.O. That being the case the C.I.O. must rely on its own activities and organization, and cannot afford to have the president against it, at least not for some time. On the president's side, the reason for not splitting is obvious. The C.I.O. and the Labor's Nonpartisan league, a semi-subsidiary of C.I.O., were most important factors in Roosevelt's campaign organization last year and he will need them again in the congressional elections of 1938. Right now he needs their support to carry through the court and wage-hour bill. It will be interesting to watch and see if what form government will cooperate with C.I.O. since cooperation there must be.

This week the Spanish crisis has reached its most ominous point so far. Great Britain has announced that she is amassing guns and equipment and preparing in general for any emergency that might arise. France has withdrawn from the system of frontier control set up by neutrals and threatens independent action, which means aid to loyalists in men and supplies. Italy would counter this with open support to the insurgents. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, has sent drafts of his "last chance" neutrality plans to 26 other European nations in another attempt to avert a general European war.

The other day one of our dignified seniors celebrated her coming of age in a big way and bragged to us all about how she was now a mature woman; and then late that night we heard her voice floating through the window —and nobody who is not barefoot can play! ! ! ! The staff has been getting critician left and right and so we submit the following poem in hopes that it may bring about a little more understanding on the part of our readers.

The typographic error is a slippery thing and sly;
You hunt till you are dizzy, but it somehow will get by.
Tho' forms are off the presses it is strange how still it keeps;
It shrinks down in a corner, and it never shirks or peeps.
The typographic error, too small for human eyes,
Till the ink is off the paper, then it grows to mountain size.
The "ed," she snares with horror, then she grabs her hair and groans;
The copy readers drop their heads upon their hands and moan.
The remainder of the issue may be clean as clean can be—
But the typographic error is the only thing you see.

Contempory Thought...

The Riddle of Russia
By Walter Duranty

In this week's New Republic, Walter Duranty answers the question, "What lies behind the recent events in the U.S.S.R.?"

The article, "The Riddle of Russia," divides the Kremlin-Opposition conflict into three successive periods. The first period, lasting from 1923 to January, 1926, is called the Open Controversy period. The second phase began in 1926 to the until 1934, this period of reconciliation when Trotsky supporters turned back to the Kremlin and were restored, in some instances, to high offices.

During this time Trotsky was exiled to the Island of Prinkipo in the Bosphorus, preparing a secret campaign against the government in Russia, and founding the Fourth International and raising funds by writing. In 1932 he went to France where he was freer to carry on his preparations for the attack on the "Kremlin.

The beginning of the third and present chronological phase was marked by the assassination of Kirou, one of Stalin's closest henchmen.

The development of the opposing faction in the Russian government during the three things, namely, the character and ability of Trotsky, the international situation (with special reference to Germany and Japan), and the circumstances in Russia.

The hostility of Germany and Japan to Russia is not a secret. Several times in the years 1935 and 1933, war between Japan and Russia seemed hung on a thread. Likewise in Germany Hitler has declared his determination that Germany should atone for her defeat in the world war by an "eastward expansion" at the expense of the U.S.S.R. In 1936 Japan and Germany signed a pact of mutual cooperation against Bolshevism which is recognized as the preliminary step to some joint action. Japan's aggressiveness has been shown by the United State's recognition of the U. S. S. R., and demonstrated toward China. Germany has turned her attention toward setting up a puppet fascist government (in conjunction with Italy) in Spain as the first step toward the rich deposits of iron, copper, and other minerals.

The trials and investigations in Russia, beginning with the trial of Zinoviev and Kamenev, and continuing to that of generals last month are a part of a continuous process which has revealed those steps by which Germany and Japan have tried to use Trotsky and foreign enemies of Russia have combined with strongest incentive and opportunity to cooperate with opposition groups in Russia by the hundreds of German and Japanese spies in the Soviet state, as also Russian spies in Germany and Japan, making possible a large, well disaffected elements with a view to sabotage—D. Uncle Sam's House of Wonders
By James W. Holden

In an article by James W. Holden in the July issue of the Review of Reviews we read that the national bureau of standards laboratories in Washington possesses a machine that could push a locomotive to scrap iron in one motion another so sensitive it can weigh a wisp of cigarette smoke. One machine does everything but walk, all day long on floor coverings, while another busily tears silk stockings apart.

Mr. Holden writes that it is the greatest accumulation of miscellaneous apparatus ever brought together, in one place, for one purpose to maintain absolute standards of quality and quantity throughout the United States.

Historically, the creation of the bureau of standards marked the end of an era of confusion. Even after the signing of the Constitution inventors still used the old standards obtained from England in Colonial days. However, there were wide variations between the standards in different parts of the country.

The author continues to write in his article that John Quincy Adams recommended a new standard house of representatives in 1821, which still regarded as the best summary of weights and measures up to date.

The French metric system which was made legal in 1866 has been modified to serve as our measurement standard today.

Today the bureau has technicians in every field of science and industry. Research in the bureau's has varied that they have taken up nine miles of divisions with seventy sections. They have striven so delicate that they are able to measure the pressure on an "I". They apply the same unwavering accuracy to measuring heat.

One of the most important phases of the bureau is its quest for the ultimate standards of quality as the next time you make a purchase remember you owe its quality to the bureau of standards.—J. T.

Inquiring Reporter

Editor's note: Since the proposed reorganization of the Inquiring reporter's column as presented earlier in the year by President Campbell and Dean Conner has recently been amended; suggestions have been the main issue before the Congress of the United States this year, the Inquiring Reporter chose this subject as the topic for this week's question. Some people were also asked their opinion on the likelihood of the bills ever being adopted if they should have been added to the proposed list's heavy history. Senator Thomas one of President Roosevelt's staunchest supporters in this many other measures, is dead.

Question: Do you think the President's present plan for Supreme court reform is good policy?

Dr. W. H. Rogers: "No. I think there is too much sound opinion, not only in political circles but throughout the country."

Juliette Russell: "No. Because I would consider it unconstitutional custom. Such a move is very much like the case would be particularly difficult."

Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews: "I don't know about that. Politically, but I think that sooner or later the president will win out."

Evelyn Hammond: "No. Because the public is not sufficiently stirred over the present Supreme Court." Perhaps. The writer has to a chance where they had none whatever."

Dr. Mark H. DeGraff: "The public is sooks and thinks there is a chance in the world for it to go through."

Senator and a close friend and supporter of the president and his plans is expected to cause more trouble in Washington. The matter of choosing a new leader has also stirred some of the senators to some time because it was expected that Robinson would have been appointed to the Supreme court bench. Now the question is immediate and an important one. The choice of senate leader is powerful as the leader often helps formulate and carry out plans. The conservative wing of the democratic party want to get one of their number and with the influence so gained hope to wrest control of the administration from the "New Dealers." The opinion of some observers in court that as good as dead now Mr Robinson was using all his powerful influence back of President Roosevelt denies that the United States is planning to call a world economic conference to find a cure for the ills of the world. Some people had hoped that such a conference would settle European difficulties and avoid not all existing hard feelings. If Mr. Roosevelt were a dictator this might happen but he can't reach into his pocket or hat and pull out a neat little plan that would settle jealousies and the contentions of a Europe in which factions are intent on maintaining or changing the present balance of power. Past events have proven that Europe is not ready for settlements that do not involve more excitement than conferences.

The trouble long brewing between North China provinces and Japan has finally broken into actual conflict. Japanese troops have crossed northern Chinese lines and the shelling of the ancient city of Peiping has already begun. Japan insists that she will tolerate no outside interference in the quarrel but that the two nations concerned will settle their differences between themselves. Just what hostility arose over the Japanese attempts of economic exploitation of North China and the resistance of the Chinese to these inroads is carried on usually in secrecy. The government has forbidden the removal of any treasure which might remain on the island. But Treasure Island it continues to be.

Where there are pirates, there are parrots. Gem specimens of these colorful birds are found on the island. Every family has his pet parrot. However, the bird is not caged. His wings are merely clipped so that his flight may be only slightly hampered. Before importation of parrots into United States was denied, over 50,000 birds a year were shipped from the Isle of Pines. Because of the abundance of these birds, the island is sometimes referred to as catorra, or parrot island.

Miss Robertson says that a newcomer would be puzzled as to how the island received its name. Isle of Pines, in the absence of this type of tree is noticeable. She explains that practically all of the older pines were destroyed during the storm of 1926, and almost all the trees now found on the island are new growth.

Dotted By Lakes and Streams

Tropical scenery predominates on the island as a whole. There are coconut palms, royal palms, agave stalks of bamboo, and luxuriant tropical trees. The island also has lakes plan a park, they are not satisfied with their tropical scenery. They import Spanish laurels and Australian pines for park beautification.

The island is dotted with mountains so numerous that Miss Robertson describes them as giving the effect of warts on the palm of a pickle. The mountains harbor a wealth of mineral springs. "Whether it is an eye bath or a bath for the body or setting," she says, "you can find it here."

Every home has a well, but since sanitary conditions are bad and there is no sewage system, well water is not considered safe drinking purposes. Besides unsanitary conditions making it unsafe, well water lacks minerals and if one drinks it, he is in danger of getting teeth falling out. Consequently everyone buys water daily from a wagon resembling an oil truck, which delivers the family supply in 5-gallon containers. Refrigerating little boys have acquired the water business. Early in the morning they may be seen filling their tanks at the local carts to get water to peddle to the housewife.

Miss Robertson points out the Presidio Modelo as one of the most interesting sights on the Isle of Pines. It is the National Cuban penitentiary and was a model prison both because of the excellent buildings in which the inmates are housed and because of the sanitary conditions. They operate without guards to watch the prisoners, but there is no desire their escaping. There is an abundance of marble on the island and at the Presidio may be seen model quarries. The floors of the Presidio are of polished marble throughout. The streets in front of the prison are constructed of the same material approximately two feet in thickness. With so much available marble and prison labor, it would be possible for the island to have an excellent road system. However, there are so many poor people who resent the government's allowing prisoners to do any public work when they are unemployed that the roads have been neglected. So perfect is the prison that it is a matter of boasting that the Cuban government turn to it in a time of emergency when the different types of work in which the prisoners engage is that of planting bananas on the mountain slopes. Bananas are among the chief products of the island.

The majority of the Cuban people are poor and they ship little in the way of fruits and vegetables. American industry is responsible for the most of this type of export trade.

The homes of the people are built to the edge of the street. Since there are no sidewalks, pedestrians walk on the front porches of the houses. Of course, one must ask permission of a person to walk by his home and use his porch. Some of the poorer homes have 20-year thatched roofs, so-called because they are constructed of twenty thicknesses of thatch. The majority of homes have tile roofs and floors because this material is less subject to deterioration. None of the homes are screened, in spite of the great number of insects. The native yellow fever screens will shut off the air. Every year or so the homes are repainted. They use the brightest shades of red, green, orange, blue and other colors.

In order to work in Cuba, Miss Robertson has had to establish her residence there. While her denomination has no mission field in the Isle of Pines, she is obtaining a gratifying results through individual and personal work.

—And she lives happily in Treasure Island.

Dr. Diffenbaugh Talks at Meeting

Next Graduate Gathering Will Be Pienic

Dr. Guy L. Diffenbaugh, sponsor for the graduate club, and newly elected chairman of the faculty committee on graduate work, gave a talk before the graduate club last Friday night in the Augusta Conradi Little Theater. Dr. Diffenbaugh spoke on the merits of the smaller college for graduate work, as over and against the larger institutions.

The faculty trio, under the direction of Owen Sellers, 'cellist, Lucia Hamilton, violinist, assisted, with Miss Mary Agnes Johnston, pianist, gave as their first number Pastel's Menuet by H. Paradis. Piano by request was selections from Hub-Jinks by R. Frimi.

In conclusion Dr. W. H. Rogers read an essay on the reading of poetry.

Among the guests present was Dr. Paul F. Pinner, retiring chairman of the graduate committee.

The next meeting of the Graduate club will be in the form of a picnic to be held at Lake Bradford on July 23.

Judiciary Council Has Mock Trial at Chapel

Two "cases" were presented during a mock trial held by the judiciary council Tuesday morning in convocation, in an effort to acquaint summer school students with the workings of the punitive body of the campus. Anne Jane McKee, chairman of the council presided, assisted by other student members.

Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews had charge of the devotionals.

Some College Students Prefer "Funnies" to Any Other Literature for Their Summer-time Reading

Moon Mullins, Ella Boots, and even Andy Gump are popular with some students who visit the periodical room in the library every Monday morning to read the Sunday "funnies." And comic strippers have a variety of papers from which to choose, for the publications of practically every Florida town are received in the library and filed for the use of the students. Florida papers are the home town news, and according to the librarians this section of the periodical room is a much frequented spot. The magazine section is also popular. Of the varied types of magazines probably Harper's and The Atlantic Monthly are read most widely by summer school students. Good Housekeeping follows these in that some, we hear, know this only in the name of the magazine).

Among the books, "Gone With the Wind" is still in demand. Already there have been three more requests than the library is able to supply and as the demand is not being accepted. "An American Doctor's Odyssey," "The Flowers of New England," and other Pulitzer prize novels are continually in circulation. Books about Florida are in constant demand. Recently the librarian has received several letters and a number of calls for a history of Florida State College for Women. The catalogues are practically all the material available on this subject at the present time. However, Dr. Arthur Williams is now compiling a history of the colleges for publication.

The browsing room is a favorite spot for recreational reading during the week-ends. Those students who do not have access

Summer Student-Faculty Dinner Held Last Night

The annual summer student-faculty dinner was held last evening in the dining room of Florida State college. This dinner, a formal affair, takes the place of the banquets that were held until a few years ago. On these occasions the faculty and students have a chance of becoming better acquainted. During regular sessions a dinner is given every quarter, making four through the term, while in the summer only one dinner is held.

Tables Decorated

The dining room tables were decorated with various flowers from the college green house. The basins for each table had charge of placecards, which were novel and attractive.

At a special table were Dr. Edward Conradi and his daughter Miss Louise Conradi, Dean Olivia N. Dorman, Mr. and Mrs J. G. Kehlam, Dr. Elizabeth O. Anderws, and Miss Helen Davis.

Miss Gladys Fawley, Dean Margaret Rector Sandals, and Miss McIntosh were guests of Annie Colvi Cheney and Elsie Barrett. Miss Henrietta Ruth Greene was the guest of Margaret Wiggins. Pearle Shepard was hostess to Dr. Coyle E Moore. Professor Earl L. Vance and Dr. Albert Geiger; Mary Higgins was hostess to Mrs. Dora Sykes. Harper; Zulleine Russell to Dr. Fredrick Pinner; Lucile Adams to Mrs. Cecile Strong.

Guests Are Listed

Carolyn Gainer was hostess to Mrs. Hazel Bernice Deets; Mary Shirley to Dr. Maude Burke. Ollie Engle to Dr. and Mrs. Leland J. Lewis; Edna Mae McMullen to Dr. William Hudson Rogers.

At a table Mr. and Mrs Henry P. Becker, Dr. and Mrs. Raymond Bellamy, and Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Lee Eyman were guests of Mrs. S. S. Sutton and Mrs. Annie Mae F. Smith. At another table Mary Palmer was hostess to Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Doyle and Miss Edith Woodfin Wells; Miss Marion Elsbeth Young and Miss Ruth Conner were the guests of Helen Hollingsworth.

Miss Edith Elizabeth Lynn was the guest of Helen Benson; Dr. and Mrs. Mark H. DeGraff and Dr. Verdia Levins Shores and mother were guests of Myrtle Gilland; Miss Myrtle Elizabeth Dekle was the guest of Josephine Doughtry. Miss Lucile Hudson was hostess to Miss Lou Ezelton Whitfield Miller. Maude Wright was hostess to Miss Marion Irish.

passed whereby the state can take over land that is tax delinquent. land the state cannot have jurisdiction to protect it from timber to reforest, Mr. Becker explained. Burned land not only destroys timber but also shuts down on hunting and fishing but it destroys beauty by which so many tourists are attracted to Florida. he remarked. Becker called such land "pollinated land" "no man's land" stating it was neither the government's, the state's, individual or the state. In many cases the only thing on which it is put is to furnish a free grazing ground for cattle, he stated.

He also voiced some of the "back to the land" movements in Florida stating in many cases these settlements were given no attention to the prospective settlers and that they had settled down on farm on land unsuited for that purpose. It is a good idea to encourage promiscuous settling of lands without first marking off the desirable and undesirable areas," he stated.

In many cases the result is putting people on relief making a burden to the state in addition to causing disillusionment on the part of the individuals, he said.

The seriousness of Florida's land utilization problem may be seen from the fact that the state planning board devoted much of its efforts to making a report of these problems, Becker remarked.

"Florida is still a pioneer state," Becker concluded. "The pioneers have skimmed 'the cream' off the natural resources and now the period of readjustment must follow."

Pupils Are Entertained

The pupils of the Demonstration school have had a variety of entertainment this week. Elizabeth Lounds Wins First Snapshot Contest

Elisabeth Lounds, junior, won the first snapshot contest run on Florida State campus. As prize for winning she will receive one roll of Eastman verichrome films to fit her camera and free development and printing of one roll of films.

Weekly contests will be held during the remainder of the summer sessions. Entries may be mailed to or left at 426 College, as late as Thursday noon of each week. Any picture taken since the 1937 summer session began is eligible for the contest. The winning picture will be posted on a bulletin board in the Westcott building.

Judges for the contest were Miss Louise Richardson, librarian, Dr. Raymond Bellamy, head, in the sociology department, and Mary Porter, Pearle Shepard, Margaret Wolcott, Annette Brewer, Martha Thomas, Helen Turner, Dorothy Bellamy, and Sarah Sealey, students.

The pictures were judged on composition, interest of subject matter, clearness and lighting.

Next week judges will again be chosen from among faculty and students not participating in the contest. The winner will receive an enlargement of any negative she chooses. The enlargement may be as big as 8 by 10 inches.

Three Religions Are Represented In Mission Work

At Least 6 FSC Students And Graduates Are Giving Service

Mission work in the Virginia mountains, social service and study of religious education in New York City, as well as religious work within Florida is being carried on this summer by at least six Florida State college students and graduates. The work is largely volunteer.

Three Groups Represented

The Presbyterian, Episcopal and Baptist denominations are represented in this student work.

Going out of the state this summer are two from the Episcopal student auxiliary at the college. Charlotte Kamper, junior, who is in Dante, Va., working in a mountain mission, and Louie Lingo, senior, who is studying religious education at Columbia university's summer session and doing part-time social service work in New York city. The two Episcopal students bring to 33 the number of such volunteer workers sent out since 1929. In other years they have gone to South Dakota to the Indian reservations, to the Blue Ridge mountain section of Virginia, to the industrial schools in the Georgia mill districts, and also the Everglades section among the Indians.

Two Are Teaching

A number of Episcopal students also have acted as counselors at the diocesan summer Panama City; others have been designated as counselors for another such camp in Haines City. Several will go to a college students conference mid 10-24 at Sewanee, Tenn.

Marjorie Pain has been doing daily vacation Bible school work in different parts of the state and Martha Frank Wildman has been teaching a Bible school in Bellwood. Both are state college graduates.

Baptist work has been carried on by Margaret Greene Jones and Louise Doyle, graduate, all summer. Miss Doyle is one of the Florida college folk doing work in the Baptist Sunday school training and vacation Bible school work. Her district is in Jackson county with headquarters in Marianna. Miss Greene is carrying on B. T. U. work and vacation Bible school work over the state.

Several Baptist young people from the state college are helping in vacation Bible schools in their own churches and associations this summer.

Florida Clapper Rail Found Outside Library By Miss Ezda Deviney

A young Florida clapper rail, one of the rail, marshes, was found Thursday morning outside the library at Florida college by Miss Ezda Deviney, head of the zoology department.

The bird, it was thought, might have been penned by someone in Tallahassee and made its escape as did some other species from its normal surroundings.

The clapper rail is a slender olive brown and is hardly distinguishable from the surroundings when found in its natural place. The birds particularly distinguished by their long bills, are commonly found in Florida. They live on crustaceans and insects.

The rail found at the college in a nest of concrete shaft outside a window was turned over to the zoology department which planned to set it free on a bird outing in the marshes Friday.

Miss West to Speak

Dr. Cuyle E. Moore, associate professor of sociology, who will speak in convocation Tuesday morning on "The Social Welfare Situation in Florida." Dr. Moore has been a member of the state welfare board.

Miss Richardson Speaks on Books

Addresses Educational Group Meeting

In answer to the common expression "I can read anything's please, good or bad, and it doesn't affect me," Miss Louise Richardson said Monday night that it is dangerous to drink from a muddy pool or polluted water and that it is not less dangerous to imbibe from every printed book.

Miss Richardson spoke to members of Kappa Delta Pi on the subject "Can I Read Anything?" In the same manner that people have rules and codings for their body she pointed out that they should also plan their mental food. And a test that one might apply to a book is: "Does it have any kind of wholesome and fine feeling in the mand of the one who reads it?" She stressed the influence of books on the lives of H. G. Wells, John Masefield, Edwin Reppler, Robert L. Stevenson and others.

The speaker explained that she thinks it is best to read authors who write, not because they have to say something, but because they have something to say.

Everyone likes to take up his reading, she continued, and have a good time when they are reading. "Will Rogers, Irvin S. Cobb, and Stephen Leacock give us humor, but we must not omit such humorists as Mark Twain, Swift, and Aristophanes," she said.

Miss Richardson believes that in order to make comparisons one

Banquet Is Given By A. C. E Group At Three Torches

Sara Lou Hammond Acts As Toastmistress, Two Speak

The annual summer school banquet of the Association of Childhood Education was held Wednesday evening at the Three Torches tearoom with 35 in attendance. Mrs Mae Knight Clark of the Cushman school, Miami, and Mrs. Melvin Page, of the Sealey school, were in charge of the program.

Organization Explained

The banquet table, placed in the large white room and centered with low arrangements of summer flowers. The place cards were individual pictures of the sunbonnet baby designs, incorporating the color of the old as contrasted with the new.

The toastmistress, Sara Lou Hammond, of the A.C.E. chapter as an organization, relating the advantages to be gained through membership in it. In addition she introduced two of the past state presidents, Mrs. Ruth Bond and Mrs. Clark.

Miss Gordon Boyd, whose subject was, "What is New Reading?" told of the newest phase in reading, that of results of the study and how it is determined through the various tests given by Dr. Hugh L. Waskom spoke on "Old and New Methods of Grouping." He explained the old and the new grouping according to the individual ability and the more commonly used I.Q. method of today and finally to the ungraded or child centered study. He showed the advantages of the latter and the necessity for a large practical worth for the study of pupils as well as the individual and for the collection of various kinds of data bearing on the psychological, and physiological make-up of the child.

Guests Entertained

Among those present were Dr Edward Conradi, Miss Louise Richardson and Miss Dora Lee Bedell.

Elizabeth Autrey Has Position at Miami

Miss Elizabeth Autrey, physical education instructor during the state college, who has been on leave of absence for the past year, has received an appointment to teach physical education next year at the University of Colorado in Boulder.

Miss Autrey, who has taught at the college here since her graduation from this institution in 1923, has been working toward a degree of Master of Science majoring in physical education at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, where she made one of the highest honor subjects as well as her thesis

Annual Watermelon Cutting Scheduled

Those attending will have no popular in the past that they have become an annual feature.

Vance Describes Press Influence

Speaker Advises People To Read Critically

The press probably has more influence than any other single institution in determining the attitude that society takes, according to Earl L. Vance who lectured Monday night in the Augusta Conradi Theater on the subject "How to Read a Modern Book."

This is evidenced by the fact that there is no government or dictatorship which has not found it necessary to control and censor all news. After the news has been censored and released it is then relayed to the various parts of the country, where it is further edited before it reaches the reader.

Since government censorship prevails in most parts of the world, it is necessary to read with a critical attitude, he pointed out. In addition to comparing news from several different papers, he mentioned the New York Times, a national daily, and a local publication, he suggested that one read a liberal magazine as well as a more critical monthly magazines such as Harper's or the Atlantic. Reading in order to get a glimpse of the news from several different sources, he said, will help with the attitude, 'Is it all wrong'," he said, "but rather with the attitude, 'Is it right?'"

He pointed out the fact that newspapers are not philanthropic institutions, but are business institutions who must "print the news." They are affected by the same forces that mould other institutions—social, political, or economic.

Program is Planned

Sunday evening at 8 o'clock the Presbyterian young people will have charge of the evening church services when John Pain will be the leader and Opal Gray and Sarah French will discuss "Shall Christian Young People Drink?" Hunter Gunter will sing. Cars will meet at the college at 7:45 o'clock for the college people who wish to go to the evening service.

COLLEGE PHYSICIAN COMMENTS ON RELATIVELY LARGE NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO DO TOO MUCH DURING SUMMER

By MABEL GAINOUS

"The striking thing about the summer term," said Dr. F. C. Moor, physician for Florida State college, while noting the relatively large number of border-line cases of nervous exhaustion, is the student's taking too much work, or, in some cases, any work at all after teaching for nine months."

Dr. Moor has been connected with the college since 1912, except for a period of two or three years when he was in the army medical service during the war. The medical work at the college was in charge of a woman physician during that time.

"Since I came to the college," he said, "we have had a great variety of illnesses, and several epidemics of varying severity, including scarlet fever, mumps, measles, and two cases of meningitis.

Under normal conditions, Dr. Moor pointed out, the college infirmary is very adequate for caring for the cases of illness occurring for the college for short periods, during influenza epidemics, there were 150 cases in bed at one time. On each occasion it was necessary to take over a part of one of the dormitories as an annex to the infirmary. Fifteen or 20 nurses were added to the regular staff to care for the patients. Pneumonia cases, as well as other various respiratory infections, usually are more prevalent during winter session. They make up 65 per cent of the cases admitted to the infirmary during winter term. There are some cases of respiratory infections during the summer session, but the percentage is not large, he said.

"We have been fortunate in that there have been no severe cases of pneumonia, and no deaths have occurred," Dr. Moor stated. He also said that the mildness of the cases may be attributed to the fact that the girls were kept in bed from the onset of the disease until they had been free of fever for two or more days. Medical experience in all influenza epidemics indicates that the most important thing in the

Who's Who Names Eleven Members Of This Faculty

Wives of Two Professors Are Included Also In Publication

Eleven members of the Florida State college faculty and two faculty wives are included in the recent issue of American Women, the only who's who of the feminine leaders of the country.

Faculty Named

Faculty members represented are: Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, head of the history department; Dr. Edith Burlingame, assistant professor of psychology; Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, dean of students; Miss Olga Larson, assistant professor of mathematics; Dr. Anna Pearce Liddell, professor of philosophy; Dean Ella Scobie Opperman of the school of music; Miss Louise Richardson, librarian; Miss Mary L. Rickey, assistant professor of accounting; Dr. Margaret Sandels, dean of the school of home economics; and Dr. Jennie Tilt, assistant professor of chemistry and nutrition.

Faculty wives included in the book are: Mrs. Julia H. Heinlein and Mrs. Hazel M. Richards.

22,000 Names Included

The pages of American Women classify leadership and ability of American women to achieve success at any age and in any calling. The new book, second edition of which has just been published in Los Angeles, is edited by Durward Howes, nationally known biographer. It carries the biographies of 7,811 women who have attained prominence in their respective fields.

College and university alumnae secretaries, executives in clubs, business, professional and civic leaders the country over have cooperated in the preparation of the volumes by submitting for consideration more than 22,000 names. The qualifications of each nominee were carefully studied and 7,811 names finally selected.

Concise, inclusive sketches of these women give authentication as date and place of birth, education, marriage, husbands, children, occupation, political and religious preference, membership, outstanding achievements, and address. A statistical summary presents an analysis of this information and offers a bird's eye view of trends and tendencies among the outstanding women of the nation.

We Condone Our Inferior Literary Tastes

It's rather strange that people who manifest themselves as interested in intellectual expansion by their presence at an institution of higher learning often exhibit reading tastes and habits of very inferior quality. For instance, it was found that among other reading material college students find the "funnies" a source of entertainment. Others devour stories found in some of the more popular home magazines and still others vent their "literary" hunger on books of cheap calibre. The disturbing part is that this represents the tastes of the majority of us and we condone our actions by the statement that we can lose ourselves in light, superficial reading matter when we want to get away from the harsh realities of life around us.

While we have become educated in various fields and often read many volumes connected with certain subjects we fail to carry over that inquisitive, evaluating and discriminating taste that we may have acquired while studying a particular subject. We lay down Harpers, Current History, Living Age, Nation, New Republic, or the New York Times to pick up the Good Housekeeping, Cosmopolitan, Liberty, Pictorial Review or Woman's Home Companion. And we say something about "all work and no play." What we fail to realize is that there are other magazines which are not entirely without their "light" portions but which contain something far more original than the usual "girl meets boys" type of fictional reading. We forget that there's Atlantic Monthly, Scribners, Forum, Story and even Esquire in which can be found good fiction, if we want fiction, and articles, all the way from autobiographical sketches of life to more meaty ones on every phase of contemporary living.

In addition we become slovenly in our other reading habits. In some cases it's not a matter of reading the less desirable things as it is a matter of not reading at all. We're missing a valuable part of life and often we realize that we're failing to get the maximum enjoyment from it, but we don't know why. It's a matter of habit. When we're young we develop lazy habits about keeping informed. If we read those magazines which flood each household and if it's the newspaper we scan the headlines, read the crime news, continued story, society, sports, perhaps the editorial page and work the cross word puzzle.

It's no wonder that Americans are considered poor conversationalists, for they have no reading background. If they tatempt to carry on an intelligent conversation, by which we mean informed, they are lost or resort to tradisional ways of thinking, to heresay, rumor, common superstition and much loud talk. They can't talk about current problems, at least with any validity, for they don't know the facts. The point is that we thought about the matter we could very easily change our habits of reading, could broaden our outlook generally and have a fund of knowledge at our fingertips to discuss with other people. The attitude is: let the other person find out. I'll find out from him.

By UNA UMPHREY

What it is about:

The compromise court plan that is causing so much controversy in and out of Washington if passed would simply permit the president to appoint one additional justice to the Supreme Court each calendar year if an incumbent justice past 76 years of age refuses to retire. The original bill, at the time it was presented to congress, would have permitted the immediate appointment of six additional justices if incumbents past 70 years of age refused to retire.

Many of the president's friends agree that he should drop the plan for the passage of the bill and resume real leadership of a badly cause a split in congress and result in the undoing of a great deal of the past months' work of the administration. The president believes that the great silent majority of the people are with him and he has based his moves on that supposition which is by no means groundless.

The federal government has threatened to withdraw its financial cooperation from the Florida Employment service unless an operating agreement can be reached between the state and federal government by Aug. 1. According to the Social Security act, a director of the employment service must hold office through the merit system. Governor Cone appointed Fred B. Bradshaw as director but W. Frank Persons, director of Federal Services, recognizes John Emerson who was chosen by the merit system some time ago. Mr. Cone recognizes Mr. Bradshaw and thus the dilemma. A conference is being arranged in Washington within a few days to which the industrial commission hopes to settle the matter satisfactorily.

Contempory Thought....

Empire of the Air

By W. Carroll Munro

Radio runs the gamut from inane entertainment to profound philosophical sermons. In short every man to his own noise, writes Carroll Munro in the July issue of the magazine Current History.

To some, ragging a crooner with a twist of the dial is as nothing compared to strangling a near Philharmonic. Others glue their ears to the pumping rhythm of the "Baron's Swing Band" or suck up the last episode of "I Am a Cradle Robber."

Actually, radio broadcasting is composed of scarcely more than 10 per cent of radio acting for not the navy, not the army, not the money interests, nor a political party, but the people through the agency of their government control radio. Many have called it the people's last great resource for all programs must yield to the public mind to radio broadcasting of entertainment as education.

Broadcasting, writes Mr. Munro, is a child of the post-war years. The first stations, not being organized however, until 1921. Programs consisted of phonograph records and miscellaneous talks and were tolerated with considerable novelty. In 1922 there were 382 stations. In each succeeding year new stations came on the air until the taxed the number of wave lengths available.

Broadcasting is not a public philanthropy, as propaganda sometimes has it. It is today, as it always has been, a business for profit.

A cursory survey, according to the author, would lead a stranger to believe that Americans were (1) chronically constipated; (2) troubled with decaying teeth; (3) suffering from unbecoming odorous body odors; (4) consumed with pustulate complexions; (5) on the verge of buying an automobile; (6) anxious to oil up an engine; (7) interested in the Bayuan aroma of rare tobaccos, if and in the market for a character building whiskey.

As a whole, radio broadcasting has not yet reached the stage in development where any specific dogma as to its use can be promulgated although it is a communication service of great potentialities. It is also a medium of entertainment, recreation, and public education for 34,000,000 radio set owners in the United States. J. T.

I stand at the window, waiting for you;
Hours pass and no return,
Oh well, good riddance.
Why can't we learn?

N'est-ce Pas?

The weeks are passing, these merry eight.
That are as strange as they are late
To solve the problem or take the test
Or sing or translate our very best.
The weeks are passing; then let us see
What they are meaning to you and me.

We may rate C minus or A plus.
Our work may be perfect or a muss.
Does it matter? In the far star gleam
Of Eternity's Sun things may seem
Far different, and all our work good
If we can say we did what we could.

I watch men plod with eyes on the ground
With never an upward glance,
Who never see the sunsets glow
The flight of a bird or the arched rainbow—
Who never hear the wind in a tree,
Or the sound of the great encompassing sea.
That carries the ships of dreams on its flow.
As it circles the earth, around.
The wings of the spirit they never have found
So they plod along with eyes on the ground.

Editor's Note: While local, national and international affairs loom along, the Inquiring Reporter turned her eye and ear away from these momentous affairs this week in a quest of campus import. Who is said "Charity should begin at home"?

Question: What, in your opinion, does Florida State College for Women need more than anything else?

Dr. Edward Conradi: Our greatest need is a central gymnasium. Additional residence facilities, since besides more dormitory space, additional to the dining hall and the infirmary. There is a serious need for a students' activity building.

Miss Fray: I think there should be someone who will take a personal interest in the freshmen and who will continue to guide and direct them throughout their college life.

Miss Katie Smith: For the swimming session. I believe the greatest need is a new dormitory for the girls because then there should be more time in order that they take advantage of the facilities the college provides during the summer months.

ployment of the illiterate," he said. This applies, also to all tertiary occupations.

The college record," Dr. Moor claimed, "is unique in the history of acute appendicitis cases and operations from the disease. In a group of 1,000 larger women's colleges of the South, Florida State college has only one third the number of operations for acute appendicitis or not the lowest number. We have never had a death from the disease or the operation, by college.

Keeping fit," Dr. Moor pointed out, "depends on following the general principles of hygiene, personal hygiene and community hygiene principles in a reasonable degree, and the application of these principles to a common sense manner.

Medical science has kept pace of the advances in all lines and has utilized many and discoveries in physics, chemistry and chemistry," he stated, "In fact the growth of medical knowledge since the beginning the century, exceeds that in the years since Hippocrates, a broad conception of these values should be a part of everyone's education."

Dr. Moore advises everyone, especially those in the teaching profession to keep up with the advances in medical science. In order to do this he thinks reading the medical magazines such as Hygeia, which is monthly magazine, intended for laymen and purveys scientific information and corrects misinformation that is printed, broadcast for commercial state department some concern. There is present the fear that the war between China and Japan will spread to include Russia against her traditional enemy, Japan, and Germany allied with Japan in hopes of furthering some of her imperialistic ambitions.

Meanwhile, Washington asks the United States is faced with the necessity of declaring an arms embargo against China and Japan. This means that China will be placed in a very disadvantageous position because whereas Japan has plenty of armaments and more will soon come from, China has for a long time been friendly to the United States and it will be hard to see her placed completely at the mercy of the better equipped Japanese army and maybe the German army. It is of course possible that such a situation will not arise.

Guglielmo Marconi, who discovered at the age of 21 years the principal of wireless through space, died this week of heart paralysis at his home in Rome, Italy. At the time of his death Marconi was working on experiments designed toward adaptation of micro-waves to long range transmission, the pioneer research of television, and a new type radio transmitter for airplanes.

Marconi has received honors from all over the world for his contributions to modern civilization. His greatest contribution being the wireless telegraphy. The first wireless message was flashed across the Atlantic in 1901. Since that time many and rare discoveries have been made in the field first opened by Marconi.

Are we, oh aren't we living in a civilized world? A double lynching and a Ku Klux Klan parade in the same state and in the same week would seem to answer the question conclusively. profit. He said, "Mental hygiene is just as important as the more commonly accepted rules of health; that a poorly balanced emotional make-up frequently causes more misery than physical ailments; and that mental discipline is more important than diet or exercise."

"Co-eds" Admits Among Others That Reason They Come to Women's College is "To Get Credits"

By FLORENCE GREGORY

Co-eds at Florida State college are practically 100 per cent strong in their admission that the feminine head is capable of holding things besides tin hair-curlers; that is, the boys admit that the girls are smarter than they in the classroom. Upon being questioned about their reasons for choosing F.S.C.W. as a summer school, the co-eds gave various answers, but the most common, and at the same time most disappointing—is "Seminar perfecta" was "to get credits!"

Another just as unromantic reason was "Mother's my pal's home." One co-ed asserted that he didn't see any difference between high school and college except that there were more "Women" and it was a lot of night than day time!" Of course, married collegiates don't appreciate that viewpoint and they contribute another reason: the college's high rating, which is third best women's college in the South.

One young man confessed that after attending his university for two years that he thought it would be something of a novelty to go to a woman's school. "I wasn't disappointed either," he grinned, "being that male is a class of 50 is quite a novel experience." He also offered to help out Florida State's law school, Tallahassee is the best location for that school because the students would have access to the capitol and supreme and federal courts, and they could study more by contact with them than anything else."

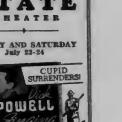
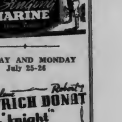
music have standards and unless they are familiar with some of the great books they have no standards of comparison. One of the comparisons she cited was Robert Herrick's "What is Dirt?" in which "A Parcel of Ants" is compared to "All Quiet on the Western Front."



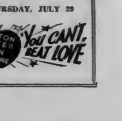
Novels which can entertain, the speaker said, and at the same time give one a broader sympathy toward others and a desire for better things are forms for good. In her opinion Galsworth, Walpole, and Willa Calher point the way.



Miss Richardson emphasized the fact that reading is an individual matter and the choice tentatively lies along the lines of individual taste. "The responsibility of selection is a person's own," she finished.

Music School to Give Two Student Recitals

The School of Music will present two student recitals on Friday evening, July 30, and Saturday, evening, July 31, at 8:15 o'clock. The recital on Friday evening will be a certificate program given by Mary Runion Field, soprano, pupil of Miss Gladys Koch, and Julia Leonora Stewart, pianist, pupil of Dean Ella Scobie Opperman.



The recital on Saturday evening will be given by pupils of Dean Opperman, assisted by the summer school chorus and orchestra. The chorus is directed by Miss Koch, and the orchestra by Owen F. Sellers.

ALUMNAE ASSOCIATION TO ENTERTAIN GRADUATES WITH RECEPTION TONIGHT

Approximately 150 persons are expected to attend the outdoor reception which will be given at Gilchrist gardens at Florida State college tonight from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock. The affair represents the Alumnae association's annual entertainment for the summer school graduation candidates.

College and town alumnae are especially invited to the reception where President Edward Conradi and his daughter, Miss Louise Conradi, as well as Mrs. Frank D. Moor, Mrs. Ann Mary Dixon and Mrs. R. H. Leslie will receive the guests. Mrs. Moor is vice-president of the Alumnae association; Mrs. Leslie is the executive secretary and Miss Tracy is chairman of the faculty committee for cooperation with the alumnae.

Introducing the guests to the receiving line will be Mrs. George Lewis, president of the Tallahassee Alumnae club.

Miss Katherine Warren will pour, while assisting hostesses will include Miss Florence Tryon, Miss Madeline Duncan, Miss Katherine Byrd, Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, Miss Charlotte Stevens, and a dozen town alumnae.

Both two-year and four-year graduation candidates are invited as well as the college executive council, members of the faculty committee for cooperation with the alumnae, and college and town alumnae.

Miss Mary Lois Gill is reception chairman.

1922, a span of 80 years but the present number of these successful women were born in 1896.

Startling indeed," said the editor, Mr. Brown, "is the revelation that more than 395 of the married women have no children. Ten per cent have one child, and from there on the percentage continues to decrease; only one of the 3,230 matrons listed has a dozen children . . . not considered an unusually large family in 'the good old days.'"

Occupations represented run the alphabetical gamut from accountants to zoologists. The nation's only woman foreign minister, Florence Jaffray Harriman, has a place in the book, along with two United States Senators, six Congresswomen, and a Cabinet official. A special section lists Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, Lou Henry Hoover, and the widows of six of the Presidents of the United States. There are 26 judges and 254 lawyers among the leading women of the country. Such other interesting personalities as Mae West, Wallis Simpson, Carrie Chapman Catt, Amelia Earhart, and Helen Wills Moody are also included.

Hobbies As Given

Reading, music, and gardening are the most popular hobbies named, but few individualists expressed a preference for such leisure time activities as wood carving and copying old epitaphs. As a favorite sport, walking received the greatest number of votes, with horseback riding next in favor. Forewords containing both tributes and challenges to the women of present-day America are written by Martha Berry, educator, Linda Eastman, librarian, Lillian M. Gilbreth, consulting engineer, Roberta Lawson, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Frances Marion, motion picture producer, Emily Post, the famous manners monitor, President Aurelia Henry Reinhardt of Mills College, and Jane Hamilton Rhodes, New York stylist and business executive.

Lou Gilbreth in her message to American women writes: "We need . . . experience in group activities so that we can help contribute to family life and to the larger social groups. If we can assume leadership, we should be able to make a real and cumulative contribution."

Reading Display To Be Next Week

The class in principles of reading has arranged an exhibit of reading, supplementary reading, and sets of books to be open to all students. The exhibit will be in the Education building from 2 to 5 o'clock during the week July 26-30.

I suppose the first thing in order is an apology. You see, in past issues of this column I have mentioned two hikes, both taken by the same party and I commented at length on the many interesting features of the outings. However, the people who made up the party didn't appreciate my remarks and their objection is that I strained the impersonal spirit a bit too much and failed to mention the fact that I also was a member of the party on both occasions! They were particularly put out when I wrote that I thought I understood their point in making a practice of hiking to camp it seems that the idea was mine in the first place; they refused to take the blame! Well, I am sorry, and shall watch my pronouns more after this. Does that let me out of the doghouse?

I've a sad story to tell you. There are two girls on campus who have been trying very hard for the past two weeks to go on one of the overnight fishing trips that have been announced in this column. Former Marjorie Harris Will Study at Harvard

Word was received yesterday that Mrs. Archie Carr, formerly Miss Marjorie Harris of Fort Myers, is planning to study this summer at Harvard.

Mr. Carr receives the doctor of philosophy degree in zoology at the University of Florida tomorrow. Soon thereafter Mr. and Mrs. Carr will leave for Boston where he will continue his studies in herpetology which will make a collection of invertebrates commonly found along the Massachusetts coast.

Mrs. Carr spent the early part of her life in Boston, coming to Florida when she was 9 years old. She graduated from Florida State in 1936. After graduation here she worked several months as technician on Dr. Wekiva wild life project under the Resettlement Administration. Recently she has been employed at the Bass zoological laboratory in Englewood, Florida.

Mrs J M Briley, mother of Dr Beulah B. Briley, passed away at her home in Ames, Iowa, Monday, July 19, after an extended illness.

Mrs Briley has spent the past seven winters in Tallahassee with her daughter, Dr Briley, who is a professor of commerce and economics at Florida State college during the winter session.

Miss Davis Honored

Miss Winnie Lee Davis, Methodist student secretary, was honored with a handkerchief shower Wednesday morning. Trinity circle three and Mrs. Davis with the party in appreciation for the work she does for the group and to wish her "bon voyage" before she leaves for her position in Tennessee.

Professor and Students Actually "Flounder" For Flounders During Nocturnal Beach Jaunt

By MARIE JOFFRE

When a professor and some of his friends and students decide to enjoy themselves, what do you suppose they do? Well, one can be assured that it certainly is a far cry from the usual procedure of playing bridge, visiting, or trailing to faculty dinners. In this particular instance, the professor and his party went flounder-ing.

One probably is acquainted with people who flounder into difficulties but the people of this story take their floundering much more seriously literally—they actually flounder for flounders!

Reacting the beach, after ten miles of bumpy road, the flounderers provided themselves with nets and a net or two. The professor lighted the powerful lamp he had brought along, and seeing that everyone was ready with paint legs rolled up and wading shoes in good condition, he led the way into the water. The flounderers arranged themselves as near the light as possible, and then began to walk very slowly. The water was only knee deep, and armed with the light, the bottom could be seen easily.

Since flounders have a prefer-

Two Young Women Are Guests of Honor At Parties This Week

Two young women connected with Florida State college and who are leaving shortly for other points were honored this week at parties given by friends.

Tuesday afternoon the ladies of Trinity Methodist auxiliary were hostesses at a tea honoring Miss Winnie Lee Davis, Methodist student secretary, and Mrs. Ray Briley, wife of the presiding elder. Miss Davis leaves this summer for a new position with the Methodist church in Tennessee. The tea was given at the home of Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Daniel on Adams street.

Miss Mary Tracy entertained at an at home Monday afternoon from 4 to 6 to 7 o'clock at 118 North Copeland street honoring Miss Helen Davis, assistant dietitian at the college, who is leaving soon to make her home in Orlando. Approximately 100 guests called at this time.

Mrs. J. Edwin White greeted the guests at the door and acting as assistant hostesses were Miss Lutia Cothan, Miss Mary Lois Gill, and Miss Margaret Dasher. The Misses Lorraine Elizabeth, and Alice Cothan assisted in serving.

For 1937-38 Session

Approximately 1,512 students are registered for the fall term at Florida State college according to information from the registrar's office, Dr. Luther Hodges announced today to the president, reported that the dormitories have been filled to their capacity of 1,052, for the middle of June.

Two hundred and fifty have made reservations in the sorority houses, while 186 students have been placed in the various houses. More reservations will be accepted, so said the off-campus houses are added to the approved list.

Registration for the fall term will be conducted on the same basis as in years previous to the 1936-37 term, according to Dr. H. H. Doyle, registrar said, as to whether in-state or out-state students register in the summer.

Dr. Andrews to Speak

Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel and placement bureau at Florida State college, will speak at vespers Sunday morning at 7:15 o'clock. Vesper services will be held in the Audubon Conradi theater and Dr. Andrews will have for her subject, "The Quest of God Through Friendship."

Inquiring Reporter

Editor's Note: This week a group of young women representing the various religious denominations organized what is known as the Affiliated Church organizations in order to help keep the prohibition law intact in Leon county, a matter which will be decided at the polls next month. Since only one side of the question, that of the dry's has been considered, the Inquiring Reporter has made an effort to obtain another slant on the situation, as to what part students should play in this election in the first place and whether they should favor the dry's if they do take sides.

Question: What do you think should be the position of students of Florida State college concerning the vote for or against prohibition in Leon county in August?

Joan Cooperman: We vote in our own county, why meddle in Leon? I wouldn't sign a petition in favor of keeping Leon dry, because I think it's none of our business.

Miss Elizabeth Lyon: Students should vote dry. Repeal of prohibition would affect the amount of drinking done as much as the sale of liquor. If Leon votes wet, the college will have trouble with night social regulations as most obnoxious drinking is done at night. As for the money profits involved, there's as much bootlegging in wet counties as in dry so that saloons avoid taxes and sell untampered liquor.

Dr. Moore: Fundamentally, the question of students and faculty in regard to prohibition should be one of honesty. Figuratively, man manages to get liquor whether it's dry on many an election day, because the majority of the people are sanctimoniously hypocritical when it comes to the question of prohibition. Any superficial observer of conditions in Leon county will find that bootlegging and hard liquors can now be bought more cheaply than formerly, that is legally dry. The reason that this can be done is because a majority of the people want it that way no matter how they may vote. Students and every people who voted dry in the last election are today purchasing liquor in Leon county. It would probably be more honest for all of us to face the situation. Students in this county goes dry or wet will have little effect on the amount of liquor sold and consumed in Leon county. The dean of students and the faculty committee will probably have no more trouble with students under the influence of liquor who are here to see their girl friends than is now the case.

Helen Sweet: Students should stand against prohibition. The standards of our college will not be affected, because girls at pre-

Stewart, Field To Give Recital

Two Bradenton Artists To Appear Tonight

Mrs. Mary Hunton Field, soprano, and Miss Julia Lenora Stewart, pianist, will give a joint recital in the college auditorium this evening at 8:15 o'clock. Mrs. Field and Miss Stewart for a number of years have carried on a music school in Bradenton. In addition to this they have for several years been music supervisor of the Ballard and Manatee junior high schools.

Their students attending Florida State college this summer will act as ushers at the recital. Miss Jeanne Compton of Tallahassee will accompany Mrs. Field. Miss Stewart's program will include numbers by Beethoven, Brahms and Chopin. The numbers include "Sonata," Op. 31, No. 3 (Beethoven), including "Allegro," "Adagio," and "Allegretto"; "Rhapsody," Op. 79, No. 1 (Brahms); "Prelude," Op. 28, No. 13 (Chopin); "Ballade In A Flat Major," Op. 47 (Chopin).

Mrs. Fields' first number will be "Porgi, Amor:" from "Le Nozze di Fisaro" by Mozart. Other selections include "Vissi D'Arte, Vissi D'Amore," from "Tosca" by Puccini; "Nocturne" by Curran; "The Fisher's Widow," Edward; "Chanson Triste" by Dupare; "Oh Wings of Song" by Mendelssohn, and "The Cabinet" by Clokey.

139 May Graduate At Commencement Exercises Friday

Holland and Culberson Will Be Speakers On Programs

One hundred thirty-nine, the largest number of potential summer school graduates in several years, will be candidates for degrees or diplomas at Florida State colleges' twenty-fourth annual summer school commencement Aug. 6.

Education Leads

Five are candidates for the master's degree this summer, 66 are candidates for the four-year degree, and 68 for the two-year degree. One hundred twenty-six were graduated last summer.

The School of Education with 48 students leads in number of candidates for the four-year degree, while the College of Arts and Sciences has 13 candidates and the School of Home Economics six.

Registrar S. R. Doyle announced that graduation candidates must satisfactorily complete all requirements before degrees or diplomas will be awarded.

Holland to Talk

Graduation week will be opened officially Sunday morning at the baccalaureate service at 11 o'clock. The Rev. Harold Culberson of Tallahassee, pastor of the Capitol Christian church, will preach the sermon on "Coming to Terms With Life" that morning and the annual alumni choir, under the direction of Miss Gladys Koch will furnish the music.

Senator Spessard L. Holland, Bronson, will deliver the commencement address at the exercises 9 o'clock Friday morning. The faculty instrumental trio will play at the exercises. It consists of Owen F. Sellers, 'cello; Martha Reddick, violin, and Mary Agnes Stewart, piano.

The list of summer school graduates follows:

Senorita Dulce Ferraz Says Eight Weeks Here Make Her Feel at Home

Almost eight weeks at Florida State college have caused Senorita Dulce Ferraz, Brazilian student here, to feel perfectly at home, she told the Flambeau this week, as she passed on her goodbye.

"I admire the campus for its picturesque beauty; the college for its organization; and the people for their friendliness, courtesy and kindness," she said.

"The courses I studied I have been taught to love the United States as an older brother of my country, Brazil, and after learning it I can love for it has increased," she remarked.

"Going back home I shall never forget the generous hospitality I made to F.S.C.W. and from whom I received so many kindnesses and to whom I say a hearty goodbye and Adeus, ate' nos encontrar-emos."

The senorita prepared to leave with one regret—she says she has not mastered the English language as she feels she should have in her stay in this country. However her college friends were quick to reassure her that she speaks English far more capably than they would if the situation were reversed.

FINAL RITES HELD FOR MR. "PI" WILLIAMS AT TEN O'CLOCK THIS MORNING AT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Funeral services for Professor Arthur Williams, college vice president, who died Wednesday, were conducted at 10 o'clock this morning at the Presbyterian church, which he was an elder. Rev. Harold Culberson, pastor, officiated.

Pallbearers included college officials and townspeople as follows: President Edward Conradi, Tallahassee; Dean R. A. Columbus, Mr. S. R. Doyle, of the college; and Mr. W. L. Marshall, Mr. Clayte McCord, Judge Glenn Terrell, and Mr. B. A. Megginnis. Professors at the college and department heads were considered as honorary pall bearers.

Professor Williams died at 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning at Tallahassee's sanitarium here. Though he had been ill a year or so his death came as a distinct shock to the college community and college folk who had known him.

Death was attributed to a heart ailment; he had been at the sanitarium about a week.

Immediate survivors are a daughter, Mrs. Mary Williams English instructor at Smith college, who has been visiting here a while this summer, and who remains in Tallahassee; his widow, Mrs. Rose Longmire Williams, of this city; and son, Reese Williams, superintendent of Torvee National Park, near Apalachicola.

"Mr. Pi," as he was known to the campus, died at the age of 79 years serving the institution longer than any other. He held the rank of professor emeritus of Bible and religious education at the time of his death. The nickname which endeared him to men and women who had known him was bestowed upon him by his daughter when she first tried to say "Papa."

His intense interest in the college may be seen from the fact that at the time of his passing he was engaged in writing a history of the college.

"Mr. Pi's" record is synonymous with the growth of Florida State college. He who also served under the late Dr. A. A. Murphree, one time president of the institution, saw the college grow from little more than 200 students in 1901, to the largest enrolment in its history of approximately 1,825 last winter.

The Florida Flambeau

Entered as second class mail matter January 30, 1915, at the post office at Tallahassee, Fla., under act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

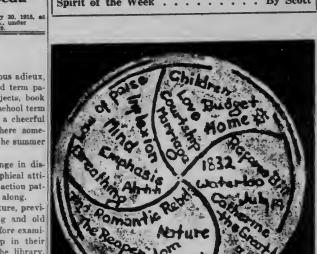
Why All These Examination Jitters?

This is a little early to make joyous adieux, with examinations facing us, belated term papers still in the process, nmts, projects, book reports and other incidentals of the school term underway, but it seems fitting that a cheerful word be injected into the atmosphere some where. And so the Flambeau bids the summer school students goodbye.

It's interesting to watch the change in dispositions, to see the various philosophical attitude adopted, to see the different reaction patterns as the end of the term comes along.

Age seems to drop out of the picture, previous training is forgotten, as young and old get a good case of the jitters just before examinations. Some shut themselves up in their rooms, while others hover about the library, going through the process of taking down books from the shelves, scribbling away at notes. Some remain away from the dining room, while others insist on taking their books with them. Some keep their lights on till the very early hours of the morning, while others are up before the sun to pore over texts and notebooks.

Conversations are almost completely monopolized by talk of examinations, parallel reading, "going crazy," wishing it were one week from now, a year from now. People snap at each other, become nervous, irritable, sullen. All in all the campus becomes a very dull place for the person who is not in the throes of these last-minute activities, if there is any such person.



But the curtain comes up, "Is this a normal procedure in the school life of the individual?" Should examinations and all the rest of the accompanying end of the term work be made so all-important? So nerve wracking? It seems as though the whole significance of education is being lost if the students who in the majority are the teachers of Florida allow themselves to become emotionally upset at this period of the game. Of course we believe and nearly every one will agree that to get the most from classes there must be much individual work, including papers, projects and book reports, all manifestations of a short period of a particular field. But is this last-minute flurry of educational endeavor, physical and mental strain indicative of the right type of intellectual growth?

It would seem that if teachers come to summer school and follow all the time-worn habits of trying to become educated—mainly cramming, learning text books minutely, learning what the professors want or what they think they want to get a good grade, worrying over examinations and the rest of the mechanics of education—they are doing a great deal toward potential harm, in that they will transmit this procedure to their students when they return to their schools, engendering them with a false sense of educational value.

It is a pretty well accepted fact that the trend in recent years has been to get away from the idea of making grades the end of education, but rather making numerical scholastic attainment just an incidental along the way of intellectual achievement and expansion. This idea involves a rearrangement of values of study habits and technique and methods of approach to any body of material. In fact, it means a new philosophy of education, not only for the student but for the teacher.

The point is, if the teachers who are also students overlook this fact when they are students they will scarcely imbue their students in turn with the right outlook toward education. And so in all this excitement of examinations, wouldn't it be well for everyone to examine their educational attitudes and to revamp their objectives if they don't conform with the best educational principles?

NEWS OF THE WEEK

By UNA UMPHREY

Extreme Irish Republicans who oppose the British monarch have been accused of committing a series of violent acts which occurred during the coronation tour of King George and Queen Elizabeth in northern Ireland. Officials, fearing an outburst of anti-monarchial feeling, had taken precautions to prevent such an outburst but the originators of the terroristic acts had laid their plans too well. The greatest explosion occurred only one and one-half miles from the procession route and is reported to have perturbed the monarchs not at all.

During the day and night terrorists burned customs houses between Ulster and the Irish Free State, frightened residents, and cut telephone wires. The extreme anti-British feeling in the Irish Free State has never gained much headway in Ulster. The entire plot is credited to Irish Republicans.

The state department is perturbed over Americans living in Peiping. Plans are being made for their removal in case the present trouble between China and Japan becomes a war in its worst sense. The Japanese government has given assurance that everything possible will be done to protect Americans and other foreigners in Peiping but of course that is not a perfect guarantee.

Mr. Roosevelt is said to be seriously considering invoking the neutrality act against China and Japan. Under the neutrality law the president does not have to wait for a declaration of war before prohibiting the shipments of arms and ammunition and the extension of credit to belligerents. However it is thought best to wait awhile and see if the dispute will not be soon settled by peaceful means.

Summer Scribblings

"Parting is such sweet sorrow
That I should say goodbye tomorrow."—listen, whether you remember it on the exam or not—just know that this time it's going to be sweeter than ever before. Think of it—no bells, no alarm clocks, no high flushes, just long hours of peaceful, luxurious sleep. sleep. . . .

It is better to be drowsy
Than to look stupid and frowsy:
So twist those curls so they will keep
No matter if you never sleep!

They say summer heat melts inhibitions and if you're asking, we might say that we feel that it affects the head a bit, too. We passed one anxious student who dashed up to the janitor in the education building the other day and excitedly inquired if he'd lost his had rung. When he assured her that it hadn't, she pleaded, "Well, don't ring it until I have time to get to the third floor."

The coeds must have done a pretty good job of protecting themselves. It seems that now that they want to have a little frolic down at the gym, they can't persuade any of the young damsels to attend. However, we prophesy that if they use a little strategy added to a little more coaxing that it will probably be a girl-break just as always.

The bicycle business is on the wane and why??? Well, here's our opinion:
An ordinary "wheel"
Will never do
For one who has ridden
A bicycle-for-two.

Term papers are beginning to stare at us all or hang over us threateningly or haunt our dreams or maybe all three. There oughtn't be a law requiring profs to assign the blamed things at the beginning of the course! (Yeah, and wouldn't we all wait until the last week-end just the same! No hope —absolutely! We know and there's no changing them.)

Well, we may never meet again
—and we probably won't care much—and we'll probably forget most of the things that have happened—
I may forget the school,
I may forget the town,
But I'll never forget the cry
Of "Put the gals down!!"

Contemporary Thought...

The Complete Scandalmonger
By George Boas

One should feel no more distress at the necessity of using Evil than at the necessity of using pain in a dentist's chair or boredom in a classroom, writes George Boas in the August Midsummer edition of Harpers.

Mr. Boas believes that Evil is the frustration, desire, and it is only through sympathy that we feel the frustration of other people's desires to succeed in life depends not only on recognizing the Good, but upon the utilizing of Evil, and he suggests the synthesis of Scandalmonger.

Scandalmongery, according to the author's definition, is one of the most efficient ways of finding out what we possess, for it requires the exercise of labor and equipment, is pleasant to engage in, and does the greatest harm. It is one of the few forms of mischievousness which spreads under the impetus, growing like an organism. It is part of the logic of persuasion, and the good scandalmonger will not worry so much about what is true as about what people like to believe, and one has to say at the outset that, other things being equal, the first step in the good Scandalmonger is:

The familiar has greater probative force than the unfamiliar. Of course, Mr. Boas tells us the rule, like all others, must be applied with intelligence. It would be better, for instance, to accuse a college of professor of mental cruelty than to accuse him of physical brutality, to accuse a woman of stinginess than of prodigality, for the accusations in these instances are appropriate to the character as depicted in literary and journalistic tradition and one's hearers are already predisposed to accept them.

The second rule is that the greater the evil, the more easy to believe it. The worse a deed the easier it is to establish persuasion of its occurrence. The author warns that the scandalmonger's application are both more persuasive than eulogy or even indifference. Simply singlehanded people believes in heroes; the sophisticated are skeptical in hypocrites. If you wish to keep conversation on a high sensational plane, be vague.

Rule number three is: The greater the charge, the greater the probative force. Therefore, writes Mr. Boas, the good scandalmonger always invents accusations of the greatest enormity. Even when girls get together and say: "The things they go on in that apartment won't bear telling." The scandalmonger knows that ladies are reverent not to imagine just what "the things are." By rule one everyone is convinced that "the things" were made precise at the start, then the scandalmonger would run the risk—in these days when social classes mingle so heedlessly—of mentioning something which would be a disappointment and pooh-pooh as unimportant.

Rule number four is illustrated in the belief that it is easier to attack a person's private life than his public. It is much wiser to confine oneself to such things as conjugal infidelity, financial affairs, and domestic life in general. People enjoy hearing that a man who seems deeply in love with his wife is secretly pursued from uxoricide only by fear of the electric chair.

In rules five and six, which Mr. Boas warns is hardly overlooked due to their overt nature, he suggestions as to: (1) The discreditable motive of an act as the real motive, and (2) The discreditable motive, if obviously apparent, of denied or unconscious. "The gives the scandalmonger a chance of saying "Of course I don't mean that he's consciously a coward, I mean that his cowardice is unconscious."

The author warns us that these six above mentioned rules are but mere suggestions, that the scandalmonger could point out that none of his work is ever finished and never has been. Wars are living in an age when the forces of evil must be harnessed and put to work. Whether we are to the Right or to the Left we shall need to blacken the reputation of those who may be in power.

Mr. Boas suggests that it is now only up to the professors to see that the emotional effervescence appropriate to the settlement of social problems is kept bubbling and hissing—J. T.

WHITE HERONS

White herons are flying
Gleaming and low
From the inland waters
Where the mangroves grow.

Peace of wide spaces
Morning and night
Warm brooding noonday
Flashes of light.

White Herons are flying
Gleaming and high.
Like flashes of silver
Across the blue sky.

Dr. Moore Speaks On Social Welfare

Brief History Is Given Concerning Set-Up

Approximately 45,000 aged and needy persons and dependent children in Florida will receive aid under the direction of the state board of social welfare working under the social security act passed by the last session of legislature, Mr. Coyle E. Moore stated during his talk in Convocation Thursday.

Dr. Moore gave a brief history on the various bills concerning social welfare that have been passed by the Florida legislature. In 1927 some civic organizations brought before the legislature the idea of a state board of social welfare. In that year a law was passed establishing such a board which was to use executive authority over a limited number of functions. The board had the duties: the inspection of certification of organizations and to make blanks pertinent of its social welfare needs.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration came into effect during the depression. Dr. Moore explained. Dr. Moore explained that as the result of able-bodied men going on relief work, Dr. Moore showed that it had no part in the aid to dependents. Due to pressure of political power, however, the Federal Social Service bill was passed, which aided to help the states in the care of aged, blind, dependent children if the state would comply with the federal regulations.

He explained that at the meeting of legislature in 1935 various changes acted that the law of 1927 was repealed and a more comprehensive law which would secure federal aid for Florida be put into effect. A two-year bill was passed by the legislature providing for the federal government for the assistance of aged dependents. This was not a pension certain need qualifications had to be met to receive this benefit.

The 1937 session of legislature repealed the 1935 bill with certain amendments, Dr. Moore said. Though it the state will receive from 20 to 25 thousand dollars federal assistance for aged dependents. In addition there will be assistance for the 22,000 dependent children and the 1,200 blind dependents in the state.

The present administrative setup of the state social welfare consists of a state board and 13 district boards. By dividing the state into 12 districts a more centralized and less expensive organization was formed. Despite this centralization Dr. Moore says that local representation has been maintained.

year-hour bill, low-cost housing legislation, and the modified veto bill brought forward this session Senator Barkley, Democrat of Mr. Robinson, has graciously placed the court bill but for consideration because he feared that when that important question is settled there will be such a stampede to adjourn that other items will be ignored, the much opposition to the three-hour bill is being made known, especially from the south that by weeks seems too conservative even for that measure alone.

A pastor in St. Petersburg, Fla., last Sunday delivered a searing sermon against violence expressed in such activities as lynchings. Ku Klux Klan parades and other such activities and the concept of the brotherhood of man. According to the News of this pastor, the Scottsboro case, the double lynching in Tallahasee last week, and the Klan parade in St. Petersburg were better propaganda for communism than any that could be smuggled in from Soviet Russia. He is to be well to think along that line before condoning such violent measures.

From recent headlines it appears that a formal declaration of war is merely a matter of secondary importance. The flimsy ground Peiping appears to go forward quite as well without such a declaration. Latest reports tell that in spite of an early repulse of the Japanese advance toward Peiping by the "Big Swords" of the Chinese army the Japanese quickly rallied and began a crushing advance on the city. A revolt in the Chinese army itself brought about a change of command and further legened any small fighting chance the Chinese might have against the superior armed and trained Japanese army whose strength is increasing daily in numbers and material.

Co-Eds to Sponsor First Boy-break Dance Here

From the coeds comes an invitation to the entire student body to attend their semi-formal dance tomorrow night in the gym.

Every girl in the summer school is invited, and is requested not to have a date except with a club member. About 150 young men from Tallahassee and vicinity, all approved by the college authorities, have been invited to be the prospective "blind dates."

All who will be attend the dance are requested to sign up on one of the bulletin boards in Bryan and the Westcott building.

The invitation as received is as follows:

"The co-eds of P.S.C.W. cast the saddr their summer outside of bewildered timidity, surprise the campus by giving the first dance by men in the history of the institution. We, the co-eds, say we have been downtrodden long enough and wish to maintain the prestige and integrity of our sex in the dominating position we as men and members of the stronger sex deserve.

"A large number of our fellow sufferers have been invited and we assure the girls that for the first time in their college lives at P.S.C.W. they as a unit will be outnumbered and relegated to the position they like.

"This should be a novel experience and we are hoping the girls will take advantage of this noble enterprise and experiment and come out and enjoy themselves as you never before by gallantly cavorting with the co-eds and their gang. We also assure that the cream of the crop will be on hand to be there waiting for them.

"Dean Thomas has graciously allowed the privilege of dancing until 12 o'clock, the only condition being that blue girls going sign the list posted on the physical education bulletin board in the lower hall of the Westcott building before Friday night as the list must be turned in Saturday morning.

"Remember, girls, this is your dance too and cannot be successful unless you cooperate with us. The co-eds wish to take this opportunity to thank the girls who are helping make this the best dance of the season, and also to thank the school authorities for allowing us to make our social debut as an organization. —The Co-Eds."

Creative Artists Are Sculpturing

If you see some of the students wandering around with a far away look in their eyes, and a bar of Ivory soap in their hands, don't become alarmed—they're only creative artists from Dr. Liddell's humanities class. A number of finished works of "sculpture" are now displayed on her desk in "the Wescott building. The subjects range all the way from the lowly mud turtle to the Greek temples.

These versatile creative artists are in the beginning the field of poetry. Perhaps hidden geniuses will be discovered.

Clementine Newman Is Visitor Over Week-end

Miss Clementine Newman, an alumna of Florida State college, was the week-end guest of Miss Katherine Byrd, social director of Gilchrist Hall. For the past two years Miss Newman has been social director in the dormitory at Stevens Junior college in Columbia, Mo. The college is outstanding for experimental work carried on in its method and organization.

For the coming year Miss Newman has accepted a position with the University of Nebraska as social director of the dormitory for women.

Program of Recreation To Be Closed Tonight At Special Play Night

The physical education department tonight will bring to a close its summer program of recreation with a special play night.

The first half of the night's program will be devoted to a popular swimming period for all those attending. This will feature many events in which everyone in the pool will participate, while the members of the regular swimming classes will be in charge to organize teams and special features.

The last of the evening will take place in the main gymnasium where members of the folk dancing classes will demonstrate various dances they have learned during the summer. This will be followed by a period in which the audience will take part in the folk dancing, with the assistance of members of the classes.

Reading Students Hold Display of Materials Throughout This Week

Sales an activity program in reading demands a variety of materials, the students of education 336, principles of teaching reading, have compiled an exhibit illustrating reading materials for elementary grades.

A committee from the class several weeks ago sent invitations to fifteen or more publishing companies asking to examine copies of new reading material. Publishers from the various companies responded generously and in most cases have donated the material to the department library.

Students of the class have opened the exhibit to others of the summer school. These students exhaustively used their services to keep the exhibit open, taking one hour turns at the task.

Those students holding the exhibit and their instructors have not passed their personal endorsement on any of the material exhibited. The materials showed are the variety offered by the many publishers represented.

The exhibit closes this afternoon, being open from 2 to 5 o'clock.

lege in 1901, he had served in various capacities. At the time of his coming he was engaged as professor of history and political science. He also served as professor of Bible and religious education. He was named vice president in 1911.

During all his years here his interests have always remained with his students. In the earlier years he coached them at hockey and encouraged them in other athletics when the athletic program was then in its infancy. He looked them over, picked, elected. They were "my girls."

Born in Radnorshire, Great Britain, on May 13, 1854, "Mr. Pi" received his early education south in that country. He came to the United Stes. He attended King Edward VI school, Wales; Elmfield college, York, England, where he received his B.A. degree in 1878. Cambridge university, Cambridge, England, where he received his Master of Arts degree in 1883; also Cook County Normal School, Chicago, from 1887-1888. He was at one time ordained Arkansas Normal school.

He had wide experience as a teacher before coming to the earlier teaching at Grocers Company School for Boys, London; also at Cathedral school, Carlisle, England; University school, Nottingham, England; and principal school of the Lakeland, Fla. high school from 1897-1901. He was also Somerlin institute, Bartow, Fla., from 1897-1901; and served as a member of the county school board for five years. He also was principal of Peabody Summer School for Teachers in Florida from 1901-1902, and professor of history and English literature in the summer normal school of the University of the State of Florida in 1905. He came to the college in 1901.

His religious membership was Presbyterian.

Professor "Pi" also belonged to a number of learned societies including: The American Historical society; the Classical Association of Biblical Instructors; Phi Alpha Theta, national history honorary society; and Phi Kappa Phi, general scholastic honorary.

ent can with the aid of boy friends obtain liquor. Since we are going to buy liquor we may as well get liquor approved by government inspection." The conclusion is that we will get its share of the tax money which repealing prohibition will bring.

Margaret Stout: Drinking is against college regulations. Therefore it seems to me that the police of the county will have little or no effect on what students do.

Dr. Venila Shores: The college community can not place too much emphasis on the need for action by the people of Leon county preventing the return of saloons. Their return would jeopardize the safety and the happiness of every member of the college community.

Una Umphrey: From a moral standpoint it seems to me that it would be less immoral to buy and use intoxicating liquors in a wet county than a dry one. Those who don't approve can disapprove as well or better in a wet county and those who are going to use intoxicating liquors anyway will at least be freed from the moral in-

Regulations for Guests Announced

Miss Anna M. Tracy, head dietitian, makes the following announcement concerning commencement guests in the dining hall:

Those getting a Bachelor's degree may have two guests without charge beginning with lunch next Monday and ending Friday noon after lunch. These two guests must be members of the immediate family. All other guests must be paid for at the desk in the dining hall. Cash—no charges.

Alumnae are guests of the college on these same dates.

Town students who have not been boarding in the dining hall do not have the above guest privileges.

Students getting graduate degrees have guest privileges as non-boarding in the dining hall.

Appropriation Reduced

The NYA appropriation for the coming year have been somewhat reduced, Dr. Edmund S. Andrews of the personnel office, has announced. The amount of the appropriation allotted to the Florida State college is not known but as soon as an official notice is sent to Dr. Andrews the approximate figure of FSCW's appointments will be notified.

Miss Edith West Talks On Contemporary Plays

"Contemporary Plays" was the theme of a talk given by Miss Edith West of the English department, in Reynolds parlor on Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Miss West discussed several of many of the most widely published productions, chose only a few for discussion. One of these Shakespearean plays, "Hamlet," with John Gielgud in the title role, another production of the same play with Leslie Howard in the lead, and Maurice Evans' "Richard II" were the most widely discussed plays, and all had English actors in the principal roles.

Helen Hayes played the title role in the Jubilee production of "Victoria Regina," a play dealing with the reign of Queen Victoria of England.

Besides these plays, there were two productions by Katherine Cornell, the actress, of others having propaganda, satire as the themes.

digestion they may experience in buying and using it in a dry county.

Owen Sellers: I don't think the students should mix in with any local politics as long as they are attending a state institution and are not local citizens.

Earl L. Vance: If there should ever be a question before the voters of Leon county as to whether the county should be wet or dry I think I should vote dry. Until that question arises I do not see how sensible people can get concerned about the matter on any moralistic grounds. It may be better to have liquor sold under licenses from the state and county and taxed by them, or it may be

College Staff Increased 25 As Term Opens

ADMINISTRATION NOW TOTALS 160

Seven Positions Newly Created This Year At F. S. C. W.

The opening of Florida State College found 25 new members on the faculty and staff. This number includes seven newly created positions and brings the entire staff to approximately 160.

Dr. Eyman is Dean

The major change in faculty appointments for this term is that Dr. R. L. Eyman, acting dean of the School of Education, succeeds Dean Salley, who has been granted an acting dean since April owing to the illness of Dean Salley who has been made dean emeritus.

The new appointments announced by President Edward Conrad following approval by the state board of control are:

Dr. Paul W. Blankweter of Birmingham Southern college to the position of assistant professor of sociology. Dr. Shankweiler has taught at the University of North Carolina, University of Tennessee, University of Alabama, and Clarison University in addition to Birmingham Southern. He is a co-author with Dr. William W. Cole of "Outlines of Sociology," and has had a number of papers published in Social Forces, World Outlook, and other periodicals. Dr. Shankweiler was graduated from Muhlenberg college, took his master's degree from Columbia university, and received his Ph.D. degree from the University of North Carolina. He also attended Union Theological Seminary and has a masters from that institution.

Baldwin Has Leave

Miss Lallie Sanford, who holds her Master's degree from John Hopkins university is the new position of assistant professor of art. Miss Canfield will fill the leave of absence of Miss Amy E. Hill Baldwin for the next term. Miss Canfield has had graduate study at the University of Munich, University of Paris, University of Pennsylvania, and New York University.

Summer School Graduates 139

Increase in Enrollment Necessitates Using Reynolds Hall

The twenty-fourth annual summer school session of Florida State college ended August 6 with 139 graduates, the largest number of candidates for degrees or diplomas in a summer session for several years.

The total enrollment of over 900 was an increase of about 100 over last year. Because of the large number Reynolds hall had to be added to the list of dormitories occupied by students.

Kappa Delta Pi national honorary education fraternity pledged eighteen students and the faculty member of Florida State summer school.

Another event of the summer session was the issuing of "American Women," the only Who's Who of the feminine leaders of the country. Seven members of the Florida State college faculty and two faculty wives were included. Faculty members represented were Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, Dr. Ollie A. Combs, Dr. Rubylee Lasseo, Dr. Anna Forbes Leonard, Miss Bessie Poppenheimer, Miss Louise Richardson, Miss Mary L. Richey, Dr. Margaret Sanders, and Dr. Jennie Tull. Faculty wives included in the book were: Mrs. Julia H. Heinsohn and Mrs. Hazel M. Richards.

In July six foreign exchange students visited this campus while touring the United States. The three boys and three girls represented Italy, Germany, Australia and France, had all been students at Northern universities this past winter.

E. P. C. Calls Two Students From F. S. C.

College Sends Virginia Allen and Sara Lewis To Cheyney, Pa.

COURSES GIVEN IN PEACE WORK

Workers Form Peace Councils and Make Winter Plans

Instead of only one girl, Virginia Allen, being sent from F. S. C. W. to represent the college in the Emergency Peace campaign, two girls went from this campus. Virginia Allen and Sara Lewis left Sunday last that she could go and help the peace work at the last minute and so both girls worked in the campaign. The girls were sent to Cheyney State Teacher's College, Cheyney, Pa. for their summer to attend courses in peace work. After this preliminary training they were sent out to the different towns, where they contacted local people. The two girls left for Pennsylvania soon after their examinations were completed.

Five institutions were represented at the Cheyney State Teacher's college. The students on the peace campaign had four to two hours daily discussion periods a day in which they were taught how to work with the world and given material for peace teaching work.

Virginia Allen was stationed at Pottstown, Pa., and Sarah Lewis at Norristown, Pa. The girls then were sent out in teams of from two to four girls to work with the work of giving lectures and leading discussions on peace and prevention of war. The girls worked in teams from the various institutions and in addition they were "peace-seven individuals" who were especially interested in the work and who were interviewed and camps, besides the field secretaries.

In this Emergency Peace campaign, many notable people attended: Kirby Page; Mary Dublon, economist at Sarah Lawrence College; New York City Editor Fay, of Harvard, authority on the world war; Dorothy Gordon of Manchester College, who worked in Geneva with the League of Nations; Harold Libby, National Counsel of Prevention of War; J. C. Kee, and many others.

The different teams studied the town into which they were going, and the teams talked on subjects such as: "Propaganda." "War Prevention Methods," "War and the Christian." "Conditions Beyond Control of War," "Conditions Making for War Today," and "Legislative Action." The group had three peace editorials in the local paper a week, and they contacted the local congressmen personally.

During the Chinese and Japanese war the teams protested

Two Sets of Freshmen Twins Threaten Students With Frightening Symptoms of Double Vision

The two sets of freshman twins passed each other in the hall recently and stared, just as if they had never seen double before.

The Horiens, Mary Sue and Betty Lou, hailing from Plant City, have always been in the same classes and have made practically the same grades in their work. Here they have different classes, due to the relief of the teachers, although both girls declare they have never had any mixup in school. The people at home know them too well, they explain, their writing gives them away, since Mary Sue is left handed.

Both Betty Lou and Suzy are cheer leaders in Plant City high school. They always dress alike and agree on most everything, even to the future. Both want to do summer camp work and Mary Sue wants to teach physical education in the winter. Both were recently pledged to Alpha Chi Pi.

The other set of twins are Katie and Virginia Fugate, from Starke, who have also been in the same classes and have made almost equal grades.

Both of these girls have an unusual record from their high school activities.

Virginia was editor-in-chief of the B. H. S. Journal, which was a page of school activities printed in the Bradford County Telegraph. She was also president of the National Honorary Beta Club and received her letter for a high scholastic average. She was a member of the band and held the office of senior play, "The Talk of the Town."

Katie was also an honor student, receiving her letter for both scholarship and a member of the National Beta Club. As an outstanding typist she beat the record held at the school. She was chairman of the club and president of the College Preparatory club.

Although twins, Katie and Virginia do not look exactly alike nor do they always dress alike. They usually double date at F. S. C. and both plan teaching for their future work.

They were pledged to Zeta Tau Alpha.

Three College Publications Begin Work

Flambeau, Distaff, And Flastacowo Change Content Plans

With this issue of the Flambeau, the first of the three college publications to go to press, while work for the other two, the Distaff, literary magazine, and the Flastacowo, year book, has begun.

Editors of the magazine, newspaper, and annual have returned to Florida State college with the prevailing ideals for their publications. The Flambeau, which is published every Friday, will include in addition to the regular features a page devoted to what is termed "campus opinion." This will be under the supervision of a student at the University of Florida concerning events in that university which will be of interest to the student body here. While the Flambeau is devoted to journalism students the publication welcomes student comment for its pro and con columns.

The Distaff, which comes out quarterly, is turning over with new features. In addition to the regular contributions from the student body in the way of stories, material may be submitted to the magazine in the form of book reviews, criticism and articles. Among the new features planned are to be reviews of current books, outstanding books and worth while articles and magazines.

The first important routine for the annual is the taking of pictures of all members of the student body. The date for taking pictures has not been set but will be in the near future. The annual comes off the press late in the spring when the complete record of the college for that year is made, pictorially and written.

Each student is a subscriber to these three publications, since payment for them is made when fees are paid.

The staff of the Flambeau has Pearle Shepard and Evelyn Fabisinski as co-editors; Mary Gray Lockhart, assistant editor. Dorothy Barclay, managing editor; Frances Brunson and Alma Warren, news editors; Mary Claude

Latest Enrollment Figures Total 1749

Freshmen Week Followed By Beginning Of Classes Monday

Latest reports from the registrar's office yesterday afternoon showed an enrollment total of 1749. Since students may register through next Monday, Sumson R. Doyle, registrar, expects a few more late students to swell the number. Mr. Doyle estimates the freshmen class at about 600 and predicts that this years' registration may exceed last year's total by a few.

Classes Begin

Beginning of classes Monday brought the opening of Florida State college to the business after a busy week devoted to freshmen activities. The first three days saw freshmen dominating the college scene but upperclassmen began to appear in number the remaining three days.

Freshmen Week was introduced to Florida State college not under way at a meeting Monday night in the Open Air theater. Mrs. Edwards, director of Personnel and head of Dorm Life, told of the plans that evening freshmen were entertained with floor parties in their dormitories. Jennie Lee and Reynolds.

Freshmen Entertained

Tuesday morning President Conrad welcomed the new students in an address in which he referred to colleges as "builders of men" and pointed out the function that the state furnishes as an investment, rather than a loan. In connection he advised the freshmen "a very happy and successful year." Mary Hall Affrench, the new head of the department of music, gave a solo. The rest of the day the freshmen spent in starting registration and in taking the English placement and modern language tests. That evening freshmen met the faculty at the President's reception in the Union building. Dancing started with the faculty trio furnishing a background of music for the occasion.

First Convocation

Wednesday morning a second convocation College Government association President Betty Cotton explained to the new students that: each one was a part of the government of the school and was expected to be a good citizen. Dr. Ralph Eyman and Louise Gehan, President of the Judiciary, who explained the function of that part of student government. Other speakers were Marjorie Rawlings, freshman author, and Miss Olivia N. Dornen, Dean of Students. Later that morning Dr. P. V. Dietitian Has Story Printed

September Forecast Has Article by Tracy On Dining Room

An article by Miss Anna M. Tracy, head dietician of Florida State college, is a feature of the September issue of the educational magazine for home economists. The article, entitled "Predicting for 1,200 Girls," describes Miss Tracy's task of providing meals for approximately 1,200 girls and running one of the largest kitchens in the state of Florida.

Illustrating the article are pictures of the main dining room and of Miss Tracy another illustration shows how meals are served family style with 10 girls at a table.

F. S. C. W.'s dining hall and kitchen were featured also in a recent issue of The Hotel Monthly, a magazine of international circulation.

Library Adds New Members to Staff

There are three additions to the Florida State college library staff this year. The new members are: Miss Henriette Howell, cataloguer; Miss Christine Thompson, assistant reference librarian; and miss Sarah Graham, assistant cataloguer.

Miss Graham is a graduate of Florida State College for Women class of 1934.

Alumnae Start Building Fund For New House

Committees to Be Chosen For Student-Alumnae Building Soon

The addition of a student-alumnae building is the main feature of the Alumnae Association program for the coming year, the new alumnae president, Mrs. Frank D. Moor, of Tallahassee, recently announced. Committees to work on plans for the building will be chosen from the entire state within the next few weeks.

A series of speakers will be sponsored by the association and presented in convocation. The first of these was Mrs. Elisabeth Corbett Gilkey, of Sprtbetbd, Mass., class of '11, who spoke at the first convocation on Thursday, Sept. 21. Mrs. Gilbert talked entertainingly for two years at Y. C. W. and of their value to her.

The Alumnae coffee, or back-to-school get-together among the graduates, will be repeated this year. In the spring the annual alumnae breakfast will be given and the reception for summer school students.

Concluding event on the 1937-38 Alumnae association calendar will be the presentation of alumnae medallions to the graduates rendering distinguished service to the college, also the annual alumnae luncheon and election of officers. These events will take place during commencement week in May.

Mrs. Moor will preside at the first executive board meeting at Thanksgiving time, when further plans for the year will be made.

Those serving with Mrs. Moor in the Alumnae association are: vice-president, Mrs. & Marion Bailey, Miami; secretary, Miss Katherine Warren, Tallahassee; treasurer, Miss Cleveland Knight, Tallahassee, representatives at large, Miss Rowena Jernigan, Tallahassee, and Mrs. E. L. Bewon, Groveland; and as district directors, Mrs. Rachel McKinnon Maddox, Brooks, Marianna; Miss Gladys Folsom, Quincy City; Mrs. Lucile Cecil Nilson, Orlando; Mrs. J. W. Pasmenter, Lakeland; Miss Louise Hooks, Sebring, Miss Charlotte Chase, Miami; Miss Maud B. McCall, Clearwater.

Executive secretary of the Alumnae association is Mrs. Robert H. Leslie.

Mazeiz, the Emperor of Japan; Fomura, who had a beautiful collection of old gilt clothes and historic armour in the Imperial Hippolitan museum, and Sima, author of books on Japanese historic costume; were among the most interesting personalities whom the saw on her tour. Nomura had his collection out of fireproof-earthquake-proof vaults to show to the four party of college professors, and they sat on the floor in Japanese style to sip tea. Members of the party, in true Japanese fashion, left their shoes at the door when they entered.

At one place, Miss Meador found women weaving cloth who paid so much for the privilege of contributing a stitch. Afterward this would be given to a soldier to bring him good luck. Principle places she visited were: Tokyo, Kobe, Kyoto, Osaka, and Shanghai.

Miss Meador arrived home August 28 and in the meridian she encountered two Friday the thirteenths.

Among the other faculty members who visited foreign countries were Dr. Mary Barron Abbey, of the history department, who visited friends in Scotland and France for six weeks, and Dr. Marion May, of the School of Education, who conducted a group of college students on a tour of the major European countries.

Dr. Dorothy Breen of the Spanish department was one of a group which studied in Mexico during the summer.

Bowman, Trombone-Tooter and Former Flambeau Editor, Bids for Position in University Band

Hazel "Red" Bowman, of Orlando, is making a strong bid this year for a post in the University of Florida "Fighting Gator" band. If she is successful in her quest she will be the first girl member ever held a place in the hitherto 100 per cent male organization.

"Red's" appearance at the first practice of the band Monday afternoon caused a sensation. Her exhibition of many a furrowed brow that had been napping only in pants-wearing musician- this year. Drum Major Phil Kaplan immediately took charge of the situation.

Biggest worry is the fact that Hazel can really play the trombone, which is the instrument she has been assigned by the band. She would leave a definite gap in the trombone section if she left to join her a uniform would violate a solid and sacred tradition.

Kaplan thought he could discourage "Red" by saying the band wouldn't be assigned skirts and there were no skirts issued, so she'd look out of merely smiled, a very disarming smile, and stated she'd manage somehow. She said she wanted to. So that's the situation.

"Red," who graduated from F.S.C.W. last June is a freshman in the University and school. She attended summer school, but still classes herself as a freshman. She gets along very well on the campus and has won many friends with her keen wit and personality.

Last year at Tallahassee, Hazel was editor of the Flambeau. She played in the college orchestra and had visions of organizing a band on the campus, but there were so few interested that she gave up the idea. She is a very accomplished musician, playing the piano and other musical instruments.

She says that the main weakness of girls is the fact that they hesitate in taking up masculine traits. In this criticism she cited the appearance of Tallahassee co-ed the fact that there were so few girls who played band instruments.

Win, lose or draw however, "Red" can feel satisfied that she's creating a bit of commotion on the University campus. Usually girls who come to school as co-eds and freshmen are reluctant to appear in any organizations because they are always surrounded by males, but "Red" has just kick out her chin and followed it right into the band.

Richards' Book Is Adopted By Eleven Schools

Text Represents Unified Treatment of Four Major Sciences

At least eleven colleges and universities besides Florida State college have adopted Dr. Harold F. Richards' textbook "The Universe Surveyed." Among the institutions using this book are: Rhodes-western university, Pennsylvania state college, and University of Cincinnati. The book, which represents a unified treatment of chemistry, physics, geology and astronomy, underwent its second printing August 15 and rights for Great Britain and the British possessions have been acquired by Routledge, the London publisher. The text was first printed on June 20.

Educational institutions, in addition to those mentioned above, which have adopted the book are: Lawrence College, San Diego State college, Eastern Oregon college, Northwestern university, Hastings college, Bowling Green state university, Simmons college, and State Teachers College of Pennsylvania at Slippery Rock, Pa.

Dr. Richard's book is being used for all sections of the physics laboratory course offered.

D. Van Nostrand Company, Inc. of New York City, is publisher.

Newman Group To Entertain

Many Projects Planned By Catholic Girls For This Year

The Newman club, the only organization on the campus of F. S. C. W for Catholic girls, has several projects for the approaching year. The objects of this association are to bring the Catholic girls together, to promote a greater interest in the questions of current discussion which particularly concern them, to clarify any religious difficulties which might be brought to the attention of the college girls, and to cooperate with the members of the parish in Tallahassee in the charity work. The Newman club is in existence on the campus of all non-sectarian college or universities. On this campus there are about 30 members.

On Sunday afternoon, Sept. 26 at 5 to 8 o'clock, there will be a reception in the lounges of Brownell hall for all the Catholic girls in the college who are interested in becoming members of the Newman club.

A special invitation is extended to all the freshmen and transferred students to come and get acquainted with the members of this organization. Dorothy Herman, vice president and chairman of the social committee, is in charge of the reception.

A meeting will be held the following Wednesday in the Westcott building. Notices will be sent out as to the time and the room number.

Among the Newman club's plans for the next few months are an initiation for new members to be held on Oct. 3, a week-end at the college camp in the latter part of October, and a convention to be held at Albion, Ga., on the week-end before Thanksgiving. The University of Georgia chapter of the Newman club will be the host to all the chapters in this province.

Marie Joffre, president of the chapter on this campus, will be glad to receive the names of girls interested in the work of Newman-club. Her college address is 270 Gilchrist.

1-H Registration Starts

Girls who have formerly belonged to 4-H clubs are asked to watch the bulletin boards for announcement of the date for registration of new members in the college 4H club. Dot McCullough, president of the club on this campus, said that a new and varied program of interesting activities is being planned for the coming school year Miss Keewen, state Home Demonstration director, and Miss Sikes, sponsor of the F. S. C. W chapter, are in charge of the projects.

In the midst of all the other excitement of rush week, the Chi Omega house, on West Jefferson street, caught fire.

It happened Friday noon, while the chapter members were entertaining their guests with a luncheon at the Dutch Kitchen downtown. When they were informed that the kitchen in their own house was on fire, they were prepared to see great flames and a flaming house to a pile of black ashes. Neither, should return.

But one of the girls who had remained at the house smelled the smoke coming from the basement and called "Aunt Willy" to do something about it." She applied the fire extinguisher to the smoke, but could not locate the source. The smoke was in the apartment.

The firemen promptly put out the fire which had resulted from a faulty hot water tank in the basement. No serious damage was done to the house except for a burned hole in the floor of the living room floor and a quantity of black smoke which soon cleared away Rush parties then continued.

Weekly Speech Programs Are Scheduled Here

Three Projects Initiated Last Year Will Be Continued

Mrs. Mary H. Buford, associate professor of speech, extends an open invitation to the public and to the public this year to attend the speech programs which the department will present once a week through out the school term. The programs will include poetry reading, story telling, play interpretations, reading circles, and presentation of plays.

Last year, for the first time, the department sponsored three new projects which were so successful that they will be conducted again this year. These projects included the selling of season tickets for all the play productions, a speech clinic for the benefit of those students who have such speech defects as lisping and "nasality," and a course in public speaking, for which there is no prerequisite.

Tentative plans for play productions call for four full length plays this winter and one full length production in spring and all for one. But if one has a play he wishes it should say so four finger goes on a student director and studentship rehearsals shake along with your hoof; you still are lacking that little overthing that makes the genuine article.

The Florida Chamber of Commerce has suggested that we change the dance to "The Big Apple." But no resolution has yet been passed.

Outing Committee Meets

Monday night at 7:30 a committee meeting was held to plan the Outing club's program for the coming year. It will meet in Bryan atrium. As vice-president of the Athletic association Burnie Lowry will have charge of the program Outher members of the committee are Betty Ruth Lehman, faculty chairman of the committee, Miss Mary Bettie and Felicia West.

Distaff Will Feature New Color Scheme And Many New Departments

Plans for this year's Distaff include a new color scheme for the covers of each issue, many new and ink sketches to illustrate the contents.

Students making contributions to the different literary fields such as poetry, stories or story-telling will automatically enter a contest for the most outstanding piece of work in that field and suitable prizes will be awarded at the end of the year.

The Distaff for the first time in its history, has the cover of the top floor of the new wing of the Westcott building.

'Big Apple' Most Recent Campus Craze

Co-eds Keep Doctor Away With a Bit of Swing And "Susie-Q"

By FLORENCE GREGORY

"Oh the Big Apple'll getcha if you don't watch out, and when it gets you, you sing and shout"... until "London Bridge Falls Down and all your troubles are 'Gone With the Wind' as you 'Merry-go-round," "Susie-Q," "Swing him Swing low," to the end! Po man says the North and its agricultural farms has been known for its famous trucking industry, so it took the South to make its own inimitable plan of "truckins" nationally and internationally known—through the "Big Apple," dance having reference to the basic step, which has swept the South like Grandmae Hasties-ity Fairmont broke.

Now the girls, who gather in "rec" every night after class, have become sturdy advocates of that ancient proverb that an apple a day keeps the doctor at distance and dance the night away is hoops that they are doing the job up right by going into it thing in a big way.

Almost anybody can do the Big Apple—and practically everybody tries! If she can be or her hops, shoulders and one finger is the same time as the other, she is potential threat. Put in practice Rusia's theory of Communism and you have it. One for all and all for one. But if one hop or swing when it should way or your finger goes on a sidetrack and shoulderless rehearsal shake along with your hoof; you still are lacking that little overthing that makes the genuine article.

Florida State Gives General 2-Year Course

Integrated Curriculum Goes Into Second Year of Trial

The general education program which was initiated on this campus last fall is continuing this year fo. freshmen and sophomores.

The program is designed to give to students during their first year a general background in the main fields of knowledge before they specialize in their chosen subjects during their junior year.

This innovation in the educational field represents a different arrangement in courses rather than a selection of new courses. Basic integrated A.B. required courses are offered which cover the historical, physical, and social sciences and humanities. The general education program is effective in the College of Arts and Sciences, School of Education, and School of Home Economics.

The School of Education, of which Dr. Ralph L. Rogers is dean, is the division set apart for the training of teachers and educational leaders. Dean William G. Dodd heads the College of Arts and Sciences which offers three degrees, A. B. B. S., and B. S. in Commerce. The School of Home Economics offers courses dealing with problems of the home and the community. Dean Margaret R. Sandels is head of this school. Dean Ella Agnew Vaughn is the head of the School of Music in which the degree of Bachelor of Music is offered.

Town Freshmen Being Coached

New Orientation Program By Day Student Club To Get Underway

A three weeks' orientation program for the town Freshmen is a new project being put into effect this year by the Day Students organization, Mattie Lou Love, president of the club, has announced. Under the direction of Mary Bennie Parker, chairman, the town students will be instructed in the purposes and regulations of the club.

The first purpose, which is to encourage acquaintanceship of town with dormitory students and participation in all activities in college activities, this group has planned its own sport teams in the competitive sports.

The organization, which is open to all day students, will meet this year every other Thursday in its club room in the Westcott building. At present 183 town girls are enrolled.

Other officers are: Dorothy Cedrick, secretary - treasurer; Sarah Wells, parliamentarian; Dorothy Bellamy, senate representative; Emma Lou Alford, social chairman; Meta Helms, activity chairman; Mavis McMillan, religious chairman.

Faculty advisers are Miss Ruth Schornherst, Mrs. Dorothy Breen and Dr. Raymond Bellamy.

Saturday night over 300 freshmen boarded school busses for Camp Flastacowa and the freshman fall frolic, the last event of the freshman week program. In spite of the rain, many of the number swam in Lake Bradford, and were instructed by physical education majors in the arts of handling a canoe. All around the camp bonfires were built and built a ring of campfires, over which they roasted weenies for supper hot dogs. After supper various groups gathered in the camp houses to learn odd songs and "Carmel and Gold." Those in charge were the physical education majors were Miss Katie Montgomery, Head of the Physical Education Department. Dr. Dorman, and directors of the freshman residence halls.

Language Clubs To Reorganize

Classical, French, And German Clubs Plan Active Year

Formal reorganization meetings for the French, German and Classical clubs on the campus will be held early in October, the presidents announced this week.

The Classical club, composed of girls who are especially interested in the classics and their development, has planned a very active program for this year, according to Ruth Nelson, president of the club. The Classical club will act this year as a Latin laboratory. At present plans are being formulated for the construction of a miniature Roman theater with films that will illustrate the most outstanding of the classical myths. Activity projects during the year will take the form of a new constitution.

A general plan of action for the year will be formulated at this first meeting, said Miss Evelyn Grasler, president.

The election of officers for the year will take place at the first meeting of the German club. This club has not yet begun its activity on the campus. Miss Myrtle Deibee is the sponsor for this club.

Homesickness Is Abated By The Serenades

Freshmen Lulled to Sleep By Night Songs, Stars' Soft Harmony

Though most of the members of the insomnia freshman class admit that they are still understanding and bewildered about many of the ways and customs of their Alma Mater, there is one point about which they are sure: they have formed a decided and fond opinion. When asked individually whether they liked "goodnight freshman dear," each in her own fashion passed favorable judgment upon one of the best loved traditions of Florida State.

"We walked up for the serenades every night," said two enthusiastic members, "and we thought it was swell. At first we felt homesick, just like infants, but after that we loved it and the singing would lull us to sleep."

Four feet and eleven inches of energy and conversation declared that it was "too, too, too, too lovely" and was really indignant over the fact that she and her roommate had stayed awake for hours the first night of the serenade and had missed the serenaders who never came.

A soft little blonde paused a few moments before answering. Then she started a fifteen minute confidence about how the serenading was the only remedy that helped her to overcome a chronic attack of homesickness. Another freshman said she could not hear the singing while writing to mother-dear, but that it "kinda lulled me sick," but it was beautiful. I looked forward to it every night," she continued, "and my roommate and I always watched at the windows while the singing went on."

One freshman in two sentences spoke the unexpressed feeling of her class. "I am made us feel a friendship and kinship with all the freshmen of former years and all who will be here after us." she said, "and made us a part of Florida State College.

Broward Near Riot Quelled

Angry Browardites Fight For Soft Mattresses

All's quiet on the western front. And better still, all's quiet in Broward.

The enraged Browardites had nothing of beautiful sleep because war this week when they heard a rumor that their mattresses, reputed to be the best on campus, were to be exchanged for the less comfortable ones in Reid.

Since many of the girls in Broward hall reserved their rooms last year so as to be sure of getting one of the famous Broward mattresses, they protested strenuously to the new beds. new coil springs, and "Carmel and Gold." Those in charge immediately set about to quell the riot.

Regular campaigns were planned; whispers were started; "rooming" were left standing guard over the cherished beds; while signs which read "Please do not disturb our beds, we're still satisfied" were posted on doors.

Now all's quiet in Broward hall. New mattresses have been installed, but the idea of removing mattresses was abandoned by the matrons.

14 Honoraries Offer Varied Opportunities

Phi Beta Kappa Heads List of FSC Honor Organizations

High standards of scholarship are encouraged by the 14 honorary societies on campus and membership is offered to those students who attain special prominence in various fields. Eleven of these honoraries are national and three local.

Phi Beta Kappa, founded at the University of Virginia in 1779 and installed on this campus in 1926, awards membership to those students in whose programs high standards of scholarship in the liberal arts and sciences have predominated, while other honoraries take membership upon achievement in special lines.

Gamma Kappa of Alpha Chi Alpha, national journalistic honorary was installed here in 1931. Membership is limited to those students who have shown marked ability in the field of creative part in collegiate publications.

Pi chapter of Omicron Nu, home economics honorary, was installed on this campus in 1932. The society's standards of admittance are the highest in the home economics department. The membership is limited to seniors and second semester juniors who can be admitted only after they have fulfilled a specified number of courses in home economic requirements.

Pi Kappa Delta, forensic honorary literary fraternity, was installed on this campus in 1924 by Professor Morse. Its founder. The society has for its purpose the stimulation of forensic activities among college students.

Kappa Delta Pi, education honorary installed on this campus in 1925, although founded many years ago, admits men and women who are interested in education and who are willing to continue with the work. admits students of the upper quartile of the school if they have fulfilled certain requirements.

Pi Kappa Phi, the first fraternity for honors in general scholarship, was organized by a group of students in 1924 by Professor Leslie Richardson. Dr. Elisabeth O. Andrews, Miss Daisy Parker, Dr. Verna L. Shores, and Dr. Ralph L. Eyman.

Freshman orientation will officially end with Frolic night when the freshmen class pledges its allegiance to the college.

Harold Enters Yale

Miriam Harold, who received her A.B. degree in the College of Arts and Sciences here last June, left Wednesday to enter the Divinity school at Yale University. She expects to receive a Master's degree in religious education, a three-year course 1837, exists for the purpose of study of and interest in the dance. There are two other local organizations on this campus. Eastern, even honorary, and Spiros, girls. Odd honorary. Membership whose purpose is to keep even spirits high, was established in 1930, and Spirogira, which has ideals of leadership, loyalty and service, was organized in 1924.

Freshmen Awarded More Privileges

For the first time in the history of Florida State college, freshmen will be allowed to have dates with men during the week without special permission. This is one of the new privileges given to them by the revised College Government Association rules.

Other changes allow them to keep their lights on until 11 o'clock on week nights and to accept rides to and from town with friends or members of the faculty at any time without signing up.

Freshmen Take CGA Test Soon

Exam to Cover House, College Government Regulations

An exam covering all house and college government regulations will be given to the freshmen on Saturday afternoon, October 2, at 2 o'clock in the auditorium. This test is a feature of the orientation program designed to familiarize freshmen with campus rules. Or especial importance are the rules set forth on page 48, sections seven, eight, and nine of the Freshman Bulletin.

All freshmen failing to pass this orientation test will be placed on a two weeks campusment and will be required to take the test over.

Orientation for the freshmen extends over the entire first quarter, beginning with Freshman week, at which time the new students were welcomed by various members of the faculty and given the help of student counsellors, faculty advisers, and the members of Sophemore council. The following week freshman tables were arranged to aid members of the freshman class in becoming better acquainted with one another.

Freshman class meetings will begin Saturday, Sept. 25, at 11:30 and will continue through Saturday, Oct. 2, when Dr. Dorman, dean of the students, will speak at the first class meeting on "The Meaning of Education to You"; other speakers will be Miss Louise Richardson, Dr. Elisabeth O. Andrews, Miss Daisy Parker, Dr. Verna L. Shores, and Dr. Ralph L. Eyman.

Freshman orientation will officially end with Frolic night when the freshmen class pledges its allegiance to the college.

Investiture To Be First FSCW Rite Observed

Other College Traditions Will Be Celebrated During Year

Investiture, on October 8, will be the first of the college traditions to be observed by the students at Florida State College for Women. In this impressive ceremony the seniors are invested in their caps and gowns as a formal recognition of their membership in college.

The Y.W.C.A. recognition service follows soon after. This service marks the initiation advance of the freshmen into the college, and it is symbolized by a friendship circle of light formed by the new members encircling a fountain, each holding a lighted candle.

The freshman class again comes into prominence in the tradition of Torch night. At this time they are formally received as part of the college, and the allotment of privileges up to them the torch of devotion to the Alma Mater.

The pledge of loyalty between the freshmen and junior classes comes early in November. This service takes the form of a medieval pageant and is held in the college auditorium.

Thanksgiving on the campus marks the beginning of traditional events for a: that time the quotation of Odd-Even supremacy for the year is established. They celebrate with their solemnity and beautiful historic parade while the Evens burn the Odds in effigy around a roaring bonfire. The Odd and Even Demonstrations are also presented. These are entertainments written, directed, and acted by the Odds and Evens. Sports rivalry is at Thanksgiving day when two teams compete in volley and basket ball games. Late the day an enormous turkey dinner is served in the dining hall.

The Christmas season is observed by the seniors at a Christmas party. At this time they march in caps and gowns to the traditional Christmas dinner.

Soon after the second semester is underway the mid-winter festival is held. The juniors hold their traditional minstrel, and the freshman class presents its first independent entertainment in the form of a freshman carnival.

The first week in March is F.S.C.W week, and at this time the faculty members from this campus visit the state in a general lecture tour.

College Government Greets the Freshmen

As this new school year opens, and you begin this editorial in the first issue of the Flambeau, I invite you to make yourself comfortable in your single rocker (the one that squeaks if you tilt it back too far) and join me in taking a good look at your College Government association. When you come to those last three words I hope there doesn't flash before you a picture of your president making announcements in a booming voice or your Chairman of Judiciary tediously explaining petty rules. Rather I should want you to recall such words as the quick surge of pride you felt last Tuesday morning when the faculty in dignified academic procession marched between the rows of students—the queer "thrilling" feeling you get every time you hear above the voices of your companions in the singing of "Garnet and Gold" until the words seem to come as from one voice expressing one idea—or the utterly nice sensation of having been useful that you experienced the other day when you helped a new student, took down the flag when it started to rain, answered the phone on your hall, or any one of the small services College Government citizens do so often.

These scenes are symbolic of some of the things College Government stands for. True, a great deal of detailed mechanical work has to be done. True, the governing documents must be made, and certain regulations maintained. However, don't visualize these more or less stereotyped duties as being the fulfillment of the aims of the association. Let your mind skip over the fine you paid for missing convocation and the sentence you got when you carelessly stayed out after last light flash. Think rather of the association as being made up of a large group of students striving to enrich their lives, guided and aided by an enthusiastic more experienced group, the faculty. We make a pretense of being a Student government association. We are a College Government association. The purpose of the organization may be summed up as being the personal development of its individual members. You may contend that the school also the purpose of all education; therefore, C.G.A. and other campus groups overlap in their functions. At this point you had better stop reading and conserve all your energy for my next statement which applies to you as an individual. You see, we students are just conceited enough to believe that when we individually and collectively take the responsibility for our activities, that we, individually and collectively, will receive the greatest benefits from those activities. Whether we be proven right or wrong in that belief rests with us. To you, Miss Average Student, the College Government association throws a challenge. Will you forsake your rocking chair and accept?

Judiciary Greets the Freshmen

"The meeting of the Judiciary will please come to order," and with these very common words the first meeting of the Judiciary for the year 1937-38 was opened last Wednesday night. Here were twelve students gathered together, known as the members of the Judiciary. "Why were these girls there" What were they doing"" Any student, if asked this, would almost invariably have answered with another question, "Who's the victim tonight?" But, contrary to the usual idea as to the function of the Judiciary, this body was not meeting to dole out punishments to some poor bewildered students, but for the sole purpose of drafting their policies and plan of action for the coming year.

Again comes a question—"Why do all these things? What difference does it make?" Once again—Here are you to set up such arbitrary rules"' The answer is that this group has been chosen by you, the student body, and has been given full authority to manage the judicial affairs of our College Government association with the aid of other student officers and faculty members. This group feels that its function is mainly educational; and, only after that, it is corrective or remedial.

Another question arises— What have you to do with our education? You're only the Judiciary: why don't you chase the people who do the wrong things and leave the rest of us alone"' Then, this group answers by reminding the questioner that the very foundation of our whole college government rests on the fact that each girl enrolled as a student at Florida State College for Women has, at the same time, accepted the privilege and obligation of "living up" to our honor code: and the Judiciary feels that its main function is the furtherance of the ideals under which this code was established. In accepting this responsibility, each student promises to adhere honestly to a code of honor. However, herein lies the source of the trouble. Every girl has up to certain personal code: loyalty to friends, family loyalty, maybe just plain self protection, even if only to the extent of just "getting by." Now comes the task of uniting these various codes into one strong and vital Honor Code which will be representative of all of the students of F.S.C.W. To do this, each student must realize that she is one essential part of the whole college. Many students are very sincere in their determination to live up to all the rules of the college, but they are equally sincere in their determination to let the other student alone to do whatever she pleases. They say that they can't do this; that it is against the standards of honor under which they have been reared; that this is merely "tattle-telling." However, would any of the same students say that, although they themselves would not steal, they would not try to stop anyone from robbing their home' Or, after graduation, would they stand by and allow some co-worker in the same office to take information from the desk of another person and use it for her own advancement and to the detriment of the former students'

We are all proud of our families and of the standards of honor which have been developed in our individual homes. Why should we not give ourselves a chance to be equally proud of the standards of honor set up by our college' It is just as important and, right now, of even more vital interest to us as students at this college to have the right set of standards in evidence here. We believe that if we are honorable; and, believing this, we ask only that you ever strive to be more honorable.

—Louise Gehan, chairman of Judiciary.

We Welcome The New Students

The Flambeau extends a welcome to the freshmen who have already been so busy accepting the platitudes of faculty and students, dealing with new conditions and becoming conduct and courses that they must by now be a little weary of being fussed over. In addition the Flambeau greets all other new students, transfers and special students.

We of the staff will not remind these students of their obligations as an integral part of Florida State; we aren't going to entertain them not to do anything that will detract from the college's name; we aren't going to petition their cooperation in all student activities which they find worthy of their support. For we feel that they have received from other sources much valuable information and advice.

However, we do wish to be of some service, and, following a precedent of the campus scene, of the academic organization, of the group activity of the students, and of the several traditions observed throughout the year.

We hope through this page the freshmen and new students will find some things which they didn't know before—activities that they are eligible to participate in, for instance. We hope in other words, that this page will be of assistance.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

Events of the week continue to place European affairs to the fore with the spotlight on the undeclared war in the Far East. Japan launched an attack along a 2,000 mile line of Chinese territory, with three major encounters following air raids at scattered points. A land offensive was taken on the Shanghai front, while Canton suffered bombing for the third successive week, and despite strong protests from Great Britain, France and the United States, Nanking was bombed twice. The Japanese claim to have broken the main Chinese defense north of the Yellow river and consider their conquest of North China to be certainty.

China's "will to resist" appears, however, to be unbroken, and experts predict that the war will be comparatively long. Feeling is increasing against the United states for its neutrality policy as Chinese statesmen and newspapers interpret it as favoring Japan.

Late word on the machine-gunning of Great Britain's Ambassador Sir Hugh Knatchbull-Hugessen announces it to be a closed incident. Japan admitted as a fault one of the Japanese military planes machine-gunned the ambassador's automobile because of a "misunderstanding."

Reports of Spain's war, crowded off the front page by the crisis in the East, state that the loyalist government has opened a new campaign in the southwest and the southern army has invaded Badajoz province along the Portuguese frontier for the first time since the war started. The objective of the drive is to threaten all of Generalissimo Franco's southern communications and sever south insurgent Spain from the north.

Repercussions of the Spanish war are heard in European diplomatic circles. Great Britain expressed fears that Mussolini might send more troops for the insurgent armies to offset the diplomatic setback he suffered in the anti-piracy patrol of the Mediterranean. "Wednesday, the French foreign minister, Yvon Delbos, warned that if Mussolini insists on sending troops to aid the rebels, France may beforced to open her frontier to Spain. Since the withdrawal of British and French neutrality patrol ships from Spanish waters last Friday, the Southern Pyrenees frontier remains the only medium of restrictions under the defunct non-intervention agreement.

And Others Say.....

The University of Colorado issues annually a "C" book for their freshmen, in which appears a message or advice for them. Worth to repeat, will a few changes in difference of opinion, the kind of advice for our own freshmen.

"Cultivate the Florida State spirit. Keep in mind that the college expects you to become familiar with and adhere to her traditions and regulations, and always endeavor yourself in such a way as to bring honor to the institution of which you are now a member.

"The hardest thing for the average freshman to realize is that college professors do not hand over the keys of intellect students with clubs to keep them going. The matter is entirely up to the intellect—whether he makes or breaks himself. Professors may can bluff with little or no work. Keep your head, and don't do things just because others do.

"Be courteous to the members of the faculty. Attend to your studies first and to other things later. Take pride in your college and your college will take pride in you.

"Don't neglect the finer things in life. Florida State provides many opportunities for musical, artistic, and literary achievements. These may be a source of much present and future enjoyment.

"Do not deceive yourself into thinking that your intellect will be so greatly improved by college that you can cast off sound religious and moral beliefs because of intellectual doubts. Men far brainier than any of us are Christian leaders up the world of thought and action today."

The University of Nebraska upperclassmen, through The Daily Nebraskan, are worrying over the freshmen. They say in the paper:

"It seems to look like a bad year for high grades, among first year students. Already envisioning a struggle to achieve averages among their social minded peers, one house has just purchased an impressive battery of dining room chairs, that fold their heads at the certainty of hard won scholarship cup slipping from their grasp, dusts off the files, and stand prepared to weather Harry Study hall supervision becomes a part of the life order of things."

The mention of "new order of things" should prove interesting to the students in this campus who have supervised study of their pledges and emphasized study hours above other things. the student president of Pantheistic College campus plans to attempt a complete change of the present system of rushing there, even making it through study of the quota system in use on so many campuses.

The Crimson and White, of University of Alabama, records a big change in the Women's Student government regulations this year. Beginning this year in that university, senior women making an average of "B" will be allowed to stay out on Saturday nights until 11:30. This honor originally constituted a "late permission."

Another change made there this year is enviable to us, in that a handy place has been set aside in which the girls may smoke during the university dances. There, also, much work is being done to create constructive help with convocation programs.

Collegiate Comeback

. . . And another year is off in a cloud of dust. By this time the freshmen have heard about the finer things of life, know that the other half of knowledge is where to find the same, and realize that the Big Apple is taking the country by storm, so won't bother them with more such information. By the way, freshmen, don't let yourselves be over-awed by those self-assured-looking upperclassmen. They're nothing but shrinking violets disguised as tiger lilies.

An exchange offers some encouragement to freshmen with the information that green things grow—

Speaking of freshmen reminds us of boners, and speaking of boners reminds us of the upperclassman (a senior, too) who got up with the early rising bell, and dashed down to the dining room just in time. Was disappointed to find it was freshman breakfast! Maybe four years of P.S.C. have dulled her brain. . . . And let's not forget Freshman Dixon who says she were himself out trying vainly to deliver a telegram to Miss Jennie Mugford.

The Associate Collegiate Press announces, somewhat hopefully, we think, that ever since Helen of Troy kidded the boys into thinking her face was worth the launching of a thousand ships there has been making men do foolish things. Mebbe so. but from where we sit it sounds phony. We've been here for years and have yet to persuade the boy friends to spend a week-end in Tally. On the other hand, we're not possessed of the charms that put Helen down in history.

At present everyone, even the least scholarly, is rushing around in a frenzy of excitement and elation to settle down to some serious work. The library looks like Grand Central at rush hour. All that will soon be over, and the only ones left us who are destined to flunk anyhow will crawl back into our usual rut and begin to worry because we never study. . . . Perhaps it's better that way—more restful, at least.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This column is the first in a series of weekly exchanges from the University of Florida. It will be written by a member of the Alligator staff and will bring the latest happenings and events of their campus to the attention of students here.

By BILL JIBB

With the student body settling down after a hectic Freshman week program the campus is now taking an increased interest in student body affairs.

President George Smathers called a special election for the 21st of this month to succeed by office' holders failing to return to school this year. At the same time the regular fall election will be held.

Up for nomination is the editor and business manager of the Florida Review and also ten honor council member from the College of Business administration. In the regular election will be elected class officers for the four academic classes and for the freshman, junior, and senior law classes.

Pre-season predictions, which are deplorably unreliable, place the number of freshmen entering the University of Florida at this fall should mean that the student body will number over 2000.

The Gator football squad which two weeks ago numbered 47 has dwindled to 44. They are working hard mornings and afternoon under a hot sun preparing for a touch schedule. They open with L.S.U. in Baton Rouge Sept. 28.

For the Homecoming game this year, the Cadets face Georgia Tech, carrying on an old, bitter feud. Blue Key is making plans to entertain them at that time.

Phi Beta Kappa, outstanding honorary academic fraternity, has recently voted to grant one of its eight new charters to the University of Florida. As some 200 colleges and universities originally attempted to gain charters, it is considered a signal honor to have received one of the eight to receive new charters. Dr. Tigert, president of the university, played a leading role in application.

Clifford C. Beasley, president of the new fraternity council, said recently that a meeting of the organization would be held on Oct. 4. At this meeting plans for the Fall Frolic will be discussed.

This Wednesday the different fraternities are holding their first regular meeting. It is the purpose of these first gatherings to get certain political representatives and to get everything in order for the coming year.

The Challenge to the Middle Class By William Allen White

Three recently published books present three different aspects of American life edited by William Allen White in a recent issue of Atlantic Monthly as showing something of the challenge to the middle class through growing importance of the proletariat.

The appearance of a proletarian literature should be no surprise to middle class America, Mr. White says, that their position is quite impregnable as it once was. The tree of knowledge, Mr. White continues as presenting challenge to the middle class is Middletown in Transition by Robert and Helen Lynd, a ruthlessly gentures a typical midwestern industrial town, the stronghold of the middle class.

Next, Charles Rumford Walker's book, American City: a Rank-and-File History, tells the story of urban America, where the burden ruler of the city, has to grant increasing concessions to the proletariat. The book that completes the picture of America is Gilbert Seldes' Stammering Century which depicts the heart, and the subburbanite. The author of book sees us creating a new way of life, different from ours.

However, Mr. White does not see only the accompanying the changing status which predicts, for he believes that the American way of right held by the American people will see them grant the workers' demands for the individualism guaranteed the middle class (F. C.)

Vaucluse—A College for Middle By J. H. Wallis

J. H. Wallis in the September issue of Forum explains his ideas for a new kind of adult education. Vaucluse, the name of the college he would embody his theories, would be for the over 45 years old who feel that they have been able to achieve the degree of culture and self-development which they are capable.

The essence of the Vaucluse idea is to provide a place where students may learn from the world. However, the time one could stay at this unique college would be limited to two years, for Mr. Wallis states that people should not shut their lives, and minds off from the world.

Each Vaucluse member would be able choose the courses he wishes to take ranging from the study of ancient Egyptian to the chemistry. The object of the institution is not be to increase its students' earning power but rather to "assist them to be what they aired to be by the help they can give to or by knowledge" a knowledge which would, Mr. Wallis feels, bring notable values into the life of the country—(F. Japan Counts the Cost By Nathaniel Peffer

In an article by Nathaniel Peffer in the October issue of Harpers entitled "Japan Counts the Cost," Mr Peffer states that Japan is in deep trouble because she is succumbing to pressure of sudden mechanical development.

The author says that Japan has performed a prodigious, if not miraculous, feat and is beginning to pay the price. The effects of industrialism are cumulative, and they have begun to warn that it has not yet reaped all the advantages of Westernism—wealth, power, extension of range, comfort, convenience, efficiency. It has begun now to get the disadvantages—dependence on external sources of raw material, dependence on foreign markets and many problems. Japan has not yet made added encumbrances of its own making, but almost feminal attempt in the past few years to annex Manchuria and the Far East.

Mr. Peffer thinks that Japan is in a position where it dare not go either forward or backward, but either can it remain for to do so is to see itself emasculated. He says, too, that Japan may not have reached its limits, but will never attain the heights it sought.

In conclusion the article states that Japan itself, the Far East, and economic and political general may with the passing of time be in order themselves that Japan can step back into a reposted space, or that she can recover from injury from the encursion; but that will not and cannot be soon, and by what way and what guidance it will be brought about cannot now be visualized.—B.S.

Sports Events For New Year Get Under Way

Odd-Even Teams to Start Practice Next Week In Afternoon

A large extra-curricula program is getting under way this week according to Miss Kathryn Montgomery, head of the Physical Education department.

The Odd-Even teams begin volley ball and basket ball practice next week. Odd teams are scheduled to practice at 4:30 on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons. Even teams drill at 4:30 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. All students who are interested are asked to participate in these sports. These class activities are in charge of the athletic association and the class managers—Felicia West, senior; Sara Lyle, junior; and Mary Collins, sophomore.

Plans will soon be completed for the inter-sorority. Miss Rebecca Averill, faculty chairman, and Miss Mary Bettie, coach, will have charge of these arrangements.

For those students desiring less strenuous sports, the physical education department has also started a program. Marie Joffre, student instructor, is arranging a fencing class which will meet every Wednesday afternoon at 4:30. Archery practice from 4:30 to 5:30 in the gym Vivia Brooks will give instruction. A tap dancing class is for the students who were unable to get in the classes taught by the schools. Both of these classes hold their first meeting next week.

For students who are interested in inter-mural sports, the athletic activities the equipment house is open every afternoon from 4 to 5. Faculty members are also invited to make use of this privilege. Equipment is available for hand ball, shuffle board, croquet, ping-pong, archery, and fencing. Tennis courts are available any night may get the key for the Alpha Delta Pi house.

Every Friday night from 8:00 to 10:30 in the Woman's Building gym Dancing, swimming, and ping-pong may be enjoyed during these hours. Girls may bring date to the dances if they have signed the necessary slip. Swimming for off-campus houses, or sorority houses. Boys without dates are not permitted to enter the dances.

Miss Montgomery urges all the girls to report to the Physical Education office.

Two Hundred Freshmen Attend Outing at Camp Flastacowo

Fall Creations Discarded for Stained Slacks As Freshmen Enjoy Canoeing and Swimming At Camp on Lake Bradford

At 4:30 Saturday afternoon 200 freshmen set aside their newly-acquired sophisticated airs, their fall creations and became themselves again to enjoy a ball day of old-fashioned camping on Lake Bradford at Camps Flastacowo. The merry freshmen, dumped in anything from faded beach shorts to rust stained slacks, were packed into open buses and taken out to camp.

Half-drenched, with hair straggling down their faces all their way on the girls spilled out at the cabin. Boys ran for the bank, others for the canoes. The more timid freshmen waited for the gym majors to suggest boating for them. Perhaps they were the "more refined" contingent who left them around as passengers! Then, not surprised with such a task, these freshmen "oh-ed and ah-ed" to their hearts' content.

Florida State Chosen As Site For Conference

Athletic Federation Will Meet on This Campus In Late Spring

Florida State College for Women is coming into its own as far as athletics is concerned this year. The Athletic Federation of College Women has chosen our campus as the site for their southeastern conference to be held sometime in April.

Twenty-eight colleges are to be represented at this meeting. Each college may send two official delegates and any unofficial delegates as they please. Many faculty members are on the committee and are also expected to attend.

Florida State college is to be represented by Vivia Brooks, president of the athletic association, who will preside at the conference. Mary Lewis is in the secretary.

The entire conference will be held at camp. Round table discussions, open forums and speeches are to form the major part of this meeting. Between times for scheduled entertainment, the delegates are to have the privilege of using all the equipment at camp. Officers are being made to obtain Mr. J. B. Nash, head of the physical education department of New York university as the principal speaker for the banquet honoring the delegates, will end the conference.

Rawls Takes High Honors

Katy Makes Short Visit Here Enroute Home

Katherine Rawls, Florida's prize mermaid, who starred at Florida State College for Women last year, recently stopped in Tallahassee for a short visit on her way home from a 13,000 mile tour she has just completed during which she carried off top honors in national aquatic meets in this country and Japan.

Katherine met her parents here September 15 and stayed for a determinate hotel. Although she did not have time to visit the college, she had a brief chat with one of her sorority sisters at the Kappa Alpha Theta house and told her regret at being, unable to stay longer.

From here Katherine went to her home in Fort Lauderdale with the intention of preparing for another year in college but at this time it is unknown whether she will return or not. According to "Katy" herself, she misses the well loved attending Florida State College for Women and would like to return. She was forced to leave last year in order to train for the tour she has just completed.

College Buys New Victrola

Machine Will Make Debut Play Night Tonight

There will be no more straining of ears in order to catch the music coaxed out of a piano for the dancers at play night. The necessity of hiring a small band for formal dances is over. Now students can listen and dance to all the latest tunes, played by all the leading orchestras in one night. And if they tire of that, they can listen to London, Paris or even China.

The physical education department has purchased a 1938 model RCA radio-victrola. It is a streamlined affair with twenty-four changes of records instead of the usual twelve.

The first play night of the year is being held this Friday from 8 o'clock until 10 o'clock at the gym. This is the first public appearance of the new radio.

Organizations having their formal dances in the gym may get permission to use the new radio-victrola from Miss Kahn Montgomery or from Vivia Brooks. A small fee will be charged the organizations taking advantage of this offer in order to keep a good supply of new records on hand for play night use.

The Revolutionary Pen That Won't Run Dry
In a New and Superlative Model—the Speedline

It's not how much a person has in his pocket that determines whether or not he selects the new 1938 Parker Speedline Vacumatic . . . it's how much he has above his shoulders!

Some other pens cost as much as this revolutionary Speedline, but you get no saving the "low down" on pens when you buy one. Everyone we tried out gave the ENTIRE pen a thorough going-over, and they declared—at this time—that the capacity, hence Pen That Won't Run Dry supply—shows when to refill —hence one that never runs dry in classes or exams.

An utterly exclusive Style—streamlined Pearl and Jet—now with slender Speedline shape—is the most exciting ever conceived.

And not merely modern in Style, but wholly modern in mechanism, too. Its BACKLESS and patented Diaphragm Filler radically departs from all earlier types, regardless of whether they have a rubber ink sac or not.

Be sure to see and try this pedigreed Beauty today at any good pen counter. The Parker Pen Co., Janesville, Wisconsin.

TRANSFER STUDENTS HONORED AT TEA; SERIES OF TEAS BEGUN IN DORMITORIES

Jennie Murphree, Reynolds, and Gilchrist residence halls began this week the regular weekly tea which are given every Wednesday afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock in the dormitory parlors. The girls are invited to attend the tea given in the residence hall in which they live. Off-campus students may go to tea in any dormitory.

Bryan and Broward halls will have their first regular tea Wednesday.

These weekly teas are held to encourage friendly relations among the students in each dormitory and to enable the directors of the residence halls to become acquainted with the girls in their halls. The tea also serves as a welcome relaxation from the busy grind of the week.

Weekly Tea Plans

Tuesday afternoon from 4:30 until 6 o'clock about 80 transfer students attended an informal tea held in Broward lounge. The purpose of the tea was to introduce the transfer students to the important officers on campus.

In the receiving line were the following: Dean Olivia N. Dorsett, Miss Maude Flowers, Betty Cottlund, Louise Gehan, and Louise Pascale.

Transfer orientation leaders introduced the transfers to those in the receiving line. Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel, poured tea. Miss Catherine Byrd, Mrs. Melvin Turner, Mrs. Lollie Wimberly, Mrs. Margaret Saynor, and student officers acted as hostesses. The social committee, headed by Miss Phil Asher, served the refreshment.

Dean Dorman Entertains

Thursday night at an after-dinner coffee in Broward lounge, Miss Dorman, dean of students, met members of the executive committee, of campus committees, residence halls committee, and judiciary members. General plans and policies for the coming year were discussed.

New Course In Piano Offered

Instructor Explains Plan Of Normal Methods Course Now Open

Piano normal methods, a new course for college students, is being given this year by Miss Mary Emily Reeder, instructor in the school of music. This course prepares students to teach children piano after their college course is completed.

Miss Reeder said that children should enjoy their work. She is using two methods in her classes, practical keyboard harmony, in which the children fit chords to the melody given them, and Dal Croze eurhythmics, in which the children interpret rhythm with their hands and give beat values with their feet.

In summer she suggests using carpentry instruments in teaching. Children are delighted at making their own instruments.

Miss Reeder also mentioned the course in harp offered in the school of music. She said it was an opportunity for girls who never have again and that harps are really not so expensive as is believed.

She feels the girls will get more enjoyment out of the harp than any other instrument. This course costs no more than lessons on any other instrument. The school furnishes the harp.

Personals

Mrs. James Sulsby, of Birmingham, Ala. was a visitor at the Zeta Tau house a few days. She is the province president of the sorority.

Annual Editor Tells Of Plans

Pictures Will Be Taken For Flastacowo In Early October

Appointments for Flastacowo pictures will be made in front of the postoffice beginning early in October, according to Eileen Robinson, editor of the college annual.

Drapes will be used in the pictures this year for all students except seniors, who will vote on drapes or caps and gowns next Tuesday after convocation. Adams Studio of Tallahassee will make the pictures on the second floor of the demonstration school.

One of the annual's new features will be more and larger snapshots. A snapshot contest will be conducted in which everyone is urged to take part. The annual will also sponsor skit night later in the year.

Contracts have been awarded to Respess of Jacksonville for the engraving and to Rose Printing company of Tallahassee for the printing.

The Flastacowo is occupying new headquarters this year in room 612 in the new wing of the Westcott building.

The Four-H club will be under the direction of Dot McCullough, president. It is open to any former Four-H club member who wishes to join. Initiation will start soon.

Fencing Class Meets Tuesday

Extra Curricular Class Under the Direction Of Marie Jofre

Extra-curricular fencing classes under the direction of Marie Jofre will begin Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, when the first class will meet in the downstairs room in Physical Education building. Two other class will meet Wednesday at 4:30.

Marie states that during the past two years enrollment in the classes has steadily increased. Her enthusiasm in teaching and members of the classes in fencing this year indicate the interest is high.

It is the intention of the instructor that both divisions appear in classes present exhibitions during the year and thus bring the activities of the classes more closely to the attention of the student body.

The many physical benefits derived from fencing are generally unanimously recognized by authorities. Next to swimming it is acknowledged to be the sport that both develops and reduces one according to the individual, causing had lumps of muscles.

It is also well known as a builder of confidence, poise, and grace, and is both stimulating and exhilarating without being difficult or requiring too much energy.

Poem Published

Included in the Crown Anthology of Verse, a recently published collection of contemporary poetry is Elizabeth Beckett, graduate student of psychology at Florida State college. Her poem, entitled "Pulitimeter," is published in the new volume.

Miss Dow Will Give Three Musical Selections On the Program

During the traditional and impressive ceremony of Investiture which is to be held in the main auditorium Tuesday night at 7:45 o'clock, approximately 260 seniors of Florida State College for Women will receive the right to wear their caps and gowns, symbols of the rank of seniorship.

Included in the procession down the aisles will be members of the faculty, and the black-gowned seniors accompanied by their white-clad sponsors advisers. As the seniors reach the dais, Dr. Conradi, president of Florida State, will place upon each senior's head the mortar board which has been carried by the sophomore sister.

Dr. William G. Dodd, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences will be the speaker of the evening. The prayer at the beginning of the ceremony will be given by Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell, professor of philosophy, and the benediction by Dr. Conradi.

The processional, "Pomp and Circumstance" by Elgar, and the recessional, "Coronation March," by Meyerbeer, will be played by Miss Margaret Whittney Dow, associate professor of organ. Miss Dow will also play a solo selection during the program.

Officers of the senior class are Kelberine Pratt, president; Sara Stone, vice-president; Mary Nell Pinckard, secretary; and Elizabeth Pierce, treasurer.

Interviewers Are Selected

Freshmen, Transfers To Be Questioned By Upperclassmen

The personnel office selected this week a group of upperclassmen to interview all freshmen and transfer students during the first quarter.

The information secured in these interviews is sought in order that the personnel office may help students with any difficulties which may arise this year or later in college life; in order that a history or working outline of each student may be on file for aid in counseling, and in order that, later, for graduate files, a permanent record of all college activities and achievements may be available.

The interviewers chosen for this year are: Rebecca Ashton, Ella Virginia Brooks, Marian Conn, Winifred Ewart, Louise Gehan, Kathleen Gruppe, Betty Hatch, Leon Hayes, Lillie McCrimon, Kathryn Pratt, Marjorie Rauferdun, Sarah Stone, Hilda Strickland, and Margaret Stout.

The personnel department moved into its new headquarters this week in 209 Westcott. It now has three rooms including one main office, the private office of the director of personnel, and another room open to faculty who come in for information or for committee meetings.

First Classical Club Meeting is Wednesday

The Classical club will hold its first meeting of the year Wednesday in Broward club room. The most important features of the evening will be the election of officers of the group and the outlining of the policies for the coming year. At this time the faculty of the classical department will be introduced, and Eta Sigma Phi, the classical honorary, will present an outline of its purposes.

Officers of the Classical club are: Geneva Nelson, president; Gladys Ware, vice president; Dorothy Dendahl, secretary; Polly Allen White, treasurer; Dorothy Barr, Program chairman; and Marie Anderson, publicity chairman.

Chairman

Nell Colvin, chairman of N. S. F. A. which will hold the first of its regular forums in the chemistry lecture room Tuesday at 11:30.

Senators Elect New Officers For Vacancies

Betty Hatch is Selected To Fill Vacancy Of Vice-Presidency

Student senate swung into action this week with the election of Betty Hatch to the vice-presidency of the College Government association to take the place of Katherine Autrey, the filling of several other vacancies and the appointment of a committee to bring legislative measures to the attention of the body.

Heading the list of other vacancies filled by appointment of Marion Usher to serve as junior representative to Betty Hatch, succeed Betty Hatch. At the same time Melba Parks was elected chairman of the handbook committee to succeed Betty Crisman. All Other officers were elected at a former meeting and approved on Wednesday were: Marie Jeffry, senior intramural manager to take the place of Irma Engel; Katherine Stevens, vice-house chairman of Broward to succeed Frances Moss, and Frances Bishop, member of the off-campus committee to replace Betty Bell.

In appointing the committee to bring legislative measures to the senate Wilfred Ewart, president of senate, explained that this group will be a new one whose function will be to bring matters for legislation to the attention of the senate. Serving on the committee will be: Chairman, Katherine Grupper, senior; Margaret Walcott, junior; Frances Moss, sophomore; and Dot Bellamy, senior day student.

Announcing that all senate members would have to take a test on the handbook of the college) next Saturday, Lindsey Smoak, chairman of judiciary reminded the members that it was their duty to keep themselves informed on the rules and regulations of the college.

Senate members are also working in cooperation with Janet Cook, chairman of the point system committee to check up on the point system as it is now operating in the college. Beginning last Monday, every senate member has been taking attendance at the time spent administering the duties of her respective office. At the end of the month these accounts will be given to the committee.

Each senate member has been asked to submit a list of minor offices which they feel are worthy according to her point of view should be included in the Who's Who among Students in American Colleges and Universities. The list, also submitted by senate and judiciary members, the twenty-five highest will be given to the faculty committee on student affairs, which will choose the names of the nominees to be sent to the publication.

4-H Club Girls to Give Tea for FSC Students

This afternoon the 4-H club will give a tea for all students at F. S. C. W. who are interested in becoming members of the college branch. Any former member of the organization is invited to join the college club. Everyone who is interested is asked to sign on the list posted on the bulletin board in the Westcott building.

There will be a meeting this week at which time officers take plans for the coming school term.

Bandits Hold Up Travelers In Friday the 13th Thriller

Pistols and Shotguns Confront Florida State Tourists in Lone Spot of New Mexico As Fierce Desperadoes Appear

By ANNE LADD

Strange phenomena are bound to occur on Friday the thirteenth, but being held up by bandits on a lonely road in New Mexico on that superstitious day would be bad enough in any man's land.

Mrs Gladys Fawley, instructor in geography, and Mary Palmer and Jane Dowdell, students, have actually victims of such a holdup during their Sec-ond Year First trip this summer. The three left Tallahassee at the close of summer session with British Columbia as their destination. Traveling in Miss Fawley's car, Florence, they visited Frenchtown in New Orleans, saw the Pan-American exposition in Dallas, visited the Carlsbad caverns in New Mexico, and were on their way to the Grand Canyon. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Hollywood and Salt Lake City.

On Friday the thirteenth just after leaving Datil, New Mexico, they were traveling along a lonesome road at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon. A car approached from behind and blew the horn several times. As it came alongside, Jane who was driving, turned to see why they didn't pass and was greeted with "two pistols in the front seat with two men, and a shotgun in the back sticking out above a woman's head." They stopped.

Students Find Many Changes About Campus

New Shingle Roofs And Boiler Are Among Improvements

Students returning to Florida State this fall will find many and varied improvements in the dormitories, infirmary, Westcott building and other spots on the campus.

New asbestos shingle roofs have been placed on the demonstration school, nursery-kindergarten, the cottage, the hermitage, and a new car and gravel roof has been added to Bryan Hall. A new water tube boiler with such auxiliaries as a stoker, a forced draft fan, control valves, gages and meters has been placed in the new picture room. The time of this first meeting will be in the morning so as not to conflict with the senior interclass service to be held Tuesday night.

These forums are for the purpose of affording a chemistry lecture

Vance Invited To Be Leader Of Discussion

Journalism Teacher Will Attend Council Of National Scope

Earl L. Vance, associate professor of English and journalism, has been invited to serve as one of the discussion leaders at the annual meeting of the National Council of Teachers of English in Buffalo on Friday, November 26. The invitation came from Holland D. Roberts, of Stanford university, council president.

"Meeting Life Needs Through College Education" will be the general theme of the council. Some of the topics to be discussed are "Creative Writing," "Relating English to Life," "Standards for Moving Pictures and Newspapers," "Use of English on the Radio," and "Creating Better International Relations through the English Program."

A list of speakers invited to address the convention includes the following:

Joseph Wood Krutch, eminent journalist, who is also the "Nation from Journalism"; Elizabeth Drew, author and critic, of Cambridge university; "Trends in the Modern Spirit in Literature?"; Professor William Charvat, of New York university; Professor Paul S. Witty, of Northwestern; Professor Thomas Whipple, of University of California; B. A. Botkin, of the University of Oklahoma; Professor Herbert Wichelns, Cornell university; Professor Allan Abbott, Columbia university; and Sterling Fisher director of talks and education of the Columbia Broadcasting system.

Teams Conduct Star Viewing

Astronomy Club Begins Year's Work With Observations

The astronomy telescope team set up their equipment for the first observation period on the Westcott building. Marie Betty Busselle, chairman of the team, and Dr. Richards, sponsor of the club, directed the work. During the term of 1936-37, NYA work began in November.

To qualify for NYA assistance a student must be from 16 to 25 years of age, a citizen of the United States; must establish financial necessity, and must have and maintain a "C" average.

Some of the tasks performed by NYA help are repairing books, setting up apparatus for science experiments, running slides for the classes, and typing and filing in offices. Nearly every department and other campus has one or more NYA assistants, the psychology and chemistry departments and the registrar's office have all workers are employed for work in the college; for example, some help with Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts and others work in the county welfare office, in the public schools and in the state home demonstration program.

In charge of NYA employment on this campus is Dr. Elizabeth Gordon Andress, director of personnel.

NYA Will Aid 141 FSC Girls

Government Fund Will Be Nineteen Thousand Dollars or More

More than $19,000 will come from the federal government to Florida State college for women this year in return for National Youth Administration work in the library, office, classroom, and playground. This amount is figured on the basis of 141 students working nine months for an average wage of $15 a month, and transfers are allowed 40 hours a month at 40 cents an hour; other workers are allowed up to 60 hours according to their need.

Since this year's NYA appropriation is $19,000 and nothing has been cut from last year's allotment, 90,000 hours of work are allowed only 5 per cent of their enrollment as NYA workers. Number 13 for Astronomy club. During the term of 1936-37, NYA work began in November.

Upperclassmen Given Old Privileges After Consultation

MINORITY GROUP YIELDS RIGHTS

Off Campus Houses Will Fix Assessments Individually

Upperclassmen, both off-campus and those living in the dormitory, will be allowed to keep their lights on after 12 o'clock each night, according to an announcement made last night by Betty Caldwell, president of the student body.

Consultation Held

This announcement came as the result of consultation with those students who voted against having lights on during a poll on this matter in convocation Tuesday. Since those opposing this regulation made up such a small group of the student body these students themselves decided to change their opposition to approval, they wished to maintain for the record their positive point of view on this question.

Since unlimited light privilege, a new regulation this year, entailed approximately $500 extra expenditure for the administration, the question of maintaining this regulation this year had to be negative in character. In order that students be allowed to keep their lights on after 12, Betty Ostlund announced, an assessment of $5 per quarter for the privilege each upperclassman. The vote Tuesday was not unanimous and that fact was brought out. Every body must be of one accord on a matter like this, so that each and every student, the question had to be reconsidered in order that it might be passed.

Meeting Called

Betty Caldwell called a meeting of the minority group which after an open discussion decided to change its position in order that the convenience of the majority might not be imposed on by dissenting vote. This group did not change its opinion, however, but waived its control of the vote.

Announcement will be made in the near future as to when the

Club Revises Former Rules

International Relations Group Enters Fourth Year on Campus

With the beginning of the fall term, the International Relations club enters its fourth year of duty on the campus. It was founded in 1934 under the direction of Miss Ida Engle and Miss Marion Irish and is a branch of the student group organized under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The purpose of the club is to stimulate intelligent interest in world affairs through objective and unbiased discussion of international problems.

One of its main projects is the sponsoring of delegates who are sent to colleges from the club's headquarters in New York City. Last year club members were fortunate in hearing Sir Herbert Angell, secretary of the League of Nations, and John Mason Brown, famous journalist. Last year the local group brought a French student, Marthe Gremion, to the campus, where the club plans to send a Florida State student for a year's study abroad through the Institution of International Education. The local I. R. C. also will bring to this campus a series of foreign films, and by short talks in connection will furnish the students with information concerning the week's most outstanding happenings in world events.

In order to raise the standards of the club on this campus to comply with those of other universities and colleges club, the following change was made in the constitution last year and new members elected accordingly.

The student must first be recommended by one of her professors because of outstanding interest or meeting such requisite in class work and open forums. Names are referred to club members who select from the list those who are to be asked to join. These students are tapped and pledged at a ceremony held in April. The pledges become members when they attend eight meetings. This year members will wear the International Relations club pin, which bears the symbol of the world, clasped hands for the I. R. C., and the date of the organization of the first club in Great Britain in 1923. At the end of the year the club votes on three members whom they think have contributed most to the club in the way of loyalty, service, and leadership. These members are given the International key which is worn by outstanding members throughout the country.

All meetings this year will be held in the IRC club room in the history building. Agnes Stigpen, vice president, will be in charge of program plans. She will be assisted by a committee of five, alternating each month. The club will hold special meetings which will be open to the student body and the faculty.

EPC Workers Present Story Of Field Work

Virginia Allen and Sarah Lewis Appear Before Student Body

Presenting accounts of a summer devoted to active participation in the field work of the Emergency Peace campaign, Virginia Allen, head of the campus EPC, and Sarah Lewis, both delegates from this college at a peace conference institute held at Cheney Teacher's college in Pennsylvania, addressed the student body in convocation Tuesday morning.

Introduced by Miss Mary Alice Eaton, faculty sponsor of the campus group, Virginia Allen told the student body how the delegates organized to send a representative from any campus—foreign movies, the day and funds received from the central office. Virginia was housed at Cheney State Teachers college. She mentioned members of the faculty such as Kirby Page, author of 16 books on social and international problems; Bishop Paul Hard, authority on the World war. Mary Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke college, and Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of the Riverside Church in New York City.

Miss Allen told of the Institute of Public Affairs at the house party that watching Marion carry her heavy young is excellent laboratory work in calling psychology and character, and the family courses. Child psychology in the chapter try to see that the kittens are not spoiled by too much attention, but even they find it difficult to resist the pulling cry of a one-week-old fur-ball. church, they went to church. Study groups were held in the evenings, she said. The study groups had varied topics on conditions making for war in 1914 and today, propaganda, neutrality, war prevention, and war and the Christian. Talks were held for the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, American Legion, auxiliary, Grange, and young people's meetings.

Virginia Allen answered these questions herself: "Do I believe in it? By all means. Would I do it again? If at all possible. Did we accomplish anything? That remains to be seen."

Sarah Lewis, another representative of the EPC, went to Greenfield, Mass., Sarah told about her team and how they matics, publicity, open house, participated people through dramatic sumac, literature, forum, and lunches.

delegates' work was hampered.

Sarah in evaluating her summer's work found it a revelation that she was interested enough to do something constructive and valuable. Peace she stated, is a vital problem, with our future depending on it.

Play Contest Sponsored By Movie Bureau

Awards of $500 Offered To Stimulate New Dramatists

The second play competition of the Bureau of New Plays for college students and recent graduates will open this year October 1, closes December 15, and announcement of awards will be made not later than March 15, according to an announcement received recently from the bureau.

The Bureau of New Plays was founded May 4, 1936, by the seven major motion picture companies: Columbia Picture corporation, Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer corporation, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century - Fox Film corporation, United Artists Corporation, Inc., and Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., in association with Theresa Helburn. The bureau wants to discover and encourage young playwriting talent for the theatre and to assist authors with financial aid, criticism, and advice toward a professional goal at a difficult period in their careers. To this end funds have been appropriated for competitive cash awards, as well as for scholarship and fellowship awards.

Awards of $500 will again be made for the three plays of the best plays submitted in the competition. At the discretion of the Bureau of New Plays, and on the basis of literary merit and financial need, these awards may be increased by additional awards of $1250 or to fellowship awards of from $1500 to $2500 More awards may be granted if the material justifies it or, if in the opinion of the judges the material submitted does not justify the full quota of awards, the Bureau reserves the right to grant as few or as many as they recommend.

In addition to the regular scholarship or fellowship awards will be awarded to the author of each of the plays within the year's tenure of the scholarship or fellowship or within six months thereafter, and in case of production of one or both of such plays, part of the scholarship or fellowship award shall be considered as advance royalties to be repaid out of the royalties of New Plays for the maintenance of operations.

Plays must be full length, original, unproduced, and unpublished by any professional theatre, and must have written recommendation by the head of the dramatic department or his authorized representative of the college or university attended by the author.

E.P.C. Appoints New Committee

Allen Reelected Chairman Of F. S. C. W. Student Peace Service

The Emergency Peace Campaign has started out this year with the same group of people and the same plans, but technically it has been renamed as the P.S.C.W. Student Peace Service. This was done to avoid confusion, since the original campaign was organized for a two-year period and elections and appointees on that basis; the period ends December 31, 1937, making reorganization necessary.

The first meeting of the year was held Wednesday, at which time Virginia Allen, who with Sarah Lewis went to the Cheney, Pa., this summer to represent this school at college peace work, was reelected chairman. Chairmen of the various committees were appointed as follows: committee for legislative action directed by Beth Ramsey; round tables, the committee in charge of the weekly programs, is headed by Sarah Lewis; Erma Lawrence is in charge of the monthly panel; a general meeting in which both students and faculty take part; Sarah Lewis is chairman of the orientation committee and works in connection with the Y.W.C.A. committee. Virginia Allen is head of the publicity committee and has working with her Frances Elizabeth Korst, and Evelyn Glazer.

Besides these committees, Arline Lockhart and Sarah Lewis are working on the possibility of forming a Marxian society. This which means that radio will be a very important phase of the service's publicity. There is also a committee to be organized for the formation of a peace council. The purpose of this council is to have representatives from other organizations on campus who are really interested in the work of the service.

The date of meeting was changed to Tuesday, instead of Wednesday, from 8 to 6 o'clock in History building. After the business was disposed of there was a general discussion of conditions in Europe and Japan.

The first project of the year has been the distribution of leaflets, explaining the work of the service, throughout the dormitories and on the campus mail. In convocation last Tuesday Virginia Allen told of the peace work accomplished this summer, and Sarah Lewis told of the purpose of getting the student body well acquainted with the group's plans for the coming year.

Senior Class May Have Pictures Taken Monday

Members of the senior class will have their pictures taken for the Flastacovo beginning Monday through October 18, at Adams studio located on the second floor of the demonstration school. Appointments for the pictures may be made through next Saturday in front of the post office.

Eileen Robinson, editor of the annual, has asked seniors to be on time for their appointments so they can be in the camera room at the exact moment of the appointment. This will necessitate their being in the dressing room a few minutes early.

Seniors are to bring only the formal collar and cap and to wear, if possible, a skirt and a blouse which opens down the front so the drapes may be put on without messing the hair. Caps should be worn straight, and not in a tilted position. Too much makeup should not be worn.

Seniors will have two pictures taken with cap and gown and two with drapes.

Play Contest Closing Date Is Postponed

Script Number is Doubled For W. P. A. Project In New York

The number of scripts entered in the college play writing contest sponsored by the W.P.A. Federal Theatre project and the National Collegiate Advisory committee, has been more than doubled since the postponement of the closing date from September 1 to November 1 according to reports from the New York city headquarters.

The contest period was extended two months to enable student playwrights to rewrite their scripts after receiving advice and criticism from their drama professors on their returns to college this fall.

A preference for "poetic drama of the type Maxwell Anderson, author of Winterset and Mary of Scotland has recently brought into prominence," has been embodied in the entries received thus far, Flay Dowling with social problems, keen on the campus and off, seem to predominate.

"A contestant can show what is happening to people—all sorts of people in America today," Hallie Flanagan, national director of the project, said in discussing the possibilities of play material on the observation of contemporary American life.

"The plays should not be restricted, however, to a study of the one-third of our nation which is ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished, though those millions are an inescapably a part of America today and that they are subjects for drama."

"Even more potently," Miss Flanagan continued, "the plays can concern themselves with conditions behind the conditions that have led to the denial of the ten-ant standards of living to millions of people."

Any student enrolled in any American college may submit an original full-length script to this contest. There is no restriction of the theme but the direct observation of contemporary American life will be preferred. The WPA Federal Theatre guarantees a production of the prize-winning play for at least one week. If attendance warrants, the run will be extended, with the author being paid the usual WPA weekly theatre rental rate of $50 per week.

Odd And Even Team Rivalry Gets Underway

Basketball and Volleyball Weekly Practices Are Started

Odds and Evens started shooting for the backboard and passing it to the center this week as Odd and Even basketball and volleyball practices swung into action and the sportsmanded of the campus began to realize that the ultima-ma Thanksgiving cash between the classes is not too far off.

Even basketball leader Hilda Sprague and Odd leader Fay Cleary are both predicting top teams for this season. The Rams have most of their winning team of last year back at the helm while the Odds have begun to circulate rumors about stupendous freshman finds for their team. Evens are practicing on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday at 4:00 o'clock while Odd practices fall on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at the same hour.

Volleyball enthusiasts have been filling the courts and doing considerable hard practice, too, in this first week of team work. The Odds under the guidance of Valerie Hunt are practicing Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 4:30 o'clock while the Evens spend the ball hours on Tuesday and Thursday and Saturday at the same time under the tutelage of Ruth Johnson.

Those who are trying out for the Odd volleyball team include Mary Nell Smith, Naome Piland, Frances Fryer, Nan Clark, Fenton Weir, Rose Bowden, Annie Mucker, Patt Mack Jeanette Rish, Edna Kunde, Ruth Bush, Marjorie Benson, Louise Race, Mary Collins, wevin Steele, Frances Dodd, Sara Allen, Ruth Brown, Margaret Wheeler, Ruth Arant, Lorraine Crane, Dorothy Hall, Yvonne Marchesseau.

Survey Shows Golf To Be Major Sport

Florida State college is among those institutions included in a recent survey of 200 colleges which has shown that one-half of this number is offering golf as physical education courses.

The survey shows that golf is moving into a definite position in college sports More than forty universities and colleges of the United States have their own golf courses and college players constitute the majority of sectional state and city competitions.

Because golf has a very definite value as a carry-over activity after college days, it is being awarded, physical directors in institutions of higher learning are giving more thought to the providing of playing facilities and instruction for the students.

Swimming Club Begins Season

Freshman Party, Water Carnival to Be Major Group Activities

Under the direction of Frances Thill, president, and Dot Colburn secretary, the Swimming club has planned several important features for the coming year with which to stimulate more interest in sports activities on this campus.

As part of the freshman party to be given at the physical education building on October 20, the club has arranged an exhibition of water canoeing, some stroke demonstrations, and different water formations.

The yearly Thanksgiving water carnival to be held on November 20 for the entertainment of the visiting parents will this year be under the direction of the Tarpon club.

The ten members which now compose this club are: Dorothy Colburn Ernestine Makemson, Dorothy Ann Johnson, Ruth Thill, Florence Ward, Mary Frances Campbell, Lois Hudlin, Janet Jewett, Yvonne Marchesseau, and Mary Peacock.

Prefect hours are on Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock and Friday night at eight o'clock. Passing of a swimming or diving test is also to be given before the end of November. All those who are interested in meeting the test requirements may attend the afternoon practices at four-thirty on Monday and Tuesday.

Bandits Hold Up Travelers In Friday the 13th Thriller

and the bandits made away with their car and all their belongings the three very bewildered and upset persons heard a shot fired. Several minutes later the driver of a very diminished dump Model A truck drove into town where the alarm of the theft was sent out.

Ranchmen in the town took Miss Farley with them and began to pursue the bandits. Jane and Mary sat on gas tanks in a filling station and waited.

Near Pietown the bandits turned off the main road and went to the top of a cliff. Their pursuers who blockaded the entrance in this end could see them ransacking the stolen car and the suitcases taking what they wanted and putting it into their own car. They even took pictures of themselves. Then they shot a hole in the gas tank, got into their own car and broke through the blockade.

The ranchmen jumped into their cars and a gun battle ensued. The pursued car raced through Dull Drug where ranchmen phoned to the CCC camp to block the bandits into the car. As the bandits approached the blockade and saw its sheer doom, they turned off into a field where their engine stalled and the lieutenant and his men made the thrilling capture The bandits were aged 18, 17, and 15 years.

The older boy said that they were "out for a thrill—they probably got it that night in Socorro jail. They were in a stolen car from Missouri where they had held up a cigar salesman. The car was probably his. As the back seat was filled with cigars, which the ranchmen promptly sampled

When captured, the young bandits were dressed in Jane's, Mary's and Miss Farley's shoes and sweaters, and fountain pens and money were stuffed in their pockets.

The Florida tourists spent that night in Dull, where they attended a western dance, being none the worse after the thrilling episode. Their car was repaired the next day and they had a wonderful time walking around town watching people point at them and say "There's one of those [illegible] eastern girls."

Harry Kenning Will Instruct FSC Swimmers

Marchesseau, Thill to Be Life Saving Corps' Swimming Mates

Harry Kenning, national Red Cross examiner, will visit the campus later in the yea to give a course of instruction in junior life saving. Any girl who is twenty year; of age and who has passed her senior life saving examination may take the course.

At a recent meeting held by the corps, plans were made for the coming year, and Yvonne Marchasseau and Frances Thill were appointed mates by Valerie Hunt, captain. They will help with the swimming instructions in the pool.

Life saving will be taught in the college pool every Saturday at 11:20 o'clock. Everyone is eligible for the course.

The life saving corps is composed of girls who have passed their senior life saving examination. Anyone wishing to become a member of the organization must pass or repass her life saving tests under one of the campus examiners.

Officers are Ruth Agnes Mclain, president; Patricia Barrineau, secretary; Valerie Hunt, captain; Yvonne Marchesseau and Frances Thill, mates.

75 Members Are Present At DSO's First Meeting

With approximately 75 members present, the Day Students' organization had its first mass meeting of the year yesterday. This meeting was used as a "get acquainted" time, each girl introducing herself by telling her name and home address.

After a short discussion of the duty of the organization and the day student convocation program, of meeting.

Newspaper Has More Room for Thought

The need for more room in the Flambeau office (created by the managing editor's bent for trucking) has been met by tearing down the partition which formerly separated the main office from the newspaper office.

In addition to the added space the office now contains a desk and a bulletin board for each department of the paper by the Humor, a new department created to uphold the tradition of staff insanity, has also been donated a bulletin board.

Staff members express the idea that the greater freedom allowed by the larger office will give to greater and broader ideas in the minds of those responsible for the paper.

Marie Taylor Wins Honors

Takes Horse Show Prizes In West Virginia

"Buck Benny rides again!"

But he is not outpacing Marie Taylor, Florida State College alumna, class of '37, who recently won top honors in three events of the famous White Sulphur Springs horse show at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

Before an audience of approximately 35,000 persons, Marie was awarded a blue ribbon in both the pair class and the hunter class, and received a red ribbon in the pack-saddle class. In the first event, in which her partner was a man, she rode a three-year-old stallion, "Terpen," which was also her mount in the second. This was the first time that the horse had ever been shown in a performance. Mending Mona," an old-timer, was her horse in the third event.

The show took place at the Green Briar, a fashionable hotelresort of West Virginia. Marie represented Lawrence Dickson, owner of the horses she rode.

Last year Marie was treasurer of the College Coverunners association and riding instructor of Florida State college. She now is instructor of physical education and one academic subject at Dunston Hall, an exclusive girls school in Washington, D. C.

Apartments are so scarce in the larger German cities that thousands of young married couples are forced to live in rooming in houses or with their parents.

Tuberculin Tests Are Progressive Step

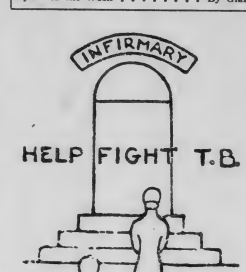
Beginning Monday, tuberculin tests will be given at the college infirmary for all those who wish to take them. Students will be given an opportunity to take the skin tests and if positive reaction should take place they will be X-rayed for further observation. This step, taken with the cooperation of the state board of health is a part of the nation-wide fight against the dread disease of tuberculosis. Colleges throughout the country are doing their part through examinations to check the spread of "the white plague." A news item from the University of Georgia shows that the tuberculin tests there will be compulsory this year. They are leaving no loopholes for possible victims of the disease to continue carrying it. Last year the tests were given at the same institution and the results proved valuable enough to warrant the making of them compulsory.

This year will mark the first opportunity for Florida State College for Women to cooperate in such an enterprise. It is vitally important to the health conditions of the state and to the individual herself that students should consider it their personal responsibility to take the tests. Tuberculosis can be effectively checked only in the early stages of the disease. The best way to prove to yourself that you are not carrying the disease is to take the test offered by the college infirmary next week.

In line with a discussion of this type the question of the Wasserman tests for syphilis comes up again. In the university of Georgia as well as in many of the leading universities of the United States these tests are given optionally for college students. The time has passed when we can hush up talk of social diseases. The extent of its destruction is probably even greater—but they don't want to be involved in a war any more than we do. And we forget that we are the ripe ripe for the battlefields—and the graves. However that may be, some of China may sound it is not too early for us to be aware of our own danger. Even on our own campus there will be discussions, lectures, V.S.F.A. forums that may prove valuable in our fight against the scourge of war. We need to look into this thing now so that we will not be the cannon fodder of the future.

The Minority Is Magnanimous

After much discussion and magnanimity on the part of the minority group, upperclassmen get their extended light cuts. The majority should get the power, however, that it was the good will of the smaller group which led to this decision for no question which involves assessment of money can be passed unless the group in question votes unanimously. Even in a democratic country and in a democratic college it is often easy for the popular side, or that of the majority, to forget the opinion of the minority, expression of which is peculiar to democracies, as opposed to dictatorship. The minority group in this case is to be admired for keeping its viewpoints against such strong opposition and it is only regretable that there couldn't have been some way of equitably meeting both opinions. However, College Government is to be commended for arriving at a workable solution of the problem.



Are We Willing To Be Cannon-fodder?

With war clouds rolling ominously over Europe and the East and slowly darkening our own horizons by their approach it is necessary for the youth of the colleges and universities to face the harsh facts. War isn't a vague and horrible uncertainty of the future. War is a concrete and terrible event of the present. Not only that but war concerns us vitally even though it has not completely shadowed our lives as yet. It's the youth of our age in China that are facing the bombing planes and wearing the gas masks. It's the youth of Spain who have been made the targets of Italian and German bullets. All over the world the persons that the menace of war is engulfing are young people of our age—students perhaps in Madrid or Nanking before undeclared war put its blight upon them. A few years ago they were studying in quiet libraries, walking in worn paths to class rooms—unconscious of danger. And here we are reading our books, living our worldisolated college lives and catching only an indifferent glimpse now and then of international turmoil when headlines scream "British Envoy Killed in China."

If we do look at the terrifying spectacle of China under Japanese invasion or view the wreckage that is Spain we tell ourselves that there is nothing we can do about it all. We feel lost in a morass of international dispute and conflict. Yet there is definitely something the youth of America can do to protest against war. A united outcry of the youth of the country for enforcement of the neutrality act should produce some sort of results. The numerous peace societies including the Emergency Peace Campaign which has an active unit on this campus provide the machinery for such protests against the atrocities of war and for the endorsement of peace measures.

The most powerful of our weapons against war, however, is a thorough knowledge of its causes and courses. War, the authorities tell us, is basically an economic issue. Very well, it behooves those of us who do not wish to see American youth turned into cannon fodder to become informed on the economic issues involved in present conflicts. In the present crucial state of world affairs it is more necessary than ever that the youth of America be keenly aware of the issues at stake. Analysing the issues also involves keeping up to date with the events of present world struggle. This is no easy job in this day of complex services. The "poisoned springs" of world news" which Upton Sinclair exposes, prejudiced viewpoints and exaggerations. Witness the newspaper headlines that hint of hundreds of Americans killed in the fighting zone of China in an effort to inflame the easily aroused, self-minded patriotism of the sensation-readers. Looking back in the files of the papers in 1917 we find the same sort of war propaganda. We forget that the people of Japan and China and Spain are "people-like" that they don't want to be involved in a war any more than we do. And we forget that we are the ripe ripe for the battlefields—and the graves. However that may be, some of China may sound it is not too early for us to be aware of our own danger. Even on our own campus there will be discussions, lectures, V.S.F.A. forums that may prove valuable in our fight against the scourge of war. We need to look into this thing now so that we will not be the cannon fodder of the future.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

Radio, the Supreme Court, and the Klan

European troubles slipped into the background this week as Hugo L. Black, new Supreme Court justice, accused of belonging to the Ku Klux Klan, announced that he would speak over the radio tonight probably in regard to the K.K.K. issue. The ex-senator from Alabama refused to give any other statement because, as he said, the press might misquote him. He insisted on postponing his reply to the direct question of his membership until all the people could hear him.

Over in the East, the Chinese-Japanese conflict became more entangled as Japanese military quarters accused Russia of aiding the Chinese not only with supplies but even with assistance concerning military movements. The head of the Soviet Far Eastern forces, a former military adviser to China from 1924-1927, is reported as sending strategical advice to the Chinese commanders through the Russian military attache at Nanking. Also the Russian officers are supposedly helping with the defense of China's capital and Soviet munitions are apparently hurrying over Russia's new highway to northwest China. The announcement of these accusations followed closely on the sudden departure of the Russian envoy at Nanking. He left by plane Tuesday for Russia on an unknown but evidently important mission.

The Japanese are complaining further of what they call the one-sided condemnation of their actions by the League of Nations. They claim that the League has only the facts favorable to the Chinese and they denounce the suggestion of Great Britain's that a boycott be made of all Japanese goods. They remind also the alur that has been thrown on their nation by stories of attacks on non-combatants and they maintain that any such incidents either occurred accidentally or were necessitated because of the military importance of the section so harmed.

In the midst of this confusion and bloodshed, Mussolini and Hitler met on German territory and talked confidently to the German masses about the great peace that both Germany and Italy, working together were going to bring about. They did not, of course, speak in a conciliatory manner of the Bolshevists; rather they belabored them and warned of the inevitable erosion of the Communists' ground by the only good parties —fascism and nazism.

At Geneva, a League of Nations sub-committee handed some of this self-assurance of the dictators by preparing an ultimatum for Italy in regard to the Spanish situation. This resolution demanded the withdrawal of the Italian troops or threatens to permit the entrance of French forces to aid the Loyalists. This resolution is to be made effective within one month.

And Others Say. . . . . .

The University of Georgia freshmen had their intelligence gauged by a "mechanical brain" this year, states the Red and Black.

The "brain" is a robot, one of the few ever to be built, and is the first International Test Scoring Machine to be put into actual, continuous use in the United States. The "pedagogical demon," as it is termed, checked the answers and computed the scores of over 1,500 freshmen placement tests which made up Wednesday time and with super-human accuracy.

The Red and Black said: "The Freshies did not really want to meet the robot, for they fear that the University fearfully trembling with apprehension at the thought of facing a mechanical brain which, they believe, could be turned on in the presence of a student and determine the amount of his brainpower. The machine is not capable of doing this, but grades given them by what he puts on paper by the medium of an electric knife which scrapes over the sheet filled out by the student and records the findings."

While the machine is not yet used as an intelligence indication, "it hastens the selection of students to be exempted from courses in English and physical science, the detecting of deficiencies in some subjects, and scoring records made by all students."

From the Tulane Hullabaloo we take the following in regard to the noticeably increased enrollments in American colleges and the quality of the students of 1937:

"Enrollments in American colleges are larger this year than ever before. Word comes from most schools that the new generation of students is not so wild-ass as in the twenties or early thirties, that students of 1937 are more serious, more concerned with things that the earlier collegiate generations neglected.

"While it must be doubted that the college graduate of 1937 has changed sufficiently to take away the rah-rah spirit that marks most colleges, still there are a great many reasons why this college student will be more serious. A growing percentage of college students are forced to work their way through college.

"Of those whose parents are able to purchase the way it is necessary for more and more of these to give some thought to problems connected with earning a living when they finish. As the economic level of the average college student has dropped, more and more children of workers have found their way into college largely through agencies like the NYA. It is only natural that students of this type should be more concerned with the realities of living than were the linsel of "college spirit."

The fine type of students who must earn their own way has colored the thinking of student bodies. The problem of earning a living not only while in school, but after school has made it necessary for students to think about those things which have a direct or indirect bearing on such problems as war, the increase in workers' wages, or the cut in NYA appropriations."

Along University Ave. . . . .

By BILL JIBB

This October 9 will be the crucial moment in politics. At that time the Democratic League of the University will test its organization. They will see just how strong the opposition on the campus will be for the spring election.

At the time of the election with two parties have been formed and partially organized. The first attempts was made by Bill Harrell who tried to form the "Orange and Blue" party the latter part of last school year. That organization went on the rocks.

The first of this year a new party—"All University Party" arose under the leadership of Tony Harlow and Phillip Selber. Their candidates will seek office on an independent ticket.

A glimpse into Southern labor problems given us in the September issue of Harper's a young Englishman, who writes a most graphically of his discoveries concerning the conditions of the Southern mine workers, factory hands, and share-croppers.

Mr. Belfrage tells of the "spectacle of decay and hopelessness" that he saw in the mining towns of Kentucky and Tennessee, of people with broken bodies and minds because of evil even cases.

Next the author visited Alabama, where he learned of the dissatisfaction felt by the laborers of the various share-croppers' unions, existence of which organizations the public of Alabama flatly denied. From there he visited a plantation owner in Mississippi, who let him the employer's viewpoint. The point of view being able to adapt the Negro disposition to the idea of accepting any responsibility discussed, leaving Mr. Belfrage in a quandary with no definite conclusions formed concerning the remedy of conditions in the South, with a better understanding of its problems. Desertion from the New Deal
By Bernard DeVoto

Bernard DeVoto, writing for the Easy Chair department of the October Harpers, proves that the New Deal will not go down because of its idealism, its attempts to do the impossible.

Mr. Roosevelt's mistake in trying to pack the Supreme Court, according to Mr. DeVoto, was his belief that he could "trust a gentlemen." The country was used to an independent Judiciary and wanted to keep the state of affairs, whether right or wrong.

The government reorganization bills came for much criticism by the author of this article. These bills, he says, attempted too many things that are not so, are too much the product of an impractical visionary's mind.

These recent mistakes made by the administration will lead to a reaction, Mr. DeVoto avers, which will delay for many years the administration's aims for social justice. Why, he concludes, do liberal governments always end by becoming the things they set out to destroy?—(P. C.).

On Hating the Japanese
By Bruce Bliven

A good many of our friends have lately felt a new occupation for themselves in hating Japanese, states Bruce Bliven in an article in the American Mercury. What this new indignation expressed against Japan it is suggested, may be explained by the fact that many recent years violates every human concept of justice.

The question remains: What should be done about this attitude of ours? Shall we take steps to implement our hatred? The author says that he must admit that he is puzzled as to what number of people that now believe we should. It is urged that the United States and Great Britain heads in getting a united front against the Japanese Archipelago. Let them cut off the flow of cash and goods, and Japan will soon be brought to her knees. However, the author asks if such action would produce the desired effects? Are we prepared to accept the consequences of such action? Are we willing to go to war to end it? Could England and America fight Japan with clean hands? And many more questions.

In conclusion, Mr. Bliven says if all of us comes down to a philosophy of despair of finding our hands and persuading the forces of brutality and terror that are abroad in the world to do what they will? He says not necessarily the time may come when we must fight, or at least threaten to fight, with a firm intention of doing what threats mean. As regards the Japanese aggression in China however, it is certainly desirable to face the facts candidly and to realize that the power which we shall use is, on the grounds, to interfere, there is no hope of success large enough to justify the venture.—B. Cabins in the Cotton
By Jonathan Mitchell

In the September 22 issue of the New Republic, Mr. Mitchell writes about the Delta Cooperative Farm, the point emphasized being that white and Negro sharecroppers established a little more than a year ago near Rochdale, Miss. It was created partly as a place of refuge for the terrorism that swept the near-by plantations of eastern Arkansas in 1934 and 1935 under which no sharecropper's life was secure. It is an arm of the Southern Tenant Farmers' union, and had its beginnings in a church in Sherwood Eddy and a body of like-minded Christians.

Mr. Mitchell's concern is solely with the business of dollars and cents. The balance sheet shows that after all expenses had been met, the net profit to another part of the food family was $327.53. It must be realized that this is cash income only, not total income. It does not include another part of the food and many other things. Mr. Mitchell writes, too that the cooperative have put up a community building, a cooperative medical clinic, library, common room for church services and social gatherings, and a nursery. They also have a 10-acre vegetable garden and established a co-operative poultry farm, now yielding 12 dozen eggs daily.

The author states that the evidence of the Delta Cooperative farm's first year demonstrates that white and Negro sharecroppers, organized cooperatively, can raise their standard of living. He concludes by showing that what they have known—(B. S.).

Two Florida Graduates Continue Their Studies At Other Universities

Two outstanding graduates of last year, Lois Fletcher Bullard and Louise Doyle, are continuing their studies at other universities.

Louise Doyle is working for her master's degree in religious education at the Women's Missionary Training school in Louisville, Ky. When she finishes her two-year course she plans to do either young people's work or field service work in Florida. This summer she did young people's work in Jackson county, organizing church groups.

band wagon of the Democratic League. No trouble is expected as the result is almost a foregone conclusion.

When the Gators entrained for Miami last week there was a noticeable lack of student supporters present to see them off. Worried as to whether there was a lack of Florida "spirit" among the freshmen, President Conway Brantley at the Executive Council meeting appointed a Guidance committee to pep up the freshmen on this point.

Carrying further his plan of getting the students behind the Gator team, President Brantley has called a meeting of the monitors of the dormitory as well as the fraternity presidents to discuss plans for having the freshman class present a solid front at the send off which will be Thursday as the team departs for Philadelphia and Temple.

Selden Waldo, chairman of the homecoming activities at a meeting of the Florida Blue Key Tuesday night laid tentative plans for the biggest celebration in the history of the University. Clifford Beasley one of the plans already under way for publicizing the event, that is through speeches over the radio by leaders on the campus.

Most important event that occurred is that the society went on record as making this a "No Woman" affair. Incidentally this is the third girl-less event that the Florida Blue Key has sponsored.

AAUW Makes Initial Plans

Organization to Sponsor Scholarship Funds And Study Group

The American Association of University Women devoted its first meeting Monday night to organization and completion of committee reports, with Dr. Annie Pepper, incoming president, presiding.

The organization voted in favor of a study group to be sponsored by the International Relations club, in favor of the graduate loan scholarship to be considered a self-supporting fund for the present, and in favor of contributing as liberally as possible to the one million dollar fellowship fund being sponsored by the national association. Tentative plans for the year's programs were presented, and further announcements concerning the programs will be made at a later date.

The A.A.U.W. is an educational organization of women, the only holding at least a bachelor degree from a recognized institution. Its purposes are to further all educational interests, to sponsor fellowship for women for advanced study, and to give a number of fellowships to women who have started work on their doctor's degree. Also the A.A.U.W. has as one of its purposes the uniting of university women of the United States with the International Association of University Women.

Gang-Busting, Club Openings Concern B'way

By FRED WITTNER and MEL ADAMS
Associated Collegiate Press Correspondents

Gang-Buster Thomas E. Dewey has acquired "le nomme de guerre" of Public Enemy No. 1 in New York racketeers. Obtaining his B.A. at Michigan '23) and his LL.B. at Columbia (Phi Delta U. '28), Dewey served as U. S. Asst. D. A. and prosecuted racketeers Cornell's N. Y. Governor Lehman called him in to play "Boogey Man" to metropolitan gangsters. In his two years as special prosecutor, the public took a lot of interest in the racket-busting activities of the young lawyer. Lucciano's vice ring, Dutch Schultz's policy racket, Tammany and baking rackets. Now running for D. A. in New York County, Dewey has already once swung solo in the Protestant Episcopal church of St. Matthew's and St. Timothy's.

The Lighter Side

Highlight of the week on Broadway was the long-delayed opening of the new super-duper, drastically-colossal International Revue with Michigan's George Olsen waving the baton over his smooth-faced band, the best of three musical revues playing for dancing there . . . Maurice Evans returned to the boards for a repeat run of his highly successful "King Richard III" . . . Messrs. Shubert rejuvenated "The Show Is On" with a new cast including the Howard Brothers and Ned York and King for a month's tryout before putting it on the road . . . Other worthwhile bets now on tour include the Hartmundrum monotony of marriage and housekeeping, "Three Men on a Horse" . . . Ina Claire, who has a rush to the fields of business, science, aviation. Everywhere women were throwing down their brooms and dish pans for the excitement of being open-ended to them.

In spite of the great improvement of woman's status during these restless years there were many women who searched in vain for the happiness they were so sure they could find in freedom. There were many women who went from one thing to another unable to make up their minds. There were women who felt frustrated.

If a consensus of opinion were taken among the major women's colleges it would be the question: "Do you consider marriage important to your happiness", the answer would probably be "Yes." Now that all the shouting about women's freedom has died down, the college girl has come to realize that same women are more tremendously fitted for the management of a home than they could ever possibly be for the management of a business.

No longer, as a decade ago, is the woman scorned who makes marriage her sole aim in life. Marriage is the career of the college girl's large group of the younger generation. They state it frankly. Nor do they feel that they are wasting their time in spending four years at college. They contend that college is a good place from the social angle fully and that as such it will benefit them just as much as a student who intends to specialize in some particular phase of work in preparation for a career.

Unlike her grandmother and her mother, the college girl of today sees no reason why she can not combine her marriage with a career. If financial obstacles present themselves, she is perfectly willing, in most cases, to put her side by side with her husband and help him overcome them together.

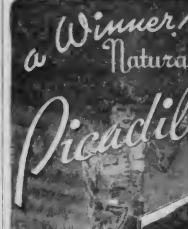
There is an even more radical type of the combination advocate who insists upon having her own work just as her husband has his. Nothing will do for her but a home fires burning for this type. She insists on being on an equal footing with her husband in all things. The average college girl, however, shakes her head at this solution to the problem.

Answers of other answers to the question "Career or marriage?" that confronts the college girl leave a lot to be desired. Most of them imply that a way to develop her own talents and a chance to prepare herself for the privileges of a wife and a mother. In putting off her marriage until the late twenties, or early thirties the advocate of this thinks that she will not only be better able to make a wise choice in the end, but she will also be better prepared for her married life.

No longer is a college education a definite prelude either to marriage or a career. The thoughtful college girl of today will choose between the two or combine them if she can. She thinks for her own individual make-up and her individual ambitions.

College Press Plans Meeting

Delegates from Flambeau To Attend National Chicago Conclave



Plans to send delegates to the Associated Collegiate Press convention in Chicago which will be held Oct. 14-16 have been made by the Flambeau.

The convention is now being planned by the officers of the Associated Collegiate Press, national association of college publications' editors and business managers. According to their predictions the convention will be the largest assembly of college and university publication executives and editors ever to be held in the United States.

Delegates from the Flambeau will include Evelyn Fisher and Pearl Shuford, co-editors of the paper and Jane Quinn, business manager.

With a program headlined by Henry Goddard Leach, eminent editor of The Forum magazine, and Howard Vincent O'Brien, news-making editorial columnist for the Chicago Daily News, delegates will attend a real short course in newspaper, magazine and yearbook business and editorial management.

Delegates to the convention will be entertained by Dusty Miller, famed Northwestern band director, music of Al Diem and his broadcasting orchestra, and other radio artists will also appear on the program. Delegates will also make tours of the up-to-date Chicago newspaper, printing, engraving and yearbook plants, each personally conducted by an

College Girl of Today Makes Honest Endeavor To Evaluate Advantage of Marriage or Career

By EVELYN FISHER
After college, what?

Today the college girl looks at the inevitable choice between marriage and a career with deep and thoughtful eyes. Scorning neither the home nor a career, the average college girl of today makes an honest endeavor to evaluate the advantages of each type of life. Looking back into the dim, hazy traditions of women, bound by tradition and by the laws of the convention, she tries to direct her own freedom into a form of life that will be suited to herself as an individual.

After the war when the whole world was restless and unsettled, women were caught in the whirl. settled too. There was born into the newly emancipated woman of the '20's a desire for entertainment, a desire to create a new existence to take the place of the

Students Can Take Tuberculin Tests

Students who desire to take the tuberculin test offered by the college infirmary have been asked to fill out cards this week at the infirmary. These tests which are voluntary here are part of a nation-wide fight against the "white plague," a fight which is being waged in many universities all over the country. The skin tests will be given during the next week, students to be notified of their appointments. Those who receive positive threads three first examinations will be given more thorough tests which include X-rays of the chest.

Church Groups To Entertain With Banquets

New and Old Students Will Be Honored At Gatherings

This week-end, the annual church parties to welcome both new and old students who are members of various churches in Tallahassee will be given. A ship party, formal and informal receptions are among the entertainments being planned.

Presbyterian students have received passports for passage on a special liner chartered by the Presbyterian Student League. The ship will leave port at 8 o'clock Friday evening from the Presbyterian church annex. It is estimated that nearly 300 passengers will embark. Poopsy and Olive Oyl will be among others attending. Mary Emsley and Martha More are co-chairmen in charge of the entertainment.

A musical program will be the highlight of a formal reception to be given at the home of Dr. and Mrs. L. R. Christie, pastor of the Baptist church of Tallahassee, on Friday evening. Homer Gramling will give several selections on the xylophone and the Tallahassee male quartet will sing. Refreshments of coffee, tea, sandwiches and cake will be served throughout the evening.

On Saturday evening, the Woman's Missionary society of Trinity Methodist church will honor all Methodist students on campus at a reception at the church. Guests will come in formal or informal dress. All those attending are asked to meet at the Methodist student house at 7:45 o'clock and transportation to and from the party will be provided.

The annual reception of the Christian church will be given at the home of Mrs. George Pius, Calhoun street. Musical selections and several readings are listed for the occasion and games and charades will be a part of the entertainment.

ter, a training course for all campus officers during the second semester, and a leadership training course for sophomore council to be carried throughout the year are part of the program.

Phoneticitis Cause of Odd Behaviorisms

Wheezing and Groaning Caused by Seasonal Phonetic Ills

By MABEL BENNETT

While walking down the hall of the building one day recently I noticed a group of boys and girls in front of the newer bulletin boards. As you ever pass a room in which the students are wheezing and moaning and making funny faces? Are you so fascinated by what you see that you have to turn around and walk by again looking intently out of the corners of your eyes so you won't appear curious and foolish by openly staring?

Those students and their irresistible antics momentarily distracted me, but they are only phonetics. In the hall the French exercises sound like high-pitched squeaking, while the German resembles a series of throaty coughs, and the Spanish phonetics have a sound of music.

This practicing is not confined to the classroom alone. Friendly relations with one's roommate is most break off when one of them has to say, "Now, you repeat after me." Are you trying to make yourself more unpopular? Don't you think the infirmary is the place for you?

Sometimes the reports, the height of disappointment was reached when I heard a little girl put a record owned by the foreign language department on the victrola and heard a series of "oo, ee, ah's" instead of the jazz she had expected.

Flambeau Installs Little Red Wagon

Contrary to popular opinion, a new transportation system is not being installed at P.S.C.W.

However, a little green wagon that is supposedly for the purpose of delivering Flambeaus to off-campus students has been used as a method of locomotion by a few members of the staff.

So if any lovesick young freshmen have been having visions of riding between classes in a little green wagon with red wheels it has been announced that Jack is Flambeau property and that it is to be used for journalistic purposes—in the strictest sense of the word. One will have to furnish his own wagon or league at the business office to find out if a green wagon was included in the fees.

As yet the vehicle is unnamed. "Watterwagon," "Green Maria" and "Bandwagon" are some of the names suggested, but one has not been selected. So far it has been housed in the Flambeau office, but plans are under way to build a suitable garage, the site of which is still tentative.

Essay Contest Selects Nine

Finalists in Shakespeare Contest to Compete For Grand Prize

The nine finalists in the Shakespearian essay contest conducted by the Columbus Broadcasting system this summer for students in summer schools throughout the United States have been selected by the regional judges to compete before the national board of awards for the grand prize of $250. The winner of this award will be announced on or around October 15.

These essays were critical articles written on the subject of Columbia's recent Shakespeare cycle. The students winning the regional contests represented Hunter college of New York; the University of Alabama; Baylor university, the Lamont school of Denver Colorado; Lehigh university of Bethlehem, Penna.; the Sternsdale Bennett summer school of Toronto, Canada; the University of Southern California; the University of Washington, and George Washington university.

The board of judges which will decide among these nine essays is composed of outstanding professors of literature in the larger Eastern universities, dramatic critics, and authors.

Member Drive For Y. W. C. A. Ends Saturday

Organization Will Hold Recognition Service On November 7

FIRST MEETING COMES SATURDAY

Will Bring Rev. Turner Here for Initial Church Sermon

The Young Women's Christian association membership drive which began the first of the week comes to a close tomorrow. This week has seen a concentrated canvass of the dormitories and off-campus houses by a committee which is headed by Sarah Lewis, chairman.

Meeting Next Thursday

Following the drive there will be several meetings which will help the new girls become acquainted with the work of the group, after which a recognition service will be held on November 7 at this time all new members will be duly recognized and the old girls will renew their memberships.

The first meeting of the year is to be held on next Thursday, in the Auguste Conradi little theater. The hour will be announced later. During this meeting members will meet officers and chairmen of the various branches of the organization, and will be told the functions of each group. Also plans for the recognition service and for the finance campaign, which begins November 1, will be outlined.

On October 17, Y.W.C.A. is staging host to a guest speaker, Mr. Fred A. Turner, from the First Methodist church of Orlando, for the first of its monthly church services, which are held at 7:30 o'clock in the Auguste Conradi little theater.

Day Students Reveal Plans

Will Present a Program In Convocation For The First Time

A search for talent is going on at the Day Students' organization. For the first time in its history, the organization is going to give a convocation program, and President Marion Love is literally "cleaning up the house" looking for any hidden talent. She has confidence of her powers, but not only are stables from all over the country represented, but also members from Cuba made Tallahassee their home and systematically became Day Students.

Officers of the Day Students' organization have announced the program planned this year and they, too, have been greatly encouraged by the large number of girls who are taking interest in the club and cooperating with every project.

For the first time day students are being required to have Mary Parker is in charge of the orientation and has arranged for the students to be given regular tests in convocation in hopes that the new students will feel closer to and more responsible for college activities. To encourage scholarship and promote day student participation in affairs on campus, the organization plans to award a cup at the end of the year to the best all around freshman.

In order that new students may become familiar with the faculty on campus, all of which have extended many invitations to the town students to join their group, and in order that they may become acquainted with the various C. O. A. members and officers, a series of "guest" talks are to be given in the meetings by representatives from the Government association and the different clubs.

Besides having a new room, to be furnished in the new stucture with comfortable chairs, reading lamps, a telephone, and divan, the girls of the club are going to be given some new lockers in which to put their books when they are not in use.

On Thursday 7, the second meeting was held at 11:30 in 307 Science building. This will be the be furnished in the near future meetings. Louise Gehan and Virginia Lanier were the guest speakers for this week.

Delegate

J. G. Kellum, business manager at Florida state college for 26 years, who this week represented the institution at the New York Herald-Tribune forum, held in the northern city.

Tribune Forum Hears Kellum Give Address

Business Manager Sent As Delegate From Florida State

As representative of Florida State College at the New York Herald Tribune forum of world affairs, held on Monday and Tuesday, J. G. Kellum, business manager of Florida State college for 26 years, spoke of the pick-up in financial affairs as manifested in the increased enrollments in colleges all over the country. Representatives of various women's colleges were invited to attend this forum.

Mr. Kellum spoke of the record fall enrollment of 1,743 students at this college and of the acute housing problem which the school has faced and stated that the student body would have reached a total of 2,500 if the college could have provided adequate facilities. Hundreds of applications have had to be refused. The growth in enrollment since Mr. Kellum came to the school as business manager in 1917 clearly shows that people are using their improved financial status to send their children to college.

Prominent for years in financial circles in Florida, Mr. Kellum predicted a bigger season for Florida this year. Equally prominent is educational circles, he has played an important part in every worthwhile endeavor undertaken since his affiliation began. He was instrumental in the establishment of Pinelacoe as a recreational center for the college girls.

The business manager is also treasurer of the college, is a former school teacher and for a number of years served as secretary of the Florida Educational Association. For 18 years he was chief cierk in the House of Representatives and also has served as secretary to the Board of Control and the State Plant board.

Georgia Executive Makes Talk Before Meeting Of Professors

President Guy H. Wells, of Georgia State College for Women, and Miss Ethel Adams, dean of students, accompanied by two dietitians, and the assistant bursar of the staff, were visitors on campus this week, at the invitation of President and Ideas was the purpose of their visit. During their stay, members of the party visited the dining hall and kitchen, the dormitories, the Pinelacoe, and other points of interest on Florida State campus.

Wells Addresses Senate

At a luncheon given President Wells was given before a meeting of the Florida senate Tuesday afternoon. In his talk, the visiting executive lauded the physical equipment of Florida State College. Declaring that Florida State was much larger and better equipped in several ways than his own college, he expressed the hope that it would be the aid of administration to obtain and maintain the facilities he had seen on the campus. According to Wells, the new girls' dormitory space, this colleges is about one-third larger than Georgia State College for Women, which is equipped to provide comfortably for only 1600 students.

As an example of the need for more living space, Wells said the latter place he told that there were at least three students in each room and that in many cases there were four occupants.

In comparing the curricula of the two colleges, he pointed out that both had identical general college plan for the first two years of the academic course. The main difference, he pounted out, was that in the state of Georgia, the music school has been adopted in every state school, whereas in Florida, the choice of a curricula has been left to each individual college. While the music school was adopted both at G.S.C.W. and Florida State, the A.B. degree is not used at the University of Florida is more suited to the arts of the latter than is the one found here.

Boners on Orientation Quiz Panic CGA's With Laughter

Dubonnet and Gold Regarded by Some Freshmen As Alma Mater's Color Scheme; Other Hilarious New Ideas

After weeks of keeping their little gold handbooks with them wherever they went, freshman orientation-test-takers handed in their yearly crop of boners last week. The test papers officials grading them have had a hard time keeping the "Quiet" rules.

Screams of laughter greeted the reading aloud of the ramblings from the three torches. According to the keepers of the treasures, freshmen are quite intelligent, but they may mean anything from the past, present, and future of the college to a guide to show people who the seniors are. One particularly naive young person remarked that the three lighted torches were a sign of welcome for the freshmen, and that welcome extended to the freshmen themselves.

Some of the newest class were also a little confused with the colors of the college. Most of them got the gold part but they put almost every tint and shade of red except garnet with it. Some of the color schemes were: blue and white, gold and dubonnet, orange and blue, and red white and purple.

A general picture of harmacarium, fluffy, and ridiculous collage rules with pandemonium reigning supreme was displayed in the answers. Freshmen were thus when upperclassmen spend the night in the dormitories and that they are entirely at the mercies of the upperclassmen under their orders? Another answer, hazards that the fire-drill is composed of the very important things, namely, open the windows, grab a chair, and fall out. Study flash, said another, is the sign for everyone to get quiet and go to their rooms so that others can study while one paper announced that the only way to successfully pass a study sign is in the extreme dark, lit or death.

There must be at least one article in the constitution. When asked who the president of student government was, the very prompt answer came back: "I don't know her name, but I could draw a picture of her." The chairman of the Judiciary was described as the "girl with the bizarre voice," and the freshman advisor was "the dark haired girl with all the pep and personality."

One of the girls screwed up her

'Rec' Addition To Be Started First Of Year

New Unit Will Include Sun Parlor, Lounge And Terrace

Plans for the enlargement and renovation of Recreation, commonly known as the Rec, had been submitted and approved by a committee in charge of the building improvements on campus. This project, which is known through information received from the office of Superintendent Mr Herbert Mendenhall, resident engineer, Mr. Mendenhall said that the building would begin about the first of the year.

According to the present plans for the addition of a new unit, a sun parlor, which will extend west to the line of palm trees now between Recreation and Women, which is equipped to provide comfortably for only 1600 students.

As an example of the need for more living space, Wells said the latter place he told that there were at least three students in each room and that in many cases there were four occupants.

New Officers Are Presented To Star Club

Astronomy Group Plans Camp Observation For Members

At the first meeting of the Astronomy club, Gladys Ware, president of the organization, introduced the new officers for the year: Florence Evers, vice-president and chairman of the program committee; Sarah Adams, secretary-treasurer; Rosemary Mac-Donald, chairman of the telescope committee, and Marie Betty Bushelle, chairman of the telescope team.

Following the introduction of the officers, Gladys gave a short talk on the orbit of the club, its aims and purposes, and requirements for membership. She stated that, until five years ago, there has been a course in astronomy offered by the club. Since then, it has been made a student organization and assisted by Dr. Harold P. Richards, faculty sponsor, and the physics department.

The purpose of the club as explained by Gladys Ware is to help the average individual develop a keener interest in astronomy along scientific, as well as practical, lines. Membership in the organization is open to those students who have an interest in astronomy. The payment of dues gives to the student a membership card which entitles her to the privilege of using the telescopes.

This year the club is concerned with the practical, rather than theoretical, observations, supplemented by lectures. Lectures, given by guest speakers, the speakers explained. In carrying out this plan, Miss Florence Evers, during the year was Dr. Richards, who spoke on the "Life of Galileo." As student speaker, Rosemary MacDonald gave a talk on the planet Jupiter.

Plans are being made for the Astronomy club to have a camp. The club takes each semester, to Camp Flastacowe. At this time members of the club will take the new 6-inch telescope and make observations.

For members' use the organization has a library in Dr. Mary Parker's office. On the shelves in this library are books on astronomy. Copies of this magazine, will be kept with other astronomical literature in the astronomy classroom.

The club will have four meetings a month, two of which will be observations and two, discussions. The next meeting of the Astronomy club will be held Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in room 9 of the Westcott building. At that time there will be a discussion by servations of Jupiter and its moons. The members will observe the motions of the moons in relation to each other and to Jupiter.

Far East War Discussed From Three Phases By Four People

ABBEY, MEADOR ARE FACULTY SPEAKERS

Browne and Allen Talk On International Situation

Three phases of the undeclared Sino-Japanese war—historical background, personal experience, and international significance—were discussed in the special N.F.S.A. program in convocation Wednesday.

Dr. Abbey Speaks

Dr. Kathryn Abbey, head of the history department, gave an historical survey of the events leading up to the war and Miss Sarah Meador of the School of Home Economics, recounted some of the experiences she encountered during her trip to the Far East this summer. Marguerite Browne, president of the International Relations club, and Virginia Allen, chairman of the Japanese Peace campaign, discussed the situation from the United States' point of view.

China has been a bone of contention since she was forced to open her doors to the world a century ago Dr. Abbey of the history department stated in her presentation of the causes of the war. Foreign penetration has resulted in the dismemberment of the empire, and it has made way for the establishment of China as the overthow of the warlords, and the rise of the People's National party under Dr. Sun Yat Sen.

This party developed a marked antipathy for the Japanese imperialism, but with the death of the Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek, the anti-foreign element was suppressed, and the extreme socialistic policies were pushed to the front.

Japan was ambitious for world power, Dr. Abbey continued, she needed a cheap source of raw material, and a safety-valve for her serious economic problems—overpopulation, unemployment, low living standards. Manchukuo seemed to satisfy these requirements. She had started to penetrate northern China, and the outbreak of hostilities was the logical result.

Miss Meador, who left the country Tuesday afternoon on Broward house under the leadership of Evelyn Glazier, president. The discussion and adoption of a new constitution was the principal feature of the business session, at which time a permanent organization program was also outlined. Plans were made to invite every living in Tallahassee who are interested in French and be admitted to their group for meetings and members. The second Tuesday night of every month was selected as the regular meeting date for the group.

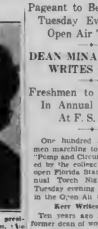
CGA's "Brain Child" Reveals An Abundance of Spare Time

140 Students Have Signed Up to Help With Duties of College Government; Vice President Betty Hatch Is in Charge

Evidently there is more spare time floating around the campus than is generally conceded, for approximately 140 students already have signed up to help with the work of the College Government association in the activities which they are interested.

Saying that the response to the plan is a hearty pat on the back for C.G.A. and an indication of interest in Betty Colonel, president of College Government endorses the action. The plan, which is the "brain child" of executive council under the direction of Betty Hatch, newly elected second vice-president of C.G.A., is the result of C.G.A. seeing that the idea is carried out.

The general purpose of the plan is to give the students a clearer insight into the workings of the organization and to give them the opportunity to perform a genuine service for the school.



These student volunteers will be called upon at any time to perform necessary duties and all opportunities that re-

French and German Clubs Are Reorganized At First Meetings

The initial meetings of the year for two language clubs on campus were held this week.

The first of the German club met Friday afternoon at the home of their sponsor, Miss Elizabeth Dolive. Miss Charlotte Kamper, president, presided over a short business session. At this time a nominating committee composed of Annie Cranmin, Anita Leonard and Florence Wagner, was appointed to suggest officers for the coming club year.

During the informal social hour that followed the members were given an opportunity to exam ne Dr. Hein s German magazine, to which the club recently subscribed. The next meeting of the club is to be on October 13

One hundred singing freshmen marchine to the strains of "Pomp and Circumstance" played by the college orchestra will open Florida State college's annual Torch Night celebration Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock in the Open Air theater.

Kerr Writes Original

Ten years ago Dr. Mina Kerr, former dean of women, started a ship between the symbols of the three torches, Work, Love, and Honor, and the ancient Greek festival called Lampadedromia, meaning "torch race." This idea served as the foundation for the first Torch Night activities held in 1927 and which in subsequent years has been revised or changed. However, this year's pageant will follow directly the original set by Marion Conn, chairman, has announced.

The story as written by Dr. Kerr starts with a relay race with runners posted as shrines all the way to the city. Each runs with the torch as fast as he can to the next who will deliver it to the altar and hands his torch to the next runner. Before the play is these races to keep the altar burning bright and to return undistinguished to the starting point. In case the Torch Night ceremony is held after the freshmen given a light of Psyche to symbolize the kindling of the flame from the sophomore class to them, and their duty to keep the torches burning bright.

Freshmen Hear Andrews Speak

Personality Development Will Be Subject Of Weekly Talk

Dr Elizabeth G. Andrews, specialist in the Bureau of Education, in her talk, "What Is Personality?" which was at freshman convocation on Thursday, will discuss the subject which students may change their habits in the basic qualities which do not seem to be desired.

This is the third of a series of addresses which have been held for the purpose of bringing the students closer to the standards, standard traditions and ideals of Florida State College for Women. Dr. Andrews, dean of students, addressed the freshmen on "The Importance of Being Yourself" and last week Miss Louise Richardson spoke to them on "Friendship." Next week Miss Daisy Parker will speak on "The Attitude of College to Alumnae" while on October 23, Dr. Venita L. Shore, will speak on "Citizenship." Ralph L. Eyman will close the six-week addresses on November 30 with an address, "Relation to Life on the Campus."

One-Act Plays, Modern Comedy, and Chinese Drama To Be Presented

Variety is the keynote of the speech department's program for this year as outlined by Miss Kenper Main Moore, assistant professor of speech. A modern comedy, a program of one-act plays and a Chinese drama have been selected as some of the features of the 1937-38 dramatic season. The Chinese production will come as a climax to the year's work and will be given in collaboration with the School of Music and the costume and design class.

The speech department will also cooperate with the humanities classes by presenting two typics comedies that will be chosen by the humanities committee. This is a new event being introduced for the first time this year.

Tickets for these plays will be on sale at the beginning of each week and are available only to students and faculty members.

Team Will See Moon Markings On Wednesday

Telescope Observation Times Elected By Miss Lynn

Miss Elizabeth Lynn, instructor in physics, has announced that periods for observation by members of the volunteer telescope teams have been selected. the first of these to take place Wednesday of next week. This period is set aside for the study of the surface markings on the moon.

At later dates, not yet announced, the team will study the moons of Jupiter and the rings of Saturn. Definite periods for these particular observations will be determined after weather conditions have been studied.

This observation work is done with the aid of a five and three-eighths-inch telescope as well as a smaller equatorial instrument. The team members will take an active part in assisting with all of these observations.

Any and all members of the physical science classes are invited to participate in observing although attendance is never compulsory. Due to the fact that the number of students enrolled in the physical science classes is large, these observations will be limited to class members.

However, it is hoped that two observation periods will be "guest nights," as which time class members will have the privilege of issuing special invitations to their guests. It is probable that no class member will be permitted to invite more than one guest. The dates for these guest nights will be announced later to all physical science classes.

The volunteer telescope team is divided into four smaller teams, each with its captain. The following girls are acting as captains: Bettie Yunr Helen Dabney. Hazel Wilkerson. and Elizabeth Ann Williams.

First Fire Drill of Year Reminds Dormitory Director of Burning of College's East Hall

The first fire drill of the year which took place last week reminded one of the dormitory directors of an unusual "fire" incident which occurred a number of years ago. This famous incident was the burning of East hall.

The Sunday mornina that old East hall burned will probably go down in the history of Florida State College for Women as the most exciting Sunday ever experienced on this campus. While the great majority of the hundred occupants of East hall were singing hymns, their rooms, clothes, and other belongings were burning. Quite a few girls heard the alarm and slipped out of their respective places at church and came as quickly as possible to the college.

Fortunately, the firemen worked fast enough to save most of the girls' possessions in spite of the flames epouting from the frame building. Soon the campus around the burning dormitory was covered with trunks, furniture, and girls' clothing. All at once a peculiar poppina sound began; everyone decided that there was some ammunition in the basement and people began to scatter. The mystery of the "ammunition" was explained later by one of the girls who had placed a case of soft drinks in the basement for safe keeping.

The Y.W.C.A. and the girls in the other dormitories cooperated splendidly with the "homeless" college stuednts, while people from all over the state sent money and boxes to aid those girls who had lost their things in the fire.

this festival is celebrated and the three ideals of college life will be represented by Apollo Mary Collins as Strength, Pallas Athene Elaine Fleischer as Arts and Crafts, and Aphrodite Lucile Smoak as Beapty of person and character. The nine muses will portray the activities of the college, and the libation bearers suggest the benefits to be derived from following Alma Mater.

Muses Make Tribute

After the processional the muses, all dressed in Grecian gowns of different colors, make their tribute to Alma Mater, who wears a white pleated tunic, garnet and gold mantle, and gold headdress. During this offering, the praise of each muse is sung by readers.

After the muses comes Apollo, dressed in an orange tunic and an oranae golo dotted mantle. With him are his archers, who dance for Alma Mater. Next is Pallas Athene with her train, who carry ornamental bowls and scrolls of learning which the goddess of wisdom offers at the shrine. Pallas Athene is to wear a purple tunic and lavende. mantle with gold Grecian-key headdress.

Last to appear is Aphrodite in light green tunic, dark green mantle, and Grecian key headdress of flowers. Her attendants dance for gods and Alma Mater: Libation bearers then kneel about the altar to pour out their offerings of wines, oils and water.

Last to appear are the torch racers, who pass the flame on to each of the 100 white clad freshmen.

In exclusion the assemblage marches out singing the "War March of the Priests," to which selection new words have been written by Eloise Andrews.

Human Element Told

The human element in the war situation is coming home to the United States, said Miss Meador, in talling of her experiences in China and Japan last summer. A young American acting as a guide for a party of tourists was killed in the bombing of Shanghai. Young Japanese who had studied in America and wished to return soon were forced to give up their dreams of further study for the reality of compulsory military service in the Japanese army. Chinese, realizing that war and hunger and poverty were near, ran after the tourists in the streets, begging them to buy anything at any price. The war is affecting the lives of Americans who work abroad and their relatives in the United States, she said. War and threat of war sits upon our doorstep, Miss Meador ended.

Marguerite Browne and Virginia Allen, although they were unable to give official views of their organizations, told of some of the effects of the crisis upon international affairs. The neutrality act of the United States will help to keep her out of war. but it is weak. inadequate, they both explained. If, however, the American people are able to keep their skirts away from the fire of the conflict, they may be able to prevent a major disaster.

Lester Attending Meeting

Martha Lester, Y.W.C.A. representative from the state of Florida, is going to Atlanta today to meet with the southern regional council of Y.W.C.A. and the Field Council of Y.M.C.A. The purpose of this meeting, at which twelve southern states will be represented, is to plan the activities for this region, and also to make plans for the first joint convention of Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A. ever to be held in this country. It will be at Miami university, Oxford, O., during the Christmas holidays. Any students who are interested in going to this convention may obtain information about it from Martha Lester upon her return from this meetina.

noticed particularly the home life of each hall. She studied the freshman orientation program and was interested in obtaining material on that subject.

In comparing the features of G.S.C.W. with those she found here, she told of a prospective educational camp in the mountains of north Georgia which is a proposed addition to the summer quarter program Vocational training, playwriting, and physical education are some of the subjects which would be offered there. A beautiful and well equipped recreation center is one of the noted assets of that campus.

Dean Dorman, Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls, J. G. Kellum, business manager, and Herbert Mendenhall, college architect, hope to make a visit to inspect it soon in order to incorporate some of its features in the new project for the enlargement of Recreation hall.

Tour Dining Rooms

A tour of the dining room was one of the highlights of Miss Adams' visit. Accompanied by the visiting dietitians, she was shown the electrical appliances and convenient departments of the kitchen. The party commented upon the modern equipment and praised the well organized management of the large dining hall.

Big-Eyed Dog Made Mascot Of Flambeau

Editors Take "Shepard" Dog for Ride In Staff Wagon

By FLORENCE GREGORY

The co-editors of the Flambeau have appropriated a mascot: a big, dewy-eyed dog whose brown eyes seem to look up and say apologetically: "I'm like the baby at the baptism: I get no fun out of it, but they can't have it without me." The "eo" insists that he is a "Shepard" dog, and the "editor" calls him "Honey."

It seems that he roamed into the office the other day and made known the fact that he was looking for love and affection. The girls adopted him at once; and in order to prove that there are girls of today with some maternal instinct, they proudly dumped "Junior" into the new little green wagon and wheeled him down the halls of the history building to pay their respects to the professors and to show off Junior and his tricks.

As they drove down the hall the editors tried to get acquainted with the little hound by suggesting certain names that might appeal to him so that he might have one he could call his own. But to no avail. Junior only sat and blinked and wagged his—well, twitched his ears When they gave up in despair, he was quite willina to shake hands and call it a day. He was so wholehearted in his willingness that one of the teachers intimated that possibly he was holding hands instead of shaking paws.

Last Friday afternoon Junior, feeling the need for relaxation and amusement after his strenuous hours of visitina, attended the volleyball practice in the company of the sports editors. His masculine presence rather upset the teams' efficiency because the girls wanted to play with the audience instead of for it.

Wednesday Junior accompanied the sophomore reporters on the tour of the museum. He took excellent care of the class, and, except for his attack on some mastodon bones, conducted himself as any well-behaved young mascot should.

The staff is quite anxious for Junior's welfare since he is becomina so popular. Students who have colds are requested not to pet him or shake his hand; it is also hoped that he will not be fed between meals.

Machine Age Comes to FSCW as Extension Phones End Leisurely Existence of Yellow-Slip System

The machine age has come to Florida State. A network of complicated mechanism has spread itself around the girls of this campus, bringing to a close a lona, leisurely existance. The extension telephone is here.

This latest manifestation of the iron and steel age has been installed in the dormitories, making a thing of the past the quaint yellow-slip system. So gaily flaunted before the room-mate, this heart-warming yellow slip will soon be an item of early Americana. Collecting rare old specimens will doubtless become fashionable; exclusive groups will gather to exchange notices; the vintage of '33 will bring top prices.

Calloused dormitory directors repeat that "all the girls love to answer the phones"; but we suspect it is the freshmen who sprint to the telephone, vying with one another for the honor of reaching it first. Not so the reactionist upperclassmen. Bound by sentiment, they naturally resent these insidious modern conveniences that are putting an end to a pleasantly rural life.

Youth, it is said, must be served; so we have extension telephones.

Club Features Speakers On Year's 1st Program

Members of the Classical club assembled Wednesday night in Broward lounge for their first formal meetina of the year. The session was opened by a speech of welcome from the president, Geneva Nelson. Gladys Ware, vice president, outlined the general program of the year, and Dorothy Detrick, secretary, discussed the purpose of the Classics organization.

An interestina feature of the program was a history of Eta Sigma Phi, the national classics honorary, presented by its president, Marcia Smith. Miss Ruth Fairman and Miss Edith West, instructors in the classics department, also spoke briefly.

During the informal social hour that followed the program, new members were in.... and refreshments were served.

History Society Plans For Banquet Next Week

A meting of Phi Alpha Theta, national history honorary, was held Wednesday night at the home of Dr. Annie Popper, assistant professor of history.

Future Radio Magnates Train at Iowa College

IOWA CITY, Tenn. — (ACP) — The Edwin C. Hille and Boake Carters of tomorrow are being trained at WSUI, radio station of the University of Iowa.

Students interested in radio as a vocation "start from the bottom and start right." They write script, build programs, direct plays, edit news and announce—to name only a few of the tasks connected with broadcasting. They are behind the scenes doing the work of the 8 952 programs broadcast during the year.

The mechanical side of the broadcasts is taken care of by students who have received their training in the colleas of engineering. Courses cover both radio and television, with an experimental station serving as a laboratory.

Students prepare and present three news broadcasts daily, the Parade of Events, Friday evening's dramatization of the news, sports reviews, art news and farm news. And when they step up to the microphone, they don't shake with "mike fright," but possess a confidence born of a thorough understanding of radio.

First Meeting of Vamps Held; Officers Elected

The Village Vamps club at its first meeting held at the Chi Omega house Wednesday, elected officers for the present school year. The new officers include

Dorothy Hill, president; Betty Cashen, vice president; Helen Murphy, keeper-of-dates; Nelwyn Brooks, chief gold digger; Leona Howe, keyhole peeper, Anne Lawson, assistant keyhole peeper.

Other members of the club are: Peggy Vandyke, Margaret Mickler, Sara Carter, Betty Curtis, Danner Baker, Virginia Dowling, Sara Moor, Anne Touson, Bebe Clifford, Emily Blackwell, and Virginia Wiggins.

After the meeting refreshments were served.

Annual Photo Plans Changed

422 Wescott Building Becomes Temporary Picture Studio

Contrary to previous announcement, Flastacowo pictures are being taken at 412 Westcott building instead of in the Demonstration school. Seniors are urged to make their appointments not later than 5:30 Saturday afternoon.

Eileen Robinson, editor in chief of the Flastacowo, urges the student body to cooperate with her and thereby avoid the usual confusion that surrounds the taking of the annual pictures. Each class will be given two weeks in which to make appointments and have pictures taken. The first week of this time is to be spent scheduling appointments, and the second week taking pictures. Unlike previous years, no extra time will be allowed those persons who fail to have their pictures taken according to the schedule set up for the various classes.

A new plan is being used this year to differentiate between the classes. The seniors are having their pictures taken in both caps and gowns and a V-shaped drape The junior will use a drape straight across the neck with a few soft folds. Sophomores will have the cowled-neck effect and freshmen will use the square-necked drape with fulness.

As yet the Flastacowo staff is undecided whether to use the draped pictures of the seniors or the cap and gown pictures. However, decision upon this point will soon be made at one of the regular staff meetings, which are held every Thursday night.

All students are urged to start taking snapshots for the annual contest. In order to get a composite picture of college activity throughout the year, it is necessary that this work begin early in the school season. All pictures for the contest may be turned into Eileen Robinson, 304 Gilchrist.

Club Practice Periods Will Be Held in Pool

Practice will be held for those students interested in becoming members of the Tarpon club every Monday and Thursday afternoon at 4 30 o'clock, according to an announcement made yesterday by Frances Thill, club president

Students who have been invited by either members or instructors may come to the pool for the regular practice periods of the club on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons. Friday night practice, however, is limited to club members alone.

Dr. R. B. Nash To Speak Here

Prominent Educator Will Attend Conference Here in April

Dr. Guy B. Nash, head of the physical education department of the University of New York, will be the leading speaker at the convention of the Southeastern Conference of the A. P. C. W. to be held here in April.

Dr. Nash is an outstanding figure in the field of health and physical education and has written several books on the subject, some of which are being used in the physical education department here. He states that he is acting upon his wanna and impulses in coming here for the convention.

Miss Mary Duggan, head of the physical education department at Texas State College for Women has also been invited to the convention. Miss Duggan has written several tap dance books from which the tap routines taught in this college are taken.

"F" Goats to Be Reminded Again Tonight About Lowly Rank When They Eat Dinner a la Spoon

Tonight the "F" club goats will again be reminded of their inferior status when they sit down at the tables reserved for them every Friday night in the dining room.

No doubt their place cards will be upside down, while the members card are as they should be. On past Fridays the goats sat down at the end of the table and hurriedly eyed the food. A soupy vegetable was served, the members used spoons. The goats used forks—by command. The dinner progresses, and the dessert came. It was pudding of the soft, liquid genre. A few goats wearily reached for forks; the rest, being very hungry, rascued themselves.

Passing out of the dining hall they silently prayed to the Great Deity to have their mothers send them boxes of food the next day.

This is not all of their humiliation. Today marks the beginning of a cleanup campaign. Every Friday after lunch the goats have to wash and polish the shoes of the members.

But some week-end in the near future they will be taken to camp and initiated, then their degradation will be over.

Life Saving Examiners Get Free Instruction

The Life Saving corps gave instruction for senior life saving examiners Saturday morning at 8:30 in the college pool. To be eligible for the course a girl must have come out for junior and senior life saving as soon as the six-week orientation for freshmen is completed.

The Life Saving corps will begin hours from 4:30 to 5:30 every day except Friday. Any student may go in swimming at this time.

As Others Say

Editor's Note: The following articles from the pages of several student publications will give the student a brief video of the campus activities that they enjoy, problems and their fields of endeavor. It is through these editorials and special articles that a picture can be gained of these institutions.

From the more than 600 freshmen and transfer women on Michigan State's campus this week, twelve sororities will pledge approximately 180 at the end of formal rushing. But what of the 250 others? Because they do not pledge at once does not mean that they are not sorority material.

Many women, especially freshmen, prefer to make the other necessary adjustments to college life before going into a sorority; others wish to take a longer time for their decision; some simply aren't interested in a sorority; still others will be disappointed upon the group they would like to join haven't the opportunity right now.

To the women in this latter category should go the advice not to pledge some other sorority, in which you do not feel you will be as happy. Stay independent and make yourself invaluable to the organizations such as Greek letter organizations require their pledges to participate in all extracurricular activities, so should each individual be willing to offer herself. Recognition comes to those who work for it. Sororities are willing to work with you to prove their ability.

Although sororities are a very fine part of college life, the lack of a pledge pin after six days should be no excuse for packing your bags for home. Many of the finest women on the campus never wear one, often for economic reasons and often because that is their preference. Michigan State is too democratic a school to despise a student merely because he or she has no Greek affiliation. There are always independents among the campus leaders.—Mich. State News.

HUH!

Reverting to its pool-war stage of escapism, the form of the feminine skirt is beginning to climb once again.

Style dictators have issued orders to shorten the skirts, and women greedily do their bidding. Someone stated that if horse-collars were advocated for men that the women would willingly hitch themselves with the utmost sincerity in believing the new style was very feminine.

Such a statement, of course, is exaggerated, but some of the modes of dresses and hats in the past decade or so have served a purpose but to enrich clothing manufacturers and retailers.

A woman will tell you that she would not dare go out in the rain without a hat, then she proceeds to put on her head a piece of felt with a ribbon tacked to it.

As long as the style is confirmed from Paris or Rome it receives a royal and unquestioning welcome from the ladies. With each new style they buy another dress or hat or shoes, and proceed to vie with others of the community.

One consolation in the present upward trend of skirts is that you can always cut a long one and make it shorter. When the trend is to lengthen the skirt or sleeve, though, the poor girls have to write home for more money.

No matter how much it costs them, women will like a new style because it is the style, but the style mortal never now relies because with every new one they purchase are remodeled with a new green lining.—L. S. U. Reveille.

With this issue comes the dean's list of those who have attained a 2.5 scholarship rating since their entrance into school. Honors are to be supposed to represent the intelligentsia of the school. Whether you accept them as such depends on your definition of "intelligentsia."

To our way of thinking, the real intelligentsia of the school are those who are able to combine scholarship with extra-curricular activities, with equally good success both. If you will give but a brief glance at the list you will find few if any who come up to the definition.

Apparently our campus leaders have come to the conclusion that mere scholarship—recognition means but little in life. And if those who are now on the list prove to be no better leaders in life than they are at college, then apparently the student who goes around sneering at the "book worms" certainly is right.

In our years at Presbyterian, we have always been disappointed to find the dean's list composed mostly of a certain group whose interests in life seem to be confined a little too much to book work.

But there have been exceptions where good leaders have also proved to be good students, and these have been scarce.

So for four years we have tried to find a scholar at Presbyterian, but apparently a scholar according to our definition doesn't exist. In our definition we would say that a scholar is a student who is an outstanding athlete at a great four major sports, an outstanding Christian, an outstanding leader in student government, and is one who is of such personality as to win the election for student body president. Furthermore, we would expect him by sheer brilliance of mind, rather than memorizing, to be smarter than anybody in school; we expect him to be well informed and would have a knowledge of music, art, science, commerce, and be able to write well, as well as top all his attributes off with a good personality.

Since no one like this and we'll admit you've found the scholar-athlete on the dean's list you will find those who fulfill one or more of our requirements for a scholar, but you won't find the well-rounded student in it.

Unfortunate as this situation may be, it is not worse than that which exists in other fields of college activities. You will find outstanding athletes to be only average students in their studies, the majority of men in student government are mediocre students, the military leaders holding no average to shout about, with the campus publications the same. You will find this situation true in other departments of college life.

But to aspire to be the well-rounded student—well, you've set something there.

In conclusion, we say that though the dean's list is not complete by any means, it is a step in the right direction, and we hope that it will be improved upon in the future.—Presbyterian Blue and White.

FSCW Matrons Go on Warpath

Dislike Victorian Titles Suggesting Cruelty

Flash! Social directors of Florida State college are on the warpath. They object to being called matrons. In the dictionary a matron is defined as a lady superintendent of a hospital or an institution. One usually pictures her as cruel, domineering woman with old-fashioned ideas, walking around with a bunch of keys. The social directors are justified in objecting because after all they are a part of the college personnel.

While the faculty is responsible for the academic side of college life, the directors are responsible for the social side. Their main objective is to make the dormito... a happy and social place in which to live. The social directors are all girls' dormitory counselors, and friends seeking to help them will develop her own personality.

Many college students were present Saturday morning and it is hoped that there will be a still more interest will be shown in the course at the next instruction hour. Freshmen who have met all the requirements for the course may come out for instruction in senior life saving as soon as the six-week orientation for freshmen is completed.

The Life Saving corps will begin hours from 4:30 to 5:30 every day except Friday. Any student may go in swimming at this time.

sary qualities for a teacher differ but little from those of various civilian members. The Kindergarten-Primary practice teachers should be a well developed sense of responsibility a desirable asset and possibly tact, and enthusiasm helpful. Those served with the Elementary people that an understanding of the child and the adolescent is required, but did not feel the need for familiarity with current events and current problems as acutely as did the Elementary students.

Practice teachers of the Secondary field should have a background on these necessary qualities for a teacher but added to the list of these should be appreciation of the arts, good manners, a neat appearance, and a broad background in majors and minors

As a remedy for the too frequent idle discovery of lacking credits, several upperclassmen suggested that freshmen both men and women, be given senior counselors who are just completing the exact course contemplated by the freshman and, with the aid of a faculty adviser, plan the entire four-year course for the freshman. While the "buy later" movement has met this need for counseling to some extent, most of the assistance has been social rather than academic and group rather than individual problems and programs have been discussed. The entering men are left to struggle along as best they can alone

In the opinion of the writer, it would eliminate that "lost feeling" declared one senior, and it would help to eliminate the "drop out" courses which the student does not need to do, and would emphasize while necessary courses are left to be hurriedly taken in summer school. It would also provide an excellent opportunity for the seniors to exercise leadership and counseling ability, valuable aids to any future teacher

Courses could be arranged by the registrar from the background and social and fraternal organizations advised for practical assistance. Programs are good to help clubs and to serve on committees. The practice teachers take discovered that responsibility broadens the individual and develops poise

One Elementary student advised the freshmen to try everything that presents itself because the undergraduate can have the better qualified he is to understand the experience and problems of children.

Tours and a Hay Ride Will Be Sponsored By College's Outing Club

Definite plans for the year's activities are being rapidly formulated by the Outing club. There are to be hay rides, tours to lakes and trips to the various points of interest, town. A blocked-off area in front of the arm will be set aside for roller-skating to music.

Just before Halloween an old-fashioned hay ride will be sponsored and if the demand is large enough i.e ride will be given twice.

Posters announcing definite dates will be placed on the bulletin boards in the Westcott building and not, or will be published in the Flambeau.

Entered as second class mail matter, January 30, 1913, at the post office at Tallahassee, Fla., under act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

A Word Of Explanation

Again this year the cut system has been changed at Florida State but however rigid it may seem, a careful analysis of the reasons behind such action must be considered before an opinion can justly be made. The committee which worked last spring and this summer on this revised system admits that it has not reached the ideal solution, but it has striven to make changes which more adequately meet the needs of the college as a whole.

The change this year does not noticeably affect the number of cuts allowed a student, but rather the distribution of these cuts, since a limit has been placed on the number to be taken in each course. This regulated distribution has come about in order to protect the Saturday classes which it was found were cut indiscriminately. Distaste for Saturday classes is of course natural in an institution which has so recently adopted them, but in the majority of the larger colleges the six-day week is an old ruling and one that has been taken for granted for a number of years. Not only does the longer week better distribute the class hours but it is also more efficacious for the solving of this college's class room problem.

The greatest opposition to the present system is related to the number of week-ends that it automatically allows a student, sophomore or senior. No matter how many week-ends are allowed, if cuts have to be taken on Saturdays this number is limited to the maximum of three, since "B" students may cut the same three-hour class only three times. On the other hand will the student want more than four out of eight week-ends, since the end of the quarter is a free one? In fact will she be able to use these?

In comparison with other college cut systems the one used here measures up well. Except in the instances where unlimited cuts are given the average number per semester, not quarter, is from about 8 to 15. Freshmen and those on probation are under special ruling generally. In the case of unlimited cuts or where the student may use his discretion a limit is placed, in that the instructor is given power usually to check these cuts when he feels the student is neglecting his work.

Some college plainly state that they do not have a "cut system." For instance the University of Kentucky has no method of cutting nor unexcused absences. Directly contrasted with this regulation is that used at Radcliffe which in 1935 adopted with Harvard a student discretionary method. However, freshmen are allowed no unexcused absences.

Of the larger women's colleges Wellesley is one of the few which allows students to exercise personal discretion as to class attendance, unless they are on probation. Randolph-Macon lets each student have three excused absences per semester and allows for a few extra ones in particular cases. Brenau allows only two unexcused absences in two- or three-hour courses each semester, while Sweet Briar's more nearly approximates the one here. These six cuts are given in three-hour courses and less for less hours.

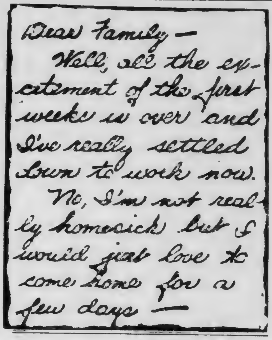
Vassar's system hinges on an educational plan more advanced than that used at many of the colleges and universities, but it is undoubtedly in the direction that higher education is moving. Professing to have no cut system, the college in 1935 started its first year of unlimited leaves for juniors and seniors, while the lower two classes are still on an allotment arrangement. But Vassar believes that its "educational plan depends upon the full cooperation of students and teachers. Since it is carried out, for the most part, by means of classes for discussion or in conferences in connection with lectures, regular attendance at classes, lectures, or conferences is an essential part of academic work. It is expected, therefore, that students will keep all academic appointments and will not be absent without just cause."

Until there is a different philosophy behind college education there can be no radical change in the cut system of an institution, for one cannot precede the other. When higher education is developed for the individual, through conferences and other methods of the tutorial system, and the individual in turn enters college for the purpose of growing individually rather than accumulating courses and hours there can be built up a different relation between instructor and student and hence a different system of class attendance will naturally evolve.

We Look To Co-education

One hundred years ago today women in the United States entered into education on the college level for the first time when four young women in a class including thirty young men matriculated in a regular college course leading to an A.B. degree at Oberlin college. Begining today, a convocation of educational leaders will meet at that college to mark the centennial of co-education.

Co-education has made rapid strides in one century. It has become the most widely accepted form of higher education in the United States. East, West, North and South, young men and young women are working side by side in their quest for a college education. Only a few states do not support a co-educational school. Florida is one of the few states that does not have a state-supported co-educational institution. In spite of the modern equipment, good faculties and impressive building plans of the two schools, this state continues to keep her women students separated from her men students by 150 miles.



Whether this is a holdover from the out-of-date sheltering attitude toward women students adopted by Southern educational institutions or whether this is the result of financial and practical technicalities which would be necessary in the event of a change, the fact remains that the days of the Female Seminary, medieval or modern, are just about over. If we look into the future at all we are obliged to see that co-education is coming, and this state will be no exception in the general trend.

In the first place, co-education is the more normal way of college education. If college is really to be preparation for life, as we are told by so many that it should be, co-education should definitely be a part of the college set-up. Before and after their college life, men and women must be associated with each other. To take four years aside and segregate them with their own sex seems a dangerous thing to do if satisfactory adjustments are to be made later in life. The location of Florida State college is especially unfortunate in this respect. Since it is not located near any other university of large city, opportunities for social life, although vastly improved in the last few years, are still not quite normal.

Last year a bill was introduced into the legislature providing that Florida State College for Women be made into a co-education institution. The plan, although discarded as impractical, has its good points. Very few people realize, for instance, that the only law school which Florida supports is located in Gainesville 150 miles away from the Supreme court of Florida, which would make excellent case study for prospective lawyers and the supreme court library, the best in the state, both of which are located in our own town of Tallahassee.

In Gainesville the P. K. Yonge model demonstration school would offer excellent facilities for both men and women teachers with less expense involved to the state than the maintenance of two separte training schools and staffs. It has been suggested that other facilities of the two schools could be combined if both were made co-educational, thus saving the state considerable expense. Of course there would be technical difficulties involved. The shift from one system to another always involves such difficulties. But, however visionary the idea of co-education may seem, we would do well to include it in our ideas for the future.

American-Japanese Clash Threatens

Sparks flew in Japanese and German quarters after President Roosevelt indicted aggressor nations in his speech at Chicago and the state department followed his condemnation by an even stronger one aimed directly at Japan. The latter, accused of breaking the nine-power treaty and the Kellogg-Briand pact, retorted that unless the needs of the "have not" nations were allowed fulfillment "peace would be difficult to maintain." A member of the Japanese foreign office cited the over-population of the insular empire and quoted the Japanese exclusion law passed by the United States in 1924 to prove that other nations would allow no outlet for this overflow. A naval official concluded the complaints by stating bluffly that the Japanese were going to end the "abnormal situation" in China as soon as possible regardless of what biased world opinion might say.

The German government also pounced on the President and questioned his ability to enforce his fine speeches. It reminded him of President Wilson's downfall when he tried to make the world a bed of roses.

On the other side, the League of Nations and Great Britain welcomed the president's proclamation and, much encouraged by the moral support obtained, continued their efforts to bring peace. The League hastened to summon representatives to confer on the Nine-power pact in order to settle the Eastern situation. Great Britain joined with France in demanding Italy's withdrawal from Spain within twenty-four hours. From Italian sources came the report that Italy would probably accept the parley if "sufficient preliminary work" were done before the conference. Meanwhile the Chinese-Japanese fray took a fresh start with the launching of a new Chinese offensive and the Spanish fighting went on with the usual see-saw battles.

The pulse of American opinion speeded up a dozen beats when the newly appointed justice of the Supreme court admitted over the radio that he had once been a member of the Ku Klux Klan. Senators, newspapermen, and even friends of the former Senator, sniping at every exposed remark, riddled his so-called repentance. They denounced him for not openly repudiating the principles of the Klan, for accepting his position when his past actions made him morally unfit for it, and for trying to conceal his former allegiance to such a society.

In spite of the investives hurled at his head, Mr. Black took his seat on the bench Monday. He did not, however, as is the custom, take the public oath, possibly because he feared a challenge to his sincerity. Instead, he listened with an inscrutable countenance as the Chief Justice introduced him to his colleagues and as a Boston lawyer and a former assistant attorney-general protested his right to a seat. The petitions seeking to oust Mr. Black were

The Democratic League which was the brainchild of Bob Cahoe, now a promising attorney in Jacksonville, has swept a tidal wave of victorious candidates into office every year since Cahoe founded the political line-up in the spring of 1935.

This year the three campus-wide offices which are open are being filled by men who have no opposition and therefore are already elected to the posts they were seeking. Going into office are Jack Nelson as a member of the Honor Court; and Bill McGuire, editor, and George C. Byrnes, business manager of the Florida Review. The latter two men were in unique positions as there was not a man opposing them. In fact there was not a man on the campus qualified to throw his hat into the ring for nomination or election.

However, the political opposition is keen in the election of academic class officers for all classes including the Law College. And this was particularly true when they sought to nominate a man for the presidency of the senior class on the Democratic League ticket. It was a toss up before the final selection as to whether Pat Watson or Tom Fleming would win out. Now, however, that Fleming has the nomination he has a tough fight on his hands to win over Harry Bowers, candidate from the independent ranks. And the election came off on Thursday from 2 to 6 P. M.

It was a dreary Sunday afternoon as only an afternoon can be in Gainesville and especially back in 1931. The hot sun baked down on Red Bethea's eating emporium. Beneath a tree on a bench in front of the hash shack sat a group of political big-wigs just whiling away the time.

And coming up South Ninth street could be seen the daily bus from Tampa, fairly kicking up the dust from the highway. As it came to a screeching stop one lone traveler alighted with his hat in one hand and his grip in the other. Like a small wind-storm he rained greetings on the group of sages sitting on the bench and especially on Red Bethea, for he knew him best of all.

The boys could see from the start they had a freshman and judging from the greenbacks or "fins" bulging from his hip pocket he looked like a good lad to have in on the "take." So they gathered him within their fold of friendship and accompanied him to his room so as not to lose the possible "take." And he being a freshman could only understand one thing, that they were being nice to a boy away from home for the first time and very lonely. The morning after an all night political session over the cards he realized he was much wiser about politics but much shorter on funds. And that is the true story of how Manuel Garcia began his career on the University of Florida campus.

Collegiate Comeback

The bunch of what-have-you for the most amusing gal of the week goes to the blase creature who held an audience spell-bound in the smoking room the other night while she proclaimed in a voice that all might hear that college boys "boahed" her no end—so juvenile and awl thet—they don't impress her a little bit. The girls were so enthralled by such sophistication thet they didn't see the humor of the situation when she had to dash up and pack to go to G'ville. Such self-inflicted punishment touches us to the very depths of our soul.

Of all the noisy places in Tallahassee ona (1) off-campus house was reported for singing after light-flash on a week-end. Maybe the singing was that bad but we really think the soul who did the reporting was just one of these Kindly Lights who gets a smug satisfaction out of leading (or pushing) others along the path of righteousness. There's a place for people like that—and it's not Hollywood.

One of President Conradi's little jokes turned out to be a boomerang. He strolled into the P. O. one day and, pointing out Miss Tracy, asked one of our Little Srangers who happened to be near, if she was a freshman or sophomore. She replied kindly that she really couldn't say. After he left, chuckling, our L. S. turned to an upperclassman and asked, "Who IS he—a member of the faculty?"

I cannot reach the rainbows
That in the sky's depth hide:
Tho' you might be led to think so,
I couldn't—even if I tried.

Maybe it's just one of those idle rumors but we heard that when a certain student asked a certain other student to hold her galoshes for a minute she was informed that she was speaking to a G. C. A. girl. She considered for a few moments, then said sweetly, "That's O. K. I guess I can trust you."

• • • •

May we take this time to lodge a formal complaint against those lovely ladies (not all freshmen either) who, to hear them tell it, have swarms of men under their spell. Maybe it's 'cause we're poison in the stag line's soup thet it's especially annoying. On the other hand maybe all we ask is proof—and we haven't noticed one of our dear schoolmates being followed by long lines of men, pleading for a word of kindness from her fair lips.

The University of California co-eds can stay out until 2:30 p. m. when they have dates—except the night of the "big game" when they don't have to come home at all. That's nothing. We stay up until 11:30 on Fridays and Saturdays.

We don't like to appear flippant about the T. B. tests, but we can't help thinking that if anyone can go through three weeks of Tallahassee rain and still have two lungs left, she must have a constitution like Old Ironsides.

Roosevet: Democratic or Dictator By Stanley High

Stanley High, who aided President Ro in his 1936 campaign, points out in the O Harpers that while Roosevelt's philosop democratic, his tactics are dictatorial.

Although the President is wholehearted democrat in his personal relationships, h not the democratic temper, according to High. The importance of democracy, the thor seems to think, lies not so much in achievement of certain ends, but in the cess by which the achievement is sought the other hand, Mr. Roosevelt "appraises d cratic institutions almost exclusively in of the needful things that they are geting d not bothering too much about the methods

It is to this that Mr. High objects. He lieves that the President should have acc a compromise in the Supreme Court bi paid less attention to the labor groups' im tience. She says it was har get women, whether spinsters or matrons discuss men in an abstract, analytical way doesn't seem quite decent to them, even in modern times, to put a specimen of the op site sex on the dissecting table.

After talking to intellectual women, the thor reached these conclusions. Neither brill men nor brilliant women can be happily m ried to their inferiors, and they can't be happ married to equals unless both husband and recognize and respect equality of opportu and status. A man can not love an ideal he can lova a flesh-and-blood woman wh faults and virtues he knows. The intelle woman who does not share her achievem with a man who loves her and whom she is perhaps the loneliest creature on earth. Ousting Judge Lynch By Ben Cothran

Lynching is the South's peculiar institu grown up to replace that of slavery existing ante-bellum days, according to Ben Cothran student of the South, in an article in the O tober Forum. Just as the war between states enforced emancipation of Negroes a pushed them into economic slavery, so are m guided friends of the black man driving lyn ing from the gathering place of the mob the court room by trying to legalize it with anti-lynching bill.

Mr. Cothran further states that no law will work can be drawn up against lynch today, and in view of this fact it isn't of imm diate importance that one be passed merely a protest because a handful of negroes m death each year from an upboiling of ha that can never be cured by an ill-chosen p scription inscribed in a statute book. He s it is vastly more important to stop the hum decay that has cankered the South for a ce tury. Human beings must be enabled to a certain security in the necessities of life, gi a chance to live instead of being bred up social hookworms. He adds, do that and need for an anti-lynching law will cease exist. (B. S.)

not rejected or accepted by the court but were put aside for later consideration. The belief is that they will be denied and that the present matter will remain on the bench.

In the Middle West, Mr. Roosevelt continued his smooth campaigning for the support of the farmers and the labor groups a declaration of support for the act crop and wage and hour control. In order to cover up the unfortunate implications of an old Ku Klux Klan member to the Supreme court, the president told the Westerners that the court had ruled on a number of important labor matters and that the inequality of agricultural legislation and that consequently new necessitated a hasty changes in this attitude. The assumption is that the Supreme decision embodied this change.

Pennsylvania miners outdid the usual sit-down strikers when they sat down a fourth day after the search and refused to come up until they were granted an increase in wages. The strikers' demand was for replacement of the set daily salaries by a sliding scale of wages varying with the amount of rock and dirt removed. The company gave no statement in regard to the strike except to permit friends of the miners to bring food to the self-interred strikers.

Fire-Walkers Just Possess Tougher Feet

English Psychology Prof Experimenting With Asceticism

There is no mystery about the Indian ascetics who walk through fire; they simply have tough feet.

So said Prof. J. C. Flugel, of the University of London, in regard to experiments recently conducted by that institution's Council for Psychologic Investigation.

Glowing coals were thrown into into a trench 28 feet long and 3 feet wide. The temperature of the smoking lava was about seven hundred degrees F. or 371 degrees C. ing water, or 760 degrees Centigrade.

Even Ahmed Hussain, a 23-year-old Moslem fire-walker suffered burned feet. Those fakirs who walked through the ashes were burned by the coals.

"I didn't feel much heat," said R. Adcock, the son of an asbestos manufacturer. "My father is an asbestos manufacturer. Perhaps asbestos runs in our blood."

Swing Music Is New York College Work

By Mel Adams and Fred Wittner

(A. C. P. Correspondents)

Swing has been a campus institution for some two odd years, but this fall it will invade an eastern lecture hall for the first time, clocked in the scholarly robes of university curriculum. New York university has added to its faculty Vincent Lopez, popular baton-slinger who takes his brand of debauchery, "sophisticated swing." Professor Lopes begins his lectures on popular music next month, and his band will lay it in the groove at the university hapel in November.

In a similar vein the CBS Saturday Night Swing club will go educational. In addition to the regular jam-sessions, vocalists, instrumentalists et al, heard previously, the Paul Douglas show will include lectures by arrangers and well known classical soloists and conductors. Yascha Heifetz and Leopold Stokowsky are said to be slated for early appearances.

The Lighter Side

The American Legion took over Broadway last week with a spirit of "rah, rah" that has never been equalled, even in the hush twenties when room coals, wide trouser bottoms and striped blazers typified the collegian . . . motorcycle and horseback rides around hotel lobbies, prospering "water-bars" out of windows, and an unusual assortment of decorated "flivvers" and trailers were only some of the items that revived that old "sophomore" feeling . . . the most popular rag pulled was presented by two Florida Legionnaires who placed a live alligator in an immense roll and mystified onlookers apparently consumed the live animal.

Despite the Legion's monopoly of the White Light sector, two stars opened, neither of which might be considered in the hit class. "How Ye Winds," with Henry Fonda, the contractor, and Dora Dalton, is as one critic so ably put it, "a love story sadly in need of passion". . . "George and Margaret," an English drawing-room comedy produced jointly by John Chapman Wilson, Noel Coward, the Lunts (Alfred and Lynn Fontanne), and Messrs. Warner, provoke a varied assortment of titter, belly-laughs, giggles and guffaws in a story of a upper-tuppy family . . . the Hermits-on-Broadway. Fifth Floor Gilchrister Finds That Elevator Service Discontinued During Fire Drill Rush

"Going down?" A new twist given to fire drills? You've guessed it—elevator service! At any rate, therein lies this tale.

An upperclassman, a new resident of the top floor of one of the dorms, anxiously inquired of some little jokester about fire drills; namely, if the residents of the upper floors were expected to trek down all those stairs for fire drill. Whereupon little friend jokester informed said new resident that according to folkways, mores, or what you will, it was a custom for upper floor residents to embark on yr freshn elevator for first floor and strict elevator back to fourth floor for remainder of carpe. Relief shown on face of new resident! Came fire drill! Did new resident ride elevator? We leave it up to you . . .

Miss Clara M. Guerry Will Give Piano And Music Recital Here

Miss Clara M. Guerry, instructor in piano and voice at Florida State college for the past two years, will give a piano and voice recital at 7:45 o'clock Thursday night, October 14, in the college auditorium. This is Miss Guerry's first appearance in a recital in Tallahassee. She gave a similar recital only last month at the Montezuma, Ga., Music club.

The music instructor, a graduate of Oberlin Conservatory of Music, Oberlin, Ohio, also had had two summers of piano study at Juilliard school in New York city under Cascha N. Gorodzitski.

The program in which Miss Guerry will appear, accompanied at the piano by Miss Mary Winslow, also of the music faculty, is as follows: Sonata, Op. 53, Allegro con brio, Alasio molto, Allegretto moderato Beethoven; Aria—Je dis que rien (Carmen)—Bizet; this month's "Advertising Agency," the new luxurious babe of the industry which sets the pace for all of us, he says. "The hour has come for words which smell, for words which set fire to men and things, for words which loosen avalanche, back in the mountains The pal pabrae !!"- pollie patter and the unctuous arguments will never save America. Heaven send us a Rabble Rouser of the Right!!

Church Groups Participating In Activities

Conferences and Retreats To Head This Week's Religious Plans

Conventions, conferences, and retreats fill the calendar for the interests and energies of the various church groups during the past week. Thirty members of the Presbyterian student organization in Gainesville will arrive in Tallahassee this afternoon for the annual joint retreat. The meeting will open with a supper at the church annex Friday, followed by a social hour with the closing devotional led by the Rev. U. S. Gordon, of Gainesville.

The program will continue Saturday when the group will go to Orchard Pond, the Boy Scout camp. In the morning a discussion of problems relating to the campuses will take place, and in the afternoon the committee of work and recreation will make a report. At the Vesper service, following supper, Dr. Richard Gillespie of Thomasville, Ga., will make an address. They will leave for return to Tallahassee that night.

At the Sunday morning worship service, which will be led by Carter Rammage, Dr. Ralph Eyman will speak on "The Importance of Religious Education in a College Education." After the regular worship service the boys will have dinner in the college dining room. Mary Alice Lester will open the Fellowship hour at 5:30 o'clock with a worship service, and an address will be made by Rev. John McKinnon on "The Privilege of Full Time Christian Service." The retreat will close with a church service by the Gainesville students, which will be broadcast over short-wave by WTAL.

Girls who will participate in the retreat will be members of the executive council, Lillie McGuire, Bert Bassett, Adele Barzard, Louise Brown, Sarah Nance, Merrilee Rosser, and Beth Ranson will make talks during the meetings. Mary Ensign and, Martha Moore are in charge of the entertainment for Friday night.

Miss Frances Baker, Methodist student secretary, returned yesterday from the Executive board meeting of the Florida Conference held in Orlando. The regular activities of the group will take place this week.

At the meeting of the student auxiliary last Sunday night a discussion of the Episcopal General Convention in Cincinnati was held.

Miss Julia Gehan and Mrs. T. M. Dozier entertained the Episcopal members of the college staff and faculty at an "at home" last Tuesday. Esther Opp and Anita Peek will be hostesses at the after dinner coffee Friday at 7:30 o'clock.

Confirmation classes will begin Tuesday, October 12, at 6 o'clock.

Dining Room Girl Dances for Dinner

How to trip the light fantastic while doing your work! That was being displayed by one waiting dining room girl to her colleagues at dinner Saturday night. With a proud, but serious expression on her face, and a trayful of food in her hands, this girl went through the steps of her unusual dance to the amusement of the other girls around her.

Muttering to herself, oblivious of her surroundings, the tall girl counted out loud, "one, two, it was "right foot forward, left foot forward." This was followed by a squat resemblina that employed by the Flora-Dora chorus girls. This routine continued down the aisle of the dining room, without apparent embarrassment to the dancer, until she came to a standstill a few feet from the entrance to the kitchen. Then, resuming her natural walk and assuming an innocent expression, she disappeared behind the doors.

Doyle Reports On Statistics Of Enrollment

Arts and Sciences Lead Other Divisions In Figures

Enrollment figures now total 1,772, S. R. Doyle, registrar, announced yesterday in a summary of the number of students enrolled in various divisions of the college.

In presenting his statistical report to the faculty senate, Mr. Doyle announced that the College of Arts and Sciences led other branches of the college with a total of 840 students. The School of Education follows with 602 students registered and the School of Home Economics comes next with 282 students. In the School of Music there are 52, and the graduate division has an enrollment of 17.

In the College of Arts and Sciences, the freshman class leads with a total of 315 students. The sophomore class has 196 registered; the senior class 173; the junior class 146 and the special students number 16 in this division.

The freshman class also leads in the School of Education with 288 students. There are 156 sophomores, 81 juniors, 72 seniors, and eight special students.

Three hundred twenty-two freshmen, 63 sophomores, 40 juniors, 35 seniors and two special students have registered in the School of Home Economics.

The sophomore class reverses the usual condition and leads in the School of Music with 18 students. Thirteen freshmen, ten juniors, eight special students, and five seniors complete the enrollment.

Three students of those in the graduate division have been granted tentative admission until their undergraduate transcripts are received.

The complete enrollment by classes is: 735 freshmen, 431 sophomores, 280 juniors, 275 seniors, 34 special students, and 17 special students.

Six Graduates Continue Work

Personnel Office Gives Reports on Last Year's Alumnae

That four years at a Florida State college did not satisfy the scholastic ambitions of all of last year's graduates is apparent from a report given by the personnel office on what some of the 1937 class are doing.

Among those who are continuing their studies is Jo Bunion, remembered for her dancing and her student government work. Jo is going to Columbia where she is taking more courses in personnel administration.

Martha Mckenzie, former chairman of the judiciary, plans to retail work and, for this purpose, is studying in the New York School of Retailing. Miriam Harrold is attending the Yale Divinity school in order to further her religious education.

Listed with those who went directly into positions without further training is Janice Borton who is acting as house mother at the Florida School for Deaf and Blind in St. Augustine. This summer, Janice held a position as teacher in a North Carolina camp. Peggy McMichael Beth Deane are both teaching. Peggy teaching the fourth grade in the Mitchell school in Tampa and Beth serving as physical director in Orlando.

Playnights Will Undergo a Change

Playnights are coming into their own this year and living up to their name, due to the addition of several new attractions. For the active students there will be fencing, dancing, and swimming. Card tables along with ping-pong tables will be set up for anyone desiring to participate in a less strenuous form of relaxation.

Under the new program the playnight committee will arrange a special playnight once a month, which will bear a definite theme in celebration of some event. The Halloween playnight is planned for October 29 will be the first of these parties.

"Record Room" Affords Large Music Selection

Records covering music of early Greeks and up to the modern period may be played in Florida State College students' the "Record Room," under the stage, in 133 Westcott building. The collection of records in the Capehart reproducing instrument is the gift of the Carnegie foundation. There are records of instrumental solos, trios, quartets and sextets, chorus and choralses, symphonies and orchestral works and operatic selections.

The room is open to the public Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings from 7:30 to 8:30 p. m. The program consists entirely of requests by members, and there is a complete catalogue of all records.

Vespers Feature Poetry

Y.W.C.A. vespers will be held Sunday at 7:15 in the college auditorium. Marjorie Jones will read poetry, and there will be special music.

Organizations Honor Twelve For Services

Sophomore Council Group Holds First Tapping In Dining Room

ODD HONORARY PLEDGES FIVE

Dorman Speaks to New Members at After Dinner Coffee

An even dozen under-classmen were honored this week by the active service organizations on campus when Sophomore Council and Spinsters, Odd honorary society, tapped in the dining room.

Spinsters followed its custom by gaining by having its new sign perfected with bronze and all stitches' hats in the dining room during their banquet hour. Hats who had crowns on high are Nell Colvin, Dorothy Barr, Jamie Lowry, Elaine Fleming and Janet Lockwood. Odd members and their odd goals, who Winnie used the ceremony were Winifred Kvart, Betty Hatch, Kathrine Autrey, Margaret Williams, Lyzie, Lutrelle Patterson, Jacky Addison, Frances Douglas, and Mary Emily Parker.

Tap at Lunch

Sophomore Council for the first time since its formation in the fall of 1936, tapped its new members in the dining room. As an impressive string of girls marched down the tables, members were tapped. These girls who will comprise the membership of the council for the year are Marjorie Jones, Joan Miller, Connie Ash, Katherine Stevens, Edna Warren, Betty Barthoof, and Clifford Van Brink.

The girls were bonne guests at an after-dinner coffee in the hall. Dean Olivia N. Dorman was on other duties as members of sophomore council and attended the sims of the organization. The ceremonies in all, guests at a banquet in the dining hall tonight. The scheme of the decorations will be the school colors, garnet and gold, and the new "taps" will be given sophomore members.

The girls will attend their first business meeting next week when they will assume their regular duties.

Members of Sophomore council act as a cooperating body between the college administration, of which they are the lowest branch, and the student body as a whole. They assist with the checking of convocation and the orientation of freshmen, and many minor duties of which the majority of the school is unaware.

Sponsors Honore Chose Odds' Now staffing to lead to extra-curricular and scholastic activities is outstanding.

History Group Initiates Two

Service Held Last Night Followed by Dinner In College Hall

The initiation of the two Misses Esther Goodwin and Ruth Prather, by the Phi Alpha Theta, national history honorary, was held last night at the home of Dr. Annie Pepper.

The ceremony was followed by dinner in the college dining room. The place cards bore the insignia of the organization and a serpent twined around an Egyptian star. Red roses, the fraternity's flower, formed the centerpiece of the table.

Programs for the coming year will be more modern than they have been in the past years and they will be based on phases of dictatorships in Europe. The association will send a delegate to the national convention which will be held every two years at Christmas. It will convene in Philadelphia at the same time and place as the American Historical society convention.

Those present at the banquet were Dr. Annie Pepper, Dr. Kathryn Abbey, Dr. Venila L. Sherrer, Dr. Robert Cotterill, Miss Florence Tryon of the history department, Mary Enslen, Mary Emily Parker, Daisy Parker, Frances Parks, Ruth Prather, and Esther Goodwin.

The next meeting of Phi Alpha Theta will be held at Dixie Parlors home on November 2.

Upperclassmen Are Asked to Pay Bill

Each upperclassman living in the dormitories is asked to pay her dollar for the light bill to Miss Florence Hall in the business office before November 1. The fee of one dollar added will pay the light bill for both semesters, and if it is not possible for any student to get the required amount by the above date, she should see Betty Catlund in 439 Gilchrist.

Members Told Plans Of Year At YW Meet

Student Delegates Will Go to YWCA, YMCA State Retreat

At the YWCA meeting Thursday afternoon the new and old members were introduced to the officers and the plans for the coming year were announced, and the various committees presented to the student. The student finance drive is to be from November 1-8. YWCA's national meeting was explained, and the personnel of the delegates to the meeting known.

The members were also told about the State Retreat which is a camp where for the last two weeks of June each year the associations of YWCA and YMCA from all the southern states meet to hear such speakers as Mordecai Poteat, W. A. Smart, Curby Paige, Howard Kester, and Joseph Sapiro. The meetings are student controlled, and at them some of the leading student thought is presented and discussed.

The state retreat of YWCA and YMCA, it was announced, will be held September 23-26. Thirty student delegates will attend, including the members of the cabinet. Those who are unwilling to pay may be able to do so by seeing Betty Hatch.

Martha attended the YWCA convention in Atlanta last fall. The meetings were held at YWCA headquarters from Saturday morning until Sunday afternoon. Plans for the national student assembly to be held at Christmas at Oxford, Ohio, and the national bi-annual convention at Columbus, Ohio, were made. Social problems of the southern region were discussed, and delegates from each state met and made plans for the coming winter. One delegate and the YWCA secretary from each state attended the convention.

Honor Society Sponsors Two Speakers on Peace

"Advocating Peace Through Kappa Delta Pi" will be the subject of the talks of Dr. R. L. Duncan, head of the School of Education, and Colin English, state superintendent of public instruction, who will speak at the meeting of the Florida Beta Chapter, honor society in education, Tuesday evening at 7:45 o'clock in the lobby of the demonstration school.

All members of the organization are invited to attend whether they have been formally initiated by the local chapter.

Religious Week To Be Observed For Sixth Year

Rev. Wedel to Be Speaker During Religious Emphasis Week

TOWN'S CHURCHES WILL COOPERATE

October 30 to November 3 Selected for Dates Of the Program

The Rev. Theodore Otto Wedel, Ph.D., secretary for college work in the National Council of the Episcopal church, will be guest speaker at the sixth annual observance of Religious Emphasis Week at Florida State college October 30 to November 3. This week which serves as a special time for students to seek spiritual advice and guidance will feature a series of conferences, forums and discussions as well as personal conferences which will be stressed particularly this year. Faculty members and visitors are invited to some of the programs also.

Churches Take Part

Sponsoring Religious Emphasis Week is the Inter-Denominational Religious Workers' council made up of the four church secretaries on the campus, six ministers, and several faculty members. Counselor president is Dr. Julian Gholston, Episcopal student secretary.

The Rev. Wedel, a native of Hartford, Conn., is graduate of Yale, Yale Divinity, Harvard, and Yale university. He served in the coast artillery, U. S. A., in 1918-19 and was ordained to the ministry in 1920. He is a member of the Modern Language Association of America and of Delta Sigma Rho and Phi Beta Kappa. He is widely acquainted with student work and is an interesting writer.

Richardson Questioned By Interested Parents After Concord Address

When Miss Louise Richardson, librarian and professor of library science, addressed the semi-annual meeting of the Concord county Federation of Women's Clubs in Concord, Florida, last Friday, she was overwhelmed by the questions of mothers whose daughters were either attending Florida State or were planning to attend.

The parents wanted to know about every phase of college work and life; they asked about the equipment, the buildings, the faculty, and the social activities. They were eager to hear about the summer school and the work then they did. Many were interested in the next alumnae college which the women's institute to be held next June.

Four Delegates to Collegiate Press Meet Given Royal Send-off by Practical Jokesters Tuesday

Wedding bells pealed out Tuesday afternoon at the double wedding ceremony which united the first families of the Flambeau and the Alligator.

Evelyn Fisher and Pearle Sheppard, Flambeau co-editors, and Tom Leonard and Edmund Kennedy, editor-in-chief and managing editor of the Alligator, had a little difficulty in getting started on their trip to Chicago to attend the great convention of the Associated Collegiate Press. Clever little collegiate bridesmaids tied tin cans and old shoes onto the bumper of the car, and the traditional "just married" sign streamed across the back. The newlyweds, sensing that something was afoot, sped away in a shower of rice that will last them to Chicago and back.

It is hoped that the cricket found in the car belonging to the married managing editor will bring all the luck that is needed, to this week's paper. The staff and reporters, minus the caboose left behind by "Pearl," have been doing the proverbial back-flips in an attempt to make this lack unnoticed in the finished back and white.

Other Florida State college students attending the convention are: Jane Quinn, business manager of the Flambeau; Sarah Sealey, editor of the Distaff; and Rose Robinson and Sallie Burt Numun, editor and business manager of the Flastacowo.

The Florida State delegates will be among over 300 students from all over the country. Best known of the speakers at the three-day session will be Henry Goddard Leach, editor of the Forum magazine, and Howard Vincent O'Brien, editorial columnist of the Chicago Daily News.

The convention offers more than lectures, forums, and round

Club Observe Stars During Meeting

Talk on Moon Feature Of Astronomy Group's Weekly Meeting

Astronomy club members observed the moon Tuesday night to take note of its features.

Jane Floyd, acting as official spieler, called the moon "our nearest neighbor," explaining that it is 240 times nearer earth than the sun. The diameter of the moon is only one-fortieth that of the earth, and one-fourth the diameter of the earth.

Discussing the topography of the moon, members noted that its rugged mountain ranges, lofty peaks, high plateaus, broad plains, and deep valleys are "magnificently enough," she added. Its surface has been mapped more thoroughly than certain parts of our own world."

Observations made on the moon are far different from those on earth. There is no water, no atmosphere, and because of this, no life can exist there. Neither is there any sound, wind, water or rain. The only evidence of what could be classed as weather to water is the ice which is found in the deep craters and the valleys, and which will never melt due to the fact that heat radiates from the moon at night.

Jane next discussed the phases of the moon, explaining that the same side of the moon is always seen from the earth. This is due to the fact that it rotates once on its axis while revolving around the earth. In the same age, the moon rises an hour later every night. A hypothetical observer standing on the moon would see "full earth" when we see "new moon," and vice versa when we see full moon.

Following the observation and discussion, members examined a star of the first magnitude, distinguishing it from the other planets by observing that stars twinkle while the planets through high magnification they appear to be of a disk, and that the form of a planet can readily be seen.

Assisting in the observational work were members of the telescope team, with Marie Betty Russells in charge of adjusting the large instrument. Mary Lou O'Haver, the small telescope, Frances Parks, the finder. Identification eye-pieces were used during the observation, and from the eye work was done, due to cloudiness.

The next meeting of the Astronomy club will be held Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in the science lecture room in the Science building. There will be further discussion of the moon, and Louise Thrasher will speak on legends, myths, and poetry connected with the orb. Other speakers will be Mary Lou Newton, technical aspects of the subject.

Registrar Doyle Speaks At Kiwanis Convention

At the Kiwanis district convention in St. Augustine this past week, Registrar S. R. Doyle, as lieutenant governor of the western division, spoke to the conventionities in the session held Tuesday morning.

Mr. Doyle has achieved distinction in the western division of the Florida District Kiwanis by having the most perfect attendance throughout his eleven years as a member of the Kiwanis club,

Parents' Day Plans Are Made For Festivities

Thanksgiving Program Committee is Headed By Miss Warren

Parents of students at Florida State college for women will visit this Thanksgiving to attend the "Parents' Day" program which was inaugurated last year, authentic tilts, a swimming demonstration by Ann Williams, and functions are a part of the special entertainment that is planned for the occasion.

President Conrad announced the appointment of members of faculty and staff who will plan the official program. The committee includes Miss Ruth Warren, chairman, Miss Florence Tryon, Dr. R. L. Duncan, Miss Louise Richardson, Miss Ruth Kelly, Miss Ruth Cromartie and Miss Rachel Pickford.

Until last year, the Thanksgiving holiday was known as homecoming for alumnae and former students. However, since last year, homecoming is held in the spring in honor of the alumnae. Dr. R. L. Duncan was made partly because many alumnae found it inconvenient to attend a meeting at that season. The Thanksgiving holiday visions for entertaining the parents and alumnae could be made if each came at different time.

Young To Fill IRC Vacancy

Members of Club Will Be Gainesville Guests On Nov. 13 Weekend

At a business meeting of the International Relations club held Wednesday afternoon, Betty Young was appointed to the vacant secretary-treasurer to fill the vacancy left by Mary Lou Newton.

The members plan to go to Gainesville for the guests of the University of Florida's international Relations club on November 13.

At the meeting to be held next week, members will discuss the Japanese-Chinese conflict. Speakers will be Betty Young, who will tell of the situation from the side of England; Rosemary Jones, Japan's side of the situation; Nell Colvin will give Germany's viewpoint; Virginia Allen will give China's viewpoint; Audrey Cooper will discuss Russia's attitude; Al-derman will speak on Italy's behalf. Dr. Venila L. Sherrer will examine the United States viewpoint.

Business Manager Gives Statement Corrections

Mr. John G. Kellum, business manager, has clarify several statements recently made over the radio, in the Flambeau, and in assembly. Mr. Kellum did not attend the New York Herald Tribune Forum as has been said by representative of this college. This meeting, he explained, is sponsored annually by the Herald Tribune for delegates of various women's organizations. As a representative of a women's club Mrs. J. G. Kellum was among those invited to attend the forum. The business manager went in his capacity of an observer. The meetings were held in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel on October 3 and 4.

F.S.C.W. Girls Selected For "Who's Who"

Book is Compilation Of Prominent Students In America

PUBLISHED BY U. OF ALABAMA

FSC Candidates Chosen By Vote of Campus Organizations

Nineteen girls from this campus are listed in the year's edition of "Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities," a compilation of outstanding students published by the University of Alabama.

Girls Named

The girls selected are: Phil Asher, chairman of the social committee; Betty Ashton, student representative to Judiciary; Katherine Autrey, Y cabinet representative to Judiciary; Viola Brooks, president of the athletic association; Mickey Conn, senior representative to Judiciary; Winifred Kvarta, Y cabinet president of COA.; Evelyn Fisher, editor of the Flambeau; Louise Gehan, chairman of Judiciary; Betty Hatch, Y cabinet vice-president of COA.; Martha Lester, president of Y.W.C.A.; Frances Lindsey, president of A.A.; Louise Lingo, chairman of residence hall committee; Betty Outland, president of C.G.A.; Kathryn Pratt, president of senior class; Marjorie Rauhauser, freshman advisor; Eileen Robinson, editor of Flastacowo; Sarah Sealey, editor of Distaff; Pearl Sheperd, editor of the Flambeau; and Virginia Spradlin, senior representative to Judiciary.

Choices Made

The lists sent in from this campus are chosen by the vote of the student body. Miss Tracy is chairman of the committee and editor of the American Dietetic association.

Florida products will be a prominent feature at the meeting. A Florida luncheon, where the sunshine state will share honors with Tennessee, is one of the main events planned. At that time, native fruits and vegetables of Florida will be served, and the decorations used will be suggestive of the two states. The Florida State Dietetic association, of which Dr. Jennie Till is president, will act as hostess to the entire body, including commercial and technical exhibitors, will also attend.

Another special function of the assembly will be a Florida State college reunion dinner at which at least 50 graduates and now dietitians in various parts of the country will attend. Jane Sellers will extend greetings, and each person will tell of the work that she is doing. In charge of the dinner, believed to be the first reunion dinner Florida State graduates have ever staged as a national convention, is Margaret McDonald, now dietitian at St. Luke's hospital, Richmond, Va.

College Girls Have Definite Ideas About Husbands-to-be

Freshman Home Economics Students Discover That Ideal Men Must "Smoke Pipe," "Be Fun Forward," or Even "Be Pure"

Why does the older generation shake its head incredulously and sadly bemoan the fact that it sees no way out for the young people of today who have never given a thought to the future? There is no reason for their dismay.

Any thorough investigation will show that the younger generation has not only given a thought to the future but has made some definite plans for it. Most of the answers that the freshman home economics students received to the question "What qualities do you expect in a husband?" were filled with enough sincerity and decisiveness to show this. They gave evidence of the fact that students have not been idling away the years but have been forming very definite ideas on the subject and are now quit ready to battle for their man—provided that he is the right man.

The right man—here is the spot where a difference of opinion is apt to cause a vague ripple that ends in an uproar, which after all is not such a bad thing. Variety is the spice of life, and life would become a dreary affair if social affair should all the fair maidens go after one man. There is no danger of such an occurrence, however, for the answers were as varied as the girls themselves.

All I ask for is a Harvard man," said one young thing with shining eyes and a longing sigh. "Dark, handsome and debonair, he will must have hair on his chest!"

Others prefer the heel-clicking type of the German variety. They have polished manners, sophistication and be a good dancer, and a good mixer.

One girl is looking out for a husband who will be ten years older than she is "so that he may have as much sense as I have."

Another girl wants to find an

Seventeen Take Graduate Work

Home Ec and Education Head Choice Courses Of Graduates

Home economics and education are the favorite studies for the seventeen graduate students enrolled at Florida State college. Other subjects in which graduate students are pursuing work are psychology, philosophy and religion, English, classics, chemistry, and history.

Florida State college, which has offered graduate work since 1911, confers the degrees of master of arts and master of science in both the College of Arts and Sciences and the School of Education, and that of master of science in the School of Home Economics. Graduate instruction is also offered in the School of Music. Graduates of this college may pursue additional work in any department.

'37 Flastacowo Awarded First Class Rating By National Association

According to word received from the national Scholastic Press Association, last year's Flastacowo has been awarded "excellent" or first class honor rating by that organization.

Frances Porth, who graduated in May, was editor of last spring's annual. Members of staff members who served on the 1937 year book include, Eileen Robinson and Sallie Burt Numun, co-editors, and Julia Vanderipe, business manager. Mary Betty Russell, Betty Wynn, Elizabeth Turney, Mary Whitaker, Margaret Prefer, Mary Ellen Tiller, Helen Brown, Sally Bet Nurum, Marjorie Horton, Nellie Babbit, Sara Nance, and Margaret Stout.

Last year's annual centers upon the theme of the three torches. The book is divided into three separate parts representing Vires, Mores, and Artes in life on the campus.

Catholic Club Initiates 32 Last Saturday

Tonight New Members To Be Given Party At Parish Rectory

The meeting of the Newman club, which was scheduled for Tuesday afternoon, has been postponed, and will be held instead on Thursday, October 21, at 7:30 o'clock in the Westcott building. Marie Jaffre, president, announced that according to present plans regular meetings would be held on the second Thursday of every month.

At the next meeting plans will be made for the convention which is to meet soon at the University of Georgia. Two delegates will be elected, one from the senior class and one from the junior class.

Formal initiation was held Saturday morning, after which the Initiates attended mass and communion, and went to a breakfast at the rectory. Thirty-two new girls were initiated, approximately doubling last year's membership and exceeding all previous records of attendance. Accompanying this increase in number is a great increase in the percentage of activities this year.

A parish party is to be given for the new members at the Rectory on Friday night of this week.

On Saturday, October 30 the entire club is going to Camp Flastacowo to spend the week-end. It will be the first time since the advent of Saturday classes that the club has been out to camp, and a fine week is promised, with both members and guests attending.

Home Ec Club Gives Program

Plans for Year Include Camping, Steak Fry, Annual Banquet

At the first meeting of the Home Economics club, which was held Wednesday, an interesting program of the program for the coming year was announced. The program includes plans for a trip to camp in the early fall, a Christmas party, a steak fry, and the annual banquet which marks the close of the year.

The keynote of the program which was presented after the business session was an informal "radio broadcast." Those who were on the air were Elise Bellamy, Margaret Stout, and Mary Kay Scott. Topics discussed on the program ranged from intrigue to the wise to food forecasts for the coming year.

Officers of the club for the new year who were presented Wednesday night were: Sara Nance, president; Irene Day, vice-president; Josephine Allen, secretary; Louise Wheeler, treasurer, Betsy Harrison, social chairman; and Ruth Brownell, publicity chairman; Eleanor Kemp, Y.W.C.A. representative; Bershe Owen, junior representative; and Leslie Walrous, sophomore representative.

In the future the club will hold meetings on the first Wednesday of every month at 7:45 o'clock in the home economics room. All students who are taking a course in home economics are eligible for membership and are invited to attend the meetings.

Transfer Sees Milder Rules In Force Here

Severe Rules Are Offset By Varied Interests At Georgetown

"Girls at the Georgetown Visitation Junior college may have dates with the men at Georgetown university, but they must be in the dormitory at 6 o'clock in the evening. On weekends they may be out dancing and stay at the hotels, but they must have a chaperon." So said Josephine James, sophomore transfer student.

The liberties granted the girls at Florida State college are a new experience for her. At Georgetown, perhaps, the fact that one had to come to every meal whether she felt like eating or not was a little less heavy when she realized that there was to be a big dance on Friday afternoon—every Friday afternoon. Compulsory attendance at artist series was little lightened by the appearance of white tie and tails.

Certainly it was not hard for freshmen to turn their lights out at 8:30 each night, and for upperclassmen to follow at 10:30 o'clock when they were "off" for the week from Georgetown university would serenade them. A little later.

It must be hard to attend every single class, for there not a single cut is allowed. Chapel twice a week and is compulsory, however, it is fun to serve mass for the priest, and to appear in the great houses in Washington, Georgetown, and the fraternity boarding school in America, and it keeps up its traditions. Every Wednesday night, there are charity bazaars, picnics, sleighrides, etc. Saturday is the social low roasts for the members of the athletic teams.

The 300 students of the junior college sometimes work from 9 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock in the afternoon. When they do not have afternoon classes, they may leave the campus, but they must sign on, cards, and must return before must be sure to check in. They may not go out.

When the girls go to their rooms at 6 o'clock in the evening, they have to study for two hours, and then they must go to bed.

College Girls Have Idea About Husbands

with a 'Yes' man" she declared emphatically.

Those who vote only on small preferences and hopes, such as "that he will be a good sport," "that he will not lose his temper when I leave the tooth paste tube uncapped," and "that he will help mop," Some consider the remembrance of birthdays and anniversaries by no means unimportant, but require flowers as contributing to marital happiness. They are keeping this in mind and will "dial for flowers" before they marry "the will be the kind that brings flowers and candies after we're married."

One prominent freshman meekly hoped that he would be "pure," but was immediately "squelched" by the girls. Another group, students with cries of "impossible, he never would pay him first!"

Then there's the girl who wants him "rich, with one foot in the grave and the other on a banana peel!" However these are exceptions. The majority of the girls that the main requirements for a husband are "love and a job," and the least satisfactory got hold of enough G-men to give us a pretty general idea of what the boys are looking for. Put on the spot, one of the girls confessed, "I want her to be beautiful so that I can love her, and dumb so that she will love me." Not all of them agree with this, however, saying that they don't want her too beautiful for fear they'll have to do too much primping and hard work to keep her out of trouble.

The majority seemed to want her "true blue," and honest. They want to be men who support them, wives while the girls stay home tending to her house-wifely duties. We prefer to stay home. The home, and not too much "reading around in books other" was their most important taboo. In other words, a real homely creature, who will cheerfully and lovingly welcome home her tired husband, is the G-man's ideal.

Is Everybody Happy?

Student Blames Parents and Education for The Large Amount of Unhappiness Existing In the World Today

Happiness is the ultimate aim of all society. We are those people who compose our society actually happy?

There are living in an age that has progressed rapidly in the last half century. Times have changed since the days of the horse-and-buggy-drive. We now have automobiles, trains, airplanes —everything that composes a fast moving world. As for education in which everyone has an opportunity to learn all he needs to know, the United States liked has more colleges and universities than any country. Times have changed since the days when our children were not supposed to be heard, but to be seen.

If such a thing were not true, we would have our factory workers going on strikes demanding higher wages, shorter hours, and more steady positions. We wouldn't have to pick up a daily paper and read about the many articles concerning a kidnapping case. We wouldn't have to hear about murders, suicides, and many other distasteful subjects that add to the unhappiness of the people of today.

Most of us will admit that three-fourths of the front pages of an average daily paper is composed of articles dealing with some distasteful subjects. Of course, if such affairs were not reported the country—and one could hardly think otherwise—we want to know what is going on in the world at this point. We don't want to be compelled to live in ignorance of them. We want to prevent such occurrences so we can enjoy our surroundings to the full.

We aren't exactly sure what causes these many reported and unhappiness; it must be a mixture of things. Lack of "the right to make believe" now and pretend we're trucking the life of one of our carefree ancestors who lived at the bottom of things.

Much of the trouble begins in his home. There he looks to his parents for companionship and companionship. Sometimes he is unable to find such things there; he must suppose that his parents seem to have much time to devote to her growing problems. They have no time or she may be very busy playing bridge, attending various clubs, or practicing the social welfare of her community. Professor Lee Emerson Nowitall discuss "How We Should Spend Our Leisure Time." And he must suppose that she is too hard working man. He has a job earning a rather small salary by which he must provide comfort for his wife supposedly know so much about everything is absurd!"

The child reaches the age when every boy and girl should attend high school. And this time, just imagine his astonish school. Also imagine his teacher has not had a great amount of education; as a matter of fact she did not attend college. She merely took an examination—which she changed to pass by some miracle—granting her a teacher's certificate. As a result, she knows nothing about child psychology and the way to handle children. She was taught the alphabet when she first entered school, and she sees no reason why she shouldn't teach her pupils the same method. That our child begins his education—that is, so we are fondly told.

At the ac- of thirteen he has managed to progress to junior high school. Here he's make a guess that he studies history, too, but he probably spends most of his battles—glorious battles in which men had guns and shot one another for no other apparent reason than to see who could kill the most people. Well, this junior high school could hardly do without— for surely we would have to punish him, especially since the psychology book that he is using the state chairmanship for the first time in seven years! Consequently, as our thoughts would have it, our boy marches on.

The time will be another look at our boy. Here we'll make believe we see him in college. Since the number of people who attend college, you know, even though they are the "shrill pick"—you know, that girl who ste just across from you and is the one who sat next to him at the table. Languidly she sips and nibbles at her salad. Her mother's old frat fidgets and wonders how it feels to be able to actually walk nine an eight-thirty.

And how about the dainty freshman who had swam and propriated the bread plate so that the nasty old Miss Jules wouldn't get into her chicken pilau? Another freshman crisscutter sleeps somewhere—her waitress for not washing the windows.

Complaining about the food, the girls eat salads and then sit using them, dropping your silver all over your feet and sending for the waitress. Such and less little things that can amount to a great deal of trouble. Incidentally, the girl who brought you those orgs this morning is really a nice person if you'll just take time to find it out, and if you're "silly neighbor" angle doesn't appeal to you then consider what it does to digestion.

Student Body Ears Burn As Girls Tell All

Dining Room Group Irked By Thoughtless And Rude Eaters

Last night at 7:36 the dining room girls talked, and the ears of the student body burned—that is, unless they are organically defective. It's not that they don't like the students or their jobs, but there are a few little habits that they wouldn't mind remedying. It's like habitual—the guilty one is wholly unaware that she is offending. But many's the time that some thoughtless little act has caused the waitress to become so sour that the milk curdles when she sits down at her table. For instance: A chair flung with joyous abandon out into the aisles will bring mutters of "I'll be back" on the ancient cry of "Cave, canem—nationalistic" down upon you every time. Again, the Cuzzerye type who dreams while the waitress calls a "cocoa count" is like a prize liver.

One dining hall girl suggested that the college should plant some roses along the main passageway in the dining hall to sorta beautify things since about half of the students don't seem to select them for their daily evening saunter. It's no fun to be balancing a heavily laden tray and have three or four girls, arms loaded, file sleepily along just in front of you and discuss Jade's perfect glorious weight.

It does take a certain amount of nerve to get along in the world and nobody wants to disillusion you; however the truth will out.

The time will be another installed in the dining room to hold your books, raincoat, gloves and what have you.

All of us have witnessed the "neckin'" and the "petted pick"—you know, that girl who ste just across from you and is the one who sat next to him at the table. Languidly she sips and nibbles at her salad. Her mother's old frat fidgets and wonders how it feels to be able to actually walk nine an eight-thirty.

NYA Program Outlined By A. Williams

States that NYA Budget Has Been Pared Down To $50,000,000

Aubrey Williams, executive director of the National Youth Administration, recently discussed before a joint meeting of college and university administrators and secondary school officials the program of the NYA for the coming winter.

The NYA was established in 1935 to equalize the opportunity for youth, realizing this purpose last year in giving direct aid to 850,000 boys and girls. But this year, due to the decrease in the total of money for NYA purposes, the budget has been cut approximately 50 per cent. The expenditure for the last fiscal year totaled approximately $68,000,000, and the sum agreed upon to operate all phases of the program for the year is $40,000,000. This will necessitate cuts in student aid wages, totaling approximately $12,000,000 the event the average monthly payments will be $15 to $20 per school students and $12 to $6 to college students.

Mr. Williams believes that the cut in the sum total of the NYA funds is due to the improved business activities and the fact that nine million people have gone back to work.

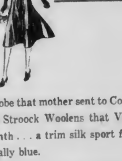
No Horseback To Be Offered, Kellum States

Difficulties Concerning Finances and Rules Preclude Course

No horseback riding facilities will be offered by Florida State College this year, according to an announcement made by Mr. J. O. Kellum, business manager.

For the last two and a half years the college had permitted A. M. Middlebrooks to use the school stables so that riding might be one of the recreational activities offered here. Horses were rented to the girls for 75 cents an hour, and lessons were given by Marie Taylor, student instructor in riding, at the rate of $5 for eight lessons. Students taking these instructions were allowed to ride additional hours at the reduced price of 65 cents an hour.



The reason for the sudden change from the plan, according to Mr. Kellum, lies in the fact that the stables and horses did not meet the standard set by the business office for the college property. The office stated that the buildings were not kept in proper condition and that the horses were not attended to regularly.

Mr. Kellum further stated that the students themselves abused their privilege by riding horses not listed for them. As the girls failed to observe the few restrictions placed on riding and in the management of the stables, was considered unsatisfactory, the college has withdrawn from any further responsibility in the matter.

In answer to requests from various sources to buy horses for the college stables, Mr. Kellum said that the college could not lend itself responsible for the additional expense of twelve horses. The price of the horses would amount to at least $1200, food would have to be bought, and students would have to be employed to care for the horses. With all this in mind, it is estimated that with 100 girls taking riding regularly, each one would have to pay $25 a year.

Furthermore Mr Kellum stated that, even if the school could get the money to back this plan, there is a greater need for investing it in educational projects. After all Mr. Kellum said "this school is primarily an educational institution, not a girls' finishing school."

As it is he pointed out, the college provides Camp Flastacroso for the use of the students. This is itself involves a cost of over $1,000 a year. Also the girls have available the tennis courts and the gymnasium with its swimming pool. If the college were to set up its own riding school, there would not be only the cost to consider but the difficulty of keeping town people from trying to use the college property. He also said that an example of this sort of thing is the trouble caused by town people breaking into the

F Goats Live Week of Embarrassing Humiliation In Preparation for Final Iniation Tomorrow

Those queer-looking, melancholy creatures you may have noticed stalking the campus and the dining hall in an attempt to add get-ups are harmless, be assured. In fact, they have reached a stage of humility so low that they dare not attempt even to speak to their betters, much less do them harm of any sort.

The F club goats have been taking it on the chin! All week they have suffered the usual humiliations of goating: shining shoes for the old members in public bowing and scraping on demand of the actives; counting the lengths of their foot-steps all the way to town; and enduring with fortitude the condescending attitude of the members of the Old Guard.

The final humiliation will come tomorrow, when the goats are to troop out to camp for a week-end initiation. But they are planning something new, original, and different according to the dictates of the old members. Yvonne Marchessou will own a "turnip on garden," and Ruth Agnes McClain as a "Fall Edition." Another goat will be a "dramatic episodes of a debate," and still another as a "movement down." The number of supplies each goat is to bring with her to camp required labor and feminine efforts on the part of the poor creatures to

New Skates Purchased For Use on Play Night

Fifteen new pairs of skates have been added to the equipment for play night and are available for those wishing to skate on Friday night. A place for skating is provided in front of the physical education building.

Any student wishing to use the skating rinks at night may get the key to turn on the lights from Miss Ball office. There are four courts that are equipped with lights for night playing.

...right boxes and using bte tennis court.

For these reasons Mr. Kellum thinks it s much wiser policy for the students to urge some riding stables to establish themselves in Tallehassee—off the campus. In this way all the annoyances would be eliminated and every advantage could be gained. In conclusion, Mr. Kellum stated that he would do everything in his power to help the students obtain such an available extra-curricular activity once again.

Already two plans have been suggested along this line. One of them comes from Mr. Middlebrooks who has said that if sufficient students will take riding he may be able to build some stables near the campus. He has announced that all those who are interested in riding call a meeting for the purpose of discussing the possibilities of his proposal.

The other plan presented by Audrey Cooper consists of interviewing Mr. Gilbert of the Academy of Dancing. He plans to speak to him next week-end at the Alabama-State game. Audrey says that if he can be persuaded to build stables here he will be a splendid opportunity for the girls for he has 40 trained horses. It is with Mr. Gilbert's help that Audrey hopes to persuade the Albany stables to build in Tallehassee. She further said that there is a growing interest in trained horses both in Tallehassee and in the surrounding country.

Faculty Will Join Students at Tennis

The goat list includes Miss Averill, the new physical education teacher; Yvonne Marchessou, Mary Clark, Yvonne Marchessou, Mercedes Rozier, Frances Waterhouse Margaret Wolcott, Betty White, Sarah Lyle, Ernestine Makemson, Ruth Agnes McClain, Mary Palmer, Helen Daniel and Nancy Williamson.

Athletic Indolence To Be Investigated

In an attempt to find out why active and social fail to take part in extra-curriculuc athletics as actively as they did when they were underclassmen, a committee headed by Marie Joffre was appointed at the Athletic Council meeting last night. The upperclassmen will be contacted through questionnaires.

Further plans were discussed for the skit which is to be presented at the freshmen organization party which will be given a week from tomorrow.

Members attending the meeting were Nancy Williamson, Pollela West, Ruth Wilson, Fay Corey, Valeric Hunt, Bunny Lacey, Mary Collins, Louise Whitting, Ruth Agnes McClain, Frances Thill, Marie Joffre, Hazel Adair and Dot Moinar.

Rev. Turner Will Speak At Vespers Sunday

The Rev. A. Fred Turner, pastor of the First Methodist church of Orlando, will be the first speaker of the YWCA series. He will speak Sunday night at Vespers in the Augusta Conradi Little Theatre on the subject "The Miracle of Every-day Life."

Rev Turner is a native Floridian, having lived in Crescent City, Jacksonville Tampa, and Orlando.

Play Night Crowd Is Greatest Ever

There was a record breaking crowd at the gym last Friday night. Almost 200 couples were dancing on the main floor to the music of the new radio-victrola. Members of the Tarpon club were swimming in the pool downstairs. Up above was a clattering of steel. Girls interested in fencing were getting some good pointers in swordcraft. Those who enjoyed quieter pastimes played bridge in the club room. Out on the street, specially roped off for the occasion, were disciples of Sonja Henie on roller skates.

Never in the history of Florida State College has such a large crowd attended Play night.

Brooks Announces Plans For Tennis Tourney Are Being Formulated

Plans are now being made for a faculty-student tennis tournament and an individual tennis tournament. Viola Brooks president of the athletic association, announced. The W. A. A. bulletin board will carry further notice of these plans, and blanks to be signed by those wishing to enter the competition will be posted.

Winner of the individual tennis tournament will have her name engraved on a silver cup now on display, bears the names of the winners of previous years.

Gay Chuckles And Guffaws Fool Curious

Passers-by Stop, Stare As Hearty Laughter Bursts Forth

A person going past the Alpha Xi Delta house any time last week might have wondered what sort of a party was going on inside. The resounding tones of a cornet were broken into at intervals by the hysterical giggle of a woman and the booming laugh of a man. Now and then two or three hearty chuckles would add to the general furor. Some party must be going on—and at this time of the day!

If the passer-by was curious enough she went up and peered in the doorway. Her curiosity was rewarded only by the sight of a few students sitting around the front room smiling quietly. The noise was coming from the victrola. When things quieted down enough one of the girls might go in and put the talking record which had been sent all the way from Miami, as the cause of many a person's being misled about conditions at the house.

All their large party even last Saturday night for rushees, one of the girls says, was a Bon Bonne skit she expected some applause, naturally, but was almost floored when a few of the performers, entrance, the room resounded with hearty guffaws. They were quite surprised into a state of speechlessness by the uproarious reception that inaited upon playing the record over and over until the majority finally subsided.

Two Delegates Attend Dietetic Parley Monday

Dr. Wilson Newell, director of experiment station, University of Florida, is in charge of this work.

Others from Florida State college are Miss Mina Tracy, Dean Sandels and Dr Tilt, who will attend the convention are Miss Mary Lois Gill, assistant dietitian and Miss Eleanor Green and Miss Edna Mae Hutchinson of the

Telescope Team Meets Tuesday

Students Observe Saturn And Its Moons With Telescope Aid

At the first observational meeting of the student telescope team Tuesday night, many of its members peered through a telescope for the first time. Astounded girls saw how unromantic the moon can look under the powerful lens of an equatorial instrument.

The observations for the evening consisted of surface of the moon, the planet Mars, and Saturn with four of its moons. The group also learned how to locate stars of the first magnitude by finding their companion stars.

From now on, the star team will assist the physical science classes in their regular laboratory observations, which will be held every Wednesday and Friday night from 7:30 until 9:30. Some of the girls will handle the large telescope, others the smaller instrument. Still others will help with the naked-eye observation work.

The team plans to meet every week during the school year. As yet, no definite night has been set aside for its regular meeting, but this will be decided upon soon.

Recommendations, Cuts And Resignations Come Up in Senate Meeting

On Wednesday at the regular meeting of the student senate, the names of seven girls who had been recommended for the Sophomore council were passed on and approved. The girls approved are Marjorie Jessup, Joan Muller, Connie Ash, Katharine Bevens, Edna Warren, Betty Barthold, and Clifton Ven, Betty Ostlund.

Betty Ostlund explained the cut system, and an open discussion was held on the matter.

The N.S.F.A. problem of not having enough funds to send more than one delegate to the peace convention was presented for the senate to decide upon. Viola Brooks, chairman of N.S.F.A.

Notice was received of the resignation of Jeannette Litchfiel as vice-chairman of Bryan Hall Her resignation will be acted upon at the next meeting.

The senate wishes to repeat its invitation to all students to attend its meetings, which are held every Wednesday afternoon at 401 Westcott building.

"CAN PEOPLE APPRECIATE THE CHOICER TOBACCOS IN CAMELS?" A QUESTION FREQUENTLY HEARD... ANSWER:

THEY SMOKE MORE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE IN THE WORLD

Men and women respond to the unadorned fact that costlier tobaccos play the most important part in making Camel Cigarettes milder and better

"I'll line up 100% with Camels," says V. F. Gutsadorf, class of '40. "Smoking Camels is pleasantest and afterwards gives me a mighty swell sense of well-being. Camels set me right!"

"Camels went 'round the world with me. I let 'em go every time," 'round-the-world reporter, Miss Dorothy Rigsbee, says. "With Camel's steady smoking's a steady pleasure."

"I have a long record as a Camel smoker—I've smoked them for many years," Bill Tilden states. "Here's one big point about Camels—they're the cigarette that I've found doesn't upset my nerves."

THE DEEPER YOU DIG into the facts—the more you realize that real mildness and better taste can be found only in costlier tobaccos. Nothing else can do inferior tobaccos can take the place of good tobaccos to start with. As you'd expect, naturally milder, better-tasting tobaccos cost more to buy. And Camel pays millions more each year and year out to get them. That's why Camels are different—why they're appeal more to you and women in all walks of life—why they're the largest-selling cigarette in America . . . or in the world!

COSTLIER TOBACCOS IN A MATCHLESS BLEND . . . Camels are a matchless blend of fines, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—Turkish and Domestic. Skillful blending brings out the full flavor of these choice tobaccos.

"Camels go big out our way," says Charles Belden, boss of the Pitchfork Ranch, Wyoming. "Cowboys like that 'kick' they get out of Camels."

"So many girls or college smoke Camels," says Miss Josephine O'Neill, coed. "Mennal work often delays digestion; I find Camels make food seem twice as good."

The famous parachute jumper, Lt. Lee Ames, says: "I've smoked enough Camels to prove that they don't frazzle the nerves."

Concerning Cooperatives

In selecting consumer cooperatives for forum discussion next Tuesday morning, the local N.S.F.A. chose a subject which college students have heard much about and will continue to hear more about in the future—a subject which has interested and won the support of many diversified groups, including the farmers, the church, trade unions and the professions. During the forum three main questions probably will be raised: What is a cooperative? Are campus cooperatives generally successful? Is there need for co-ops on this campus?

Cooperatives are comparatively young in the world's history, yet not so young that what they have already made history. They sprang from humble beginnings in the union of 28 weavers in Rochdale, England, over 90 years ago. Today out of that experiment has come the largest single business in all England and an idea that has spread to every continent and taken growth in 40 nations. Life has been revolutionized in Sweden, Denmark, and Norway by the cooperatives, but of that same experiment has come also the college cooperatives which have in the last few years swept the United States.

There are 160 college cooperatives whose business exceeds $2,700,000 annually. Harvard has the oldest and largest campus cooperative in the country, its annual sales in its bookstore totaling $900,000 with subsidiaries to the students of between seven and nine per cent. Cooperatives are operating successfully in the universities of Chicago, Washington, California, Wisconsin, North Carolina and Georgia, to mention only a few.

While modern writers are warning students that they are faced with the two choices of fascism or communism, the students are quite busy making use of a democratic and efficient commercial method of cutting their living and educational expenses. The immense popularity of campus co-ops is chiefly due to the discovery by students that the adoption of the Consumers' Principle as a tenet of business is the best way for them to continue their education despite reduced finances. But as William Moore points out in his booklet "Campus Co-ops," there are other advantages to cooperatives besides the economic one.

To quote Mr. Moore: "Work cooperatives prove good men and detect weaklings, helping the latter to correct their faults. Cooperatives give students training in business, administration, leadership, and hard work that will stand them in good stead when they apply for jobs. Students develop initiative, self-confidence and social imagination. When students understand the difficulties in a situation or control it themselves, they do less complaining. Students learn to work with others, to allow for their shortcomings and idiosyncrasies, and become more tolerant and companionable."

Cooperatives bring the producer, laborer and consumer to a common denominator. They are non-profit making "profits" called overcharge organizations which provide the wants of the consumer at a saving. The profit of the University of Georgia co-op for 1936-37 from $47,430.99 net cash sales amounted to $167.91. Student co-ops are, of course, student-managed and are of various types, such as dormitory, bookstore, cafeteria, laundry and general. They grow slowly, usually starting with a single individual and expanding to embrace hundreds.

On some campuses cooperatives are an asset and of essential value to the students, while on others they are harmful and result in failure. Before the organization of any cooperative is undertaken there should be a thorough understanding of all its implications, and this question should be answered. Will the cooperative actually be of service to the students or will it do harm by decreasing the revenue of the college?

Last year the Y.W.C.A. on this campus formed a cooperative second-hand dress shop on a very small scale which was successful. It is expected that its business will increase this year. Many students have voiced the need for a cooperative bookstore, particularly a second-hand bookstore. It is well to investigate first one present bookstore and to see how it is operated. According to Mr. J. G. Sellers, financial manager of the college, the bookstore is completely under the college administration and is run on a cooperative basis except that it is not student-managed. The approximate cost of operating the store annually is not including the buying and selling of books, is from $7,000 to $8,000. Whatever profits are made are turned into the college fund to be used for student needs.

Since the chief purpose of the cooperative is to give students financial aid, the expected reduction in N.Y.A. funds may prove an added inducement for such an organization. However, aside from the various other factors involved, the success or failure of a real cooperative will depend primarily on how strongly we students feel the need for one and on the type to be formed. But whether or not there is a place for cooperatives on this campus, it behooves us as students keeping up with the world, to cooperate with N.S.F.A. in its attempt to investigate our needs and to gain knowledge of a movement which is becoming an increasingly pertinent and widespread as the consumers' cooperative.

What About The Other Half?

Last week Oberlin College celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the enrollment of the first women in a United States institution of higher learning. Shortly before the University of Florida enrolled its largest group of women students ever registered here in regular session.

The arguments for co-education are so well-known and so often expressed on this campus that reiteration of them here would be to wax trite. Not many of us are unfamiliar with the truisms that segregation of the sexes results in boorish manners, unwholesome attitudes and social decadence.

Education should prepare one for life and its problems. We know that women constitute or create life's greatest problems. We need to study them. What we read about women in books and hear about in the ivory tome of our problems in later life. But if we were thrown in daily contact with them how much more we would learn! Their reactions to daily situations in the classroom and on the campus would undoubtedly prove interesting and enlightening.

It is inevitable that most of us will spend the greater part of life in near-constant companionship with some certain girl. And women are queer! They have lots of foibles and lots of ideas. They are full of tricks. We never learn about them on the short weekends that we are with them. Our eagerness makes us easy dupes and their charming Sunday behavior teaches us nothing fundamental. We need to learn about women in their everyday manner.

What we need to round out our University life in every respect. With a few notable mysoginistic exceptions, students here realize this need. Few have given thought to bringing about the necessary steps. It will take some legislation to get co-education here. Legislation results from pressure of public opinion. Public opinion is created by propaganda. Let's get to work, fellow students!—Florida Alligator.

Cooperation

A recent editorial in the Jacksonville Times-Union called attention to the fact that the number of automobile accidents annually increases during the month of the year when college students are continuously on the highways going to and returning from "football week-ends."

Many F.S.C.W. students will attend the Florida-Sewanee game Saturday in Gainesville. Safety first when on the highways seems to be implied, and perhaps that old adage still holds—a word to the wise is sufficient.

Conventions, unlike the budget, go on forever.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

The President Vs. Professor Frank

President Roosevelt, like a good politician, brought himself to the fore again by calling a special session of Congress for November 15 to put into realization the promises made recently to farmers and laborers in his fireside chats. The president skillfully blurred the critical question of foreign policy under a mound of crop and wage statistics and, desired, because of their direct effect, to quiet the majority of American Congress.

The president's program for the hitherto recalcitrant legislators contained five major points—are six if you count the reference to our domestic peace. Heading the list came the control of crop surpluses and the formation of regional flood control projects similar to the TVA; Reorganization of the federal executive system, the setting of maximum hours and minimum wages, and the strengthening of the anti-trust laws left little room for a discussion of what to do about China and Japan. Roosevelt, however, evidently had a change of heart and, instead of referring to them as he had harsh—condemnation of Japan, suggested that both the warring nations and the authors of the nine-power treaty of 1922 should cooperate in order to bring about peace.

Dramatically, on the very day that the president urged crop control and higher prices, Dr. Glenn Frank, editor and former head of the University of Wisconsin, denounced such policies as sheer insanity. If we are to do more than talk about the abundant life, he declared, we must have more goods at lower prices, and we must not permit the "clumsy hands" of the Federal government to bungle our economic problems.

Also on the day that Roosevelt reveiled to a more lenient view of the Japanese invasion, the papers reported that Russia was seeking fifty million dollars' worth of war supplies from the United States and that, for the past eight months, the U. S.-Far East trade had averaged 51 per cent higher than it did for the same period last year. Our exports to Japan increased 87 per cent whereas our imports from that nation rose 39 per cent. With China, our exports grew less than did our imports 33 per cent for the former to 45 per cent for the latter.

Connecting with the president's attitude towards the Far East, a cable, fired brazenly from the shelter of Geneva, Switzerland, by a Republican Congressman and Roosevelt-appointed Secretary Hull that both he and Roosevelt ought to be impeached for failing to apply the neutrality act to the Sino-Japanese war. Thinking, the representative in question, asserted that the bill was law and was the "expressed will of Congress"; that the executive and the state department had not carried it out; and that they were consequently subject to impeachment for high crime and misdemeanor." Well, the hue and cry of politicals here on the campus is on for a while. That is, until the spring of the year. In any other place a man's fancy would turn to love and other things in the spring, but here on the campus the only thing a man turns to is his political friend.

Nevertheless the Democratic League carried a small landslide into their whole school along with it 16 out of 23 candidates into office. The Independent party, which as I mentioned last week was functioning under the leadership of Bob Shearer, Philip Belber and Tony Harlow, placed seven of the 23 into office. Of that seven, four of the men were unopposed.

A slight dunk was settling around the Radio Station. Occasionally a figure would be seen through the window talking to a microphone. From the outside it was not apparent what was taking place inside. Inside, however, there were realized that people were trying out for the Radio guild.

One medium-sized boy rose from a chair and advanced to the mike. He read his piece and then withdrew to his chair again. After the try-outs the director told this one boy that he had better not come out again, because he didn't believe he had a voice suitable for the air. Neither did the director think him good enough to take a part.

But determined as he was, the boy showed up again the next try-out and so week after week he plugged along. That was in 1934. In 1935 he became student director of the station. In '36 he was director of the radio guild, but full charge was relegated to one of the professors. This year, however, at last he reigns supreme.

And the funny part is that Melvin Lobel, the young man of whom we have been speaking, is seeking an A.B. degree in the Arts and Science department. Afterwards he is going into the hat business in New Jersey where his father now runs a flourishing business at the present time.

When interviewed this past week he said that he was only 25 years of age, and he's getting his degree this June.

He brought out the point that the Radio guild in whose every phase he takes an active interest, is responsible for all of the dramatic programs that originate from WRUF. In his group he has 12 people taking part in six shows a week.

Right along the same line you might tune in on your radio next Friday at 11-30 a.m. At that time the first part of "Romeo and Juliet" will be presented over WRUF. Russell Sullivan will take the male lead and, girls, he's a natural.

All those attending the Kewanee contest on the Florida field this week will enjoy one of those "F" club dances after the game. And speaking of football, Harry Kelchner, varsity football star, is ill in the infirmary with pneumonia.

Our editors are by this time (we hope) in Chicago. The Windy City probably never knew what a grand gale of hot air was until the Florida Fanatics took it by storm.

And this is what happens when some people can't go to Chicago—frustration, ya know! The managing editor broke it up herself and has been singing it ever since:

They can stop us from pitchin' woo,
They can stop us from lookin' too,
They can get us in at ten each night,
And keep us in for the sake of right;

But they can't stop us from dreamin'
They can stop us from thumbin rides.
And they can stop us from being brides.
For lack of cute we're here all year,
And we can't drown our sorrows in a keg of beer,

The Background of Peace

In explanation of Cordell Hull's trade agreements policy published in the September issue of Fortune, Mr. Hull is praised for his devotion to his ideal—the decreasing of tariff rates, increase international trade—and for the patient and industrious efforts he is making to achieve this ideal.

Mr. Hull's policy consists in reducing excess on the chief commodities that any given nation sells us, wherever this can be done without harming our industries, and, in return, securing from other nations tariff concessions on our goods. This, therefore, is not a policy of free trade but of trade bargaining.

Beginning with the obvious fact that high tariffs have blocked trade throughout the world, Mr. Hull's policy offers to lower United States tariffs on some articles that the nation is participating in the trade agreement is more interested in selling to it. The success of his policy has been clearly shown by the increase of trade between the United States and Brazil, France and Canada, the most important countries with which Mr. Hull has succeeded in negotiating agreements. To draw Great Britain into agreement is now the Secretary of State's ultimate aim, the achievement of which would probably be the greatest victory to be found in contemporary statesmanship.

In the Foreword and Comment section of Fortune, Mr. Hull himself says: "The most urgent for the nations of the world to cooperate effectively in the task of scaling down the excessive barriers which still impede the free giving flow of international trade. . . . The government of the United States, with the support of the citizens of this country, intends to go forward as rapidly as circumstances permit with the program of trade restoration. It is to the end that economic conditions in this country and elsewhere will be improved that we are laying there is no good reason for enduring peace will be built up. (P. C

The Challenge to International Le

So relentless is the logic of the events which in the last two years, have undermined and destroyed one citadel of international law after the other, writes Wolfgang Friedmann in the October Fortnightly, that the present generation need not leave it to future historians to analyze them.

Mr. Friedmann is a German jurist who has a rare knowledge of English law and English ways. He considers that we are living there is no good again what the invasion of Abyssinia, the Japanese war in Spain, and the invasion of China by themselves. The real issues of the day are no longer fought out at Geneva, but are left at the anti-piracy conference of powers decided in Montreux, and at meetings where there is no longer a question of deciding on sanctions against aggressors. The task is to discover measures to minimize international antagonisms responsible to no one—international conferences on peaceful shipping, regardless of life or property.

Mr. Friedmann writes that the collapse of the League action in the Abyssinian war has destroyed almost all practical possibility of a real superstructure of international justice and devices for peaceful settlement and revision which support it.

In conclusion, Mr. Friedmann states that some States will no longer keep to any of the principles but introduce new principles of legitimacy in international affairs. Apart from the possibility of a fight to extermination between several groups of States united by common interests and political ideology, a new international community can only be created with a wide measure of international rule, jurisdiction, etc. In an evolutionary way only practical possibility seems to be the start made by a group of nations on similar conceptions on these questions and the attempt to apply international control themselves. The Importance of Children

Dr. G. F. McCleary states in an article Importance of Children, in the October Forum nightly, that the importance in which children are held varies greatly between different races and peoples. In The Good Earth one sees child as the hub wheel of Chinese life. McCleary also states that is not the only failing idea of the child in England. They come to think that they have produced the children, John Bull and Mrs. Bull and then impose upon the producing of a large family with the same feeling as drunkenness, or any other physical excess."

Dr. McCleary writes that the bearing of children is essential to the life of the community. Many callings, by which men earn a livelihood though they may be useful, are not indispensable. We could get along without them, but the service that women perform, and without risk to health if not to life, is of importance that compared with most other services seem trivial. Women need have no inferiority complex. Let hey rejoice in the fulfilment of the great creative function of motherhood.

According to Dr. McCleary, Miss Eleanor Rathbone puts in her book, "The Disinherited Family": The whole business of begetting, bearing and rearing children is the most important of all the nation's businesses. If it were not done all the world would become a desert in just a century. (B. S.)

BITS About Books

The Faithful Wife. By Sterling Under. Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. $2.50.

This story concerns itself with Nathalie and Sigurd, a Norwegian couple who both work and who live a peaceful, happy, uneventful life together for sixteen years. Suddenly Nathalie learns from Sigurd that he is to have a child by Adinda Greiner, a young girl. After the divorce, Nathalie tries to console herself with the attention of an old admirer, but she cannot. The book is written with a subtle restraint, which leaves the reader space to fill in from his own experience.

New Frontiers of the Mind, the Story of the Duke Experiments. By J. B. Rhine, Farrar and Rinehart, $3.50.

Dr. Rhine's experiments in extra-sensory perception are not the first ones to be made, but they are so great in number that they have been something more than experiment which this book discusses, the subject guesses what is on the card. It is not telepathy. Sometimes the test is for clairvoyance, in which neither subject nor tester knows what is on the card; sometimes in mental telepathy, in which the subject thinks hard of what is on the card. Dr. Rhine makes many interesting speculations as to how some subjects continually make very high scores.

South by Thunderbird. By Hudson Strode, Illustrated, Random House. $3.

"South by Thunderbird" is a travel book in which the author does not rely solely on his own opinion. He sets down whole conversations with Mexican officials and fellow travelers. Mr. Strode writes about more than Mexico City. He tries to find out what people south of us think about us, and how they are working for a good and a better life. The author finds that life there is not unlike that in Alaska that Uruguay comes nearer the ideal.

So You Think It's New. By Clifford J. Funk. Drawings by Russel Sherman, Funk and Wagnall. $2.

This book enumerates so many things we have that are simply modern adaptations of old customs that we might conclude that progress is merely rediscovering ancient things. Egyptians, for instance, used thousands of years ago. The Old Cheria Maiden's Home housed 32,000 persons, and could be compared to the modern hotel. It says that Egyptians practiced inoculation for smallpox. What is interesting about this book is that the immense array of facts which the author states are all true.

The Tranquil Heart. Portrait of Giovanni Boccaccio. By Catherine Carswell. Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.50.

Since Boccaccio himself says he wrote for women to entertain and delight, the author believes that a woman should understand him better than a man, and should write his biography. Mrs. Carswell relates Boccaccio's love affairs with greater detail, but practically leaves out Boccaccio's literature on Dante. This is a distinct oversight, since what students of Boccaccio would like to know is how reliable Boccaccio's biography of Dante is.

Assignment in Utopia. By Elinor Lyon. Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.50.

Many people have come back from Russia dissatisfied for personal reasons, with the Soviet system of state. But Lyons came back really disillusioned with communism. She speaks of the collectivism among the peasants as a restoration of the individualism of early years before by Alexander II." He believes the Russian system has driven out all freedom, humanetism, intellectual integrity, and respect for life.

Of All Places! By Palmer Brown and Jo Ivy Abbe. Illustrated. Frederic A Stokes Company $2.

Though not as amusing as Abbes' seven a shrewd, outspoken, and humorous picture of the impressions of Hollywood. They find naturalness in some stars, discover that the film people live in more palaces other than Hollywood, but that Hollywood is a glamorous, bleached hair. However, they have a better time out on a ranch where the animals are tamed, their own lives and were not being trained for performances.

The Heart of the Furnace. By Lambert Williams. D. Appleton-Century Company. $2.50.

Perhaps no other book has so plumbed the tragedy of blindness as has this with Dr. Hans Brand. Broido caning chairs and weaving baskets in the workshop. Hans meets Gretchen Broido, until Broido tells him that Stefan Trumbin, Elizabeth Ann Ruth Unland, Kathleen Van Aist, Mary Van Wyk, Mary Van Meter, Margaret Heim Waldo, Gladys Ware, Annie Waterhouse, Frances Wagner, Marjorie Weems, Sara Wells, Felicia West, Betty Wheeler, Rosella Williams, Ann Whitman, Margaret Wiggins, Dorothy Williams, Edna Williams, Martha Wilson Wendell, Elberta Wright, and Edna Yacobian.

Chefsixco Chapter Meets For Reorganization, Appointments

The first meeting for the year of the Chefsixco chapter, Florida society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was held Wednesday night, October 13, in Rugg hall. The meeting was presided over by the regent, Ella Virginia Brooks.

The Chefsixco chapter is the fourth unique chapter to be formed on college campuses in the United States, and was just completed here last spring under the regency of Miss Lydia Craig. Miss Brooks.

This first meeting was for the purpose of organizing and attending to appointments for the year. At the final meeting last May, Miss Lydia Brooks was unanimously to the chapter office. Miss Virginia Brooks, regent; Mary Lord Odom, vice-regent; Mrs. Lucy Pudger, secretary; Betty Bow, registrar; Marjorie Bissel, treasurer, and Martha Jane Hall, historian. Mrs. Harding Duncan was made chaplain for this year, while Alfred Aronson was appointed chairman of the chapter membership committee, with Nancy Byrne as vice-chairman. Janice Wheatley was appointed publicity chairman, and chairman of the National membership committee.

The chapter will meet next on Wednesday, October 27, to which meeting all members of the D.A.R. are invited.

Dean and Mrs. Eyman Feted at Reception

Dean and Mrs. R. L. Eyman were honored at a reception given by Dr. Elisabeth Gordon Andrews in the Florida State Library, last Friday evening. Approximately 100 guests, including faculty members of the Florida system of public instruction, were invited.

Assisting Dr. Andrews were Mrs. Margaret Sanders and Misses Helen Hunter, Mary Call Collins, Marian Uber, Ruth Rogers and Louise Gehan. Miss Dorothy Dodd, Florida librarian, and Mrs. C. P. Heinlein served at the punch bowl.

Tiny chrysanthemums in a silver basket formed the centerpiece by silver candlesticks decorated the table from which the refreshments, Florida Lexi, were served. Palms and ferns comprised other decorations.

Little man, what now? Suppose he does get his degree, what then? Is he going to be content to spend the rest of his days behind the truck? Not a chance. He is a born leader. He will be a success. As a matter of fact, he's quite disappointed with everything he has accomplished. Up till now he has been one of the big men on the campus. And here he is driving a truck, barely making money enough to support himself, and his family. He doesn't know much about the building game. He has simply been handed out to him most of his

Art Collection of College Presents Variegated Theme

Subjects and Techniques Run from Paintings To Designs

Variety is the spice of life and the art collection found in the corridors and buildings of Florida State college. Almost any subject and technique may be found in the group of paintings which range from the sublime portraits of the college's most distinguished patrons and members to the murals of "rec" hall, which still present a valid topic for debate.

Many of the paintings are gifts, either of private individuals, organizations, or even the federal government. In Broward lounge is the work of two alumnae, Nellie and Ruth Dejean Kelly, who presented all three paintings the year of their graduation, 1934. In Byran hall atrium, a painting of Mrs. Sarah Landrum Cawthon, one of the first matrons from 1910-1929, was presented by the college several years ago by students and friends.

There are five life size portraits which make up one of the interesting phases of the group. In the Augusta Conradi little theatre the portrait between the two entrances to the auditorium, is of Augusta Conradi; to whom the theatre was dedicated. In Jennie Murphree parlor, a painting of Jennie Murphree, wife of Dr. A. A. Murphree, first president of Florida State college, was a gift of Professor F. W. Buchholz, a former member of this faculty, and his family, purchased at the home of Jennie Murphree parlors. The artist was Mrs. Mary Brevard.

A distinguished quartet of some of the most outstanding men to be connected with the college is found in the periodical room of the library. Dr. A. A. Murphree, second to the west wall, is a painting of the present head of the college. Dr. Max Mason, president emeritus, on the east wall of the room, is a picture of a former president, Dr. A. A. Murphree. The other two are Dr. Edwin Young and Mr. Yokum, former members of the State Board of Control.

Two more, but a number of representations of the work of W. P. A. artists of Florida, were given to the college. From the number of paintings a little over a dozen were selected to be here. The majority of those selected are of Florida landscapes and scenes characteristic of Florida today and in the days of the people.

One of the oldest paintings on record is the landscape hanging above the mantelpiece in Oglethorpe house. The painting is a custom scene by N. V. Waldeck, was purchased from a New York exhibition more than a decade ago.

The only explanation offered for "rec" hall is that it was done by former students in the art department more than three years ago as a special project in the course of advanced declaiming

Demonstration Tryouts To Come Off Next Week

Tryouts for speaking parts in Even demonstration will be held Monday night at 8:00 o'clock in the auditorium, according to an announcement made by Elsie Prunk, chairman.

Odds will try out for speaking parts in Odd demonstration on Wednesday afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock, announced Elsie Tyrott, chairman. The time for casting tryouts will be announced later.

The following Odds have charge of the preparations for the Odd demonstration: Elsie Trott, chairman; Peggy Bolding, assistant chairman; Betty Cashen and Janet Lockwood, dance chairmen; Mary Beatrice Hamilton, assisted by Mollies, stage manager; Dot Cromartie and Florence Morris, business manager; Virginia Crain, rehearsals. Student Center Opens With Formal Ceremony

The new Beaufort student center was formally opened last Saturday with the presentation service in the afternoon and a reception in the evening.

Rev. Hubert Ruth Currin, student secretary, presided at the afternoon service. Dr. Frank Leavell, southwide Baptist student secretary, gave the address. Following Dr. Leavell's address Sunday morning an informal breakfast was held at the new house for the council and representatives from the council at Gainesville.

Prix de Paris Prize Contest Is Open To All

Those Interested in Work As Fashion Designer May Enroll Now

There are quite a few cash-prize contests that are opened to faculty members and students alike on this campus. All it takes to be an entrant in these contests is a brain originality, pun some ambition, energy and work.

The editors of Vogue magazine announce Vogue's third Prix de Paris contest. This contest is opened to members of the senior classes of accredited colleges. Vogue opens this contest to college women of the class of 1938 who are interested in fashion as a career. To the winner goes a first prize of one year's employment divided between Vogue's Paris and New York offices. To the five judges who will select the magazine's editorial talent in Vogue's New York office.

The contest consists of two parts: first, a series of outlines to be answered by the entrants; and, then a thesis not to exceed 1000 words on a general fashion subject to be selected by Vogue. The judges of this contest are to be the editors of Vogue magazine. For the complete details of this interesting contest, see the department of room 429 Gilchrist hall.

Another contest not to be overlooked revolves around the Walker Prizes in Natural History. Two prizes, founded by the late Dr. William J. Walker, are annually offered by the Boston Society of Natural History for the best memoirs written in the English language on subjects proposed by the Board of Trustees.

For the best memoir presented, a prize of sixty dollars may be awarded. If however, the memoir be one of marked merit, the prize may be increased to one hundred dollars. The runner-up in this contest, a prize not to exceed fifty dollars may be awarded. Competition in this contest is open to everyone interested.

The memoirs are to be based on a considerable body of original and unpublished works, accompanied by a general review of the literature of the subject. The subjects selected for this year and for 1939 are as follows: subject for 1938, any subject in the field of Ornithology. Subject for 1939, any subject in the field of General Zoology.

For more complete details, see the head of the Natural History department, or write to the Boston Society of Natural History, Boston, Mass.

Still another contest of interest to everyone is the Second Play Competition contest. This contest is being offered by the Bureau of New Plays, Inc. The Bureau of New Plays, Inc., was organized May 4, 1936, to discover and encourage young playwriting talent for the theatre and to assist authors, not only with financial aid but with criticism and advice toward a professional goal at a difficult period in their careers. To this end funds have been appropriated for competitive cash awards, as well as for scholarships and fellowship awards.

Awards of five hundred dollars will be made to the authors of the six best plays submitted in the competition. More awards may be granted, if the material submitted justifies it. If in the opinion of the judges, the material submitted does not justify the full quota of awards, the Bureau reserves the right to grant only as many as they recommend. These awards may be increased to scholarship awards of $1250.00 and to fellowship awards of from $1500.00 to $2500.00 on the basis of future promise and financial need. The recipients of such scholarship or fellowship awards shall submit two plays written during the year's tenure of the scholarship or fellowship or within six months thereafter. In case of production of one or both of the plays, part of the award shall be considered as advance royalties to be returned to the Bureau for the maintenance of all awards.

The plays must be full length, original, unpublished and unproduced by any professional theatre, and must have written recommendation by the head of the English or drama departments of the college. Any undergraduate or graduate student now attending any American or Canadian university or college, or who has attended such an institution at any time since September 1931 whether or not the will for a degree was completed, is eligible to compete for the awards.

For more complete details of this contest, see the head of the speech department.

Students Express Opinions Concerning Fees for Plays

Suggestion is Made to Include in Activity Fee Enough to Permit Students to See Four Speech Department Plays

"What do you think of including fifty cents in the activity fee of each girl at the beginning of the year, this fifty cents giving her the privilege of seeing all four of the big plays produced by the speech department during the year?" was the question asked students at Florida State college last week.

All except one of those asked replied that they thought it a good, workable plan. "I've always wanted to see those plays," said one senior, that I usually thought of something else I would rather spend the money for. With this method, you pay your money painlessly at the first of the year and see the plays without every one's asking for tickets."

A sophomore of the Home Economics department said that it would save her money, because she usually go to at least two plays during the year, and the admission for the four would be less than I paid forty cents to see each of the two I have seen. I would spend $1.60," she added.

A freshman in the College of Arts and Sciences remarked that, "These plays are much better than a lot of movies that the students go to, and I think the girls should see them." Her roommate added that she wouldn't see any of the plays anyway, and it would be fifty cents lost, as far as she was concerned.

Another junior, in the speech department, thought that what she thought about the plan, pointed out the fact that the speech department could produce better and newer plays under this plan, since they would have more money for royalties and expenses. These plays could be run three or four nights, thus giving the entire student body a chance to see them. She also said that it would give the college girl a chance to see sixteen good plays during her college years, and help her to cultivate a taste for good drama.

A suggestion along the same line, but with a new slant, was brought in by a sophomore who has lived in New York and other northern cities. She said, "People in Florida do not take the interest in the legitimate stage that those living elsewhere do. I assume that there are very few girls here who have seen a really good drama on the stage. I like this plan of paying fifty cents at the first of the year and seeing the six plays without asking for the tickets."

Convocation Features Very Humorous Contest

The highlight of Tuesday's convocation program featured a humorous question - and - answer contest between representatives of the Owls and representatives of the Evens. Lalla Iverson, masquerading as "Professor Smith," acted as interlocutor for the contest which was won by the Evens.

Prior to the contest Dorothea Kloeppel conducted the customary chapel devotional. Taking charge of the program, Betty Ostlund announced among other things, the list of the nineteen students who were chosen to represent Florida State College for Women in the publication of "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities."

Torches are Born Amid Great Furor

It was Tuesday night between 7:00 and 7:30, and the place was the arcade between Bryan and Broward. Freshmen, self-conciously resplendent in their white Grecian trappings, practiced the words to their triumphal entry nearly and wondered if it would be all right to wear their shoes. Committee heads fluttered from group to group evidne final and detailed instructions. All was in order as befitted a traditional tradition.

But on the steps of Bryan there was one jarring note. Two girls in brown, reasonably intelligent seniors, were on their knees in a flurry of wild excitement. From the large can of kerosene at their sides they poured copious allotments of pungent liquid into pink paper cups sulfing it freely over the sides. Thus they would quickly mop up with the brown rags in their hands, and then their real work would begin. Upon would come a tin horn stuffed with cotton, above it would shoot the brown rag, squeezed fiercely by a soot-blackened hand. The process was repeated 180 times.

And thus the traditional torches were born, born to burn their hour in glory, and then to be relegated to the attic storeroom of the Science building until another year and another Torch night should call them forth once more.

Board of Control Meets

The Board of Control will meet in Gainesville, Saturday, October 16, at 10 a. m. Following the meeting the members will attend the University of Florida - Sewanee football game.

Those attending are Dr Conradi and J. T. Diamond, who is secretary of the Board, of Tallahassee; George R Baldwin, chairman of Jacksonville; H C Duncan of Tavares; Thomas W Bryan of Lakeland, and R P Terry of Miami.

Essay Contest Prizes Offered

Undergraduate History Students May Enter Annual Contest

Fifty dollars will be awarded as a prize to the student writing the best essay on the subject, "Annexation in territorial Florida", Dr. Kathryn T. Abbey, professor of history, announced yesterday. The prize is to be given for the second year by Mr. D. L. Redfern, of Miami.

Last year the award was won by Anna Pendleton, a senior, for her essay on the life of Henrietta Mary Brooks. The contest, known as the Redfern historical essay award, is open to any undergraduate student who has taken or is taking a course in history other than the required courses. The required courses are history 101 or social studies 103.

The names of the competitors must be filed with Dr. Abbey before the end of the first week of the second semester, February, 1938. The essay, which should contain a minimum of 3000 words, acequate bibliography, and footnotes, must be typewriting and handed in to Dr. Abbey's office by April 15.

Any other information which students may desire concerning sources of material and other questions may be obtained from Dr Abbey.

Cooperatives Will Be Topic at NSFA Forum

Mr. William Joubert, instructor in economics, Sarah Lewis and Arline Gray Lockhart will be the speakers at the N S F A forum to be held Tuesday, October 19 at 11:30 o'clock in the chemistry lecture room, Science building.

Consumer Cooperatives and particularly college co-ops will be the topic of discussion. Nell Colvin, chairman, will conduct the forum which will try to formulate some idea of the need of cooperatives on this campus and the type that would be most successful.

Sophomores to Have Meeting on Tuesday

Since the time of keenest rivalry between the Evens and Odds is drawing near, it will be necessary for the Evens to have two more cheer leaders who will be elected from the sophomore class. With this purpose in mind, all sophomores are urged to attend the first sophomore class meeting of the year. This short meeting will be held Tuesday morning at 11:30 o'clock in the auditorium.

Three Alumnae Express Views on College Life In Frosh Convocation

What College Means to an Alumna" will be the general topic at regular freshman convocation Saturday morning, Miss Daisy Parker presiding. Miss Parker, a member of the graduating class of Florida State college last year, is now a faculty member of Leon high school.

Speakers on the program will be Miss Mary Etta Thistlethwaite, faculty member of Leon high school and Miss Mary Lou Thompson, of the speech department of Florida State College for Women, both alumnae of this college.

Miss Thistlethwaite will have as her subject, "College as the Highest of an Alumna," and "College as an Avocation" will be Miss Thompson's topic.

Also on the program will be Mary Greenleaf, a member of the freshman class, who will give a vocal solo.

Freshman talent programs this year have been as follows:

Sept 25—Miriam Almon's— Popular selections on the piano Mary Elizabeth Wilson's interpretative dance, accompanied by Oldbell Tillman.

Oct. 2— Martha Whitehurst — Reading. Elizabeth Miller and Elizabeth Moore—Violin and accordian duet.

Oct 9—Isabel Tillman and Corine Butler—Piano duet. Phoebe Jane—Song. "The Lass With the Delicate Air," accompanied by Eleanor Daniells

Male Visitor Given Party

Birthday Cake Surprises Gainesville Student

It happened at dinner Sunday. Many curious heads turned towards this particular table at regular intervals, and giggles floated on the air constantly. The subject of the merriment was a birthday cake surrounded by small mysterious packages.

The party was nothing to cause excitement, except for the fact that it was being given for a male visitor from Gainesville. The gentleman, an architect student, blushed and stammered while he date enjoyed his discomfort hugely.

The fun really started when this "party-boy" unwrapped his presents. One was a miniature paddle to use on the unfortunate pledges of his fraternity. Another was a toy set of the type to play with his career. Still another was a bubble-pipe to complete his collection of pipes. Then things quieted down to a normal state. Mr. Doyle, Dr. Emmons, Daniels and Dr. Elizabeth Colegrove.

The Parents' Day committee which is to arrange the program of activities for Parents' Day celebrated at Thanksgiving, is composed of Miss Katherine Strozier, chairman, Dr. Ethel Louise Richardson, Miss Isabel Flowers, Miss Lucy B. Gelzer, Miss Pitchford, secretary.

Pledges Will Live In Houses First Semester

This year, for the first time pledges living in off-campus houses are permitted to join sorority houses. Prior to this pledges were not allowed to go into sorority houses until after the first semester.

Miss Maude Flowers director of residence halls, states that the ruling was made because there are vacancies in the dormitories at the end of the first semester.

Conradi Makes 4 Committee

Four Groups of Faculty Members Appointed By President

Dr. Conradi this week announced four faculty committees to consider new phases of college administration.

The Public Relations committee will cooperate with civic organizations in the state and will help alumnae to provide contacts with the college. Members of the committee are S. R. Doyle, chairman; Dr. Kathryn Trimmer, Miss Anna May Tracy, John G. Kirk and Miss Rachel Pitchford, secretary.

The Schedule committee will work with the registrar in making a careful study of classes in view of avoiding conflicts. The other schedule difficulties. Members are L. S. Kyman is chairman of the committee. The other members are S. R. Smith, Miss Margaret Sandels, and Mr. Dees, secretary.

Problems of over-curricular activities referred to the Committee on Activities by the red by Dean Colegrove Dorman, who will be assisted by Mr. Doyle, Dr. Emmons, Daniels and Dr. Elizabeth Colegrove.

Junior Time Limit Set for Pictures

The time limit set for juniors to make picture appointments is October 25. Dates for having their pictures taken are October 16 through October 22.

Sophomores will begin making their appointments on October 25.

Once more the students are urged to be on time for their appointments in 412 Westcott building. Since shoulders must be draped Eileen Robinson suggests that it will be more convenient, both for the students and the photographer, if the girls will wear shirt-waist blouses when they go to have their pictures taken as this will save time.

Freshmen Hear Andrews Speak on Development Of Personality Traits

In the freshman class meeting last Saturday Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, director of personnel, spoke on "What is Personality," and discussed the ways in which students may change the qualities in their personalities which are not desired.

Dr. Andrews said that personality is not a mystical matter, given to some and denied to others, but something very definite and specific, something which can be developed. Personality is built upon health, intelligence, and character and is judged by the way it affects others.

Dr. Andrews impressed upon students the importance of cultivating the acquaintance of people with admirable personalities, observing them and noting down the things they do which are attractive. She said that traits are those which can be acquired through practice, and ended by quoting, "He is a big man who thinks most of little things."

Masque Club Will Give Series of Radio Plays

The Masque club, recently organized by the speech department, will present the first of a series of plays over station WTAL on Wednesday night at 9 o'clock. The play "At the Sign of the Silver Spoon," by Lucine Finch, will be given by the members of the club under the direction of Richard Kingston, announcer and director of the broadcasting station.

The series, which will be heard every two weeks is part of the program which the club has drawn up for the year. Other plans include the sponsorship of an extra-curricular speech club for freshmen interested in dramatics and the presentation of a public program each semester.

DR. DODD PLAYS IMPORTANT ROLE

Costumes and Settings Will Represent 19th Century Customs

With the presentation of Helen Jerome's dramatization of the novel, Pride and Prejudice, next Thursday and Friday nights in the Augusta Conradi Little theater, the speech department under the direction of Miss Kemper Martin Moore, will offer its first production of the season.

An authentic representation of the customs and background of the early nineteenth century portrayed in the novel will be achieved through the costumes being ordered from the Philadelphia Costume house, and settings used in the production.

In charge of the plans for the drama are Miss Mary Mootz, new instructor in the Art department, and the stage craft class, composed of 22 art students. They are constructing three different sets of living room scenes typical of the home which the action takes place.

Settings Described

One of the settings is that of the Bennet family, a conventional living room of the period; another is the parlor of Lady Catherine De Burgh, which is a more elegant style, having empire motifs of out-of-doors, laurel wreaths, and gold furniture coverings. An outstanding feature of this set is a fireplace, built by the students, having carryhill columns on each side. The third living room is that of Mrs. Gardiner, an aunt of the Bennets, which features a corna and grey scheme, representing the fine cultural personality of the owner.

Readers familiar with the plot of Jane Austen's novel will remember the action centers around Mrs. Bennet's determination to get her three daughters married. To be a wife was success. Anything else was a failure." The story includes the duel between one of the daughters and her parson, Mr. Darcy and his prejudice. The climax comes when pride and prejudice meet half way.

Cast Is Named

The cast includes Mr. William O. Dodd, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, who plays the part of Mr. Bennet, an understanding father with a sense of humor that is often lost upon his

Kappa Delta Pi Meets Tuesday

Eyman and English Will Introduce Peace As Theme for Year

Kappa Delta Pi, professional society in education, will hold its first meeting this Tuesday night at the Tucker practice school. Ahead of last week as previously announced in The Flambeau. The postponement was due to the change in schedule for the lecture, which called for the presence of the senior members of education.

At this meeting, Dr. R. L. Eyman and Miss Ruth English will speak on the topic, "Advocating Peace Through Kappa Delta Pi." The peace theme will be carried out through the whole program for this year.

Speakers for the November meeting will be Mrs. P. P. Fixner and Miss Meador, who will talk on "Occidental versus Oriental Mentality." The date for this meeting and other regular meetings of the society will be decided Tuesday night.

Initiation services of the Kappa Delta Pi are: Nellie Lamar, Gennie Perry, Ruth Prather, Marcia Smith, and Sarah B. Wells.

Officers of the organization are: Miss Margaret McCorvie president, Miss Martha Chapman, vice president; Mrs. Simmie H. Mann, recording secretary; Mrs. Marie Lee MacArthur, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. Rudiger, treasurer; Miss Velma Colon, historian; and Mrs. P. P. Fixner, counselor.

Students Asked Not To Pick Pecan Nuts

Nuts are nuts, and nutting parties in the fall are a joy to all, but Florida State students are requested to conduct their nut-hunting expeditions in an orderly fashion.

According to announcement made by J. O. Keown, business manager, students are asked not to climb pecan trees on the campus or to throw sticks at them to make the nuts fall. They are welcome to pick up all the nuts that may have fallen on the ground, however.

Recognition Will Be Event Tuesday Night

In Traditional Ceremony YWCA Will Recognize Its New Members

Approximately 350 members of the class of '41 will join the white-robed processional over the platform of the auditorium at 7:30 next Tuesday night when the Young Women's Christian association will recognize its new members in a traditional ceremony.

As the choir sings "Father of Lights," the processional will come with the officers and the cabinet members of the council, followed by the girls to be recognized. After the choir has sung the invocation, Charlotte Kamper, the Y. W. C. A. president, will give a prayer followed by the hymn "Purest Love" sung by the members of the service by Charlotte Kamper, special music by the choir will then follow the Litany of Commitment to be given by Martha Lee Hall, president of the organization. Martha will then issue the challenge to the new members and their response will be followed by a charge to the old and one to the new members by the Y. W. C. A.

In the recessional the officers and cabinet will lead the choir and the newly recognized members will follow. At the footlights where the freshmen will light their candles from those of the executive cabinet, form a circle around the fountain and hear the benediction by Martha Lester.

Purpose Value

"Next," he continued, "the college increased my supply or knowledge." This knowledge is a pleasure, it is not its own end. The senior should be curious with the desire to know, to be spurred on, he said.

"Has college made me open-minded to truth?" is the third question he asked.

IRC Features The Far-East

The Viewpoints of Seven Are Presented

At the last meeting of the International Relations Club, Wednesday night the Chinese-Japanese situation was discussed from the viewpoints of seven of the most important countries.

Audrey Gaffney, who gave the Russian viewpoint, said that Russia would fight only if Japan attacked Russian colonies or colonial possessions that lead to China. Jeanne Lamar, who discussed Japan, said that Japan is a haves not nation and is using that for an excuse for China's unity. Italy has only a small navy and would naturally be for Japan because she had joined with Germany in the anti-communist treaty. Also, since communist Russia was for China, Italy would be for the Japanese.

Virginia Allen, who analyzed the German viewpoint, said that Japan has been encroaching steadily on her property and now wants to have it all. In giving Italy's viewpoint, Olive Alderman said that Italy would naturally be for Japan because she had joined with Germany in the anti-communist treaty. Also, since communist Russia was for China, Italy would be for the Japanese.

Ann Bell, speaking of Germany, mentioned the anti-communist treaty and the fact that Germany has called attention focused on the Far East, she could only say a repetition of the clause of the Versailles treaty without the world noticing it. Frances Thomas examined the viewpoint of the United States, declaring that although we trade a lot with both countries, Japan's desire to develop the cotton fields of China in competition with our cotton has made the United States favor China.

Conradi Gives Senior Status To 274 Girls

Black, White Ceremony Of Investiture Is Enacted

DODD DELIVERS EVENING'S TALK

Symbolism of Tradition Explained by Dean In His Address

Two hundred and seventy-four black robed seniors took part in academic procession of college officials marched down the chapel aisles with their white clad sophomore sisters and received their caps from the hands of President Conradi Tuesday night as a symbol of their formal investiture.

Undergraduates and many visitors viewed the ceremony and heard Dr. William G. Dodd, of the College of Arts and Sciences, deliver the address of the evening give the significance of the ritual and the other value in this particular ceremony.

Dodd Speaks

Dr. Dodd began his address: "All men have enjoyed ritual in the past. It is so today in fraternities, sororities, and other organizations. Ritual is necessary to what the mind cannot grasp; to symbolize the thing. Thus the aesthetic sense we are able to understand and enjoy."

The presence of symbolism certain things, age-long and universal in their significance. This is true so we do not attach more to the symbol than its meaning," he said.

On this occasion he asked the seniors to "Dedicate themselves by answering questions. This is the final year of college made me self-reliant?" This quality, he stated, is the basic principle of success. "To be self-reliant will "put iron in one's blood and stiffen one's backbone." Dr. Dodd pointed out that the senior should have a quiet modesty, an assurance, and a consciousness of others. "Society has no use for the self-complacency dependent." he declared.

Freedom Value

"Next," he continued, "has college increased my supply or knowledge." This knowledge is a pleasure, it is not its own end. The senior should be curious with the desire to know, to be spurred on, he said.

"Has college made me open-minded to truth?" is the third question he asked.

'Life' in the Raw Greets F. S. C. Editors at Meet in Chicago

Swedish Dinners, Plays, Included in Convention Trip As Delegates Frolic and Learn

Instructive Meetings

By JEAN STEFFEE

Seeing Life in the raw was but one of the many experiences campus publication editors had at the convention of the National Scholastic Press Association in Chicago.

All delegates went on a tour through the Lakeside press, which prints Life and Time magazines. Complete, colorful speedy, and limited editions of other books. They were also shown through the Lakeside press library, and the Thomas Benton paintings which line the main building. That afternoon delegates inspected the Chicago Tribune plant, where they saw a sound movie called "From Paper to Paper," which told the story of a newspaper from the cutting of timber for newsprint to sending it for sale.

That evening Evelyn Fisher and Pearle Shepard of the Flambeau and Sarah Bealey of the Distaff had dinner at a Swedish restaurant; Eileen Robinson, editor of the Flastacovo, went to an Italian restaurant.

Friday the delegates spent in attending round table discussions and lectures. Evelyn and Pearle heard Robert R. Faculty Members Become All for Greater Glory of Invertebrate Zoology

High tides and strong winds resulted in an exciting boat ride for two members of the college faculty when their class in invertebrate zoology made its third annual excursion to the Gulf last week-end.

The two professors, Dr. Eula May Deviney and Dr. Mildred Irene Bailey, had their class to collect specimens some distance from the mainland. It was not until they started back that they realized the waves and wind were too strong for mere paddles and since their boat had no outlocks, they went at a loss as to how to return. Fortunately there was a broken-down fishing schooner the waterway and, by pulling themselves along its dilapidated pier, they managed to get back safely.

From the trip, the group collected many interesting specimens, worms, egg cases of marine snails which look like sand dollars, native conchs, and hermit crabs. Along with the collection, they brought water from the Gulf so that the marine life could remain alive for study purposes.

The party of twelve spent the night in two cottages at Dog Beach. Among them were Dr. Mildred Irene Bailey, Dr. Eula May Deviney; Dr. Viola Graham, Miss Velma Colon and Miss Margaret Reeder; the students were Eleanore Andrews, Virginia Bridges, Marie Cleveland, Mary Crespo, Florence Evers, Marjorie Stump, and Florence Wagner,

Tragic Accident Kills Two Girls Injures Others

Caroline Blount and Sara Tillman Meet Death; Four Recovering

An automobile accident which claimed the lives of two girls in Gainesville resulted in the death of two, Florida State girls, Sara Tillman and Carolyn Blount. The other college girls in the party, Ann Cook, Dorothy Bost, and Dorothea Ruff—and William Kendall, Florida student, are seriously injured.

The party left Tallahassee at about 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning with Mr. Harrell in Carolyn Blount's car, to attend the Swanee-Florida football game. The car was loaded with the girls by stopages in the gas line and they ran out of gas a few miles outside of Live Oak. The car was Mayo for gas and later stopped there to have the car recleaned.

On approaching Branford they found the bridge over the river and it is believed that they did not see the approaching train somewhere in the vicinity of Coal Line, which was going north. The train was struck just back of the car hit the steam-box at approximately 12:45 o'clock. The car was dragged by the train and was completely demolished. Carolyn Blount was driving, Sara Tillman sat in the middle, and Mr. Harrell sat on the right side of the front seat. In the back Sara Tillman was on the left, Bestie Clifford, in the center, and Ann Cook, Dorothea Ruff was on the right.

The conductor of the train notified the county office at Wycross, Ga., of the accident. That office notified the doctor at the hospital at Live Oak. In the meantime, some boys from Gainesville passed by the scene of the accident and removed Dorothea Ruff and Mr. Harrell who appeared most in a serious condition from the others. The others were given first aid by the doctor from Live Oak.

An ambulance was sent from Lake City and Sara Tillman, Mary Carolyn Blount's home city, was taken there. Bestie Clifford was taken to the Gainesville and was able to move about. She did not feel hurt, and refused to go to the hospital. Ann Cook was also in accident and removed Dorothea Ruff and Mr. Harrell who appeared most in a serious condition. The others were given first aid by the doctor from Live Oak.

Possibilities Of Coops Here Are Discussed

N. S. F. A. to Investigate Establishment Of Several Units

KELLUM TALKS ON BOOKSTORE

Lockhart, Lewis, Joubert Speak on Phases Of Cooperatives

Cooperatives and the possibility of their existence on the Florida State college campus was the subject of the discussions in the N.S.F.A. forum held this week.

As a result of a series of talks, plans were made to investigate the possibilities of the students establishing a second-hand book store, a cooperative bakery for college students, and a cooperative restaurant. Students who would like to serve on the investigating committees are asked to see Nell Childs, chairman of the N.S.F.A. committee.

Kellum Explains

Following talks which dealt not only with the history of the cooperatives, but also with evidences of this movement on collegiate campuses throughout the one, J. G. Kellum, business manager, explained the operation of the bookstore. He explained that the store's profit of 10 per cent goes into a fund and the secondhand books which it sells is used not only in building up the stock of the store, but also in the student loan fund. At the present time, $1,000 is the contribution of the bookstore for the loan fund, but the total amounts approximately to $7,000.

The origin of cooperatives in England, Rochdale, was given by Arline Gray Lockhart. She explained the first cooperative society saved $140 in its first year and opened a grocery store. It is here it had increased tremendously and owned stores and wagon trains.

A cooperative is operated at cost and all surplus is distributed among the members, she explained. The company is controlled by the members, each of whom has only one vote regardless of the number he may have in it, Arline stated. Four types of activity taken up are, in general, cooperative banks, the agricultural and production. This tends to transform the spirit of private ownership of production and distribution to that of social ownership or consumer ownership and production for use.

Sino-Japanese War Is Topic For A.A.U.W.

Mrs. Paul F. Fixner And Miss Sara Meador Are Speakers

Information directly from the Far East about the conditions in Japan and China was brought to the Tallahassee branch of the American Association of University Women Tuesday by Mrs. Paul F. Fixner, and Miss Sara Meador, economics instructor at the Florida State college, who spoke to the society of their experiences in these countries.

"We, the People of Japan," was the subject of Mrs. Fixner's discussion. She told largely of the power conditions and matters of educational interest. Although laborers are paid only a starving wage, they must work regardless whether the task is to cultivate a rice field or to pull heavy loads as beasts of burden, she said. She observed that Japanese children appeared small under years of age, and dully uninentional, and that the women were not considered with the respect shown their sex in other countries. Only men may attend the imperial universities in Japan.

On the positive side, Mrs. Fixner said she was impressed by the cleanliness and neatness of the Japanese people, and also impressed the wish that Americans strive to become better acquainted with the Japanese and treat them in a neighborly manner. Mrs. Fixner attended a meeting of the world Federation of National Education associations this summer in the orient.

A short trip over China with particular emphasis on Shanghai, where she spent the greater part of the time, featured Miss Meador's talk. Her tour included places were impressed upon her by some of the other sights she saw. As for dress, Miss Meador commented that the natives dress comfort mainly.

Because of the war threat occasioned by the Japanese invasion of China, Miss Meador returned to America earlier than she had planned.

Hostesses for the speakers of the evening was Miss Mildred Pinkerton, chairman of the program committee.

Dr. Anna Popper, president of the organization announced that new members pointing out some of the high standards of membership with a membership of $5,000 graduates of accredited colleges.

The meeting was held at Ruge hall after a dinner for the members served from 6 to at 6:30 o'clock Miss Glenna and her social committee served the dinner.

Organization Skits Planned For Freshmen

Humor and Information To Feature Program Saturday Night

DANCING IN GYM TO FOLLOW PLAYS

7 Groups Will Perform For New Students In Auditorium

"Laugh and learn" is the evident motto motivating the different groups who will participate in Organization night to be held tomorrow night at 7:45 o'clock in the college auditorium. Freshmen and transfer students, especially, are invited to the skit presentations of the following organizations: Young Women's Christian association, Mortar Board, Flastacovo, Spirogyra, Flambeau, Distaff, and Women's Athletic association.

The purpose of this program is to aid the student in familiarizing herself with the different organizations on this campus. By watching what each organization stands for, and what its main activities are, it is intended that the student will be able sooner to find her proper place in the extra-curricular life of the campus

Ten Minutes Allowed

Each organization will be allowed ten minutes in which to present the skit planned. Most of the skits will be amusing but at the same time will try to convey the public sheriff in a good sense of the work which is undertaken by the various organizations presented.

The Flastacovo has promised a hilarious skit under the direction of Betty Wynn, showing the origin and life of the annual. Be ever to come out on this campus, and how it came about.

Y. W. Will Pantomime

Betty Ingerman has decided on a pantomime program to show the activities of the Young Women's Christian association. A reader will give a brief explanation of the work carried on by Y. W. C. A. and the various projects will be pantomimed to what the readers is saying. The subjects will be: monthly church service, "Y" cabinet, vespers, playground, and freshman group.

Mary Sullivan, Leona Howe and Dorothy Barclay have written a humorous skit called "A Night at the Flambeau" which will put the Flambeau staff putting out the paper at the Democrat in the typical rushed Thursday night take off.

Dorothea Marsh will give a short talk with general information about the Distaff at its program.

Tracy Speaks At Convention

Says Art of Cooking In South Developed As It Might Be

The South has "not developed the art of cookery as it might." This was the opinion a food expert of Florida State college, Miss Tracy, newly elected president of the southern home economics, gave in an interview at Richmond, Va., while attending the association's annual convention there.

In the South "we have all the resources that civilization could call for, but we have not developed the cuisine to the extent that we should" she went on to say The new executive stated that the South could learn to cook—and exploit—the many "local culinaries" which are found in good old fried chicken and syllabub.

Miss Tracy is a native of the gulf, fruits, vegetables and a potential dairy industry which needed development. Due to the attention to plantation dishes, we have developed from these old foods and from the old frontiers Black-eyed peas can be delectable."

Miss Tracy maintained that "the art of cookery" has been to selected here As a remedial measure, she proposed that the school train the young people in the vocation of food management and preparation. She pointed out that we many now have this session for other persons.

Miss Tracy is the first president of the association in the southern group.

Church Groups Arrange Varied Entertainments

Baptists Hold Convention, Methodists Will Go To Lake Bradford

The various church groups on campus have arranged a varied program of week-end activities, including a convention in Lake City, a trip to camp, an after-dinner coffee, and an informal get-together.

A large group of F. S. C. W. students will attend the State Baptist student convention being held at Lake City this week-end. It is scheduled to open at 7 o'clock this evening and to run through four o'clock Sunday afternoon.

The theme of the program will be "Truth and Freedom for Christ." Among the speakers are Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the First Baptist church, Tallahassee; Dr. Ryland Knight, pastor of the Ponce de Leon church, Atlanta; Dr. Frank Leavell, South-wide student secretary, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. Charles Maddry, Avon-dale Baptist church, Jacksonville; Dr. W. L. Halstead, Lake City; Dr. W. O. Strachner, Madison; Dr. W. B. Allen, President Stetson University, DeLand; Dr. C. M. Brittain, executive secretary of State Mission board, Jacksonville.

Florida State college students who will not get on the program are: Mary Ellen Tharpe, local B. S. U. president; Marie Wood Millan, Alicia Meacham, Elsie Renfroe, Mildred Green, and Miss Billie Ruth Curren, Baptist student secretary.

Doris McCullough will be in charge of a banquet to be held at the convention on Saturday night.

Tomorrow afternoon a group of about 70 Methodist students will leave for camp. An outdoor worship service will be held Saturday afternoon, and a Sunday school and worship service will be held at the camp Sunday morning. The subject of the morning service will be "Finding God Through Nature."

Regular Sunday school services will be held at the Methodist church for those students who do not go to camp.

An informal afternoon coffee was held from four to six Thursday in the Methodist Student house in honor of Mrs. J. W. Dowda, Memphis, Tenn.

Tonight Rose Hall will hold its regular Friday night after-dinner coffee. On Sunday, Oct. 24, there will be a celebration of Holy Communion at 7:15 a. m. The usual after-dinner coffee will not be held. Ali Esmond Trotter, who is being invited to a Freshman banquet, which is given every year for new students.

Confirmation classes are being held every Wednesday from 5:30 to 6:00 p. m. at Rose hall. Anyone who is interested is welcome.

Tomorrow night a group of Presbyterian students will meet at the home of Mrs. Malcheuprof for an informal get-together. There Presbyterian gatherings are held each week at the homes of different students members for the purpose of letting the students get to know each other and the church members better. They will meet next week with Dr. Rogers.

Conradi Gives Senior Status To 271 Girls

question Dr. Dodd presented to the seniors. He mentioned that this calls forth the question of what is truth. In the past it has been learned that the truth always holds good, he continued. If it is truth, there is nothing to fear. An open-minded person extends this acceptance of truth to that which is even unpalatable to her, he pointed out.

"Has college helped you to begin to achieve a true perspective?" he further questioned. By doing this, he explained, can you see life, see its whole, in its relationships? Dr. Dodd stated that until this was accomplished college had failed in one of its aims.

Queries Graduates

As the final query for the candidate for graduation this year, he asked, "Has college helped me become more attuned to nature and all the life around?" This brings in the training of the emotional side of the individual. He then read several poems and asked if the girls had enjoyed them. If they had, he declared, then they could answer this question affirmatively.

In conclusion, Dr. Dodd

brought out the point that he had thus far mentioned nothing about the headaches of curriculum. He has opportunity the state offered and gave the senior girls. He said that of course the state expected to get good citizens but it did not necessarily want the college students to dedicate their lives to social service. This state desires a well-rounded, complete, harmonious development. "How far is this attempt successful with me?" should be the senior's inquiry of herself, he concluded.

Following this address, Miss Margaret Dow, professor of organ, played the selection "Vision." Dr. Conradi gave the benediction. The seniors marched out of the auditorium to the recessional "Coronation March."

Light and Costume Effects Displayed

Fire drilling was dramatized last night by light and costume effects. Anxious to wear their newly earned caps and gowns a number of the seniors in Oglethorpe hastily donned their mortarboards and robes and rushed out of the building in academic file. And at the same time flash light bulbs brightened up the campus as an annual photographers snapped pictures of the human tropical stunted round table discussions of yearbook editors. Spare moments she spent in looking for lost friends, heard honor ratings announced in the lobby of Westcott, where the convention was held. She said that Florida State's yearbook was by far the best.

Sarah heard Eric Lundgren, most advantageous ways to use the convention during this year other authority tell of photographs in magazines. Pat Burns, editor of Seminole Editor, spoke about planning the annual.

At the last meeting of the convention on Saturday morning, Vincent O'Brien, editorial columnist, Chicago Daily News, told of newspaper gatherings as the person who buys the newspaper. He also told of the government should have newspaper publishers state how much money is in newspaper and other enterprises." He also advised newspapers to buy small newspapers.

All the girls stayed at the Medinah Club across Michigan Boulevard from the Wrigley building. Sarah said that the girls said they joined other Southern delegates in marching in the parade of the Big Apple. The Florida group also found time to do the big "Shag" which said they thought. "Tallahassee is really driving miles and miles, they came to a large dam and a small town at the other end," Sarah said. They also asked a villager where they were. Mainland, he answered. They drove 24 miles back to the highway.

Boxing Matches, Departure of Gators for Mississippi And Plans of Blue Key Society Feature Campus News

By BILL JIBB

The smell of the resin, sweaty leather, the rat tap tap of the gloves in the ring, the bumph bumph of the leather hitting the sand bag and the tappity tappity tap of the rope hitting the floor is familiar scene in the old gym this week. The boys are putting on those last minute snaps in their training periods before next Monday.

For it is on Monday night that the inter-campus boxing championship matches will begin. In the past years the officials have had to crown three sets of champions, one for the fraternity, one fraternity and independent.

This year, however, the three groups have been combined and the best of the bouts will be chosen twisted ears and crooked lips will emerge new champions of the campus in each of the weights. Kesner competition and rougher tactics is expected as those in the know. The matches should bring forth some wonderful pugilistic material. Coach Percy Proctor can enter his attention.

Headed by Roy Benjamin, president of Sigma Delta Chi, honorary journalistic fraternity, the members of the organization will visit Tallahassee on Nov. 13 and 14 to edit the Daily Democrat. This is a yearly undertaking of the fraternity and they have editorial papers in the past years as far south as Tulsa and as far north as Georgia. It is said that another Citadel trip is planned this year during the Christmas holidays.

During the week Gates the Florida Press Association will hold it's convention in the capital city. So the Sigma Delta Chi boys are silling to strike with one stone killing the paper and also creating contacts for future jobs next June when they enter the state field of newspaper work.

The Fighting Gators departed for State College, Miss., on Thursday amid the cheering of the entire student body. Saturday the Gators will play the Ole Miss in battle with the Mississippi State eleven. Handling the broadcast of the game will be two WRUF staff announcers, George Walsh and Daniel Hiss whose radio name is Dan Daniels!

Harry Calaiter will be among those missing when the team lines up on the field Saturday. He is now in the Infirmary where he is recovering from pneumonia. It is said that so many of you to know that he is much improved and is coming through the crisis last week-end.

President George Smathers said today that the student loan fund of the University of Florida would be named the Dean Tolbert Student Loan Fund before the end of the semester. This is in honor of the man who through his conciencious efforts in behalf of deserving students originated the idea of a fund from which students may borrow funds to cover incidental expenses. It will be a living memorial to a man whom those who know him shall never forget.

The past week several outstanding members of Blue Key Society and officials of the University of Florida have made transcriptions at Radio Station WRUF to be used to publicize the annual celebration held each year at the University to honor the alumni and which is sponsored by Blue Key.

Among the outstanding activities on the program so far have been George Smathers, president of the student body; Seldan Waldo, chairman of the homecoming activities; Ben Krentzman, president of Blue Key; Dr. J. J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida; Coach Josh Cody, head football coach; Rabbi Robbins orchestra and the Glee club.

Maj. Garland Powell, director of WRUF and chairman of the committee in charge of this affair, is chairman of the ideas. It will do more toward publicizing the event, for which thousands come each year than anything else, than anything attempted before.

Three Topics Discussed At Club Meeting

The Moon, Constellations, And Solar System Are Taken Up

"The Legend of the Moon," "Constellation of October Precession," and "Our Solar System" were the main topics of discussion at the Astronomy club meeting on Wednesday night. Louise Thrasher told the club the interesting legend of the moon, and Florence Even discussed October Pegasus and its constellation.

Glades Ware, president of the club, gave bits of information about the solar system, its origin and description. She also explained the terms magnitude, light year, meridian, ecliptic circle, and eclipse.

The club has just acquired a new room located in 423 Westcott building. The astronomy books are to be kept here, and the executive council composed of the officers of the club will hold its meetings. Louise Rice is chairman of the club room.

Next Wednesday the club will make telescopic observations of Jupiter. The Milne telescope and field glasses will be used at this time. The group will also observe the cluster of the Pleiades and the double star Albireo in Cygnus, the swan.

student body received brief, guarded messages from persons who had been with the girls earlier in the afternoon. After finding out who had been in the car when it left Tallahassee, she called Dean Mary Gainesville and found that Dorothy and Dr. Harrell were there. She later located Bessie Clifford and left with Miss Katherine Warren for Lake City.

The parents of the girls were notified. Arrangements were made for the funerals of Sara and Carolyn. The other girls were given treatment and are progressing nicely.

Bebie Clifford suffered from bruises of the knees and a slight leak of a blood vessel in her knee which had to be drained. She is expected to return to school in a few days. Dorothea Buff will remain in the hospital at Gainesville for at least two weeks. Her leg was broken between the knee and hip and she suffered head injuries. Mary Maasery's jaw was broken and the doctor at Lake City reported that it was set together. She was taken Wednesday to a bone specialists, in Jacksonville. Mr. Harrell reported internal injuries but will be able to leave Gainesville this week-end for Tallahassee. Neither Dorothea nor Mary will return to school this year.

Goats Become Club Members

"F" Goats Put Through Their Paces at Camp

The goating term for the "F" goats was terminated last week-end when, after a series of trying experiences, they were finally initiated into the "F" club.

The actives, not content with being able to punish the goats just at camp, started by having some of the goats walk out when others rode. Others who rode got the worst of the bargain because they had to work as soon as the reached their destination.

Some of those walking rebelled at the treatment and refused to ride, saying to be put on! without a quarter-of-mile of camp in order that the active might learn of it. But they were forced because the others rode by, saw them, and reported that they were down in front immediately three infuriated tives came out and ordered the goats to walk the remainder. When one goat found situation funny, she was ordered to wipe the smile off her face with her hand.

Two little goats were sometions about their ability to perform what is all way, refusing all rides.

When the goats finally arrived, the actives cracked whip and made them do stunts. Some were made to flirt; nightgowns to put on plays acted out for the benefit of their "mamas."

That night court was held and the goats were initiated. Those initiated were Sarah Lytle Nash, Alice Meacham, Ruth Ann McClain, Frances Wardlaw, Virginia Pilcher, Sarah Ann Ernestine Makemson, Margaret Walcott, Betty White, Mercer Cox and Norene Marchessault. Miss Averill.

Gainesville Reporter Sends University Glimpses to Tally
Boxing Matches, Departure of Gators for Mississippi And Plans of Blue Key Society Feature Campus News
By BILL JIBB
The smell of the resin, sweaty leather, the rat tap tap of the gloves in the ring, the bumph bumph of the leather hitting the sand bag and the tappity tappity tap of the rope hitting the floor is familiar scene in the old gym this week. The boys are putting on those last minute snaps in their training periods before next Monday.
For it is on Monday night that the inter-campus boxing championship matches will begin. In the past years the officials have had to crown three sets of champions, one for the fraternity, one fraternity and independent.
This year, however, the three groups have been combined and the best of the bouts will be chosen twisted ears and crooked lips will emerge new champions of the campus in each of the weights. Kesner competition and rougher tactics is expected as those in the know. The matches should bring forth some wonderful pugilistic material. Coach Percy Proctor can enter his attention.
Headed by Roy Benjamin, president of Sigma Delta Chi, honorary journalistic fraternity, the members of the organization will visit Tallahassee on Nov. 13 and 14 to edit the Daily Democrat. This is a yearly undertaking of the fraternity and they have editorial papers in the past years as far south as Tulsa and as far north as Georgia. It is said that another Citadel trip is planned this year during the Christmas holidays.
During the week Gates the Florida Press Association will hold it's convention in the capital city. So the Sigma Delta Chi boys are silling to strike with one stone killing the paper and also creating contacts for future jobs next June when they enter the state field of newspaper work.
The Fighting Gators departed for State College, Miss., on Thursday amid the cheering of the entire student body. Saturday the Gators will play the Ole Miss in battle with the Mississippi State eleven. Handling the broadcast of the game will be two WRUF staff announcers, George Walsh and Daniel Hiss whose radio name is Dan Daniels!
Harry Calaiter will be among those missing when the team lines up on the field Saturday. He is now in the Infirmary where he is recovering from pneumonia. It is said that so many of you to know that he is much improved and is coming through the crisis last week-end.
President George Smathers said today that the student loan fund of the University of Florida would be named the Dean Tolbert Student Loan Fund before the end of the semester. This is in honor of the man who through his conciencious efforts in behalf of deserving students originated the idea of a fund from which students may borrow funds to cover incidental expenses. It will be a living memorial to a man whom those who know him shall never forget.
The past week several outstanding members of Blue Key Society and officials of the University of Florida have made transcriptions at Radio Station WRUF to be used to publicize the annual celebration held each year at the University to honor the alumni and which is sponsored by Blue Key.
Among the outstanding activities on the program so far have been George Smathers, president of the student body; Seldan Waldo, chairman of the homecoming activities; Ben Krentzman, president of Blue Key; Dr. J. J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida; Coach Josh Cody, head football coach; Rabbi Robbins orchestra and the Glee club.
Maj. Garland Powell, director of WRUF and chairman of the committee in charge of this affair, is chairman of the ideas. It will do more toward publicizing the event, for which thousands come each year than anything else, than anything attempted before.

Church Groups Arrange Varied Entertainments
Baptists Hold Convention, Methodists Will Go To Lake Bradford
The various church groups on campus have arranged a varied program of week-end activities, including a convention in Lake City, a trip to camp, an after-dinner coffee, and an informal get-together.
A large group of F. S. C. W. students will attend the State Baptist student convention being held at Lake City this week-end. It is scheduled to open at 7 o'clock this evening and to run through four o'clock Sunday afternoon.
The theme of the program will be "Truth and Freedom for Christ." Among the speakers are Dr. L. R. Christie, pastor of the First Baptist church, Tallahassee; Dr. Ryland Knight, pastor of the Ponce de Leon church, Atlanta; Dr. Frank Leavell, South-wide student secretary, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. Charles Maddry, Avon-dale Baptist church, Jacksonville; Dr. W. L. Halstead, Lake City; Dr. W. O. Strachner, Madison; Dr. W. B. Allen, President Stetson University, DeLand; Dr. C. M. Brittain, executive secretary of State Mission board, Jacksonville.
Florida State college students who will not get on the program are: Mary Ellen Tharpe, local B. S. U. president; Marie Wood Millan, Alicia Meacham, Elsie Renfroe, Mildred Green, and Miss Billie Ruth Curren, Baptist student secretary.
Doris McCullough will be in charge of a banquet to be held at the convention on Saturday night.
Tomorrow afternoon a group of about 70 Methodist students will leave for camp. An outdoor worship service will be held Saturday afternoon, and a Sunday school and worship service will be held at the camp Sunday morning. The subject of the morning service will be "Finding God Through Nature."
Regular Sunday school services will be held at the Methodist church for those students who do not go to camp.
An informal afternoon coffee was held from four to six Thursday in the Methodist Student house in honor of Mrs. J. W. Dowda, Memphis, Tenn.
Tonight Rose Hall will hold its regular Friday night after-dinner coffee. On Sunday, Oct. 24, there will be a celebration of Holy Communion at 7:15 a. m. The usual after-dinner coffee will not be held. Ali Esmond Trotter, who is being invited to a Freshman banquet, which is given every year for new students.
Confirmation classes are being held every Wednesday from 5:30 to 6:00 p. m. at Rose hall. Anyone who is interested is welcome.
Tomorrow night a group of Presbyterian students will meet at the home of Mrs. Malcheuprof for an informal get-together. There Presbyterian gatherings are held each week at the homes of different students members for the purpose of letting the students get to know each other and the church members better. They will meet next week with Dr. Rogers.
Conradi Gives Senior Status To 271 Girls

question Dr. Dodd presented to the seniors. He mentioned that this calls forth the question of what is truth. In the past it has been learned that the truth always holds good, he continued. If it is truth, there is nothing to fear. An open-minded person extends this acceptance of truth to that which is even unpalatable to her, he pointed out.
"Has college helped you to begin to achieve a true perspective?" he further questioned. By doing this, he explained, can you see life, see its whole, in its relationships? Dr. Dodd stated that until this was accomplished college had failed in one of its aims.
Queries Graduates
As the final query for the candidate for graduation this year, he asked, "Has college helped me become more attuned to nature and all the life around?" This brings in the training of the emotional side of the individual. He then read several poems and asked if the girls had enjoyed them. If they had, he declared, then they could answer this question affirmatively.
In conclusion, Dr. Dodd

brought out the point that he had thus far mentioned nothing about the headaches of curriculum. He has opportunity the state offered and gave the senior girls. He said that of course the state expected to get good citizens but it did not necessarily want the college students to dedicate their lives to social service. This state desires a well-rounded, complete, harmonious development. "How far is this attempt successful with me?" should be the senior's inquiry of herself, he concluded.
Following this address, Miss Margaret Dow, professor of organ, played the selection "Vision." Dr. Conradi gave the benediction. The seniors marched out of the auditorium to the recessional "Coronation March."
Two Are Added To Department
Art Division Includes New Instructors To Complete Force
Two new teachers have been added to the staff of the art department for 1937-38. They are Miss Lillian Canfield, who is taking Mrs. Brage Baldwin's place, and Miss Mary Mooty, a graduate of Florida State.
Miss Canfield has studied in both foreign and American universities. She received her Master's degree from Johns Hopkins. She has taught and Ph.D. at the University of Pennsylvania, and attended the University of Berlin, the University of Munich, and New York University.
Miss Mooty did graduate work at Columbia University, New York city.
The art department plans to graduates who desire work. Many are positions in New York city; one is assistant buyer for a large department store; and another assistant stage designer under Leif Simonson, famous stage producer. Other positions held by alumnae include that of stage costumer, fashion artist in the display department of a large department store, member of the faculty of the Parsons School of Display, and owner of a textile and design shop. Two former Florida State colleges students hold scholarships in New York University and the Art Students' League, respectively.
Two courses are required in the local college art department are: humanities, design, drawing, figure sketching, drawing and painting in lettering, composition, mechanical drawing, perspective, history of ancient and medieval art art of the Renaissance, modern art, and design.
Other courses offered which are not considered studio courses are puppetry, costume illustration, commercial drawing, interior decoration, elementary life drawing and water color.
Mrs. R. B. Williams, head of the department, has had a versatile training in the arts. She attended the Chicago Art Institute, University of Chicago, Kentucky School of Art in Louisville, British Academy in Rome, a private studio in Paris, Columbia university in New York, and the New York School of Fine and Applied Art.

Goats Become Club Members
"F" Goats Put Through Their Paces at Camp
The goating term for the "F" goats was terminated last week-end when, after a series of trying experiences, they were finally initiated into the "F" club.
The actives, not content with being able to punish the goats just at camp, started by having some of the goats walk out when others rode. Others who rode got the worst of the bargain because they had to work as soon as the reached their destination.
Some of those walking rebelled at the treatment and refused to ride, saying to be put on! without a quarter-of-mile of camp in order that the active might learn of it. But they were forced because the others rode by, saw them, and reported that they were down in front immediately three infuriated tives came out and ordered the goats to walk the remainder. When one goat found situation funny, she was ordered to wipe the smile off her face with her hand.
Two little goats were sometions about their ability to perform what is all way, refusing all rides.
When the goats finally arrived, the actives cracked whip and made them do stunts. Some were made to flirt; nightgowns to put on plays acted out for the benefit of their "mamas."
That night court was held and the goats were initiated. Those initiated were Sarah Lytle Nash, Alice Meacham, Ruth Ann McClain, Frances Wardlaw, Virginia Pilcher, Sarah Ann Ernestine Makemson, Margaret Walcott, Betty White, Mercer Cox and Norene Marchessault. Miss Averill.

Alumnae Raise Project Funds

Treasurer Gives Report To Association At Meeting

A total of $1 414 10 was raised by the Alumnae Association last year to help carry ou the various projects of the organization

Of th's amount $757 57 went into the treasury of the association to pay general expenses, $411 17 into the Student-Alumnae Building Fund, $169 70 into the Alumnae College Fund, and $75 66 into the Anna Chaires Loan Fund.

The report of the treasurer, given at the annual alumnae meeting, shows that the $757.57 was secured as follows: $409.00, from life membership dues, $295.50, annual dues, $48 07, Faculty Play, and $5 00, gift from an alumna Expenses paid from the alumnae treasury totaled $501.36 and were for salary of the alumnae secretary, travel expenses, alumnae awards, clerical work, supplies, and incidental expenses.

Of the amount applied to the Student-Alumnae Building Fund, $214.00 was raised by alumnae clubs, $127.17 from the "Alumnae Birthday Party": $60.00, from individual alumnae and $10 00, from outside organizations Alumnae clubs contributing include, Key West, $50 00, St. Petersburg, $50 00 Dixie county, $28 00; Broward county, $25.00, Miami, $21 00 Clearwater, $20.00, Lake county $10 00, and Pompano Branch of Broward county club, $10 00 Only $105 00 of the $214 00 from the alumnae clubs reached the alumnae office to be included in the 1936-37 report, the remaining amount of $114.00 being sent the office in the early summer

The amount of $75 66 was raised this past year toward paying off the deficit of $100 00 in the Anna Chaires Loan Fund The deficit was caused by the death of the alumna who held the loan. The $75.66 was secured as follows: alumnae clubs, $37.00; alumnae committee in charge, $14.45 gift from an alumna, $5.00 contributions at alumnae meeting, $19 36.

From the report of the Alumnae college committee, total receipts from registration fees amounted to $169 70. The total cost of the Alumnae college was $57.91, which covered the cost of mimeographing, printing postal cards, laundry, and incidentals As all items except the amount of $11 01 for laundry and incidentals were paid by the Alumnae Office, the balance in the fund of the Alumnae college is 158 69 which will be used to partially finance the second Alumnae college in the spring of 1938

The amount raised by the Alumnae Association is supplemented each year by an allowance from the college for the maintenance of the Alumnae office.

Atlanta Club To Be Started On November 1

Other Associations Plan For First Meetings During Month

Organization for a Florida State College Alumnae club in Atlanta, Ga, is set for Monday night, November 1, when Atlanta alumnae will meet at the Cox-Carlton hotel for a dinner meeting, with President Edward Conradi as their guest.

Tribute Given Vice-President

Resolution Honoring Late Professor Williams Adopted by AA

The Alumnae association paid its respects to the memory of the late Professor Arthur Williams, college vice-president for 23 years, in resolutions recently adopted here

The resolutions follow:

"In the passing of Professor Arthur Williams affectionately known as "Mr. Pi" to hundreds of alumnae of the Florida State College for Women, the Alumnae association of the college sustains a severe loss in a long tried and true friend. Many girls throughout the nation, state, and community who had the privilege of knowing Professor Williams through contacts in the class room and on the campus are grieved that their friend will no longer greet them in his cordial way on their return to the campus. He will be genuinely missed by all who knew him.

"Professor Williams through his high ideals, keen intellect, extensive travel and study, religious experience and training, was able to exert an influence of the highest type over his students. His scholarly mind was recognized by all who were privileged to study under him.

"Many girls have expressed themselves that to know the unique character of "Mr. Pi" was an education in itself. Possessed of rare wit and sense of humor, he was able to lead many a girl over the stumbling blocks and hardships which come in the natural course of a girl's college life He was held in the highest

Association President Greets Former Students Of Florida State College in Formal Welcome

I gladly take this opportunity to greet every former Florida State College for Women girl. The Alumnae Association is justly proud of her membership because many of you have brought distinction to your Alma Mater and all the rest of you have been contributing to the life of your respective communities in some worth-while way, whether it be called "distinctive" or not. By your contacts on the college campus you gleaned many high ideals of service and it is my hope that these ideals have been put into deeds and that the standard of the Florida State College for Women will ever be kept high by the lives and influence of her daughters

The Alumnae Association appreciates your loyalty. We trust that it may increase from year to year: that your activities and contributions in many other ways to the Alumnae Association and to the college may become so helpful that they will be not only outstanding but inspiring to the general life of our state and country.

The Alumnae Office is now back in its former quarters, Room 204 Westcott Building (formerly Administration Building). When any of you are in Tallahassee, drop in and make yourselves at home.

Cordially yours,
BETH WALTON MOOR,
(Mrs. Frank D. Moor)
President, F. S. C. W.

Reunion Dinner Held

A Florida State College Reunion dinner was held Monday night, October 18, in Richmond, Virginia, at the time of the meeting of the American Dietetic association. Chairman of the dinner was Miss Margaret McDonald, dietitian at St. Lukes Hospital in Richmond.

Among those attending the dinner were faculty members and alumnae attending the meeting of the American Dietetic association, F. S. C. W alumnae in Richmond, as well as former faculty members and other friends of the college.

Various Honors Held By Alums

Numerous Alumnae Work Throughout Country At Many Honors

That Florida State college alumnae are holding places of distinction in many fields is shown by various reports which have reached the alumnae office this summer and fall.

Mrs. Clara McDonald Olson, '14, who in 1936 was awarded the alumnae medallion for distinction in the field of education, has returned from a year's leave of absence as director of curriculum, division of education, Florida Works Progress administration, to her position as head of the Latin department of the P. K Yonge laboratory school of the University of Florida in Gainesville. A news clipping in June regarding Mrs. Olson states: "Mrs. Clara M. Olson has been called to Washington by Dr. L. R. Alderman, national director of emergency education, to serve on a committee to study curriculum materials developed by all the state emergency education programs and make recommendations for courses of study for the ensuing year. Other members of the committee are Mrs. Martha Buttrick, specialist in parent education, Vermont; Miss H. I. Ichermerhorn, specialist in education and naturalization of the foreign born, New Jersey; Mrs. Nina Otero-Warren, specialist in problems of the Spanish speaking people of the southeast, New Mexico; and Miss Marguerite Gilmore, specialist in workers' education, Chicago. Mrs. Olson, who has created material that has won national recognition in the field of literacy-education, and who is regarded as a specialist in general curriculum problems, will

Moore Elected To Presidency In First Vote

New Officer Will Succeed Mrs. E. L. Beeson As Group Head

Mrs. Frank D. Moor (Beth Walton '18) of Tallahassee was unanimously elected president of the Alumnae Association at the annual alumnae meeting, May 29. She succeeded Mrs. E. L .Beeson (Cecil Jenkins '18) of Inverness.

Other officers elected were: Mrs. S Marion Salley (Sadie Spencer) Miami, vice-president; Miss Katherine Warren, Tallahassee, recording secretary, Miss Clarissa Knight, Tallahassee, treasurer: Miss Rowena Longmire, Tallahassee, and Mrs Cecil Jenkins Beeson, Tallahassee, representatives at large.

District directors chosen were: Mrs. Hugh Middlebrooks, Marianna; Miss Gladys Folson, Cross City; Miss Ruth Persons, Lake City; Mrs. J. W. Passemore (Josephine Drane), Lakeland; Mrs. E C. Nilson, Dorothy Johnson), Orlando; Louise Houck, Sebring; Maud McCall, Clearwater; and Charlotte Chase, Miami.

Following the resignation of Miss Ruth Persons in August, due to the fact that she was moving from her district, the president appointed Miss Mary Newton Green of Live Oak to fill the vacancy created.

Mrs. Moor has had excellent training for the office of president of the Alumnae association, having been a member of the Alumnae Board for a number of years in addition to serving on numerous committees of the association. She also has a rich experience of nineteen years' work in practically every kind of community activity for women.

Following graduation from Florida State College for Women in 1918, Mrs. Moor went immediately into war work as assistant in the Service Cafeteria at the Navy yard in Pensacola, until the Armistice was signed.

For six years she taught home economics and mathematics in Pensacola High school. At the same time she conducted classes in dietetics for the nurses in training at the Pensacola Hospital and classes for house wives in home economics under the State Department of Vocational Education. For three summers during this time, she taught in the summer school at Florida State College for Women. She was appointed on the first state grad ng committee for teachers' examinations by Mr W. S. Cawthon, former state superintendent of education, and served for a number of years.

Since receiving her degree at Florida State College for Women, Mrs. Moor has attended summer sessions at the University of California at Berkely, Florida State College for Women, and Harvard university in Cambridge, Mass., taking special work in home economics, mathematics, economics, and psychology.

Mrs. Moor has been a resident of Tallahassee since 1824, where she has taken an active part in community affairs. She is primarily a home-maker and has two children, Bill aged 10, and Bettie aged 8

The new alumnae president has served as treasurer and financial chairman of the drive for the Girl Scouts for two drives, on the Girl Scout Council for five years, as president of the Method'st Woman's auxiliary, chairman of the local work of the Methodist church, Superintenednt of the Junior department in Sunday school, and teacher of the college girls' class.

Mrs. Moor is a charter member of the Tallahassee Garden club, serving now on the executive council. She is well known among tha Garden clubs of Florida, having appeared on local, district, and state programs of this organization. She is also a member of the executive council of the Tallahassee Woman's club and a member of the Library club of Tallahassee.

In 1936 Mrs. Moor served as chairman of the Governor's Inaugural Reception ,and also as general chairman of the women at the State Rotary Convention which met in Tallahassee She has decorated for many conventions and managed and decorated for many community and state affairs.

For the past two years Mrs. Moor has served as president of the Parent-Teacher association of the Sealey Memorial elementary school.

Alumnae Notes

EDITOR'S NOTE Miss Anna May Tracy, Chairman of the Faculty Committee on Cooperation with the Alumnae, has agreed to write a column each month for the Alumnae Page of tha Flambeau. Her first contribution appears below.

To the members of the Alumnae association:

This is my first appearance as a columnist! I shall ask your charitable consideration and hope that you will not compare me too critically with my more experienced sisters.

One of the rewards of long service at an institution such as F S. C. W. is the building up of many fine friendships, and, of course, the longer one stays, the more one values opportunities for renewing and maintaining these friendships. This summer's trip during the vacation month of August gave a few such opportunities. I enjoyed seeing some campus friends, now far away from Tallahassee. First, I stopped in Richmond, Virginia, and had a visit with Margaret McDonald, '13. Margaret is now dietitian at St. Luke's hospital, and my visit with her was in part a business one Since the American Dietetic association is meeting in Richmond this year, just as this paper goes to press, it was to be expected that Margaret and I had a great deal of "shop" to talk as well as some personal visiting to do Then when I got farther up the country and stopped at the University Hospital of Cleveland to see Edith Hobson, '36, who is on the dietary staff of that hospital, I also had the pleasure of seeing another F S. C. W. girl, Mary Carson, '36. Mary is in her second year of nurse's training and looked very fine and professional in her uniform and cap. Two others of our alumnae are also connected with this wonderful institution Harriett Lawrence, '36, is a student technician in the School of Pathology and Lucy G Linn, '36 is connected with the Medical Social Service Department It gave me a great thrill to see four of our girls doing such good work in four different departments of one of our finest graduate schools The University Hospital of Cleveland is affiliated with Western Reserve university, and is beautifully located not far from the shore of Lake Erie I could not help but wonder however, how the snows and blizzards of a northern winter, which I used to know so well, please our girls from Florida

Traveling back from Cleveland and heading across New York state, I stopped at Chautauqua Lake, and by chance registered at a hotel under the mangement of Mrs. Dorothy Boal Bierly, '22. Mrs. Bierly has not seen the campus in detail since 1922, so I had great fun trying to tell her something of our fine library, physical education building, Augusta Conradi theater, and other campus improvements since her last visit here.

Wherever I met alumnae, there were many questions asked about the campus, about the size of the present student body, and about many of the faculty. It is always good to see the continued interest that the alumnae show in the campus, for it is of course your campus as well as our campus, even though you are a good many miles away and a good many years have elapsed since some of you left us.

Cordially yours
ANNA M TRACY.

Award Bulletin Being Planned

Alumnae Award of Honor Paper to Be Put Out During December

Work has just been finished on material for the Second Alumnae Award of Honor bulletin, which is expected to be published about December 1.

The bulletin will include pictures of the Alumnae Medallion presented to alumnae for notable distinction in their respective fields of endeavor, the Plan for the Award of Honor, the address given at the Award program by Dr. Clifford P. Lyons, head of the English department at the University of Florida, and pictures and a summary of the activities of those to whom the awards were presented this year. Names of those who received the award last year are also included in the bulletin.

Mrs Dorothy Johnson Nilson of Orlando is chairman of the committee for editing the bulletin She was assisted by Miss Rowena Longmire and Mrs. R. H. Leslie.

To the families of Sara Tillman and Carolyn Blount, both of whom were killed in a tragic automobile accident last Saturday, the students of Florida State college extend their sympathy

Lynching Still Thrives

No matter how cosmopolitan Florida believes itself, under the surface there are still rumblings of the dark egos as manifested by its toleration of lynchings. A paradox—that's Florida with its imposing beautiful cities, the epitome of good taste and luxuriousness on the one hend, while on the other hand there is a lawlessness that as one editorial writer has said is helping Florida to "establish itself as a region where the black clouds of intolerance and disrespect for the law prevail. All because a pitiful handful of citizenry prefers mob rule."

A few weeks ago a Negro was taken from a peace officer in Okaloosa county and shot to death by an armed gang. Last summer Tallahassee was the scene of a flash lynching and just this past week-end mob rule was somehow averted in St. Petersburg by the intervention of the police. In the latter case the Negro who might have been slain by an angry crowd was instead killed by an officer in self defense. But the cries of the crowd of "bring him out, we want to see him," would at least indicate the temper of the mob.

In each of these cases the victim has been a Negro, but then lynching in southern parlance seems always to mean Negro. The Southern sentiment, among those who have not studied the problem but form their ideas in half-truths and in immenons generalities, is that it is through these displays of mob violence that the Negro is kept in his place, in subjugation. Those who defend this institution forget somehow that it is this document that preserves the right of trial for each individual, no matter his coloring. The old adage that two wrongs don't make a right certainly holds true in this case.

The student may wonder how she fits into this picture, how she can possibly he affected by barbaric murders committed by enraged mobs, scenes that she has not been a part of. But the student can only he reminded sanin that she will not always maintain her residence within the isolated walls of an educational institution but that she will be back in her home, perhaps a potential member of roused gang. It is her duty then to be prepared to combat a hysteria of this sort, to be able to "keep her head." Unless the student has taken time to think the problem of racial prejudices through to reason unbiasedly con-cerning the right of trial she can be an easy prey to the emotions of a frenzied crowd.

Self-education along these lines is just another problem facing the college student, but it is certainly an important one particularly "she is to make her home in the South. For until we Southerners stop taking the law in our hands and lose our rabid racial prejudices the South will remain backward, regardless of its other advantages. Until the South routs the lynching mobs by punishment Florida remains shackled by a condemn that might be empnrcd with when hearings in early New England times

Justifying Convention Trotters

Last week six delegates from the three campus publications attended the national convention of the Associated Collegiate Press held in Chicago. Four hundred eighty-one delegates representing 216 publications and 150 colleges and universities were represented in the gathering of collegiate editors of newspapers, magazines, and yearbooks.

As delegates to the convention we, the editors, went as representelives of Florida State. We also went on student activity funds. For both of these reasons we feel that we should present to the student body justification for our trip.

Conventions offer a great amount of personal enjoyment to the delegates. They offer s great deal more. When one comes back it is easy to describe the fun and frolics, but not quite so easy to explain what benefits are derived. We cannot bring any set body of facts to you and say, "Here—this is what we got from the convention." Ideas are intangible things, and it was mostly ideas that we brought home.

First of all we learned a great deal about the technical sides of our respective publications. Well-known authorities advised us as to make-up, material-gathering, and interpretive writing. The only way we can bring this to you is to reflect it in our publications. The magazine and yearbook editors attending their first national convention in the history of their publications were especially benefited by this technical service and advice.

The contacts with other editors secured very valuable to us. Since the 481 other delegates we found these with problems similar to ours. We listened to their solutions and we gave ours. The interplay of ideas here is much broader and more significant than in the smaller state conventions.

The stimulation received from any group with similar interests is important. In such a national convention we found editors making their papers and publications and yearbooks vital organs of student thought, and we were interested in comparing the Flambeau with other papers in this respect. One thing we found very evident—that the members of this student body do not use their paper for an organ of controversial thought and camps debate as much as other schools. In neglecting this function of the Flambeau they are depriving themselves of a valuable mode of expression and reform.

Benefits from the convention must necessarily consist of personal value to the delegate and through the delegate a broadening in the outlook of the white publication. We as delegates hope we have brought back enough of the personal and broader aspect to justify our "convention trotting."

Facing Syphilis Squarely

Although taboo after tahoo has crumbled under the strong light of modern, sane thinking, the taboo of syphilis is still firmly entrenched. Its stronghold is in the minds of some of the older generation—our mothers and fathers to whom the thought of their daughters being subjected to a syphilis test is a personal affront to them.

The intense prejudice covering the subject clouds their minds to any clear thought, however, we cannot put too much blame on these parents. Too long society has covered the subject with layers of misconception and ignorance.

The problem, therefore, is squarely up to the youth of today. In their greater freedom of thought and their approach to subjects heretofore unmentionable, they have escaped the biased, one-sided view of this disease. Theirs is the task of elearing the minds of the older generation of their preconceived ideas of tabooing the problem of syphilis.

One of the first steps in overcoming their prejudice is winning their acquiescence to syphilis tests on students' entrance to college. By detection and help in the early stages, we will have gone a long stride forward in our battle toward prevention of the disease.

Until our parents are educated, however, medical science is still hampered by the bonds which have too long hindered it in its efforts to prevent the disease. The fight is up in the students—its grave responsibility is our challenge. Will we accept it?—From The Lasso, Texas State College for Women.

Seven organizations of the campus are following a precedent set last year by presenting informative skits for the benefit of new students, one of a number of orientation features. This method of explanation of the major fields of extra-curricular activity seems highly commendable since a dramatizes for the new students some of the more interesting phases of campus endeavor.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

America Steps Out

With no unraveling of the various European tangles, American politics did a little stepping on its own this week. Landon, in a radio broadcast from the sanctuary of Topeka, Kansas, lambasted President D. Roosevelt for his Caesar-like attitude and urged the G. O. P. to call all good Americans to the standards of free government. Landon's accusations were based on the president's wasting the last session of Congress in a attempt to put through the Supreme court bill and thus get more power, and on his prompt aim to reorganize the executive branch of the government so as to have every office right under his thumb. He further blamed the president for involving the United States in the Far Eastern situation and for drawing us into the struggle by means of the same propaganda that drew us into the World War.

Allied to this broad bombardment were many specific shots turned on the president by every politco from financial to foreign. With stocks showing some increase, if little stability, F. D. R. chose to ignore this figure when he dedicated the new Federal Reserve building Wednesday. He ignored also the charge advanced by business men that government interference with industry had precipitated the fall of the market. Instead, he generalized on the need for coordination between financial and governmental agencies if the United States is to make the most of her resources. Incidentally, he tried to smooth down one of his bitterest opponents, Senator Glass, by praising his work on the Federal Reserve system.

Glenn Frank, presidential possibility for the next campaign, got in his little dig Saturday when he intimated that F. D. R. was heading us towards a totalitarian state. His fears were not assuaged by the announcement of Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist party in America, that the Communists—won over by Roosevelt's recent change in his foreign policy—were 100 percent behind the President. Browder qualified his statement, however, by promising a fight—the only anti other means of combating reactionism could be obtained.

European events wavered around, half promising solutions to the pressing problem of foreign troops in Spain. The attempts of the non-intervention committee to effect the withdrawal of those troops seemed headed toward failure when Italy and Germany unexpectedly suggested that a five-power commission be sent to the peninsula for the purpose of investigation. They also yielded on their former demand that the Insurgents be granted belligerent rights immediately. Germany, however, instigated her acquiescence in this matter depended somewhat on her chances to do a little territorial expansion of her own.

And Others Say . . . . . .

The cut in the appropriations in the Federal relief program for the National Youth Administration has brought a storm of comment from many directions. From the Kentucky Kernel, The Alabamian, and The University of Cincinnati News Record come the following remarks on the action.

"The National Youth Administration, while only a small part of the Federal relief program, has been one of the most profitable and encouraging efforts of the national government to meet the needs of its citizens.

"Education, even in state-owned institutions, is still a matter of considerable sacrifice. More and more students are finding it impossible to meet this expense without some assistance. The NYA solved this acute problem in a considerable measure.

"Students who could never have made the initial entrance into college life were given encouragement and aid. It is impossible to overestimate the beneficial effects of this national program on the youth of America.

"Last year Congress appropriated $75,000,000. This year the sum has been reduced to $35,-000,000, a drastic cut.

"Throughout the country, students are asking, 'What can we do?' Many active student groups have attempted to draw up plans to meet this crisis. At the American Youth Congress, the American Student Union, the National Student Federation of America, and the Student Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. agreed that it would be disastrous for students to stand idly by. They planned a nation-wide demonstration for October 14, to protest the cut. They advocated petitions, signed by the students, to the President and Congressmen.

"On the duty of every student, no matter what may be his financial situation, to support the effort taken by student groups on the NYA cut."

"All of our parts cannot be active ones, but one letter jotted in the flood of letters to those people who can help the situation may be the important part. Even if we are benefitted directly by the NYA we are students and must rally to the cause of help to our fellow students, believing there is no greater need of the day than aid to the youth who strive for a higher plane of living and culture."

"It is unfortunate that a source of support which has enabled many students to obtain an education which they would have otherwise been financially unable to do so, should be in danger of extinction—and the present cut seems to sign that fate. The NYA is ultimately dropped entirely from the appropriations bill, the administration which has shown such considerable concernment to students in the past.

"It is true that a general upward trend in the financial condition of the nation may warrant a reduction in many of the Federal relief departments, particularly in view of the fact that pressure has been brought to bear by powerful groups who have no more legitimate grievance to offer than unjustifiable against a national debt, but the NYA is one branch of the relief administration which more than justifies itself, and which might well be permanently established rather than even temporarily curtailed."

To this may we add an excerpt from "The Kentucky Kernel" which reads:

"French universities are gradually invoking American standards of educational systems. They are now beginning to adopt fraternities, inter-class athletics and several other features that typify the American university. It is a tribute to us that another nation would install features from our system in theirs."

Magazine Jotting

"The Workers" vs. The Workers By Channing Pollock

"The Workers" has become a "sacred cow" in America, according to Channing Pollock in the October issue of The American Mercury. In the universities of America and all over the world goes on solely because of him and before, he and he only should rule the world.

However, developments in the last few years have knocked some of the plaster off "The Worker" fetish, says Mr. Pollock. The supposed American is impervious to anything that does affect his personal comfort, and this indifferential comfort; he doesn't like being fenced in, he likes to be done things for him. The truth is that nearly everybody in the world is a worker, and that, when this crass truth is the truth, the world, as we know it, will cease to exist. If there are drones, they are more likely to be found among the "laboring class" than anywhere else for the simple reason that only the hired man can live with more than his maximum effort. (B S)

The Two Dictators By Emil Ludwig

In comparing "the two mightiest dictators of our time," Emil Ludwig is much kinder to Mussolini than to Hitler, whom he pictures as a psychotic neurotic.

His article, published in the October issue of Forum, tells how greatly different these two men were in their youth, how Mussolini was filled with energy and ambition from his early years, while Hitler was an idler with no urge to study, utterly lacking in talent, energy or ideas."

Hitler gained control of Germany, Mr. Ludwig explains, because of the peculiar emotional conditions existing in that country after the war. As the time was ripe for coming the strongest leader, and because of his much higher prices, Hitler stepped into the big shoes and emerged victorious.

The point that will Hitler possesses according to Mr. Ludwig, is the power of oratory. He hypnotizes the people through his burst of torical hysterics, and it is for this reason he is kept in power by a half dozen "assassins" who in reality overshadow him. On the other hand, Mr. Mussolini has a cohorts, as subordinate to him, and Italy is governed by the single will of one man.

Mr. Ludwig prophesies that Hitler will be gambling everything on the supremacy of Germans, will lead his country into another war, while Mussolini will profit by the mistakes of his profit from Hitler's debacle. (P. C.)

The Packing of Hugo Black By Albert Jay Nock

In "The Packing of Hugo Black," published in the current issue of the American Mercury, Albert Jay Nock seems very disturbed about Roosevelt's appointment of Hugo Black to the Supreme court.

Although the author states that everyone concerned in the selection of Mr. Black thanked heaven that a competent man was found, what he has against the newest member of the Supreme Court. The only definite accusation Mr. Nock makes is that Mr. Black was found conducting senate investigations he suppressed the files of some telegraph companies to prevent defence against the accusal, a fact that never have offended Mr. Nock's ideas of the sacredness.

The author stated elsewhere in the article that "a knowledge of economics would be of no practical use to a justice than a knowledge of Sanskrit." Mr. Nock seems to have overlooked the matter of etiquette more desirable than other qualification for the office. (P. C.)

The Labor Crisis By Alvin Johnson

"A menacing storm cloud hangs over the sensing industry of America—Labor, writes Alvin Johnson in an article entitled "The Labor Crisis" in the autumn Yale Review.

It is the almost unanimous opinion of everywhere that labor is seriously, dangerously out of hand. That anarchist John L. Lewis aided and comforted by that other anarchist the White House, has knocked the props from under the whole structure.

Mr. Johnson asks, "what new factor has appeared in our national life to make the system of collective bargaining suddenly so difficult?" He writes that the foreign-born friends of the working personnel is receding faster than that of a generation ago, and immigrants likely to be lamed in spirit by children's wailing wives in need of bread.

Mr. Johnson adds that a new change is coming over American labor: a sea change produced further by John L. Lewis and by the men in the White House. And the prospects for a peaceful development of American industry are threatening. A management-labor partnership supplementing its traditional dictatorial discipline by a discipline by consent.

In conclusion, Mr. Johnson says that we do not have an adequate machinery for industrial peace until our captains of industry develop political wisdom to practice not what enlightened and what leaders are most friendly to us," but "what organized and leaders are most pathetic bearers of the work-

STATE CONVENTION, INITIATION AND FOUNDER'S DAY, DELTA ZETA EVENTS

A triple celebration is planned this week-end by Delta Zeta sorority members who have chosen National Founders day as the time for the annual reunion of their new $30,000 chapter house here and the initiation of their annual alumnae homecoming.

The sorority was founded October 24, 1902, at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio. There are 41 chapters in colleges throughout the United States.

All Florida Delta Zetas have been invited to attend the festivities which include a house warming reception, Saturday, with friends, faculty and alumnae invited; an alumnae meeting Saturday; an initiation Sunday followed by installation of officers and Founders Day exercises and an alumnae dinner.

The new chapter house is a two-story brick structure, Georgian style, and has accommodations for 25 persons including the sorority chaperon. It is located at the corner of Jefferson and LaPayette streets two blocks from the campus.

President of Alpha Sigma chapter installed in 1934 at Florida State College for Women is Miss Mary Glenn Cooney, of Tampa. Other officers are: vice president, Miss Edith Atkinson, of Cleveland; secretary, Miss Louise Hall, of Tampa; and treasurer, Miss Emily Bush, of Tampa.

Among the alumnae attending the convention will be: Mrs. Scott Reynolds, Tallahassee, editor; Mrs. J. E. Keesel, province director, Miami; Mrs. Ralph Lemon Smith, Tampa, state chairman of meeting; Miss Natalie Lamb, Jacksonville, state president of the alumnae association; Miss Virginia Allgood, Jacksonville, secretary of the association; Miss Louise Knight, Jacksonville, treasurer of the association.

Mrs. Thomas Wheaton, Orlando, vice president of the association; Miss Ruth Marvin, Jacksonville, president of the Jacksonville alumnae club; Mrs. J. M. Cooney, Tampa, building chairman, and Miss Mary Glenn Cooney, president of the Tampa alumnae club.

Members and pledges of the sorority include: Edith Adkinson, love and esteem by all the alumnae of the college.

"In view of these considerations be it

"Resolved that we hereby express our regret in the loss of this teacher and friend to the association; and that we hold in appreciation the memory of his loyalty to the college and to the association; and that we hold in appreciation the influence he has exerted over our lives and the interest he has shown in the lives of the students of the college. Finally be it:

"Resolved that we hold in appreciation the memory of his exemplary life, his noble service, his courageous nature, his keen sense of honor, his high type of citizenship and his unselfish service to the church, community, and state, and to the inevitable passing to the fulfillment of his spiritual promises."

Chairman of the resolutions committee was Mrs. Ella Colson Nobles of Jacksonville. Other members were: Mrs. Caroline Le-Pontiues Robinson, Calhoun-ite; Mrs. Mary Baird Shackleford, Tampa; Mrs. Mary Murphree Hastings, Tallahassee; Mrs. Asalie Moor Wight, Cairo, Ga.; Mrs. Mary Lou Leman McGowin, Quincy; Margaret Pace, Miami; Roberta Ann Fernandez and Hazel Kirkhuff, Bradenton.

Social Security Talk to Be Given

A talk on the Social Security act and part-time employment will be broadcast from station WTAL tonight at 8 o'clock. Mr. J. O. Kellum, college business manager, believes that the feature will be of interest to all students working off-campus or in lea rooms.

Personals

Visitors at the Alpha Chi Omega house last week-end were Mrs. Anna B. Brooks, Pensacola, mother of Ruth Brooks, and Mrs. Dellie Peters who visited Miss McKay, the house mother.

Visitors at Alpha Delta Pi last week-end were Mrs. L. B. Nicklaus of Bainbridge, Betty Nicklaus and Mrs. L. S. Trantham, mother of Josephine and Frances Trantham.

Mrs. R. K. Numum, visited the Delta Delta Delta house last week-end as the guest of her daughter, Sallie Burt Numum.

At the Delta Phi Epsilon house the visitors were Mrs. H. Tobin, and Mrs. E. Lewis, both of Miami.

Mrs. C. L. Effinger of Shamrock spent Tuesday in Tallahassee with her daughters, Edna Hays and Sealy.

Mary Louise Hoenschel, an alumna of Theta Upsilon, visited the chapter the first of the week.

Mrs. H. T. Lokes of Tampa spent Tuesday night in Tallahassee with her daughter, Jean.

Mary Phillips Chalker of Lake City spent Tuesday afternoon in Tallahassee with her sister, Agnes.

Sophomores Elect Ash As Breakfast Chairman

Planning the major events of the campus year in which they participate the sophomores elected Connie Ash chairman of the sophomore-senior breakfast, an event honoring seniors the last of the year.

In addition the class headed by Margaret Robinson elected Marjorie Jessup and Sue Robinson as cheer leaders for the sophomore section of the green and gold squad.

VARIED SOCIAL EVENTS ON CALENDAR OF ENTERTAINMENTS FOR SORORITIES

Alpha Omicron Pi members will entertain pledges and rushees at an after-dinner coffee in the sorority house Saturday night.

The pledges of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority entertained with a supper at the house Wednesday evening.

An informal tea for pledges, rushees, and friends will be held Sunday afternoon from 3:30 until 5:30.

The Tri Deltas will entertain with an informal tea from 3 to 6 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Members and pledges of Beta Phi Alpha entertained with a game party Friday night. After various games had been played, hot tea and cookies were served.

Last Saturday night the Beta Phi Alphas held a dinner party at the Three Teepees in honor of the new initiates. The theme of the decorations, "Hitch your wagon to a star," was carried out in the sorority colors, green and gold. Individual wagons and star place cards were connected by green cellophane streamers to a large gold star in the center of the table.

Tomorrow night the Beta Phi Alphas will entertain with a dance and marshmallow roast honoring actives, pledges, and rushees.

The Delta Phi Epsilon chapter entertained with a birthday party in honor of Miss Ruth Hall's last Friday night. The president, Miss Ruth Hall, presided at the house mother prevailed.

Mrs. Pace Palmer entertained the Beta Phi Alphas with an after-dinner coffee Saturday night honoring Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Hall's birthdays.

Kappa Alpha Theta will be hostesses at a tea Friday afternoon at 4:30 in honor of the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority. Sunday afternoon at 4:30 they will entertain the faculty at a tea.

Active members, pledges and dates participated in a marshmallow roast at the Phi Mu house Sunday night.

Members of Theta Upsilon will entertain the pledges and rushees at a marshmallow roast and dance party Saturday night. During the evening games will be played.

Margaret Gourlie Is Bride of Saturday In Tampa Service

The following item of interest appeared in the Sunday, October 17, issue of the Tampa Tribune:

"Miss Mary Margaret Gourlie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Gourlie, and Joseph Alexander Stewart, son of Mrs. Ruth Stewart of San Juan Capistrano, Calif. were married at a simple but beautiful ceremony last night at 8 o'clock in Ruth Park Presbyterian church. The Rev. Ryan D. Wood performed the ceremony which was witnessed by relatives and close friends.

"Masses of potted palms veiled the choir loft and formed a verdant background for cathedral candelabra holding lighted white tapers. Two similar tapers were placed at intervals along the center aisle, lighting the pathway to the altar. A program of violin and organ music was played prior to the ceremony.

"The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an afternoon gown of landscape print crepe, fashioned with long sleeves draped to the elbows and finished with deep frills over the wrists. A softly rolled narrow band of the material, caught with huge silver leaf clips at the throat, finished the neckline, and the silver leaves were repeated at the front and back of the wide belt. Her hat was a pointed, off-the-face turban of brown felt, worn with a long veil reaching to the shoulders, and her other accessories were brown. She wore a shower of valley lilies."

Miss Cita Goodell, of New Jersey, now student at the state college, was maid of honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart left after the ceremony for Stewart ranch in San Juan Capistrano, and after their wedding trip will reside in San Diego, Calif.

Mrs. Stewart attended school here for two years and was a member of Pi Beta Phi.

Tennis Teams Enter Tourney

Faculty — Students Pair For Match Play Next Week

Class room discussions and lectures take a place in the background this week as faculty members join their students in signing up for the annual faculty-student tennis tournament. Dr. William Hutson Rogers showed up with Evelyn Fisher last year to capture first honors in the tournament, and the pair will be on the courts again this year to defend their title.

Among those faculty members and students who will be out after the Rogers-Fisher net combination this year are: Mr. William Jennings and Esther Shugart, Miss Elizabeth Lynn and Marie Jaffre, Dr. Christian Paul Heinlein and Marjorie Horton, Dr. Ben Graham and Dolora Fliescher, Mr. Hugh Loucks and Mattie Lou Love, Mr. Robert Miller and Betty White, Miss Rebecca Averill and Maribel Savage, Dr. Paul Pinner and Pat Corry, Miss Mary Settle and Valerie Huns.

A list is posted on the physical education bulletin board for those who wish to sign up for the tournament during this week.

"There are all sorts of answers to that question—but presumably people who come to college want to get an education. At any rate we will assume that. One phase of education is, supposedly, self-improvement. And how, we ask you, can one improve himself actually if he omits that part of education which deals with current happenings, social problems, labor problems, famous books, leading artists, internationally known dancers, music?

"Interest in what is going on in the world today should be intensely interesting to us. What is happening in our state today? What is the setup of our state government? As a whole, we simply haven't the faintest idea.

"Our national government should be vaguely familiar to us. Interest in what the President is doing should claim a large part of our attention. Is he really trying to make democracy more workable or is he turning Socialist? What is going to happen to Justice Hugo L. Black? Is the country going Fascist, or will we be able to keep our ideals of democracy

"Perhaps it would arouse more interest in international affairs to really bring the personal aspect home to us. At this moment all of Europe is on the verge of being plunged into war—horrible, inhumane war. It would be very difficult for the United States to keep out of this war if it did materialize. Is it hard to realize that it is we who would bear the burden of this war—we would have to see our fathers, our brothers, our future husbands go to save our country, only to be killed horribly. We, even though relatively incapable of taking part in actual warfare, would be open to total extinguishment — with modern means of transportation and chemical warfare, we wouldn't have a chance. Does that make it any more personal

"To depart from current happenings, there is another phase of what is going on in the world. There are books being printed today that no intelligent person can afford not to read—both because the books are good literature and because they have some bearing on problems that eventually we will have to attempt to solve.

"There are so-called cultural phases of education. Can one afford to miss seeing an internationally known dancer, about whom all the culturally elite are talking? Can one afford to miss seeing masterpieces which have endured for centuries and will endure for centuries more? Can one afford to not know what is going on in the field of modern art? Can one afford to miss hearing any good music is available? And yet even when we are offered the opportunity, we don't take it.

"And what about people themselves? The ones who bring about all the things that happen? Don't they deserve some bit of attention?

"Why can't we be real college students and realize that the difference between living and existing lies in the interest one shows in matters important and that knowledge of real affairs makes a personality rather than a person."

Error Corrected

The Flambeau wishes to correct a statement which appeared in last week' issue. Mrs. Marie Pedrick Phillips, who visited at the Alpha Chi Delta house during the week, is province president of the sorority, not national president, as was announced.

Sports Squints

With F "goat" initiation a thing of the past, the faculty-student tennis tournament an event of the present, and Odd-Even games an issue of the future, there are very practically in the middle of the first quarter. All this point system stuff is making a fever, and even the faculty is becoming infected by the desire to set out in the open and go athletic in a big way, as shown by their joining their students on the tennis courts. Wouldn't it be wonderful if teachers became more interested in their forehand drive than in the present economic system. Or more intrigued by an overhead smash than by the theory of determinism?

A weary looking bunch of P goats started for camp last Saturday afternoon by way of their own pedal extremities in order to take their last dose of initiation; however, they must have proved definitely that they could be trusted, for they came back proudly wearing their "P's" right side up at least, and looking in good standing. Can you imagine looking like the "fall edition" or the "Feeling Sentimental — both sides of a debate?" Well, that's the way some of those goats had to represent that week-end. And they did look like that for a time, from all we hear of the original ideas that those girls thought up.

One of the sports editors (not the one that is writing the column) must have felt sorta silly last week when she rushed over to the gym all prepared for a dip in the pool only to find that there in proper attire and was told that they were just having a pool party in the pool. The only thing we're thankful for is that they didn't let her in the swimsuit later, or half the sports page might be lacking next week.

After doing plenty of panning of our juniors and seniors as far as sports are concerned, we've at last decided to get to the bottom of the trouble and give our revered upperclassmen a chance to defend themselves and tell the world why they fall down on the sports-minded after they reach the dignity of the junior rank. So—if you will look for public, you will see in this issue a composite interview on said subject. Look over their excuses and reasons and pass your own judgment as to whether or not they're valid enough to hold water. Do all the judging you want to 'cause it's not going to do any good and you might as well get it off your chest the way we've been doing

By the way, while we're in this kind of mood, we might as well get another present gripe out of our system so that the roommate will find us easier to live with in the future. This time it has to do with those age-old subjects of sportsmanship and courtesy. We realize that they've been preached on time and time again, but we're not planning on doing any preaching. We intend to come right out and state the fact that courtesy is decidedly not out of place on the basketball court, and that's a dogmone good thing to remember. Just because you're an expert at balancing a tea cup and manipulating a polite conversation, does not excuse you from minding your manners on the athletic field as well. So when somebody unintentionally takes your ball or doesn't understand your pass, bite your tongue if you must, but refrain from dining a good job of "slaying with words."

The Tarpon Club will set off on a wet start tomorrow night when they will offer their first water demonstrations of the year. Those women can really show the fish how to do their own tricks and they steal the stuff of the most proficient of them all.

Maybe our mighty seniors are too overworked to come out for extra-curricular sports, but we'll hand it to them for hanging on to their speed. After "dignified rush," at investiture we know they'd go out for track if they just had the opportunity.

Since styles are changing in all types of attire, one of the good upstanding chemistry students decided to do her bit for the sports world by creating a new track "getup." Said costume consisted of two chemistry aprons properly draped. It seems that the "little lady" had a little run in with a vat of acid and was due in the dining room real quick in a hurry. Never let a thing like convention hold you back.

Tarpons Stage Water Program

Strokes and Under Water Formations to Be Demonstrated

Members of the Tarpon club will live up to their name tomorrow night when they will give a demonstration of their ability in water program which is scheduled to take place after the organization skits.

Frances Thill, president of the club, announced that the program would include a demonstration of strokes, under water work, and water formations. She also announced that the formations are ready for the exhibition which will be given Thanksgiving and tryouts will be held on Monday and Thursday during plunge period.

Sophomores Begin Buying on Monday

Sophomores may begin buying their annual tickets Monday, while juniors may continue to buy theirs during the next week. Sophomores' time will extend for two weeks.

Seniors who did not have their pictures taken at the specified time may see Eileen Robinson at 304 Oldchrist if they wish to do so now.

In the near future there will be placed on the Flatacowo bulletin board a paper so that all students who have not received their '37 annuals may sign for them.

President of Mortar Board Will Come Here

Mrs. Katherine Wills Coleman, national president of Mortar Board, will visit the local chapter on March 4. She expects to be here two or three days.

Mrs. Coleman was asked to take the presidency at the Wisconsin convention in 1934 and has served in this office for seven years. She is a graduate of the University of Nebraska and a member of Phi Beta Kappa. She has been friendly to the Arabs in Libya and other sections of the East. Just recently the Italian dictator sent 2 000 more troops to Libya, making a total of 37,000 Italian troops in that territory.

Japan and China were also having their difficulties, not entirely military. Despite strict censorship of the press, the dangerous condition of Japan's monetary system has been leaking out. The government is already $50,000,000 in the red—though international trade—and her foreign credit is becoming shaky. She is bothered also by unrest in her Chinese provinces, particularly in Manchukuo where her subjects are rising behind her back.

China is upset, also, but not over financial worries. Her trouble is getting goods into the country after they have been purchased. With few industries capable of supplying her war needs, her stand against Japan depends largely upon her ability to import arms in spite of the coastal blockade set up by her opponent. At present, she has the Russian route

Health Class Debates For Steak Dinner

Advocates of Vaccination Emerge as Victors In Verbal Fight

Debates and [illegible]inners seem to be synonomous in one of Dr. White's health education classes. The class, debating recently the question of universal vaccination against an ipox, created so much excitement that its debate had to be concluded in the Basset Shop much to the irritation of other occupants.

Valerie Hunt and Bunny Lowery debated on the positive side; Louise Whitting, Ruth Wilson, Nancy Williamson, and Patty Barringer, on the negative. The only impartial members present were Fay Corry, leader of the debate, and the honorable judges, Miss Averill and Miss Derrick.

The debate started out calmly as all good debates should but it waxed hotter and hotter. Before long the opponents were hurling words and phrases at one another in no uncertain manner. The virus which finally broke the camel's back, however, came when the anti-vaccinationists got into their element with a nasal, twangy object. Eventually, a ball was called and the judges went out from the room to decide the winners. While they were gone the contestants agreed to give the winners a dinner at the Sweet Shop. Poor anti-vaccinationists! The positive side was victorious.

Thus one more Sweet Shop had a definite appearance of a railroad that runs to French Indo-China but is open to Japanese bombers, and a narrow road leading to the same region but impassable in winter.

Dr. Venila L. Shores To Speak to Freshmen About Citizenship

Dr. Venila L. Shores, member of the history department, will speak to the freshmen Saturday on "Citizenship" at the freshmen class meeting.

Dr. Shores will be introduced by Marjorie Sailerson and Betty Outland who will give preliminary talks on "What Is Expected of a College Government Citizen."

At this time Jean Runyan will tap dance, accompanied by Mary Almony. Doris O'Quinn will also play the piano.

This freshman class program is the fifth in a series of six, which have been sponsored by the College Government association under the direction of Marjorie Sailerson, freshman advisor. Saturday, October 30, Dr. Ralph L. Eyman, dean of the School of Education, will speak on "Religious Life on the Campus."

health district. In the middle of their table was a big sign on which were carved the misanthropic sentiment: "Down with vaccination." The loers had place cards in the shape of a health sign headed with the single word "anti-vaccinationists;" in the middle was the girl's last name only: and on the bottom were the epitaphs as illiterate, health inspector, hill-billy, M. D., and various other complimentary inscriptions. And on the table were smiling yeaks!

But woe is the Sweet Shop, for the debate went crazily on and on!

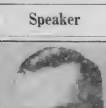
Wednesday afternoon the last student forum will be held at 4:30 in the Augusta Conradi theater and the final lecture in the auditorium Wednesday evening.

Between his lecture engagements Dr. Wedel will be free for those who wish to make appointments for individual conferences.

Ancient Drama Will Be Theme



Greek, Roman Theaters Studied by Group

Greek and Roman drama has been selected as the program theme of the Classical club this year. At the next meeting to be held at 7:45 Tuesday in 103 Library, this theme will be discussed.

Dorothy Sandels will give a resume of Greek drama, and Mary Anderson will present an outline of the drama as it developed under the Romans. As a closing feature, Gladys Ware, vice president and program chairman, will give instruction for the conducting of an activity project.

This project is to include the construction of miniature Greek and Roman theaters. Tiny scrolls inscribed with scenes from Greek and Roman myths, will serve as the plan. Members of the club will be divided into groups according to their interests. One group to be concerned with the building of the Greek theater, another with the Roman. The films, costumes and masques will serve as material for those interested in those topics.

This year, through various projects and general activities, the Classical club is endeavoring to supplement classical courses and introduce material which is not covered in the class room.

Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Ph.D., secretary for college work in the National Council of the Episcopal church, of New York city, who will be the featured speaker for the sixth annual Religious Emphasis week, beginning Sunday.

Y.W. Ceremony Welcomes New Girls Tuesday

Freshmen Light Tapers In Traditional Service Before Footlamb

Two hundred and ten freshmen were formally received by the Y. W. C. A. in the annual reception service which was conducted last Tuesday night in the college auditorium. The service began with a procession of white clad girls led by Martha Lester and the members of the executive cabinet of the organization. While the cabinet members and the freshmen marched down the chapel aisle Father of Lights."

The scripture was read and several hymns were sung before Martha Lester president of the Y. W. C. A. delivered the Liturgy of Consecration. The theme song of the charge from the old to the new members was then sung and revered in the white candlelight. Everyone marched out singing "Follow the Gleam" and the freshmen lighted their candles from the candles carried in front of the Westcott building. The freshmen formed a circle around the fountain holding their candles aloft as the choir sang "Taps and "Steal Away."

Masque Club Will Stage Hi-Speed Comedy Act Play Over the Air Wednesday

On November 17 the first meeting of the Modern Drama club in the Augusta Conradi theater will be held. Plans for the coming quarter will be discussed at the meeting.

Palm Beach Transfers Like Friendliness of F. S. C. Girls

Newcomers Express Concern Over Early Winter As South Florida Has Much Warmer Climate

"The girls at Florida State are the grandest I have ever met." Palm Beach "exiles" in as it is I haven't had time to get homesick," say the Tallahassee girls have made me feel as though I belong here, as if I had always been one of them."

These were some of the remarks uttered by the girls who have transferred to Florida State college this year from Palm Beach junior college. When asked to give their opinion of the college, environment, type of students, and everyone connected with the institution, they said that they think they are among the most congenial and congenial people that they have ever met.

When a comparison of P. B. junior college and F. S. C. was requested, the girls joined in a chorus of "It can't be done! Of course if you can compare a mole hill to a mountain, one compares

Cut Committee Report as Accepted by Executive Council is Submitted to Student Body Members

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following report is that which was adopted by the cut committee after many hours of study and consideration. It was submitted to the executive council and ratified by it. It is reprinted here to enable the students to figure out their own personal cut schedules.

I. Interpretation of cuts on basis of grades and class hours.

1. Students with an A or a B average may have one cut in the number of hour a class meets, irrespective of the credit hours which the course carries.

For example:

History 101—meets 3 hours a week—an A or B student may cut it three times a quarter.

Practice Teaching—meets 5 hours a week—An A or B student may cut it five times a quarter.

Public School Music—meets 4 hours a week—An A or B student may cut it four times a quarter.

Social Case Work—meets 7 hours a week—An A or B student may cut it seven times a quarter.

Shorthand meets 5 hours a week—An A or B student may cut it five times a quarter.

Typing meets 3 hours a week—An A or B student may cut three times a quarter.

2. "C" students may figure cuts one and a half the number of times the classes meets in any course. If results in numbers are a fraction of less than ½ the fraction is dropped; if more than ½ an addition cut is allowed.

For example

English—meets 3 times a week—2 3 of 3=2.

Practice Teaching—meets 5 times a week—2 3 or 5=3 1/3=3 cuts (fraction dropped).

Social Case Work—meets 7 times a week—2 3 or 7=4 2/3=5

Mrs. Coleman is on an inspection tour of Mortar Board chapters throughout the United States. Her visit to the campus chapter of the national organization is the first since 1931 when she was present at the installation of the Tallahassee chapter on the campus.

During her stay on the campus Mrs. Coleman is the guest of Mrs. Harold F. Richards who is national editor of Mortar Board Quarterly and who serves as intercollegiate editor for the chapter when other national officers do not make their visits.

Mrs. Coleman is a graduate of the University of Nebraska in Lincoln, where she makes her home. She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. She has been treasurer of Mortar Board before she was elected national president in 1926.

The awarding of the cup came as a climax to convocation at the student body Wednesday evening at convocation. Its awarding was subject. "The College Woman of Today. Mrs. Coleman mentioned the fact that women entered into occupations of higher learning a great deal more than formerly. Following that, Mr. Chapman, superintendent of Hamilton, talked on the crisis which he finds in Florida what the students' responsibility in the present crisis would be.

Saturday morning Dr. Albert Keating Smithwick, a physician from Jacksonville, spoke on personal spiritual problems. He was followed by Marning Dodge, professor of political science and history at the Florida women's college on the European situation. Saturday afternoon the student body continued his talk along the same line of discussion. Dr. Ralph Lyon, professor Trowbridge, of Rollins college, spoke on the crisis in the Far East and the relation of the nation to it. On Saturday night, Hamilton Holt, president of Rollins, spoke at the University, discussed personal religion. then Angus Laird, professor of the University, presented current news on Russia in the U. S. S. R.

Trowbridge Summarized

On Sunday morning Professor Trowbridge summarized the talks given during the conference and pointed out what the college woman's responsibility should be to be the champion of Mortar Board in colleges and universities all over the country giving some kind of recognition to scholarship.

Mrs. Coleman's visit is the regular convocation program.

Group Attends State Meeting Of 'Y' Groups

Delegates of 8 Colleges Attend Gainesville Conference

Florida State college was well represented at the joint Y. W. C. A and Y. M. C. A. conference held in Gainesville last week-end. Thirty-four girls from here met with delegates from Rollins college, Tampa university, Miami university, Stetson university, the University of Florida, and Southern college at the annual conference which was the second to be held in Florida. Approximately 100 delegates attended.

The discussions were of state-wide, national, and international importance. They seemed to show what part college students can play in these affairs.

Opened Friday Night

The meetings of the conference held in the student union building in Gainesville, began Friday night with devotionals led by Miss Mildred Johnson, secretary of the Y. W. C. A. at the University of Florida. Following that, Mr. Chapman, superintendent of Hamilton, talked on the crisis which he finds in Florida what the students' responsibility in the present crisis would be.

Eyman Speaks On Teacher's Part In Peace

Asserts Education Must Mould Our Opinion On Foreigners

As educated people we need to set a program which will enable us to form devolution of the impressions of people of other lands, was the thesis of Dr. R. L. Eyman's speech entitled. What Can Educated Leadership do To Prevent War and What Can Teachers Do?, given at the first meeting this year of the Delta Kappa professional society in education, Tuesday evening at the Demonstration school.

Dr. Eyman believes that many early impressions children receive from their parents and others during the early school years have great effect on their future thinking and acting. When children enter school, the teachers must take up where the parents left impressions and prejudices. Their duty is to broaden the minds of the students what is right and wrong. They must endeavor to live and prove correct principles such as honesty, respect for property, respect for others, self-control, courtesy, sympathy, good sportsmanship, fighting for services of others, avoidance of racial silliness, and interdependence of peoples. Culture as applied to all people should be studied, such as a knowledge of the world of science, literature, home equipment, and the fine arts. The last importance of health should be stressed. Every entire philosophies of life can be altered by abnormal physical conditions.

Teachers can't be held entirely responsible for the development of students' characters in the right way; the home must be taught to the children. Children live and propose to weigh carefully the beliefs of many people and then form their own ideas based upon their own ideas about right and wrong. However it teachers find that students are drawing harmful conclusions they should try to influence their pupils to think soundly.

E. P. C. Council Seeks Members

Cooperation of Colleges Needed in State Peace Drive

Plans for contacting all Florida colleges that are not a member of the council of the state E P C council and enlisting their cooperation in the Emergency Peace Federation campaign will be a matter of the Executive council last Saturday at Gainesville. Reports of the meeting were made back to the campus chapter by Virginia Allen who heads the movement in the state and on the Executive council.

The Executive council was formed last spring at the conference held at Rollins college of the Florida Emergency Peace federation. Miss Allen is chairman of the council.

The question of a continuance of the present policy of isolation for the United States will be the subject of a round table discussion in convocation sponsored by the E. P. C. on November 8th. Work is being done in preparation for presenting the opinion of people of importance on this vital problem by members of the Emergency peace council.

Unlimited Cuts Go In Effect February

Scholar

Frances Douglas, junior, who was Wednesday night awarded the Mortar Board scholarship prize. Her average for the first two years was 2.26.

- New System Granted As Recognition of High Scholarship
- INTERPRETATIONS OF RULES STATED
- Saturday Classes to Be Dismissed Armistice Week-end

Unlimited cuts as a recognition of high scholarship was one of the recommendations made by the faculty cut committee and accepted by the executive council this week according to Dr. Olivia N. Dorman, chairman of the committee. This change with several other recommendations and definite interpretations of the present cut system has been formulated by the cut committee after a series of meetings in the past few weeks.

Provision for a holiday at the end of the first quarter, Saturday, November 12, was another recommendation included in the report. Rollins on the revision of summer school to the academic year so affecting promotion and the honor bad and the elimination of the practice of counting tardies and absences are other recommendations in the report which was passed by the committee.

Rulings Are Interpreted

In answer to numerous questions concerning the cut system the committee has arrived at definite interpretations of rulings. Absences for various causes, reasons for excuses, and punctuality as to the definition of an emergency are all the subject of interpolories for the guidance of the committee on cuts.

The system which do not go into effect until February at the beginning of the second semester will be given only those who have shown outstanding scholastic achievement in their preceding. according to the committee is being adopted on the basis of an experiment through which the student will have the unlimited freedom will be tested. The committee also expressed the hope that this provision will be a further incentive toward high scholarship with a goal always desired for unlimited cuts for her class.

Dramatization Will Be Given Again Tonight

"Pride and Prejudice" Has Second Showing For Students

Pride was swallowed and prejudice overcome last night on the stage of the Augusta Conradi theater when members of the speech department and the faculty presented the first performance of Helen Jerome's dramatization of the novel Pride and Prejudice.

It was the early 19th century that Jane Austen chose as the prevailing period of her book it is believed that has Jerome kept the atmosphere of that time—when a man with a large family fortune certificate and the girls walked as though floating on invisible escalators—better than any other playwright who has attempted to dramatize the novel. The early background was ere-fined, not only by the silk hose, britches and coat-tails worn by the men, and the primrose path-dals and empire gowns, the latter unusually high-waisted and low-necked worn by the ladies, but also by the three well-constructed living room scenes which furnished a vivid impression of the times and customs of the day.

The general plot of the story centers around the efforts of a family whose one desire in life is to see her daughters married to substantial incomes. Mrs Bennet, the only clever, husband-seeking mother is capably enacted by Frances Lee. Mr Bennet played by Dr. William G. Dodd is to add a measure o quiet parts—sarcasm, humor, reserve, and caprice—that twenty-three years experience in the North ficient to make his wife understand his character.

ranking, must maintain that average for the one semester before being graduated.

In computing all point averages for high honors such as scholarship, education, will not be considered in the total. This was held November 13, allowing freshmen the opportunity of taking their first week-end trip to the campus. This week-end is counted on the number allotted for the second quarter, however. This is also true of sophomores students' week-end privileges. Juniors and seniors have unlimited cuts.

The committee has asked that students be reminded that there will be no outing following Armistice, or previous it, since it is an official holiday.

Another change made by the committee was that tardiness shall be counted. Tardiness since this practice confuses the system.

Hereafter, it has been ruled, credit earned in summer school may be used to apply toward shall count toward graduation but will not be considered as the basis for honor points. Time in college, probation, approbation, cuts, scholastic privilege or the increase of hour load.

According to the interpretation by the committee, unlimited class cuts on basis of grades and class standing are established that "A" or "B" average may have one cut for each hour a class meets, irrespective of the credit hours which the course carries. The 'C' students may figure their cuts as two-thirds the number of times the class meets.

Homecoming Plans Near Completion as Date for Big Event on University Campus Approaches

By BILL JIBB

Floridians attending the University of Florida-Maryland football game in College Park, Md., this week-end are in for one of the busiest periods of celebration in the history of the Maryland school. For it will be the Homecoming of that school.

Sports writers, University of Maryland officials, Florida State society in Washington ,Florida people and all others have been working for months on plans to celebrate the entrance of Florida into the Gator Bowl to contest Maryland.

Whole plans are practically completed up intere the Florida leaders are still working on Homecoming plans there. In addition to radio publicity, magazine publicity and other methods of communication, the staff of the Florida Alligator is publishing a 24-page paper to be sent to every alumnus of Florida.

In this paper will be discussed everything from the history of the school so far as concerns of the football team Pictures, feature stories and such are gaining prominence in the paper about the edition.

Blue Key society has yet to announce complete plans for what they have in store for the biggest years in the history of the University. Every one of the members of the society are said to be complete final arrangements.

The pan-hellenic council, Charles Francis Coe, prominent national writer and sportsman, will act as master of ceremonies at the Gator Growl, the entertainment being held in the Coliseum the night preceding the football contest on Saturday with Georgia Tech.

The most disheartening thing to you girls in Tallahasee is that this particular celebration is being sponsored as a "no-woman" affair. But there's a few of you boys are inviting dates down for the affair, but the leaders on the campus are hoping that no dates be secured for this week-end. They will have time to partake in the activities planned, minus the influence of the fairer sex.

The Student Advisory for College Park amid great shouting by the leaders of the University of Maryland that the students were dressed in military uniforms that did not detract from the ovation to the team allowed on the basis of "C" students for one quarter and the result of that quarter's work will determine her status thereafter. Those who have been removed from academic probation valedictorian will be allowed cuts on the basis of a "C" student. These are a few of the interpretations made concerning cuts on basis of grades and class hours.

Many questions about absences, especially those caused by certain conferences, have been clarified in this report which is reprinted in full in another part of the paper. It has been announced in this part of the report that students whose class absences due to conferences involve serious overcutting, must make application to the cut committee for excuse during the quarter in which the overcutting occurred. If application is not made before the end of the quarter no action will be taken by the committee later.

All rulings which have been interpreted for the students in this report are now in effect, since they are a part of the present cut system.

Betty Scott in the role of Miss Binsley is much interested in knowing the ancestry of each person before she decides to meet them. Lady Catherine De Bourgh is also a family tree advocate and a perfect snob. Eloise Frink played Lady Catherine.

Darcy, the handsome, dashing and aloof visitor in the Bennet home was played by Ralph Donaldson, instructor in education. His friend Mr. Binsley, who is apostle and has a weakness for the country, where the Bennets live, was enacted by Robert Miller, assistant professor of philosophy and religion.

Robert Parker, impressive in black silk britches and stockings, played Mr. Collins a clergyman and cousin of the Bennets. Mr. Wickham, played by Chester Lewis, needed only the red coat and gold sash of the regiment to make him complete charming. Walter Roel Cowles, director of the college orchestra, also donned the soldier's garb as Colonel Gardiner. Fitzwilliam, who reveals a lovable interest in the welfare of young people.

Mrs. Gardiner, charming aunt of the Bennet girls, was played by Beverly Brown. Supporting members of the cast were Hilda, the family servant, Julia Burwell Amelia, a gruel, Mary Boatwright. Maerie Mrs. Gerdiner's Irish maid, Margery Jones, and Mrs. Lake, a nurse, Martha Lee.

The Little Theater orchestra, directed by Owen Sellers, rendered a musical program along with the play "Intermezzo Russe" by Theodore Prahks and "Pizzicatio" by Leo Delibes composed in the overture

The hills, steps, rain, and cold weather of Tallahassee are the chief problems confronting Palm Beach Junior college's ability to adapt themselves to their newly adopted home, Tallahassee.

However, the superiority of Florida State college over the various smaller colleges in the state is evident to them that all the girls expressed their complete satisfaction with their decision to transfer to F. S. C. W.

Among the Palm Beach Junior college transfers attending this college are Rosalee Mapleton, Rita May Henry, Betty Lou Ingerman, Doris Hall Stewart, Hazel Lacey, Muriel Rowley, Grace Wilder, Barbara Swaantson, Jane McCarley, Helen Murphy and Peggy Merrideth.

Spaghetti Supper Given For Executive Council

A week ago Wednesday the executive council of collegs government association gave a spaghetti supper at Ruge hall for the faculty committee on student affairs

The menu was in the form of minutes of the meeting; the meeting was called to order by fruit juice; old business was an order of spaghetti, simmered by pickles and toast; new business consisted of cookies and coffee; meeting was adjourned with mints.

Lorine Gehan, who was chief cook, made the spaghetti.

Faculty members attending were: Dean Olivia Dorman, Dr. and Mrs. R. L. Ryman, Miss Katherine Warren, Dr. H. L. Waskom, Dr. Edward Conradi and Miss Louise Conradi, Miss Rowena Leaming, and Miss Enda May Devine.

Members of the executive council present were: Betty Cathcart, president, Winifred Barwick, Frances Lewis, Betty Hatch, and Katherine Graham,

The office was a scene of chaos and confusion. Then up rang the editor slit. One thing was straightened out, however, for a lost story was found to have been printed in the previous week's Flambeau!

"Thus the old editor used to be followed by the most ridiculous fire of the evening. The A. A. U. W. "went to town" on a mock wedding ceremony. The wedding procession, led by Cupids, entered the auditorium. The blushing bride wore a white gym suit made on full lines—mostly at the knees. Her veil was a tennis net that had been in the gym for 6 years. Attendants wore bathing suits of a very early period. In the story, gym suits of more recent styles, and part dress suits of more than five years old. The tall, lovely bride and short, undersized groom were joined in unholy wedlock amid the solos of the bride's brother One of this year's biggest weddings, no doubt.

Robbery Wave Conquered By Local Police

Dr. W. H. Rogers Has Lost Property Returned By Gendarmes

The household of Dr. W. H Rogers, professor of English has been undergoing a crime wave in its own, which was speedily put to an end by the local branch of G-men, Tallahassee's own police force. The cases under consideration involved stolen property and what was worse, kidnaping

His daughter Isabel's bicycle was missed for several days, but after reporting the theft on Saturday morning, less than six hours later the police had located the bicycle and returned it to its grateful owner.

The following morning Dr. Dr. Rogers's black and white dog, could not be located. Dr. is a valuable setter and immediately attracts much attention on excellent limbs and the beauty of his coat. After much search for him over the week-end Dr. Rogers inserted an ad in the lost and found column of the Democrat, but by the time the issue of the paper was printed one of the deputy afterof of Wakulla county called and notified Dr. Rogers that he had found the missing dog about sixteen miles south of Tallahasee, on a dirt road seven miles from the main highway. The sheriff was able to get in touch with Dr. Rogers from his home on the dog's collar

With pardonable pride Dr Rogers is speaking in glowing terms of the efficiency of the police officers. However, his interest and attention over a trivial matter has not yet been returned to him By request it is show up at any time now.

Riding May Be Brought Back For Students

Horseback Enthusiasts Asked to Sign Up If Interested

In an attempt to discover whether or not horseback riding as an available activity at Florida State would be worthwhile, a list has been placed on the bulletin board on the lower floor of the Westcott building during the last week upon which all persons interested in taking riding at the rate of $1 an hour were asked to sign their names.

This revival of the question of riding facilities for students is due to a proposition made to the Athletic Board by Mrs. Inez Crawford, has a summer camp in Hendersonville, North Carolina, and who would be willing to locate her herds of horses near the water provided that a suffic ent number of students are interested in sufficient enough students to pay for the upkeep of the horses the year in Tallahassee. The upkeep would amount to $7 a month and it is said that this would not include a profit, but that it is her purpose to make money. But in order to keep the horses in use during the winter months when the camp is closed it will be necessary for Mrs. Crawford to have the water provided that a suffic ent number of students are interested in riding. If this is not done, it will be impossible for her to bring the horses to Tallahassee.

Should enough students be found to sign up for the riding, it is said that the horses could be used as a riding ring for beginners and intermediates that she has also offered. It would not be necessary for stables to be built on the campus.

Miss Kathryn Montgomery, head of the physical education department, announced that she would allow credit to be substituted for prysical education 212 for students who signed up and student enrolling in the course 328, a rather large fee.

Should enough sign up the list posted on the bulletin board, only 48 hours ago, there has been no riding so far. Miss Montgomery stated that she would have to write Mrs. Carlyle that, at present, not sufficient numbers of students are interested in college riding to make curricula activity. Nevertheless she stated that she would include in the letter that she would give the girls another week to spread the word and then make a decision for the campus.

If Miss Carlyle should be assured that she will receive the support of the students she will come as soon as she is notified. Mrs. Carlyle has it below, that she will train, direct, and give orders for herdsmen and others to the saddlers for more experienced riders.

Cut Committee Report As Accepted by Council

3. In the case of courses carrying laboratory hours an A or B student may cut as many times a quarter as the lecture and laboratory hours total.

For example:

Physics		2 cuts
Lect M W 3:30
Lab M	9:30-11:20—1 cut*
(One-half cut for each hour)
Psychology
* Lab M.	10:30—½ cut
Lab. Thurs	9:30—½ cut
Lect M W	8:30—3 cuts
Total 4 hrs.	—Total 3 cuts

* 2 Lab hours=1 cut

She may take all her cuts in Psychology lecture or laboratory if all the hours are listed under the same course number.

Example: Chemistry, Botany and Zoology—are one of the class meetings 3 times, or each class meeting once.

She must distribute her cuts between lecture and laboratory if they are listed under separate course numbers.

Example: Psychology and Physics—she must take two of her cuts in the lecture hours and the other two on the two laboratory hours. (A "C" student must not cut any cut for lecture and one for lab.)

4. All transfer students will have cuts allowed on the basis of "C" students for one quarter. The result of their quarter's work will determine her status thereafter.

For example: If she transferred from the former institution as a B student and makes no "unsatisfactories" on her first quarter here she will receive cuts on the basis of a B student.

If she transferred as a "C" student and receives no "unsatisfactories" on her first quarter here she will receive cuts on the basis of a "C" student.

If she receives "unsatisfactories" in six or more hours she will be placed on Academic Probation and therefore will be allowed no cuts.

5. Students who have been removed from Probation by attending summer school (Academic) will be allowed cuts on the basis of a "C" student.

6. Basis for cuts for second quarter and fourth quarter:

Second quarter freshmen:

a. Freshmen receiving no "unsatisfactories or less than three hours of "unsatisfactories" at the end of the first quarter will be considered "C" students and will receive cuts accordingly.

b. Freshmen receiving "unsatisfactories" in 3, 4 or 5 hours will be permitted 1 cut m each course carried.

c. "Unsatisfactories" in six hours or more will place a student on Academic Probation and no cuts for she will be permitted no cuts.

Upperclassmen.

a. Students receiving no "unsatisfactories" on the quarter will be permitted according to their academic standing at the end of the preceding quarter.

b. Students receiving "unsatisfactories" in one or two hours will be considered "C" students and will receive cuts according.

c. Students receiving "unsatisfactories" in three, four or five hours will be permitted one cut in each course carried.

II. Class Absences.

1. Basis for treatment of eyes, ear, nose and throat:

a. Class absences will be excused by the college physician for illnesses in college infirmary.

b. Class absences (other than those before and after holidays) will be excused by the dean's office upon a written excuse from the college, if recommended by our college physician.

c. Class absences for illnesses in the home or ward (treatment from the college not recommended by our college physician will be taken on cuts. Emergency cases involving extreme over-cuts will be considered by the Cut committee at the end of each quarter.

Cuts in sh rt-term cuts for illness have not been repaid by the

Intramural Games Will Be Postponed

Marie Joffre, chairman of intramurals, has announced that intramural games will not be played this year until after Thanksgiving due to the fact that students are at present engaged in so many other activities.

"I should go out for tennis with 2,000 pages of parallel due at the end of this quarter? I should say not!" Do they ask these same upperclassmen who have too much to do.

"I spend all my spare time in the library, not on a hockey field. I can't afford not to, and for extra-curricular sports activities."

"I should go out for tennis with all I know a lot of girls who've gone out before, and didn't make a team. I guess they figure that they never will, so they don't bother any more."

Others just don't like sports. They say: "No, thanky you; I wouldn't go out if I had to. It's a waste of time. I get all the exercise I need climbing stairs."

Some girls aren't active in extra-curricular activities because they have too many other activities. "When would I go to all those committee meetings?" cried another overworked student.

A day-student protests, "I'd never get home till 6 o'clock if I went in for sports. I can't come back out here to study in the Library, you know."

Ethel, still reporting for the Flambeau! My classes are getting to be rather surprisingly easy. Don't be crazy!"

Even the super-classmen don't have as much spare time as they had when they were freshmen and sophomores.

hours, skipping through classes, etc., should be reported to the Registrar office.

b. Emergencies before and after holidays.

a. Absences before and after holidays are liable to the penalty for student to be attendant in the wedding of anyone in the immediate family, to be dismissed as in death in family; may be excused when returning the permit of Academic Probation. Such absences, however, may be taken on cuts. Absences for weddings other than in the immediate family will incur the usual penalty for absences before and after holidays.

c. Academic Probation: Except in cases mentioned above, absences before and after holidays or emergencies will be considered by the Cut committee at the end of the term of each case.

d. Marriage in family:

(1) Class absences due to attendance at or participation in family weddings must be taken on cuts. No excuses will be issued.

7. Conventions:

a. Class absences due to attendance at conventions must be taken on cuts.

III. Applications to Cut committee for excuse:

a. Students whose class absences, due to emergencies, involve serious over-cutting, must make application to the Cut committee for excuse during the quarter in which the over-cutting occurred.

(1) Application is not made before the end of the quarter no action will be taken by the committee later.

b. For emergencies see II above.

IV. The following recommendations were made by the Cut committee to the Executive Council of the college that:

1. No classes shall be held on Saturday, November 13, 1937.

2. Hereafter credit earned in summer school shall have one dollar where shall count toward graduation, but shall not be considered as the basis for determining for the academic year Freshman, Sophomore, Junior or Social Privileges, or the increase of hour load.

3. Beginning with the second semester, February, 1938, students

"Not Enough Time" Is Sad Wail of Upperclassmen When Asked About Lack of Sporting Enthusiasm

"There just isn't enough time!" wails the upperclassman when asked why she doesn't go out for extra-curricular sports activities.

WTAL to Broadcast Odd and Even Games

Odd-Even rivalry grew more intense today as word was received to the effect that the Thanksgiving day annual clash between the two teams will be broadcast over WTAL in a play by play description.

According to Mr. Richard Kingston of WTAL, it is certain that the hook-up can be accomplished with no cost other than $5.00 for the actual expenses. The broadcast will cover a 100-mile radius through the Tallahassee station and if it is possible to arrange a hook-up with the Gainesville station, the radium will be increased beyond the present estimated distance.

This broadcast will be sponsored by the Florida State Athletic association, according to Viola Brooks, president.

lar college national officer, stated Dot Marsh, president of the local group. Because Mrs. Harold F. Richards is national editor of the Mortar Board Quarterly and is here most of the time, she will be granted unlimited cuts on the following basis:

Seniors whose average for three preceding years and for the last semester of the Junior year has been 2.0;

Juniors whose average for the two preceding years and for the first semester of the Sophomore year has been 2.0;

Sophomores whose average for one preceding year has been 2.5;

Freshmen whose average has been 2.0 for the first semester.

Beginning in 1938 cuts shall be granted to students only so long as they maintain the above average. If students are not maintained their cuts will be determined by the Cut committee.

In computing these point averages activity classes will not be considered.

A student transferring from another institution with a point average required for unlimited cuts for her class rating must maintain that average here for one semester before being granted unlimited cuts.

Cuts in absence shall not be turned in as absences since this practice confuses the cut system.—Olivia N. Dorman, chairman, standing Cut committee.

Tennis Tournament Will Get Under Way

The faculty-student tennis tournament will get under way this week when the first round matches are played.

The first round matches teams are Mattie Lou Carter and Mr. Hugh Loucks against Esther Schoene and Mr. William Jouberti; Jane McCarley and Miss Ruth Lehman against Marie Joffre and Miss Elizabeth Lunn; Florence Miller and Dr. White against Velora Hunt and Miss Mary Settle.

The second round matches will be played the first part of next week.

Swim Pictures Taken

In hopes of bringing news reel photographers from Paramount and Fox to this campus for the Thanksgiving games, Miss Rachel Hutchison of the Physical education took pictures of Tarpon club members in action last Saturday night.

Sixteen students tried out for club membership last Tuesday at second try-out will be held Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 for those who were unable to be out last week.

Board Decides Game Schedules

Volleyball and Basketball Will Be Played On November 15

Dates for the close volleyball and basketball games were set by members of the Athletic board at their meeting Wednesday night. They will be played during the week of November 15, with the finals being played off the Friday of that week at Play night.

It was announced that those girls who are qualified for teaching sailing will be willing to go out to camp for this purpose if the party so desires. Arrangements may be made with Miss Maude Flowers, director of residence halls. The instructor will be the guest of the party with whom she goes out.

Qualified instructors are Valerie Hunt, Frances Waterman, Frances Lewis, and Betty Hatch.

College Hay Ride To Be November 11

The official date for the college hay ride, first in a series of recreational events planned by the Outing club, has been announced as being Saturday, November 14. At 8 o'clock Saturday night two wagons loaded with hay will be waiting back of Bryan hall. The capacity of each wagon will be 25 persons, and only the first 50 students who register for the trip will be carried. A sheet for the convenience of those who wish to sign up will be posted on the Outing club bulletin board.

The students will ride to the college farm where a large bonfire will be waiting. The entertainment at the home of Mrs. Hardee, where she is staying during the war. Last night the Mortar Board banquet in her honor took place at the Dutch Kitchen. Those attending were the alumnae Mortar Board, the active chapter, and pledges and several faculty advisors. "IS IT GOOD BUSINESS TO BUY COSTLIER TOBACCOS FOR CAMELS?"—A QUESTION ASKED BY MANY PEOPLE

ANSWER:

Camels are the Largest-Selling cigarette in America

Think of what this means! The greatest pleasure for the greatest number of smokers ever given by any cigarette

AND this didn't happen by chance. Camels are the largest-selling cigarette in America—and in the world. People are and do appreciate costlier tobaccos. Smokers trust those finer tobaccos in Camels to give them more of what they want in smoking. And Camel makes Camel's policy of spending millions of dollars more for costlier tobaccos "good business."

If you are not a Camel smoker, try them. Millions have smoked them steadily—and have found more pleasure in Camel's costlier tobaccos.

(Signed)
WILLIAM S COREY, college student

"Camel's rich, delicate flavor appeals to a woman's taste. I smoke nothing else. So many of the girls in our crowd feel the way I do about Camel's being extra-gentle to the throat."

(Signed)
JOSELYN LIBBY, private secretary

"I ran (all) Camels are ma5e from mighty fine tobaccos. There's a slight more goodness in 'em—natural flavor! I like my Camels at mealtimes too. They help my digestion keep on an even keel."

(Signed)
GEO BUCKINGHAM ship's engineer

"I love the taste of a Camel. They're so mild. Even after I've had a steady smoking I notice no 'cigarette' after-taste."

(Signed)
MRS. ANTHONY J. DREXEL 3D

"I'm a steady Camel smoker. Camels are different from other cigarettes. I find that they are so mildness I demand in a cigarette. When I buy Camels don't frazzle my nerves it means a lot."

Revised Cut System Gives New Independence

The cut committee, after a number of sessions held during these last few weeks, has formulated a number of recommendations which have been accepted by the executive council and in addition they have interpreted a number of the present cut system regulations.

Probably the most enthusiastically accepted new regulation will be that concerning unlimited cuts. Although this will touch a comparatively small number of the student body, because of high scholastic qualifications, it is undoubtedly a step in the right direction. Through experimentation with the upper strata of the college the administration may find that these qualifications may be extended to include more students or on the other hand the incentive may be of such a nature that the number of honor students will be increased.

We remember that these unlimited cuts will be very small, about one-fourteenth of ... present body. It is hoped that the students who will enjoy this privilege of unlimited cuts will prove the worth of such a system, helping to pave the way for ever increasing sanction of independence for students. The more individual freedom given to the student who can profit by this privilege the greater the intellectual and social growth of that person.

Since this new ruling is to be in the form of an experiment it is hoped that it will be discovered that Florida State college students can profit by a regulation that is in practice in some of the more progressive colleges of the country. It will give the student more freedom to evaluate the work spent in the classroom as compared to that which she may get for herself independently.

R. O. T. C. Turns To the High Schools

The R O T C has entered the high schools of the country in earnest. This is the startling information that comes from the committee on militarism in education. And with this evidence coming received opposition arises against compulsion in the R O T C.

Which reminds us that compulsory R O T C is still compulsory. Florida State College ... reserve to end compulsory military training ... public schools and colleges by an amendment to section 30 of the National Defense ... act is now up for consideration by the ... formation received from the committee on militarism in education, all signs indicate that the War Department's drive for more R O T C units will continue with undiminished force during the present school year.

While all these statistics seem vague to the student on campus a seminar in Florida ... it will be realized that the student that ... this training is compulsory; that the ... various colleges and demand for well ... boys; and a large high school in Florida ... has installed a unit.

While the R O T C units were made ... peace time by the National Act of 1916 ... has not seemed until the last few years that ... was also compulsory. It is essentially ... record in a permanent way the ... of school ... to ... the ... of the ... committee ... and ... a ... of R O T C ... in the high schools in an article written for The Clearing House. Chicago has been the war department's best organizing center for it has a total of 39 units. The department assigned 25 additional men to the Chicago schools under the terms of the expansion plan there and the cadet enrollment has doubled to approximately 10,000. While Chicago's school officials have been impervious to any outside interference the war department's drive in New York city met many difficulties. In some way, Mr. Johnson says, the news that units were being installed leaked out and these was immediately an uproar on the part of individuals and organizations began. Basing their objections on technical educational requirements the opposition was able to rout the R O T C almost completely in New York high schools.

On the face of the situation it would seem to the average person rather harmless to let young boys play at soldier, for according to the typical citizen it will develop in them character, self-control, initiative, discipline and physical stamina. But the editor of the Daily Californian has something to say about that in an editorial against R O T C on the Berkeley branch of the University of California campus.

"If all these claims were anything more than rationalized arguments for continuing drill, R. O. T. C. would certainly be remarkable training. It is a wonder that people with such implicit faith in this form of training do not ship their daughters off to R. O. T. C. units, rather than to finishing schools."

The R. O. T. C. present a problem to thinking people. It has been quite positively proven that this training does not benefit young men physically as it was so long thought to. It is not good disciplinary training for instead of inculcate in the individual a tendency toward blind following, toward an unthinking militarism that can so easily lead to "fascist mentality." It is through the obedient, stolid army that a dictator rises to power.

Again the Daily Californian editor, drives home a point:

"We believe that one of the most important obligations of a university in a democracy should be to encourage intelligent thinking, informed citizens. Men who can help to run their country, not just fight for it.

"And this 'estisenship' by which we mean active, critical thinking, we find to be very different from the 'citizenship and discipline' which your "The First Duty of a Soldier is to Obey" R O T C units are fostering."

What's In a Name?

According to Webster's dictionary a college is a seminary of learning incorporated by an authority, or an institution for instruction in any particular study, while a university is an assemblage of colleges, or a corporation for teaching the higher branches of learning and conferring degrees. It is a fine distinction, but the distinction is there.

Does our new institution come under the latter definition and merit the name of university? It is composed of the College of Arts and Sciences, which confers three degrees; the School of Education, which confers two degrees; the School of Home Economics, which offers besides its regular degree a degree in nursing, and the School of Music, which confers its degree. Also our institution offers degrees in graduate work.

Because of the accepted definition of terms the name of Florida State College for Women cannot hope to carry the prestige in other states that the name Florida State university would carry and since the institution now ranks with the best in the country in its equipment and standards, its graduates are entitled to the prestige that goes with the title of university instead of a mere college which implies a small and limited institution.

Of course it is realized that the name is fixed by the state legislature, but if there were sufficient popular demand to have it changed, it could be done at the next session. Our institution alone would be proclaimed for what it is in truth. Florida State university.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

Japan Comes Out on Top

With the fall of the important North Station at Shanghai and the devastation of the surrounding area, the Japanese made things look blue for the Chinese this week. Not only did they gain control of the lower Yangtze river delta and the right bank of the Whangpoo, but they wrested the most important line of communication from Chinese hands, the Shanghai-Nanking railroad. The defenders still held territory northwest of the international settlement and continued to cling to the vital Nantao and Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo railways. The Japanese, however, have fairly drawn the noose around the Chinese army, pressing them southward toward the International settlement and at the same time attacking their strongholds in the northern Shanghai province.

This Japanese policy of bottling up their opponents secured repeated a situation in Shanghai encharging close to 40,000 Japanese troops tioned there. The offensive has been coming in on the city from a circuit of approximately 300 square miles and has left to the retreating forces only a narrow outlet just west of the International settlement. The zone bordering this belt is guarded by American marines. Since neither Chinese nor Japanese troops are to be allowed within the boundaries of this "safety" zone, the United States force has been given orders to shoot to kill if any persons civilian or otherwise seek flight in that direction.

The Japanese showed themselves this week to be as adept in political operations as in military. Their delay in answering the invitation to the Nine-power conference on the Far East situation stalled off any foreign interference until some decisive victory could be obtained for use as an ace in whatever deal was made. The final excuse for not attending were equally clever. First, they claimed that the Chinese war was a defensive one—perhaps like the present French suppression of rebellion in Morocco—and that the Chinese, by moving troops into the demilitarized Shanghai territory had made this defense necessary. The second reason aimed to please Italy and Germany. It stated that China had once used Japan as a help in unifying her country and now was turning to Russia and to Communism. The last rationalization supplemented an open threat by the Japanese minister of war that Japan might have to withdraw from the League if the Nine-power conference did not adjourn.

Luck also favored the Japanese statesmen. In Belgium site of the preliminary diplomatic conference, the prime minister resigned with his whole cabinet and consequently was delayed the postponement of the meeting until November 3 or until a new cabinet could be made up. This sudden resignation came as a result of a money scandal in which the premier was accused of using his influence to grant loans from the National bank to a dubious private financier. The premier withdrew from office in order to

And Others Say. . . . . .

Colleges, newspapers this week have carried announcements to the effect that the Line has come train for another's turn. Applications for a try at the Hindu scholarship. This scholarship which is a result of bequest to college men selected to study at Oxford. And with this announcements come editorials on scholarship and leadership, the two major forces for education and their evident irreconcilability.

The Hindu scholarship is not to be completely overshadow the well-planned curriculum designed to give him an education. HE DOES NOT HE CANNOT BE MISTAKEN FOR A SCHOLAR. ARRSPIP. According to our standards, the scholar will receive no recognition.

Yet no not mean that grades are not a factor in scholarship, but we do mean that leadership in the college is a factor in scholarship. But both grades and leadership can be confused as to their real meaning in order to enhance the value of either to forget scholarship.

Dr. Meta Glass, president of Sweet Briar college, expressed the attitude of thoughtful educators today when she recently challenged what she termed a popular idea that the best things students take out of college result from their informal activities rather than from their that when there is a clash between classes and outside activities, the student must permit the outside activities to suffer, she explained. The attitude obvious on every American campus today, but only a few have the courage to do the outside activities suffer.

"Now, then, can leadership be reconciled to scholarship? I cannot until we change our standards for leadership."

The Industrial Collegian offers the following as worthy evidence that the American college students of today possess a high interest in the problems and affairs of other countries:

"American college students are going to familiarize themselves with the problems of the world, if the program of the International Student Service, the National Student federation, a cooperative American organization, is successful.

"Already at the 182 International Assembly at Nice last summer, the following position for American students was agreed upon:

"1 A conference of Canadian-American college editors to be held at the University of Chicago this fall.

"2 A conference on 'Academic Freedom in the United States' scheduled for the spring of 1938.

"3 A conference between American and Puerto Rican students on the topic 'Puerto Rico's Struggle for Independence,' sometime within the next year.

"4 An Inter-American conference of university students of North and South America at which political, social and economic problems of the two continents will be discussed by students.

Collegiate Comeback

One rainy day last week we were a bit taken aback, as it were, to see a gym major take a taxi to class. Wonder if she had it wait for her, or come back at the end of the period? Maybe we should install a subway system for tired or timid gym majors.

Liberalism and the Case of Leon Trotzky

By Sidney Hook

The case of Leon Trotzky continues to ... storm-center of controversial interest. Brought out the world, according to Sidney Hook in ... autumn Southern Review.

Sidney Hook, the author of Toward An ... deriaanting of Marx, is a professor of philosophy at New York university. He characterizes himself as a "democrat as distinct from totalitarian extremist."

In his article in the Southern Review, Mr. Hook states that in America a very influential section of liberal opinion has taken up the cudgels, not in defense of Trotzky, but in defense of the larger principles of liberalism which it sees imperiled by the campaign waged against any critical scrutiny of the Moscow trials and the evidence presented by the defense in behalf of Trotzky. This campaign against those who desire to ascertain the truth about Trotzky has been prosecuted with vicious intensity ... by Russian officials, Communist party leaders, and fellow-travelers, it has even attempted character assassination of all who ... their views for an open hearing for Trotzky. A whole arsenal of weapons, ranging from outright intimidation and threats of personal violence to name too subtle efforts of junior ... to the Soviet Union, together with material inducements, was brought to bear upon those who opposed the organization of a commission of inquiry. These methods proved to be a boomerang, including the use of "plants" in the membership of the American committee for the defense of Leon Trotzky.

Mr. Hook asks, "What is the Meaning of these resounding and unanswered methods such as the case of Leon Trotzky drew forth? He says that until yesterday it was the subject of ... experts, today it is the "property of ... experts," and tomorrow, no doubt, it will be the Bible of Communists. It is his opinion that in the hands of Soviet officials it has become a method of propaganda and a method of ... government.

The author also explains that unduly ... cation is found for professing terrorism ... falsely, for entertaining doubts of infra-red ... rivals, and for unlimited extension of personal rule. There is nothing new in that, writes Mr. Hook. He says that "in themselves ... pansman, have always been the indispensable ... of all dictatorships. He goes so far as to say that Machiavelli would have had no use for Stalin's. But," he asks, "should this operate to the enthralling to the world by a regime cannot to be socialistic?"—B. S.

European Legislation for Industrial Peace

By Norman Thomas

Norman Thomas, writing in the current issue of Foreign Affairs, explains that the new European experience in legislation for industrial peace before we rush into any plan for ... state control of unions or of strikes is ...

It is England, mother of the Industrial Revolution, that Mr. Thomas investigates primarily. He explains that British labor legislation is born of practical experience, and in general English "have granted nothing to the ... by law which they could not secure by the ... unions might have been strong enough to ... anyhow. But," he continues, "the British government, even when in command, has not had a way of foreseeing necessity a little in advance, and of yielding enough in time to avoid explosions."

The author tells us that the British ... have reached at present status with a ... mum of violence, although the slowness of ... changes in laws has caused some struggle ... suffering. England tried compulsory arbitration ... found it did not work, and has substituted inquiry and conciliation, policies that have ... with success.

Of great importance to ... Thomas states, is the fact that Britain ... come to accept the principle of collective ... gaining, although that country has no Wagner act or its equivalent.

France has only recently concerned itself ... labor legislation. A forty-hour week was ... passed in 1936 requiring disputes to be ... mitted to conciliation or arbitration ... has laid any such basis of industrial peace ... helped maintain in the last six months a ... carious and uneasy truce. (P. C.)

Forcible—Feeble Diplomacy

President Roosevelt's recent Chicago speech declaring that the developing situation in the Far East may take concerted action to stop the war-crazed ... is criticized in a recent editorial in the New ... Republic, as meaning the exact opposite of ... popularity legislation.

The New Republic believes that if the President's words mean he has abandoned the neutrality course laid out by Congress, he has made a tragic choice, for our chances of remaining out of war, to keep America out of war are greater than our chances of keeping the world from war at large.

The experience of the League of Nations has shown us, the editorial points out, that concerted action among nations will not be effective unless the peace-loving nations are willing to go to war against the offending power. Italy, Japan, and Germany have shown us the hollowness of threats uttered by people who did not want to fight.

The New Republic states that there are ... two chances of keeping this country at peace. One is to resolve firmly not to fight under the present neutrality act to implement such a resolution. The other chance is to unite ... France, Great Britain, and the United States in a warning that further aggression anywhere will be resisted by force of arms. (P. C.)

The Social Week

Greeks Fete New Members; Initiations Are Concluded

The week-end brings to a close a series of three week-ends set aside by the college Panhellenic council for fall initiations into Greek-letter sororities.

Many of the new initiates are being honored by their chapters in follow-up the services, and these affairs include banquets, teas, and a breakfast.

New initiates of the Alpha Xi Delta and Pi Beta Phi sororities were honored this morning at breakfasts held at the Three Torches restaurant. The decorations were carried out in blue and white, the sorority colors. Small blue crystal place cards in the form of postal telegraph boys bore initiation pins to the initiates. They were Maxine Hopkins, Tampa; Eleanora White, Pensacola; and Lenora Hopkins, St. Augustine.

Tuesday night Alpha Omicron members will honor their new sisters.

Permission to Attend Town Dancing School Is Granted Students

For what is believed to be the first time in the history of Florida State college, students will be given the opportunity to attend classes in ballroom dancing under the supervision of professional teachers.

With the opening tomorrow of the LeCordaur Academy of Dance Arts, operated under college sponsorship, students will be able to attend dancing classes upon schedules especially prepared to meet the convenience of the individual.

The new academy is located in the former A O Pi house, 319 West Park avenue, and instruction will be offered at special rates for college students. Individual, private group, and class instruction will be offered in all types of popular and exhibition dancing.

In procuring permission for college students to attend the academy, the faculty have pledged co-operation and complete observance of all college rules and regulations.

The business office will open tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock and classes will begin as soon as schedules can be arranged.

SPOOKS WILL HAUNT PHI MU, PI PHI HALLOWE'EN PARTIES TOMORROW NIGHT

One of the biggest events on the Phi Mu social calendar for the year will be the hallowe'en party at which the members and pledges will entertain in the sorority house tomorrow night.

Traditional hallowe'en decorations will be carried out. Black cats, yellow pumpkins, skeletons, ruber webs, ghosts and witches will be used about the house. Orange and black streamers will mark the entrance of the rooms to the sides.

Fortune telling, ducking for apples, and roasting marshmallows will be enjoyed in addition to other games. Refreshments will be given for the most attractive and original costumes. Entertainment will be punch, cookies, and candied apples.

The Pi Beta Phi House will be transformed into the proper hallowe'en atmosphere tonight for the annual hallowe'en party. Ghosts and goblins will roam through the house, and skeletons, witches, jack-o-lanterns, and bats will dangle from the walls of the dimly lighted rooms.

Guests in costume will enjoy ghost stories, games, fortune telling, and dancing.

Freshman Town Student To Be Presented Award

To the freshman town student who shows the most ability in student affairs on campus an award will be given by the Inter-Residence organization, Mattie Lou Love, president, has announced.

Recognition points will be given for attendance at Play night, Religious emphasis week, the students' and Senate meetings, and other activities. Points for extra-curricular activities and try-outs for plays and Odd-Even demonstrations.

Mary Emily Parker, vice-president of the organization, will be in charge of freshman orientation and Lucile Shamblin will be sponsor for the first year town students.

At a meeting of the association, held in the Union building, president of College Government, Mattie Lou Love, urged all town students to out-of-town girls. ...

Knapp Elected to Head German Club for Year

Elizabeth Knapp was elected president of the German club at the first meeting of the year of the organization held recently in Broward lounge. Henrietta Jones was chosen vice president, Ruth Weber, secretary, and Dorothy Mae Stanley, treasurer. The new officers will assume duties immediately.

The German club has this year an enrollment of 29 members. A decided increase over last year's membership.

At the present, the German master brought to the campus by the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity is in fashion and may be secured by application at the office in the building at 330 Broward and signing up.

Finner, Schmidt Speak To Parents, Teachers

At a meeting of the P.-T. Mr. Finner spoke on the subject, "Government Boring at Home," and Miss Schmidt, on "Foods."

Poems Prove Proverb True

Students Poetically Show Sorrow for Illness

Absence makes the heart grow fonder—and more poetic, too.

Proof of this fact is offered by the decorations on the backboard of Dr. Guy Diffenbaugh's Humanities classroom in the Westcott building, where loyal students have expressed in verse their sorrow at his recent illness, at the same time showing that campus wit is not confined to the supercilious.

Bewailing his absence and wondering when their well-liked professor would return, the students of Humanities 103 despairingly wrote poems for the blackboards! Two of the prize literary attempts went somewhat as follows:

"Is he went Is he sone
Can him left us all alone?
Him can never come to we
We can never go to he—
It must was!"

And—

"Woe is Dr. Diffenbaugh,
He's so cute we ever saw,
He him is dearly loved,
Let us soothe his aching head.
Have we pains, have we woes
And hopeless vigil keep!
Hurry back to us we ples,
Signed by students of 103."

These an' numerous other original strains will be enjoyed by the general public—provided they have not been erased by some overzealous janitor.

Seven Girls Selected For Spanish Honorary; Plans Begun for Play

At the regular monthly meeting of Sigma Delta Pi, Spanish honorary, seven girls were duly selected for membership and Dr. Dorothy Brown was re-elected sorority sponsor.

The students selected were: Mercedes Arguelles, Miami; Frances Howell, Elizabeth Pinch, Mary Louise Rose, and Bernet Donegan. These girls, who are selected on a basis of excellence in Spanish, high scholarship and general good scholarship, will be initiated on December 17. The seven students are now working on a Spanish play to be given before their arm initiated.

During the meeting a program of study of the Holy Week observ[illegible] was planned for the entire year. Dr. Brown spoke on the presidency of America received on her trip there last summer.

Faculty guests attending the meeting were: Dr. Arthur Seymour, Dr. Margia Burks, Miss Myrtle Dolbee, Miss Margaret Campbell, and Dr. Dorothy Brown.

Glee Club Plans Made For Christmas Program

Plans are already under way for a special Christmas music program, Miss Erna Robertson, glee club director, recently announced. Ninety girls make up this year's glee club, and because of its size the club has been divided into two choir groups.

Both groups are busily engaged on choral singing for the December 19 recital of Christmas music.

Hallowe'en Party Goes on Tonight

Transformed into a "witch's den," for the evening, the gym will be the scene of a party tonight to celebrate Hallowe'en. This will be the first of a series of special playnights that will be held once a month during the rest of the year.

All students and their friends are invited to attend this affair, and the proper costumes (if they so desire. The "witch's den" will open for guests at 8:15.

The adopted children, namely four kittens, of Theta Upsilon sorority celebrated their five weeks birthday anniversary with a swanky party Monday evening. Yu Hua, pledge mother and overseer-of-kittens, decided they had collected too much soot during the present cold spell and decided a bath. The chapter house was out with a cold[illegible] as a batmitt, was transformed into a feline beauty salon. Half the sorority members united into a bath-giving committee, while spectators on the side lines gave helpful advice. The general feeling of the spectators was one of pity. "They'll get pneumonia," some raved; however the Thetis [illegible] continued with their task, [illegible] and laughter. "Spare the cake—er soap—and quit the cat," was their motto.

Alpha, Dick, Harry and Priscilla, the kittens, with their fur plastered to their sides, were finally dried by the radiator and placed under a hair dryer. Every precaution was granted them.

The kittens got not only their first taste of bath water Monday evening but also their first taste of cooked meat, the very next morning. Each of the eight apartment adopted mothers, not caring much for the roast served in the dining hall, brought samples of it home in order to test the chewing and digesting ability of their adopted children.

The kittens are bathed, curried, fed and fought over. Mr. Green, the policeman, and "Red" the fire[illegible] Beta Alpha, were [illegible] to blows, figuratively speaking, when both claimed ownership of the yellow kitten. Mr. Green threatened to arrest Red, and he who wanted it. "Red" gave in quietly.

The happy family soon will be broken up. The two white kittens are going to be given to a resident in Tallahassee and to "Pinky" Herlong, of Beta Alpha, respectively. According to the latest report from the battle front, Mr. Green will get the yellow kitten, and the gray one will remain at the Theta U. house with his mother, Mary.

DELTA DELTA DELTA HONORS NATIONAL MORTAR BOARD PRESIDENT AT COFFEE

The Delta Delta Delta sorority entertained Mrs. F. D. Coleman, national president of Mortar Board and an alumni of Tri-Delta at a coffee at the chapter house on Wednesday night following convocation.

The living rooms of the house were attractively decorated with fall flowers for the occasion, and the guest of honor was presented with a corsage of pink rosebuds by the chapter. Mrs. Coleman and the chapter president, Mary Wilde, received at one end of the living room. Mrs. R. K. Scott, house-mother, presided at the coffee table, and pledges assisted in serving.

Present with Mrs. Coleman were Mrs. Harold Richards, her hostess while she is in Tallahassee, and the active members and pledges of the chapter who are: Bonnie Brown, Columbia; Mary Collins, Eugenia Olise, Elizabeth Criley, Eleanor Hickman, Marjorie Jones, Gene Dillon, Lotie Kerns, Sarah Lewis, Mary McCahill, Mary Louise Merriweather, Mary June Michal, Dorothy Nye, Dorothy Olmstead, Irene Peck, Dorothy Rickards, Jewel Turner, Marian Vale, Dale Lee Whiddon, Molly Scales, Joan Sess.

Gym Goes On Buying Spree

Bathers Turn Patriotic In New Swim Suits

The Physical Education department went on a spree this year and bought itself a new trousseau running from garnet and gold bathing suits for the athletic women without realizing it.

John O. Keiffer, college business manager, in an interview revealed that approximately $1,000.00 of the total amount issued to students of Florida State college has come from the profits of the book store, which is run by the college for the convenience of the students. Whatever excess returns are netted in the transactions of the store are turned back to the students.

Those proceeds are not only used for students loans, but they are also responsible for the carrying out of some projects for which the state will not make appropriations. Portions of the fund have been used in the improvement of the recreational and athletic facilities and in the purchase of Camp Flastacowo.

Students Helped By Book Store Profits

Have you any contributions to the student loan fund this week? You probably have not without realizing it.

Dietetic Ass. Deplores Ills Of Poor Diet

Convention in Richmond Turns Spotlight On The Southland

Discussion of the social consequence and sinnificance of inadequate diet was the general tone of the annual convention of the American Dietetic association held in Richmond, Va., last week.

At the meeting, in which the spotlight was turned upon the southland, questions of southern nutrition composed the most important subjects of discussion. A pellagra symposium was one of the most interesting features of the meeting, which emphasized the effects of insufficient diet upon the cultural, intellectual, and physical development of the people affected, particularly the inhabitants of certain backward sections of the south. The major speakers were: Dr. Howard Odum, director of the Southern Institute for Social Science Research, University of North Carolina; and Miss Marjorie Haseltine, of the children's bureau of the United States department of labor; John Temple Graves, editor, author and economist, of Birmingham, Ala.

For the first time, this convention was held in a southern state. Miss Anna May Tracy, of Florida State college, is the first president of the organization from the southern section. An exhibit of Florida products and literature was a high spot of interest, and a Florida luncheon at which native Florida fruits made up the basic part of the decorations was enjoyed by many enthusiastic members of the 11 delegates attending the convention from this state who were from Florida State college.

"In the South, south has the largest ratio of children and adults in the country, there is an extraordinary deficiency in regard to standard food products essential to health," said Dr. Odum, in speaking of diet deficiency to the convention. He predicted that "within the next three or four generations of families under such a system of economics as many southern farm tenants now live with low standards of diet and vitamins and with therefore low economic and physical resistance, ... [illegible] ... competitors and im- ... opportunities."

... to create a dis- ... people irrespec- ... tive of any pure biological heritage. We need, fundamentally, research to explore the relations between diet and creative effort in the south, between diet and health and vitality, between deficiencies of agricultural production and welfare." He further remarked that Kentucky is the only state in the south producing its minimum dietary standard in dairy products.

Concerning pellagra, the delegates of the convention were told that this disease in the south is in direct ratio to the price of cotton. When cotton prices are up the farmer will not plant garden produce for his table that he otherwise would.

Miss Lavina Engle, field representative of the Social Security Board, Washington, D. C., said that the "social security act provides a comprehensive approach to this problem but that it doesn't ... give a solution."

[illegible] Realizing a coordinated program of public health nutrition work in which the general workers would know more about nutrition and [illegible] nutrition would know more about public health. She also said more nutrition extension is employed today by private health agencies than by any other single health organization.

At a reunion dinner, believed to be the first occasion of its kind to be sponsored by graduates of Florida State at a national meeting, Dean Margaret Rector Kreider, of the school of home economics, brought greetings in the form of telegrams and letter from President Edward Conradi and Mrs. Frank D. Moor, alumnae president. At each place was a special edition of the Democrat carrying many articles and views of the state college.

Another way in which Florida figured was an attractive booklet giving historical facts about southern food service, compiled by the college dining hall staff with the help of Mrs. Nicholas Ware Epes and Mrs. F. C. Elliot of Tallahassee, and Miss Justine Bruner of Lafayette, La. Miss Tracy will preside over the 1938 convention in Los Angeles.

Conversations on Compulsory Convocation

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of short interviews with students and faculty on timely subjects, including those concerned with campus, state, national and international problems.

The Flambeau extends to any member of the student body an invitation to reply to anything in these interviews through the Pro and Con column of the paper which has not been used this year.

Yvonne Marcheseau: No, I don't believe that it should be [illegible] enough. It should be interesting enough to let the students do what they want to go. I'm repelled by the idea of being forced to go to a compulsory convocation.

Marian Usher: It's a good thing to have. It's one way to get them there.

Margaret Wheeler: If the programs were good enough most of the students would go if it were non-compulsory.

Phillis Paramore: I think it's a chance for the student body to get together if they want to go. I'm in favor of it if it weren't compulsory. I didn't go when it wasn't.

Dorothy Manning: I don't believe in it. The students would get a lot more out of it if it were non-compulsory. Now, they go and nothing out of it at all. If they went because they liked it it would mean more.

Marshica Cottingham: It's a good idea. Students should get together. It makes them feel more united.

Alfred Cooper: Nobody would come if it were non-compulsory.

Norman Could be bettered and [illegible] would be less resentment.

Jane Anderson: I don't like it. It should be interesting enough so that the students would not have to be compelled to go.

Betty Wynn: This school is too childish to have non-compulsory convocation. We may work up to it eventually. We couldn't stand it right now.

Eleanor Hutchinson: It ought to be non-compulsory for seniors. Three years is enough for interesting visitors.

Winnie Ewart: I don't think it is a good idea but considering the attitude of the student body it is the only thing to be done. We're just too indifferent for words.

Ava Lyman: It ought not to be compulsory. People who are interested will attend anyway. The others just fill up space and get nothing out of it.

Kathryn Pratt: We will have compulsory convocation as long as no one will come to non-compulsory meetings. Look at Wednesday night. One-third of the seniors didn't come because they knew the roll couldn't be checked.

Louise Price: I don't like to be forced to do things, neither does anyone else.

Dorothy Barclay: It would be all right about once a month.

Betty Nicholson: It's the only way to get anyone except a few

Money Payment For Lights Due

Upperclassmen Must Pay Bills by Nov. 21

All upperclassmen must pay their light bill by Monday, November 1, according to a decision reached at the regular meeting of the College Government association Monday night. If for some unavoidable reason the money cannot be paid by that date the student must see Betty Cottingham and set a definite time for the payment of the bill.

In order to give all day students who are interested an opportunity to help C. O. A. it was decided that a place would be arranged for them to sign up for the work they desired to do. The following day students have already signed:

Writing announcements and invitations: Louise Taylor, Frances Gibson, Dorothy Parker, Margaret Sharkey, Mary Ashmore; art work: Frances Gibson, Dorothy Parker, Carolyn Cater and Meta Helms; typing: Florence Gregory, Louise Taylor, Margaret Sharkey, Holly Kinney, Meta Helms, Elizabeth DeMilly, Althea Lloyd; deliver notices, Louise Taylor, Esther Veal and Gene Gibson.

Social committee work: Magda Wasring, Jane Gage, Margaret [illegible] capable enough to decide whether they should attend.

Muryl Roland: I don't like it. It interferes with work and assignments.

Leona Howe: It's a bad idea. Everything that has to be said could be done in one meeting a month. All announcements should be put on the bulletin board. If you come you should be interested; you should do your letter writing at home.

Conradi and Dodd To Attend Meeting

Dr Edward Conradi and Dean William G. Dodd will attend the Southern University conference which will be held in Atlanta, Georgia, November 1-2.

This conference is held each year by the leading colleges and universities in the south, for the purpose of discussing and solving the problems which have confronted them during the year.

Half-Thousand Gals Sing to Each Other

Appearing October 27 was a day chosen by the gods for repopulating the earth. Either that or by some chance all the persons born that day were present in the lower dining room Wednesday night.

While upstairs music and revelry reigned and the students feted their favorite professors, the second level set about serenading some ten or twelve students with "Happy Birthday to You," followed by the inevitable "Stand Up." The climax of the evening came at dessert time when six young men at one table were given a similar display of Tallahassee cordiality by approximately 500 singing girls.

Second Meeting Of DAR Is Held

Tallahassee to Be Scene Of State Convention Of DAR in March

The Chefixico Chapter of the D. A. R. held its second meeting of the year Tuesday, October 26, in 105 History Building. The regent, Ella Virginia Brooks, presided.

A brief report was made concerning the tea given by the Caroline Brevard chapter of Tallahassee at which several members of the college chapter were present. The chapter was informed of the invitation extended them to be joint hostesses to the state convention of the Florida Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution which will be held in Tallahassee in March. It was suggested by Mrs. E. M. Brevard, State Regent, that the members of the Chefixico chapter act as pages at the convention if college work permitted.

The business of this meeting consisted of discussion in reference to the chapter having a part in the annual and securing a regular meeting place. The regent made three appointments, making Janice Wheatley chairman of the National Defense; through Public Education committee, Arline Gray othy Parker, Holly Kinney, Minnie Ratliff, Magda Waering, Meta Helms, Elizabeth DeMilly, and Gene Gibson.

Boiler to Arrive For Heating Plant

The students of Florida State college need no longer shiver to think of what would happen if one of the boilers in the college heating system were to break down during one of the typical Tallahassee cold spells.

A new B. and W. boiler, costing $17,000, is going to be installed in the heating plant soon. Already the process of pouring the foundation has begun.

The additional boiler was found to be necessary since the heating capacity of the present plant would not be sufficient for cold weather if the boiler already in there had to be repaired.

The state legislature supplied the money which is appropriated in the Florida State college budget for this boiler.

Second Practice Organ Will Be Installed For Use by Next Semester

The Skinner organ now being installed for recital purposes in the Westcott building will not be ready for use until the second semester, as a new room has to be built to accommodate it, according to a statement made by Mr. John O Kellum, business manager of Florida State college.

The organ, which is second-hand, was bought at a sum from a wealthy man who had installed in a 40-room [illegible]. When he disposed of the organ he sold the organ to the [illegible].

Unlike the Skinner organ which is in the auditorium the new organ has a set of chimes. These will be transferred to the older organ.

Hall Becomes Ball Diamond

One Time Quiet Corridor Scene of Great Tilt

Jennie Murphree hall [illegible] formed into a baseball diamond. Several upperclassmen [illegible] had courage enough to play baseball in the corridor of a [illegible] main dormitory where only a few years ago students were punished for rolling oranges down the hall. Improvising a broom as a bat and using a tennis ball for a baseball the ingenious girls drummed up a lively game of hits and runs and mostly errors.

Curious freshmen came to peek at the upperclassmen in action and remained to get their chance at trying to knock a home run ball. Then there was a crowd of girls clamoring for their turn at bat, and the entire building echoed with the shouts and merry laughs from the third floor.

At Florida State it is not necessary to have a diamond or even three bases, a pitcher and a catcher box, or an outfield in order to get a good game of baseball started. Just give the upperclassmen a freshman dormitory and a broom, and they will show you anything or three about baseball.

Two Holidays For Next Week Granted

No classes will be held Saturday, November 13, nor on Thursday, November 11. The Saturday holiday marks the end of quarters and will be the first time that freshmen may have a week-end away from the college. It will consist as one of the regular number of week-ends allotted students in each class and will be one of those allowed them for the second quarter, not the first.

Armistice is an official holiday and for that reason students are not allowed to cut any classes the day preceding or following it. However, Monday following the Saturday holiday does not fall into this category.

Social Service Training Will Be Given Here

Mrs. Cochran Will Guide Students in Actual Welfare Work

A program of social service training will be carried on at Florida State college this year under the supervision of a member of the State Welfare board staff, in order to bring the students in much closer contact with the active work of the state welfare organizations, it was announced by a number of state college graduates in its employ. This plan was announced by Mrs. Mary Seward Conradi and Mr. C. C. Cottingham, commissioner of the State Welfare board, this week.

Made possible through the cooperation of the state board and by the federal funds from the old Emergency Relief administration, the service of a trained worker in the state welfare department will be offered students interested in this field has more than doubled over the former number.

Though on a more limited scale, the training in welfare work which has been carried on at Florida State for the past several years, has received wide recognition with its graduates holding positions in many Florida cities as well as in other states, and completing their training at Florida State college, a number of the graduates have continued their study at Western Reserve, Tulane university and the School of Social Work, Chicago university and Johns Hopkins university.

This new social service training, which will include actual experience in family case work, child welfare assistance work and other types of field work will be under the leadership of Mrs. Emeth Pittle Cochran, who is also supervisor of the Tallahassee unit district area of the state welfare set-up. Mrs. Cochran's full time services and that of a stenographer will be given exclusively to the social service department of the Florida Welfare association at Florida State for the first five years. Before coming to Florida, Mrs. Cochran was director of welfare for the state of North Carolina for six years.

Mr. Cottingham, Trinity college, she took her master's degree at Columbia university, and has done additional graduate work at the University of North Carolina and Duke university. Mrs. Cochran is now chairman of the Florida division of the American Association of Social Workers and is known also for the active work she has published. Wedel Speaks About Modern Christianity

Lecturer Finishes Series Of Religious Talks For Students

RELIGIOUS WEEK ENDS WEDNESDAY

Speaker Says Christian Creed Will Cure Indifference

In developing the theme, "Christianity in the Modern World," the Rev. Dr. T. O. Wedel, guest speaker for Religious Emphasis week has constantly stressed two points. First, the religious illiteracy that exists in the world today, and second, the creed as the heart of the Christian religion and the ultimate solution for the indifference of the present age.

Week Ends Wednesday

Religious Emphasis week, an annual event on this campus, opened Sunday morning with an address in the auditorium and closed Wednesday evening.

In the opening address Dr. Wedel, who is secretary for college work in the National Council of the Episcopal church, emphasized the fact that the average college student is fundamentally ignorant of basic religious culture. Youth today is groping for a religious dream of a future prov dential world. It is trying to eventually face a world of reality and the sooner youth recognizes this fundamental fact, and in such a situation, the less tragic will be the adjustment.

Speaks on "God"

At Y.W.C.A. vespers, Dr. Wedel spoke on "God." He pointed out that few people doubted the existence of God, but that the real problem is how is man some to get a conviction that God is in some way interested in the life of individual. Man has always attempted by something lasting and eternal, and human life without the assurance that God really cares, seems empty and futile. The Christian creed answers this yearning because with it, death is not the end.

Class Adopts Resolutions

Seniors Honor Memory Of Dead Classmates

At a meeting of the senior class of Florida State college for Women on October 26, 1937, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, it has pleased the senior class of 1938 of Florida State college for Women during the progress the deep sense of loss felt by members of the class on learning of the deaths of Caroline Blount and Sarah Tillman, and

Whereas, in which the class held in high esteem. The senior class has suffered a severe loss by the families of Caroline Blount and Sarah Tillman, and

Be it Further Resolved That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be sent to Mr. and Mrs. C. Blount and to Mr. and Mrs H. C. Tillman; that a copy be placed in the official minutes of the senior class; and that copies be sent to the presses of Chattahoochee Tampa and Tallahassee.

Physical Ed Department Has Display Exhibited At West Florida Fair

The relationship between recreational activities in college and in adult life was illustrated by an exhibit displayed in the physical education department of the college at the West Florida fair in Tallahassee this week.

The exhibit consisted of a table containing miniature representations of recreational activities such as those found in the college pool, hiking, camping, outdoor cream and the gymnasium, and rural life. Upon entering the display room, attention first is drawn to the fossils. Remains of the saber-toothed tiger, the four-tusked mastodon, the sloth, and the mammoth, who inhabited indigenous forests during the Pleistocene or Ice age, have been discovered in Florida. It is very

Barrett Writes Everything In Mexico Feature Material

Former Student Describes Picturesque Country Which is Cosmopolitan and Also Quaint

By BLANTON BARRETT

There is only one real difference between the Florida State college campus and Mexico. Events can be news at college but everything that occurs in Mexico from revolution and guerilla strifes to the quarterly building report and the price of grain is pure "feature" material. The Mexicali, simply refuse to do anything unless they can be picturesque about it.

Cosmopolitan at First Glance

When the women of the press come to town, they will have their blue shawls wrapped about them, and from the booth will hang a black cat or a tiny goat or a creepy mink. The carabeers will trot through the streets with baskets of plaster statues and bluish zapotes, crates of protecting chickens, tables and chairs, or charcoal on their unprotected heads. Women along the street will have little charcoal stoves over which they steam great ears of elotl or fry tacos or do special cooking for a hurried housewife.

The city itself is cosmopolitan at first glance. With its wide, tree-lined avenidas, its business section where ladies trip along in the newest modes, its beautiful Alameda, it could easily be New Orleans. But when one looks around to the little side streets, cobblestoned and winding away to the smoky blue of the surrounding mountains, then one has to move over to let a little gray burro with a great load of herbs or tacaxtli pass by — then finds the exquisitely quiet little plaza where the light is always the light of fall and one wanders, quite by accident, into the old cemetery where Juarez, the little Indian, is buried, then one has started finding Mexico.

Y.W.C.A. Plans Follow-Up For Religious Week

Methodists Will Sponsor First Weekly Series Of Meetings

A follow-up program for Religious Emphasis week, has been launched by the Y. W. C. A. in order to take advantage of the interest and religious life stirred up at this time. Martha Lester, president of the Y. W. C. A. announced. Student discussion groups will be featured in this program, the first of which will be held on November 18 with a leader from the faculty leading the discussion.

The first series of meetings, one week for each month, will be sponsored by the Methodist organization, all denominations represented on campus will hold a service of worship Sunday following the Methodist discussions.

Besides the church groups, society groups will meet on the first time three sororities will meet together and discuss a religious topic with the aid of a faculty member. Representatives are urged to ask questions pertaining to these subjects.

The Y. W. C. A. finance drive will come to a close on Saturday, November 6 at which time the results drives, with the exception of a short finance drive in the spring. Elizabeth Bryan Chairman. Eleanor O'Haver, Polly Ann Cleveland, Clara McCaughan, Sarah Adams, Mary Elizabeth Bryan and Evelyn Bevill made up the committee in charge of this drive.

Spanish Group Meets

A discussion of the life and works of Perez de Ayala, Spanish novelist, will be featured at last night's meeting of Sigma Delta Pi, national Spanish honorary, held in Broward clubroom.

Charlotte Carlton and Kathleen Miles were in charge of the program.

Church Groups Trek To Camp; Give Parties

Class Worship and YWA Meetings, Broadcast Also Scheduled

A spaghetti supper, a "backyard" party and a watermelon cut are the features listed on the church calendars for this week-end.

The Episcopal group will spend the week-end at Camp Flamingo. Betty White is acting as general chairman and is in charge of all arrangements. All Episcopal students are urged to attend this outing. A vesper service Sunday night the regular sunday morning service and the celebration of Louise Lingo, will be held.

A group meeting of the Y.W.A. will be held Sunday at 7:45 at 7:45 at the Baptist student house with Mary Elizabeth Bryan in charge of organization, will be in charge of the meeting, and Lynnette Bryan in charge of the program which will consist of informal talks and discussion on the subject "Current Issues in Japan." Representatives from the junior and senior Sunday school classes will be present. The college students will serve "A Sunday's Experience" by Jewell Turner. "The Expansion Continued on page four

Young Slated To Give Talk

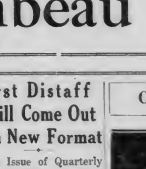
Four from Here to Attend Economics Convention

Miss Sadie Young, member of the economics department, will preside at a session of the Southern Economic association convention which is being held at the Tennessee in Knoxville this week.

There will be two sessions at which time papers will be presented and read on the subjects, "Recent Trade Agreement Problems." "Industrial Problems and the South," and "Price Problems." Miss Young will preside over the session on "Price Problems." After this session a tea has been planned to visit the Norton Dam, a TVA project of the government.

Other members of the economics department who will attend the convention are William Journey, Hilda Leila Venable, and Royal Mallice.

Thistlehwaite Speaks At Freshman Meeting



"What College Means to an Alumna" is two important phases of the topic discussed by Miss Mary Rita Thistlehwaite, an alumna, at a recent freshman class meeting.

How college becomes a valuable asset in the enjoyment of leisure but in many leisurable ways After the return from Miss Thistlehwaite's talk. She is now teaching in Tallahassee.

The fields into which the state ... alumnae have entered ... teaching, medicine, journalism, nursing, and many others, was the main topic of the address by Miss Elizabeth Thompson, of the college speech faculty.

Miss Daisy Parker, alumna of the class of '27, presided over the meeting.

In the ceremony, the freshmen pledge an oath of allegiance to the college and its ideals, and the upperclassmen renew their loyalty to their alma mater.

Traditional Script Used

Each year the same script is used, and Fealty is now one of the traditions of Florida State College for Women. Fealty is given in pageant form. The pageant represents the moulder of the great pious of art which is symbolized by Athena. At the opening of the production the freshman class is being displayed to his friends at a reception. The Sculptor spends the few people get the real meaning of his statue. Disappointed and broken, over his unfinished work he is persuaded to lie down and rest. While he sleeps he will be is asleep his masterpiece comes to life and finds the true meaning

Hay Addresses Student Groups

Professor Gives Talks In Three Florida Cities

Dr. Marion Hay, associate professor of education in a series of three talks in south Florida this week gave political science students reflections of her trip abroad this summer, giving particular stress on the Spanish situation.

On November 1, Dr. Hay told students at the Florida State hotel in Tampa why trips to Europe make the supervised practice she developed the theme that one de... to see the people and the beauties of the treasures of art and architecture, the difference in customs, forms of dress and the daily habits of the people. Dr. Hay emphasized the importance of psychology in regard to the inevitability of another war in two or three years which makes one glad of America's isolation and neutrality.

At the same time, Dr. Hay brought out that restrictions on the expression of opinions and on travel in such Fascist dictatorships as Italy and Germany build real appreciation of freedom of the press freedom of speech and freedom to travel when and where one wishes.

Tuesday evening before the Junior Women's club of St. Petersburg, Dr. Hay presented a discussion of the entanglement of European affairs in the Spanish War. In this talk she took up the causes leading to the Civil war in Spain; an outline of the positions of various European powers— England, France, Russia, Germany, Italy, Portugal and the United States; complete facts to get out of the war or prevent another; sources from getting out of it and various possible outcomes.

In Gainesville Wednesday a lecture Dr. Hay told the Women's club that "every production and settlement in Spain" she summarized to cover the more important accomplishments in religion poetry, drama, and the novel.

Heinlein Will Address Music Organization

Will Discuss Measures Of Musical Talent

Dr. Christian Paul Heinlein, professor of experimental psychology, has been extended a special invitation from Carnegie Institute to address the Music Teachers' National association on the topic of "Psychological Measures of Musical Talent" in Pittsburgh, December 31.

The invitation was extended to Dr. Heinlein in recognition of his scientific evaluations and critical analyses of current tests of musical talent. Dr. Beebe-Center of Harvard university, in his work, "The Psychology of Pleasantness and Unpleasantness," accepts Dr. Heinlein's findings on the nature of emotional reactions to various musical forms and the reliability of affective experience as conclusive.

The investigation quoted by Dr Beebe-Center was developed during the research period of Dr. Heinlein's appointment as fellow of the National Research Council, Washington, D. C. He specialized in the psychology of music as Peabody Institute and his research studies in music have been quoted extensively by numerous authors both in this country and abroad.

parts in the Christmas program and the peace Broadcast, which will be given at some date in the near future. Miss Doris Overall is director of the group and Mary Alice Lester is the student in charge of arrangements.

This week during fellowship hour the group will present a skit, "Chapter B-hind the Scene." Wednesday while the play for the Young Peoples' conference. It is a presentation of the work of a student house party. During the League hour Kay Graham and Carol Harman will discuss the qualities of student religion.

A "backwards" party will be the theme of the party to be given Sunday night at 7:30 in the Presbyterian church annex by the freshman Methodist school class. Members of the committee in charge are Sally Ratliff, Louise Patterson, and Sara Sheldon.

The Methodist group has planned no activities in addition to its regular Sunday morning worship services at 9:45 until "Under the Way of Life" as the topic for discussion. Monday evening at 5:30 the League will hold its weekly supper at the Methodist student house of the committee are Anne Williams and Winifred Ewart.

Following a discussion of the smoking areas on campus, it was voted that N. S. F. A. recommend to senate that the area west of Gilchrist should be made an official smoking area. This is the section of the Gilchrist lawn where the pecan trees and benches are located. It was recommended too that men be allowed to smoke there. Another suggestion at this time was that smoking rooms in some of the academic buildings be provided in order that girls may smoke between classes.

It was unanimously voted that the Student Affairs committee be asked to consider extending play night on Friday beyond 10 o'clock.

Managers Need Training

The responsibility of the business managers of the various campus entertainments, such as demonstrations, Torch night, Pep ally, was discussed in connection with the fact that one person will often bear the brunt of the whole affair. It was suggested that the training for positions such as this be included in the Mortar Board training course for campus officers in the spring. It was also suggested that an alert director be trained from year to year. Another suggestion was that the reports of the chairmen be much more detailed and information than they have been in the past, so that they may be used as a guide for the succeeding year.

Time on the campus was another problem that came up. As a remedy for variance in time mechanisms that control the student's life it was decided that senate be asked to appoint a "time coordinator" who would check the clocks regularly. In addition it will be the duty of such a person to see that the college chimes be cut off during artist series and other programs of importance. It was also asked that the chimes be continued until 10 o'clock at this also as a convenience to those who work in rooms where there are no clocks.

Another subject which were discussed but upon which no action was taken were sophomore rating privileges the extra-curricular point system and the possibility of a holiday on November 12.

Gala Georgia-Florida Game Will Be Big Event of Week

Columnist Reviews Activities of Gainesville Campus for F. S. C. W. Readers

By BILL JIBB

This week the Fighting Gators journey to Jacksonville to battle their age-old rivals . . . the Bulldogs from Georgia. Big things are expected of the team, even the freshmen are elated over the coming contest, because in the event Florida trounces Georgia, it is rumored that rat caps will be discarded as the shed.

Upperclassmen say nay, nay, nay—they caps come off. However, they will be discussed later when and if the Gators win over the Bulldogs.

Hundreds of students will be following the team to Jacksonville and there to enter into the celebration of the game and the other festivities throughout the week-end.

Students in the law college have begun their moot court trials and rehearsals for their home-coming celebration. The student court is planned on the order of the United States supreme court and in the throat as are found in the ancestral perches and bases.

Reservations for well-qualified have also unearthed Indian remains and relics. These discoveries have been made all over Florida, particularly along the Florida coast and springs . . . rowheads, jewelry, and pottery are among the interesting specimens of Indian handicraft unearthed.

The abundance of natural mineral deposits and formations in Florida is shown by the specimens in the museum samples of many of these minerals are exhibited. Phosphate rock is produced in Florida in 1888. This has been the leading state in the production of phosphate since 1892. Florida also led in the production of fuller's earth for many years until she was replaced by Georgia and Florida. Florida is also used in the refining of oil. An abundance of high-grade china sand, granite, and limestone is used in construction work and for chemical purposes. Florida clays have been used extensively as a road building material. Florida has a high grade of white clay, is used in the manufacture of porcelain and chinaware. This china compares favorably with the imported English china. However, the pottery clay is shipped north for manufacture. In the state of Florida, there are no more beautiful shells to be found in the world than the colorful ones found in the coral formations of south Florida. At one time there was an industry for making pearl buttons from the smallest pearl shells found in Florida. There have been 646 different species of shells located in Florida.

Another rich mineral deposit is located near Clermont. A very light, highly absorbent grade of stone is found there. Its mineralogical qualities have given its usefulness in salt cellars and as an absorbent. Coin Paint is a substance of almost pure siliconia is refined from this stone and. This material was used for making smoke screens during the World war. It is now largely used as a pemt pigment in place of white lead. It is nonpoisonous, does not heat, will not oxidize, and does not chalk or flake as does ordinary paints.

Wedel Speaks About Modern Christianity

sation. Dr. Wedel answered several questions brought up by the students. Some of these were: What is hell? Is the Christian hypocrite more dangerous to society than the atheist? Is the social culture of today to be depended upon as superficially so?

Discusses Sin

"Sin" was the topic of the lecture Monday evening. "The word sin implies a God," said Dr. Wedel. "If there is no sense of God, sin loses its significance."

Dr. Wedel's evening in his talk on "Forgiveness," Dr. Wedel stated that the problem of forgiveness has existed since the dawn of time and that the secret of true forgiveness leads to the very heart of Christianity. Forgiveness only as a costly gift which must be paid for, and Christian faith sees in Jesus such a payment.

In his closing address Dr. Wedel described his lectures as heavily theological from some points of view. However, they had been of a very practical nature. Beliefs of the Christian religion, the concept of incarnation, atonement and forgiveness. The interesting interpretation of Christianity as an ethical problem, which is the modern tendency, is a grave mistake. Christianity is not concerned with presenting a perfect social order, notwithstanding the fact that God visited us. The heart of the gospel must be recognized as the grace, love and fellowship of God.

Student Forums

Beside those evening lectures, Dr. Wedel conducted student forums each afternoon. Tuesday afternoon a special sorority forum was held at Alpha Delta Pi house with over 100 present. Many students took advantage of this opportunity for personal conferences with Dr. Wedel.

New Song Hit Is Sung to All During Meals

"Happy Birthday" Ditty Sweeps Campus In Its Popularity

It may be that the student body is ushering in a revival of the old grammar school days, or just that some students need a suitable outlet for their repressed emotions. Whatever is is, there must be some explanation for the universal popularity of the new song hit that is sweeping the campus.

First noticed in this vicinity a month ago from ten well-intentioned voices at a party in the dining room, the ditty has captivated the imagination of everyone. It is so complicatly fasc nating that it has become impossible to partake of one's evening meal without first rendering and singing at least once, vocally, if a bit raucously. "Happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you."

At first someone obligingly had a birthday party so that the song thus provided an excuse for singing it, but now the party is held any of these days anne and the students were forced to resort to their own initiative to supply the opportunity for indulging in their latest musical craze. Now the amount of genius that was discovered in the endeavor to create the occasion has become amazing.

One example of this hitherto unknown talent is the thoughtful custom of wishing a person happy birthday in advance so that he can be right from work that day. It may be a more delightful occasion breakfast or lunch or maybe a supper. At the faculty tea the first to be so honored. One Saturday evening the entire dining room jolnedin wishing Mr. Robert Miller a happy birthday. However, these good intentions were the cause of a near fiasco on the next day. Mr. Miller was presented with numerous birthday cakes and dinners early in the dining room as some failed to understand the subtle irony of thought of the choristers of the evening before.

Visitors do not go unheeded. Guests are always given the same greeting. It is a happy birthday. Or if it isn't, everyone has just neglected to remember. Then will enjoy the holiday when it finally arrives. In this case, an extra expression of good will is extended and the visitor is requested to join in the musical mode of "Stand up, stand up, stand up."

But the harmonic ventures of all well-meaning choristers has not been confined to the dining room other than the recipients or the guest cheer. Early one week, a saint murmur began to circulate among the students. The murmur grew louder and at 11 A. M. a forum Tuesday night, a hurried-looking student asked for silence for some relief. In answer to her plea, surprised silence greeted her ears. Someone proposed that the song might be sung in convocation, but it might be out of order, or everyone's system.

It was decided that as one of all the main characteristics of Florida State student efficiency of management, "Happy Birthday" be substituted for the traditional morning song. Then all the singing could be finished at the start.

On the campus the enlightening suggestion was offered, a plan to introduce both a diversion for the musical enthusiast and a rival to lessen popularity of the overworked ditty. It was that the students start their day right by greeting their professors with "Good Morning, Dear Teacher."

Horror and Humor Mingle as Ghosts and Bandits Raise Hair and Laughter at Hallowe'en Party

A grand march of weird and humorous figures followed by a modern skeleton dance opened the annual Hallowe'en party given last Friday night in the physical education building.

After the march, lollypops were given to "Dolly" Reed and "Kitty" Smith as prizes for the best costumes. "Dolly," covered with a sheet opening to reveal white ribs against a black chest and to distribute a lace horrible with dark, encircled eyes and blue lips, represented the ghost of many a person's nightmares. "Kitty," clad as a stalwart bandit of the stagecoach days with mustache and heavy boots, provided the realistic touch to the atmosphere.

On entering the gym, the partygoers were given little tags that divided them into groups of ten. Following the grand march and the skeleton dance, these groups —the "witches" "the chains," the "pumpkins," the "owls," and so on—were taken by their leaders through the various horrors. The Witch's forest, an isle Mc Boo—and-so—a graphic shadow picture of a "Midnight Ride of the Witches' playhouse, the Chamber of Horrors, the Witch's Cave, the Fatal slip, and other numbers on the program kept the guests in a constant gasp.

Ruth Wilson, chairman of all the party, had as her assistant in charge of the Hallowe'en party, Her helper was Yvonne Marchessault. The committee in charge of tee were Ruth Agnes McClain, Carol Revell, Ruth Clayton, Mary Nickel, and C. O. A. girls who volunteered to help. Special mention should be made of Miss Clark's art work on invitations and programs.

Coaching Team Almost Defeated by Pupils In A Two to One Victory

The hockey coaching team belonging to the freshman physical education majors, won by a narrow score of two to one over the Friday. This close victory was a surprise to the coaching team as for several weeks they have been drilling their co-eds with hockey techniques and were on top of the fact that they had made much progress.

The object of having this game was, which is composed mainly of juniors and seniors, is to give the physical education majors experience in the methods of teaching sports. The coaching class expects to be challenged again in the future by the freshman team, and they will be prepared to wage a heavier battle.

Calvin Hunt was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the goat trainer at the regular meeting of the Club Monday evening. His office will be responsible for seeing that the goats have their goat songs, and are ready to start court before leaving for the fraternities.

Bess White and Ramsetine Robinson were appointed to serve on the committee with the new social chairman, Margaret Sparkman.

Tentative plans were discussed for a hike to be held soon.

Sports Squints

We are finally beginning to realize that Thanksgiving and all that goes with it is not any too far off and the Odd-Even spirit is charging right along and showing signs of taking everything else along with it. It all began Tuesday in connection with the representatives of the two teams drew the lucky slips of paper out of Viola's yellow hat that told whether the Odds or the Evens should have their demonstration on Wednesday night.

Because who did the drawing for the Odds did right well by her team and drew the choice night. We heard that this year the horse shoe with the rabbit foot attached that was carried much the worse for something to do with it. There's no need to mention the fact that there's a superstition around these parts as to the horse shoe team which has its demonstration on Wednesday night will be a determined, tired of the regressive will be paid by the W. A. A. excepting the railroad fare and thirty cents for the meal on the convention in Atlanta.

Miss Margaret Schuyrle, national president of the Athletic Association of College Women, will be present at the Thursday head of the department of education of the Florida State College for Women, will be among those who will attend the convention. Miss Schuyrle is also interested in Co-lections during the summer.

Army Marches On Flambeau

Papers Donated for Post In Houston, Texas

Valentine George Louis Stanley Lester, the history of the Army of Flambeau office Wednesday afternoon presented to the Sidney Lanier High school in the shadow of the United States Army and sailors, a set of papers pertaining there with a request for some Flambeau to take back to Fort Sam Houston, Texas, for reference for the men to read.

Mr. Lester is a quartermaster in the Quartermaster Army, and was in Tallahassee visiting Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Stanley, whereas Lt. Francis J. Black, who was graduated from the Florida State College for Women at Kelly field in June.

This young soldier told of being stationed in Houston, Texas, in the Union, and of going to Kenner, Louisiana, to visit Mr. Stanley in Cassida. He saw the China Clipper in 1935, when it had started the trip to the Pacific region. Mr. Lester said that memento quartermaster for variation, the year no regimental insignia for Army are always sent over the country to buy supplies in the army.

Mr. Lester visits from Dover, Ohio, and has been in the Army for four years. He said that the post in Houston gets magazines from military academies and colleges, among them the paper from Dartmouth.

When asked it he would like to have the Flambeau sent to the post regularly he said that he would see how well it was liked and then he would write back. Mr. Lester was anxious to meet the French student he has from Florida State college had; therefore. Ia was shown down the corridor to the French department room where Martha Thomas was working.

Three times Mr. Lester said very emphatic, "There are so many pretty girls here" There were three members of the Flambeau staff in the room when he said that.

Enthusiastic Evens Squelched by Frosh

School spirit in the rivalry between the Odds and Evens seems to be getting off to an early start this year.

A group of loyal Evens marched through Reynolds and Jennie Murphree halls Wednesday night whooping it up to the tune of "Even Ripnia Never Die" and "Hail to the Green and Gold." The Odds rallied admirably with "Down" for the green and gold and "hurrahs" for the red, white and purple. Not to be outdone, Reynolds vastly outnumbered, the Evens marched their raid on the Odd dormitory. Aroused by the Evens cheering the freshman co-eds resorted to more crude tactics than squelching the Evens with their vocal chords alone. The classes of '38 and '40 were convinced too late water thrown at them from the fountains and several almost drowned in the flood because of well-directed "Odd" feet thrust before them.

Papers Donated for Post In Houston, Texas

Valentine George Louis Stanley Lester, the history of the Army of Flambeau office Wednesday afternoon presented to the Sidney Lanier High school in the shadow of the United States Army and sailors, a set of papers pertaining there with a request for some Flambeau to take back to Fort Sam Houston, Texas, for reference for the men to read.

Mr. Lester is a quartermaster in the Quartermaster Army, and was in Tallahassee visiting Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Stanley, whereas Lt. Francis J. Black, who was graduated from the Florida State College for Women at Kelly field in June.

This young soldier told of being stationed in Houston, Texas, in the Union, and of going to Kenner, Louisiana, to visit Mr. Stanley in Cassida. He saw the China Clipper in 1935, when it had started the trip to the Pacific region. Mr. Lester said that memento quartermaster for variation, the year no regimental insignia for Army are always sent over the country to buy supplies in the army.

Mr. Lester visits from Dover, Ohio, and has been in the Army for four years. He said that the post in Houston gets magazines from military academies and colleges, among them the paper from Dartmouth.

When asked it he would like to have the Flambeau sent to the post regularly he said that he would see how well it was liked and then he would write back. Mr. Lester was anxious to meet the French student he has from Florida State college had; therefore. Ia was shown down the corridor to the French department room where Martha Thomas was working.

Three times Mr. Lester said very emphatic, "There are so many pretty girls here" There were three members of the Flambeau staff in the room when he said that.

Enthusiastic Evens Squelched by Frosh

School spirit in the rivalry between the Odds and Evens seems to be getting off to an early start this year.

A group of loyal Evens marched through Reynolds and Jennie Murphree halls Wednesday night whooping it up to the tune of "Even Ripnia Never Die" and "Hail to the Green and Gold." The Odds rallied admirably with "Down" for the green and gold and "hurrahs" for the red, white and purple. Not to be outdone, Reynolds vastly outnumbered, the Evens marched their raid on the Odd dormitory. Aroused by the Evens cheering the freshman co-eds resorted to more crude tactics than squelching the Evens with their vocal chords alone. The classes of '38 and '40 were convinced too late water thrown at them from the fountains and several almost drowned in the flood because of well-directed "Odd" feet thrust before them.

Freshman May Have Photos Taken Soon

Annual picture-taking for seniors, juniors, and sophomores will continue through November 6, Eileen Robinson, editor of the book, announced yesterday.

She also said that freshmen may begin having pictures made on December 8 for a two-week period. No appointments will be made or pictures taken Thursday, November 11 or Saturday, November 13.

The editor is also making a special request for annual proofs to be returned promptly to the studio and for seniors who have not filled out nominations or athletic activities to go by the Flatacova desk near the Post Office or see her in 304 Gilchrist.

Carrying last year's annuals. Eileen stated that there was a shortage in the Flatacova bulletin and she will be glad to exchange them for 1937 books right away.

Voice Clinic To Be Set Up For Students

Speech Majors to Act As Doctors, Detecting Vocal Defects

On Tuesday, November 16 12 feminine doctors will set up practice on this campus for a period of eight evening. Six silent, brassier garbed students will be ranked on the office doors of these physicians by the time you or their presence, no advertisements will be inserted in the Flambeau to solicit patronage, and no charges will be made for treatment.

All 12 doctors are specialists in one field and so will have one his clinic together the only illness or complaints that the newcomers are able to cure must involve one's voice. Students in the speech clinic, who in private life are members of Speech Problems class 401, will work in the annual speech clinic, the object of which is to help student overcome undesirable speech defects.

Each year, the clinic's second birthday, 150 students enrolled as to have it corrected.

Fencing Classes Start New Accuracy Drill For Play Night Exhibition

Violins lunges against impotent tumbling mats hung from the gym walls characterize the new drill originated for the fencing classes by Hank Griffin, instructor.

Tending to develop a greater degree of form and accuracy, this type of training is a preliminary to more intensive practice for an exhibit to that will be given at play night within the next week or two. Only those students who attend the classes regularly will, according to Hank, take part in this presentation. The classes meet in the small gymnasium Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons.

patients. This year, as the number in the class which sponsors the clinic has doubled, it is hoped that every student will come to the "doctors" to be examining for speech defects.

Like the health examination required of all freshmen, the clinic examination is simple and brief but very effi cacious. It consists of a preliminary tail of three recitations of a memorized poem of words, reading a stanza of poetry or any other selection, and breathing naturally.

From this test the speech professor can be able to classify the patient into one of three groups: those in need of help, those in need of help, and those in need of help. Students in the first group are given a pat on the back and a fond farewell: to those on the second, certain speech courses will be prescribed as the best healing medicine; and patients in the third group will be given individual treatments by Professor Hall's speech class for minutes a week for seven weeks—free of cost. Normally, the building up appropriation of $18. 1 counted as private speech lessons.

The clinic will be held Tuesday evening, November 16 from 7:30 to 8:30 in the Science building. The general plan is on a "receptions" basis; students are invited to come at any time between the named hours. Speech nurses will introduce patients to their doctor, who will make the examination privately. The student will later be notified as to her "condition" and if it is serious, an appointment will be made for further treatment.

Among the most prevalent speech defects are mumbling, nasality, monotone breathlessness, lisping, and high or low pitch. Anyone conscious of such ailments is invited to attend the speech clinic; anyone unconscious of them is also invited so that she may find out if she possesses a defect and take the opportunity.

Production of Animated Cartoons Featured

Modern photography is the theme of the current exhibition in the college library. Numerous other exhibitions will be shown throughout the year. The present display, however, should be of considerable interest as it deals with one of the most popular of today's hobbies and fads, photography.

The steps involved in the making of animated cartoons is the main feature of this exhibition. Among the unusual facts about this process which are explained here is that the action cartoonist photographs his picture one "frame" or exposure at a time. There are 1400 such exposures or frames each minute of action on the screen. Pay each exposure the cells have to be adjusted over the background for the succeeding step in the movement of the cartoon. A number of cells may be placed in combination over a background to make a complete scene. As an example of this, illustrations of the organization of a "Silly Symphony" cartoon are shown.

Also on particular film three separate drawings or cells are placed together over the same background for a single scene. The camera is set in a heavy steel box pointing at the background downward onto the field where the background and cells are mounted after each exposure. A couple of strips of actual film are shown which illustrate how small amount of change which is actually made in each exposure.

In connection with this exhibition numerous books, magazines, and pictures which deal with color photography, the motion picture industry, sport photography, candid camera shots, and illustrative photography have been placed on display.

Among the many books that should interest camera enthusiasts are "As I Remember," the autobiography of Arnold Genthe; and "Hunting Wild Life with Camera and Flashlight" by George Shiras, Third.

Many of the popular magazines and books which are now using photographs for illustrations in place of the drawings and other methods formerly employed have also been placed on the table and display rack for the use of students interested in modern photography.

According to Miss Day of the college staff, the exhibit will remain for about one week longer.

Letter to Editor of Flastacova Gives Account Of Problems Met in First Edition of Year Book

"Our beloved college—over two hundred pupils and we didn't have an annual!" That was the predicament in which the class of 1910 at Florida State College found themselves, according to a recent letter from Miss F. M. Blackford Jr. to Eileen Robinson, editor of the Flastacova.

The white graduating class of ten became very enthusiastic over the idea of their publica out the first annual at Florida State college. They felt sure that such a book would linger in and grow along with the school.

As they had feared, the faculty members were far from enthusiastic over the idea. Dr. Edward Conradi was scarcely less skeptical than the rest of the faculty was skeptical. Finally after making life sufficiently miserable for this faculty, the girls won out. The first book of the English department agreed to act as sponsor if funds could be raised.

Mary Barrett and Eva Townsend made a trip to Jacksonville where they got printers of advertisements and received bids on pictures. When the editor back to Tallahassee, they knew they would give the college a year book of which every student and every publisher of annuals and selected would be did that it was a beautiful figure. He was quite intrigued by the quaint name of the book and was sure that Dr. Conradi was famous old Indian name, and the girls did not disillusion him.

The name really originated the night that Mary Ford walked in to the room of two roommates, Doris Futch and Claude Wilkins, as they were eating Ry-Krisp crackers. The name on the cracker box gave them the idea of Flastacova, the name for the Miss Fatrider was the first editor-in-chief of the year book of the senior class as her staff. These girls toiled long hours to get the publication off to annual.

"Our pride is very great when we see what the results of today's achievement from our humble beginnings" declared Mrs. Blackfield in the close of her letter.

The present Flastacova staff based their slip for organization night upon these experiences of the first annual staff in 1910.

Procedure Given For Thanksgiving

Miss Anna M. Tracy, head dietitian, has announced the proper procedure to be followed in arranging for tables for Thanksgiving dinner. Students not having guests should get blank table lists from the dining room desk at any time and as soon as possible hand in a correct list of the students to be at the table, beginning Wednesday, November 10. When lists have been checked for accuracy, table assignments will be posted on the dining hall bulletin boards.

Students expecting guests should follow the same procedure except that meal tickets must be attached to the table lists.

Lost Bread-Winner Wanders Aimlessly

Does the sales of the dining room Sunday night wandered one lone girl, a bread plate and basket in an uncertain hand.

An expression of complete bewilderness and uncertain desperation showed itself at times on her face.

For perhaps ten minutes this wanderer ambled up and down the dining room, and evidently were forgotten momentarily as diners turned in their chairs to watch her progress. Several sketches of merriment filled the air as one co-ed remarked another learned the reason for the meandering.

Her face getting redder by the minute the girl sent most piercing looks to every corner of the room, nine dumber diners evidently not yet realistically waiving their napkins in the air. With a sigh of relief the lost was found, and the embarrassed student discovered the bread in the close at her jetter.

The present Flastacova staff based their slip for organization night upon these experiences of the first annual staff in 1910.

Challenging Christian Youth

With Christianity in the Modern World" as the theme o, the Religious Emphasis week program held on the campus this week, we might well turn our eyes to the place of Christianity and Christian youth in shaping the affairs of the world today.

Probably no other organization has been under so much fire in recent years as the church. The present social order and the rising generation continue to demand of it justification for its existence. The challenge today goes out to the church to show the way to a better society.

The church has met this challenge with varying degrees of courage. In some cases definite attempts have been made to bring the work of the church in line with the advanced social order of the day. In many instances the church has stepped out of its aloof role and taken an active part in the progressive movement of ideas and ideals. Much commendation should go to those leaders in the church who seek to keep their ideas abreast of the general trend toward broader horizons.

But there are as many instances in which the church hasn't tried to keep up with the advance of society. There have been times when the church had the half-darkened prejudices, the blind stumbling, the refusals to see the light that make up the characteristics of the unwilling and the unenlightened. The great tragedy has been sometimes not that the church and its followers have not seen the light but that they have refused to act on it. Great social disease and poverty have made definite steps sometimes due to the indifference of those in the modern world who call themselves Christians.

Speaking before a gathering of Episcopal churchmen several weeks ago, Norman Thomas expressed an attitude that is increasingly prevalent today when he said, "We have no confidence that under this ethical inspiration, churchmen will be able to make a new social order which does not make a mockery of our hopes of plenty, peace, and freedom." Thomas further declared that the church "has made and is making small contribution to the end of war and the reign of peace."

Such a statement demands an answer from those of us who call ourselves Christian in any broad sense of the word. It does not demand a verbal defense, however. The only way Christians can answer the accusation and the fruits of that statement is to definitely prove themselves individually. They must remark their attitudes and they must accept their place in the ever-changing social order. Indifference is condemning.

To college youth especially should the challenge take on a definite meaning. The college youth is supposedly the best trained for assuming fundamental issues of all the army of the young. If college youth as a whole calls itself Christian can not see through creed and dogma to the vital needs of the society in which it lives, who can? It is up to the college youth which calls itself Christian to make its religion and the church as an institution part of the broad scheme towards social betterment and to keep it alive to the vital changes of a modern world.

N. S. F. A. Forum For Public Opinion

Opportunity to discuss campus problems and to criticize student government with the aim of arriving at some solution was offered to the student body by N. S. F. A. at this student opinion forum Tuesday night. It was the first time N. S. F. A. had thrown over the entire forum to the floor and held discussion only on questions arising from the floor. Here then was the chance for which some students had long been waiting —the chance to bring their pet complaints, suggestions and opinions to the public.

Criticisms and suggestions pertained to such matters as smoking areas, social regulations, social courtesies, the heavy responsibilities placed on demonstration leaders, and the unacceptableness of the time-pieces about campus. The result was the appointment of several investigating committees and the decision to recommend to Senate various resolutions which were passed. That the questions brought up concerned apparently trivial problems was not unexpected for two reasons: first, the idea of a student opinion forum was new, and secondly, the major campus problems are such that many students feel there is little or nothing which they can do about them in the immediate future.

The unexpected element in the forum was the small number which attended. Only 44 students out of a student body of more than 1,800 college girls were sufficiently interested in the problems and management of their college affairs to participate in a critical discussion of them. We have always heard that opportunity knocks but once: in this case, however, we hear two knocks. By request of those students attending the forum Tuesday night N. S. F. A. will hold its next forum on student opinion so that a study of student problems may be continued. Doubtless at that time more significant problems will be discussed and it is hoped a greater number of students will attend. N. S. F. A. is to be congratulated on the success of this venture.

Senate Chairman Speaks—

Where does Senate meet and when? What is the purpose of Senate? What students are on Senate and for what reason? Do you know who your class representatives are? If so, how many times have you approached them to give your opinion which they in turn are supposed to give to Senate? If you can't answer one of these questions, you are, unfortunately, one of the vast majority on campus. If you can, you are a member of a comparatively small well-informed group.

As a whole this is a remarkably indifferent student body. Once in a while a protest arises that college government is not representative and that Senate is in its purpose. Yet why does it not function to the satisfaction of all? Mainly because the student body doesn't know much about it and what is more has never tried to find out.

Senate as its name implies, is the legislative body of college government. At its meetings discussions on questions of interest to this campus are held and acted upon according to the constitution. Legislation may be introduced and passed right in the meeting. More frequently recommendations from College Council, N. S. F. A., or the Executive Council are considered.

The point is this—that those who are on Senate are girls whom the students have elected. As public officers they are to serve the interests of the campus and are therefore glad to hear any suggestions from them. Moreover, Senate meetings are open to the student body as it has been said time and time again. If any student who is not a member of Senate wishes to express her opinion at the meetings, she is free to do so. Of course, she is not entitled to a vote, but her ideas are wanted and welcomed.

With this freedom of expression at the disposal of all who are interested there should be no post-mortem complaints about rules already acted upon. If the complainer had been to the meeting and had taken part in discussion, she would probably change her opinion anyhow. In any event she couldn't accuse the student officers of not presenting her opinion. The whole burden of true representative student government rests on the individual. If she is not willing to find ways and wherefores for herself, how can anyone represent her as a student? Senate is your organization open to you at any time. You're invited. Now it's up to you.

Tammany Rout Features Elections

The virtual collapse of the Nine-power conference left the way open for American politics to take the leading role in current affairs this week. In New York City, the reform candidate broke a record by ousting Tammany Hall in the second successive election to capture the mayoralty of the city. Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia running under the banner of a Republican-Fusion-Labor party, defeated his Democratic opponent, Jeremiah T. Mahoney, by a wide margin and swept into office with him Thomas Dewey, also a fusionist and the prosecutor of New York racketeers. LaGuardia's victory is looked upon by many as a chance for him to run as presidential candidate in 1940 without campaigning first for a higher state office.

The governor's battle in New Jersey brought still another presidential possibility into the public view. United States Senator A. Harry Moore, a Democrat, took from Republican hands one of the seven gubernatorial positions left to the G. O. P. after previous Democratic sweeps. By his resignation from his senatorial seat and by his acceptance of this office the governor-elect Moore seemed to indicate that he had an eye on the White House.

In other state elections results were important. The New York assemblies fell into the lap of the Republicans with an increase in the number of G. O. P. representatives. Labor showed some gain in power but except where the A F L and the C I O. members voted together had little effect on the final results. It is possible that the latter fact will weaken the antagonistic attitude of the two parties factions and will unite them into a strong labor party by the 1940 presidential contest.

American economic conditions shared the front page with state elections, particularly when President Roosevelt ordered the R. F. C. to provide $40,000,000 to finance federal corn loans at 4 80 a bushel. This proclamation following a forewarning by experts of the agricultural department that the business recession would in all probability continue way into 1938.

Fear that the department's prediction might come true was accentuated by a further drop in the stock and bond markets. The former fell from one to six points with midday liquidation scattering among the losers and the latter recorded considerable losses from fractions of a point to two points. This continued recession in the exchange and the slow trading reported by the brokers' offices threatened to obstruct the budget balance promised by F. D. R. In fact, the president admitted that this balance could be realized only by an increase in taxation to at least before May of next year.

Another Answer to Extra-Curricular Activities Comes in Aquin Editorial

From The Aquin comes another answer to the question, 'Should there be extra-curricular activities in college?' Recently there was in this column an exchange editorial condemning extra-curricular activities and denying college students the time for scholarship.

"We grew up and came to college, or we just came to college. Why, we were not sure. Soon after we arrived, we soon found out that what went on in classrooms was but one of the many phases of campus life. We heard a phrase, extra-curricular activity. Before we had it clearly defined, its forces were working on us.

Without it education would be a very shallow process. There would be no institutions, no nice, quiet hall rooms in the noisy grill-room, no noisy over-crowded class, quiet library, and no training school for practical work. All of these things are a part of the extra-curricular activities. Some people like them and some people never will have a brain in their heads.

"We belong to the 'goon-to-education' type and hesitate but we admit that we enjoy it.

Membership in not more than two or eleven clubs has led us to believe that the student who does nothing but study misses brass school without ever realizing that a good time can be had by all even while we are learning. We feel that the student is not scholarly but pedantic. With his text-book knowledge, unenhanced by the broadening effects of extra-curricular activity, he forever remains as narrow as two of time. You're invited. Now it's up to you.

"Take away clubs athletic competition, and student politics and you've spoiled our appetite for learning. You have stolen the initiative, trying minds and dessert. Nothing but the perverted, dry bones remain. A strict bone diet is certainly not very conducive to hearty eating.

"Of course, the whole setup may be out its sense of proportion. We hear much about 'activities' emphasis on football. Again, a bus fraternity may become too important and bid fair to outshine the school. In such instances, the thing to do is for someone in the offending organization to forget its cosmopolitan interest and influence and return to the more primitive and some simple, self-imposed duties."

* * * *

As a solution to the problem of too much outside activity a point system similar to the one effective on the campus is advocated for Maryville College in the Highland Echo. That college is attempting to help its students in dividing equally the work and honors to be shared between them.

"In order to see find that the major responsibilities on the campus are borne by a handful of students. The tendency to pass the buck has the unfortunate result that a few overworked students do all the work.

"In order to more equally divide both honors and the work attached to them, several colleges are adopting a point system for leading office holders. The system is designed to limit the number of an individual's activities.

"Points are assigned to the various offices according to their

Nothing was said about boxes from home so it is to be gathered that the roaches and their companions don't consider it worth bothering about.)

Writers Discuss Society Problems

Little Red Schoolhouse—1938 Mo

By Edwin R. Embree

This is the story of efforts in the South drive rote teaching from the school system to put some real education in its place. Edwin R. Embree in the November Atlantic Monthly, forecasts it is the story of cooperative activities by Southern teachers and of the philanthropic foundations, the Julius Rosenwald fund, to fit rural schools out of the forty-niner routine into which so many of them have fallen.

The Julius Rosenwald fund, as an institution interested in education, had as its chief program for many years the building of schoolhouses for Negroes in the South. According to the author it was a happy and successful effort. It contributed to the building of more than five thousand schoolhouses; in almost every of the fifteen Southern states. It formed the physical facilities for the schooling of this large group of the population. However, Mr. Embree writes that even before the American people regard their problem of education as they might a "sacred cow, they a becoming cautious of the biggest and wisest running plants as well as the smallest.

Upon close inspection into the Little Rosenwald schoolhouse was found that the teacher routine, formal, and almost completely divorced from the life of the community and the needs of the children.

Mr. Embree goes on to state that effective can be kept from dull routine and made stimulated with education. It is the substitute for enriching the country life. He thinks that in spite of present deleted conditions there is much ferment, and so great an opportunity that one is encouraged to believe that in some may begin to justify the almost reckless faith which advocates of country road to public school system. You Have Seen Their Faces

By Erskine Caldwell

Erskine Caldwell, the Georgia-born author of "Tobacco Road" and "God's Little Acre" once again writes about the miserable existence of the Southern sharecroppers.

The author writing in the current Atlantic Monthly, tells how the plantation owner, intoxicated by the wealth to be realized from cotton, has systematically eradicated the cotton has become a means of diminishing profits barely instead of a fortune.

When the cotton was picked and sold and the large land owners went to live in town, the tenant farmers were left with slightly more profitable land, the produce of which they had to share with their landlord. Mr. Caldwell gives several case histories of sharecropping families who have been forced to give up a part of the cotton crop by the landlord and shows the hopelessness that overtakes them when they realize that they must work more and more thrugh life to work themselves into poverty without being able to eke out anything better than a mere existence.

The author states there are two means of escaping ahead a change in the system or else working such a change in the system that some one method is collective action by the farmers themselves, or else demanded a government control of farming. But in the meantime he says that a government commission make a study of tenant farming in the cotton country. (B. S.)

Shall Marriage Be Subsidized?

By Genevieve Parkhurst

The best answer on young people psychologically and sociologically by the economic necessity of postponing marriage is investigated by Dorothy Parkhurst in the November issue of Harpers.

As America no longer presents a frontier to which young people can migrate in search of living from the land, Miss Parkhurst raises the question: Should marriage be subsidized?

The well-informed agree, she says, that that long engagements are hazardous for the reason that they create either 'a stagnation of staleness toward a relationship once precious' or 'expression of one kind or another, kills interest in family and apartment psychologist problem in later life. Then, too, late marriages cut short on the number of children born into the man intellectual class.

Miss Parkhurst discusses several kinds of schemes that different societies have devised to stave off early marriage financially: poor pay for young people, but concludes that they are all inadequate. The only lasting answer to the problem, she feels, is to raise the present standard of living by the spread of employment at decent living wage. (P. C.)

"The White House Is Calling"

By Stanley High

President Roosevelt has a great many interesting things to say about the presidency according to an article in the November Harper's by Stanley High. His gregariousness is due to the fact that he wants diversion, excitement and help, not because he wants companionship.

Mr. High says that Roosevelt's personal ideas are more numerous than those of any other President and they serve many useful purposes. Mr. High says that they are fully in mind and a stimulus to it. They are him after working hours and in them can be found the clue as to what is at issue.

Mr. High seems to think that Mr. Roosevelt's long-time objectives are not subject to many changes by his counselors—but his tactics are subject to a great deal of change. He further states that Mr Roosevelt's immediate moods and inclinations are influenced by those with whom he is in intimate, informal contact. And it is largely from his moods and inclinations that his tactics spring.

The Social Week

Many Go To Jacksonville For Game And Festivities

The Georgia-Florida game, which is always attended by large numbers of people from both states, will draw many FSCW girls to Jacksonville this week-end for this year's game.

Parties Planned

Among the parties designed to add to the merriment of the occasion are those planned by sorority fraternities. In addition the Jacksonville Junior League dance featuring Bob Pallen's NBC orchestra will take place in the Duval County armory Friday night at 10 o'clock, and the Pi Phi dance at the Woman's Club Saturday night at 8.

The Timaquana country club will be the scene of the Pi Kappa Alpha dinner dance Saturday at 7 p.m. and also of the Phi Delta Phi breakfast following the Pi Kappa dance. Members of Phi Kappa Tau will entertain their fans at a dinner Saturday at 7 at the Roosevelt hotel and at a dance at the same place following the Pi club dance, while Sigma Nu men and their dates will have a cocktail party at the Phi Delta Theta club at 5 p.m. and dinner from 8 until 7 o'clock tomorrow.

Girls Going

Among girls who are going to the game are Frances Williams, Betty Hatch, Lurline Stinson, Helen Carswell, Eleanor Hickson, Eugenia Glass, Elizabeth Ogilvey, Jamie Brown, Norma Vale, Mary Noble, Mary Sims, Marry Collins, Mary Lou Bell, Lottie Lee Brown, Frances Johnston, Barbara Swanson, Eleanor Milton, Mildred Virginia Ruff, Edith Un-

of the meeting. The delegates to Nanking came from both sides, the Chinese refusing to listen to any of the United Japanese terms which were guaranteed and the Japanese refusing entirely to attend the negotiations. The invaders were bounded in their refusal by Italy who asserted that she had come to help her anti-Communist ally and that no mediation would be sought unless both the warring sides were represented.

Meanwhile the successes reported last week by Japan in the Far East and the insurgents in Spain were further consolidated at home, the Japs were proposing to centralize all national authority in the hands of a body about six men playing the double of parliament and cabinet in China, their troops fought to the Soochow creek and to Ukyow yordon around Shanghai. The Chinese, because of this, were reported to be contemplating the evacuation of Shanghai in favor of strengthening their lines further inland.

In Spain, the rebels served notice of the extent of their control by negotiating with Great Britain for trade concessions. While this does not indicate a recognition of the insurgents politically, it is a step in that direction. The rebels were meanwhile having trouble with ship mutinies and were resorting to the dissolution of all anarchist groups as a means to stop dissension. The non-intervention committee did little to check straddlering out the situation aside from passing a resolution to send neutral committees to the peninsula to estimate the number of foreign troops scraping in the struggle.

The various attempts at mediation between the Fascist nations in the subjects of Spain and the Far East were jeopardized by Anthony Eden's fiery denunciation of Germany for wishing to grab colonies and by his lashing of Italy for backing her old friend. Italy replied to the accusations by sounding the amount of German territory that England and France got from the World War and by showing that she herself had obtained none. Concerning Germany, it was rumored that Hitler was about to repudiate every clause of the Versailles treaty, particularly the articles dealing with mandated lands.

importance and the amount of money spent by them to direct their duties. No person is allowed to hold two major offices.

"Such a system might be said to have two main purposes

1) To protect the man from attempting to enter into so many outside activities that he might neglect his duties as an officer.

2) To protect the organization from dissatisfaction and lack of efficient officers, made so because of too many duties.

"Clearly the system is a safeguard and not a restriction. It is for the protection of the body of the student who tries to assume the duties of the position. His ability to do the work well.

"This plan would not only prevent anyone from carrying too much work, but would also provide more opportunity for experience and training needed in the development of other students."

The Springfield Student records the plans of a woman there to organize for a point intercollegiate action for peace on Armistice Day. Two delegates from the Student Christian association and the International relations club from each college represented the college at a conference of the Connecticut Valley division of the United Student Peace committee, a national organization.

The Student says:

"Delegates of the region sent delegates to the assembly, where plans were laid for joint intercollegiate action for peace on Armistice Day.

"Delegates felt that students could work for peace by cooperating with the United committee and voted support of the platform: (1) opposing the program of cutting educational budgets and increasing military expenditures in the United States, (2) favoring the withdrawal of all foreign volunteers from Spain, and (3) advising the citizens of both Japan and China, particularly students, to oppose militarism. A feature of peace action on Nov. 11 will be discussions of peace programs.

"Plans were made for intercollegiate panel discussions on world affairs in which students from Mt. Holyoke, Williams, and Springfield colleges will participate. One will be held at Springfield in November under the joint auspices of the Student Christian association and the International Relations club."

The Blue and Grey carries information of the newest educational experiment conducted by the United States. This experiment carries the distinction of being the first time in history that a nation has attempted to build up friendly relations with other countries by means of education.

"Students taking courses in contemporary history or studying any phases of relations between this country and those of Central America may be interested in Uncle Sam's newest educational experiment. This is the Brave New World radio series, beginning November 1, which will depict various aspects of Pan-American cultural history and development.

"There are approximately 875 Hispanic courses of various subjects being offered in 338 institutions of higher learning, according to the United States Office of Education's radio project. A number of these colleges and universities are planning to correlate their American courses with the radio series. A. G. D. Pledges to Give Traditional Black And White Party

The pledges of Alpha Gamma Delta will be given their little traditional black and white party for the pledges of the other sorities on campus Saturday night from 8 to 10 o'clock in the chapter house.

Black and white crepe paper will be draped over the walls for decoration in the living room. Balloons will be hung from the chandelier over the living room. Specialty acts by the Alpha Delta pledges including tap dances, readings, and songs will be the high lights on the entertainment program which will also include informal dancing and games. Punch, sandwiches, and candy will be served for refreshments.

GREEK LETTER SORORITIES ENTERTAIN WITH NUMEROUS AND VARIED AFFAIRS

Sorority affairs for this week-end are varied, but the cool fall days and evenings suggest teas and after-dinner coffees, which are predominant on the calendar.

Actives and pledges of Alpha Chi Omega and Beta Phi Alpha will give teas Sunday afternoon for friends at their respective chapter houses, while in the evening of the same day members of Sigma Kappa and Zeta Tau Alpha will hold after-dinner coffees, the latter sorority honoring faculty members and patrons.

Alumnae members of Phi Mu sorority are giving a luncheon Saturday at the Roosevelt hotel, Jacksonville, for actives who will attend the Georgia-Florida game that afternoon. Present from the Tallahassee chapter will be: Barbar Hendry, who will sponsor the game; Doris Cahoon, Mabry Sumner, Virginia Hood, and Harriette Bisel.

Last Friday night Alberta and Althea Lloyd, Edna Williams, Mary Norvold, and Gwendolyn Albritton were initiated into Alpha Chi Omega sorority. The new members were honored by the chapter at a banquet Saturday at the Floridan hotel.

Alpha Gamma Delta also held initiation last week-end for the following girls: Martha Fallas, Elizabeth Hexam, Peggy Boetler, and Virginia Ruff. Alumnae members who were present at the initiation were Misses Amber T.

Personals

Miss Betty Clark of Miami is spending the week-end at the Pi Beta Phi house.

Miss Charlotte Crane of Miami is spending the week-end at the Theta Upsilon house.

Audrey Hastings was pledged to Alpha Xi Delta Thursday night.

Mrs. Nina Mahin, national president of Alpha Xi Delta, visited the chapter house Sunday.

Vespers to Be Held

Vespers in the Augusta Conrad theater, Sunday evening at 7:15 will be under the direction of Sarah Ervin. The program will consist of a peace service composed of poetry and special music.

Beta Phi Alpha pledges entertained actives and friends with a halowe'en party last Saturday night. The spirit of the hallowe'en season was carried out in the colorful decorations, and games and dancing were enjoyed during the evening. Actives of Beta Phi Sudden gave a musical program and popcorn party for their pledges last Saturday night, and at the same time Zeta Tau Alpha members and pledges had a formal supply at a similar function.

Seniors Have Housekeeping In Education

Home Economics Majors Live in Practice House 8 Weeks

BY LOUISE RICE

A genuine "Home Sweet Home" can be found on the campus. This is the home economics practice house where each senior girl majoring in home economics spends under the supervision of Miss Lelia Venable eight weeks in which she learns and gives help and suggestions to the students.

This home is beautifully furnished and has all the up-to-date conveniences found on the campus. The modern home. It is built in old English style of architecture and consists of eight rooms. Each quarter a group of about six home economics girls live in the house carrying out all of their numerous household duties, such as budgeting, purchasing, cooking, and entertaining.

The staff of the home management house is made up of a manager, an assistant manager, the head cook, an assistant cook, and the dining room and pantry maid. When there are six girls in the house, one of them is a guest. Before they leave the practice house each girl has had practical experience in managing a home cooking for a small group, and keeping household duties as well as an assortment of social functions.

The girls entertain at regular intervals. Such functions as these contains one or more guests at formal dinner and she is hostess at the various social functions. They have after-dinner coffees and bridge parties quite often. Each group gives an informal seasonal party such as Halloween, Easter or Christmas parties to which each girl invites from one to six guests, depending upon the type of party.

The duties are divided among the girls and each fulfills her particular duty for one week, and then they rotate, each girl getting a chance to serve in each capacity. The manager is the hostess for the week, and her duties include planning the menus and marketing. She keeps a strict account of all expenses in a daily journal and then puts them in a summary account book at the end of the week. Hers is an enviable position for her duties are such that she can sleep later in the mornings.

The assistant manager is responsible for the appearance of the house at all times, and she oversees all work that is done by the girls. She presides at the social functions.

Two girls share the responsibilities of cook. On school days they serve breakfast and dinner; on Saturday and Sunday, all three meals are prepared. The chief cook prepares the main dish of the meal, and the assistant cook looks after the salad, bread and beverages.

While the cooks are getting breakfast the maid cleans the house. She sweeps, dusts, and mops every day and once a week the house is given a thorough cleaning with the vacuum cleaner. They see that the linens are kept clean, the silver polished, and the maids have charge of the proper storage of left-over food.

Through this enterprise which is carried out by the money paid by the girls in the dormitory for their home economics course, a most valuable experience in managing a home with all its sundry details and in its various phases, the social side as well as housework and keeping of accounts and counts.

The girls living in the practice house now are Betty Bow, Ruth Lewis, Melissa Holman, Ann Keigh Eastham, Adria Leonard, and Dixie Gist.

Newman Club Attends Camp; Federation Meet is Planned

Thirty-three members of the Newman club spent last week-end at Camp Flastacowa where they enjoyed a Halloween party Saturday night. Games, stunts and original costumes concocted at the last minute added to the gaiety of the affair. The club plans to make all the events of the week-end.

The Southeast Province Federation of College Catholic clubs will be held at the University of Georgia, Athens, November 12, 13, and 14. Included in the federation are the University of Florida, Georgia Tech, Emory university, University of Georgia, and Florida State college.

Students from the college who are planning to attend the convention are Marie Duffy, president of the Newman club on campus, Elizabeth Lundy, Mary Crocker, Ann Marie Lundy, Mary Hansen, Rachel Edelin, Kathleen McCarthy, and Alice Park.

The Italian composer, Giraclimo Rossini, was born on Feb. 29, 1792.

"Star Finder" Is New Chart For Students

New Device Provides Map Of Various Skies For Searchers

Did you ever have something very special planned for a certain night and then that the heavens found could be made to order? For anyone who wishes to know exactly what stars will be out and occur, here is a chance!

All you have to do is go over to the Westcott building, find the office of the Bravera, or the "Star-finder," which is mounted next to the physical science room, and turn the knob. It is a chart formerly used by science instructors only for their own students but now, thanks to the ingenuity of Dr. William M. Barrows Jr., the assistant professor of physics here, it is placed so that all the students may use it.

334 Students Help To Earn College Funds

One Out of Every Five Students is Working

According to records in the personnal office, one out of every five students at Florida State college is helping to earn her expenses this year. A total of 334 students out of an enrollment of 1,772 young women are helping pay their own ways in getting an education.

Probably due to the reduction in N.Y.A. aid to students, this figure is slightly less than the figures for 1936-37, which showed that one out of every four students was helping earn her own expenses.

The National Youth administration still remains the biggest source of student employment with 141 jobs. The students on this payroll serve as office and student assistants, in clerical and stenographic positions, in playground work, in social service work, and in various public offices.

The college dining room is the next largest means of employment. Here 93 students earn their a... ...d room, which is equivalent to $200 a year each, by waiting on tables.

Other sources of employment at Florida State college are: department assistants, 57; tea-rooms, 11; miscellaneous, 42. Some students also earn money by representing commercial establishments such as dry cleaning, laundry or photographic concerns. A number of students receive help from various scholarships not included in this study.

Mrs. May McCormick Visits Flambeau And Announces Seal Sale

Mrs. May McCormick Pynchon, executive secretary for the Florida Tuberculosis and Health association, with headquarters in Jacksonville, visited the Flambeau office ... night, and announced that the sale of T. B. Christmas seals will go on sale Thanksgiving. Envelopes containing 25 seals will be left in the boxes of all students and boxes in which money for these may be placed will be arranged.

Mrs. Pynchon said that funds derived from these seals goes to the state and county in their T. B. work. This money helped with the tests that were given at Florida State college recently and will also assist with the X-rays that will be given this month for those who registered positive in the skin tests.

Mrs. Frances Tippetts Johnston, president of Leon County and Health association, has charge of sales in this district.

Library Selects Religious Books

In connection with Religious Emphasis week, the library has selected many books which deal especially with religion, morals, Christian practice, and principles. These books have been set out on the table for the use of students interested in these vital problems.

Among the books selected are: "Why I Am a Christian," by Dr. Frank Crane; "Beliefs That Matter," by William Adams Brown; "Quiet Talks With Eager Youth," by S. D. Gordon; "Living Religion," by Hornell Hart; "Religion and the Modern World," by John Herman Randall and John Herman Randall, Jr.; and "Religious Perplexities," by L. P. Jacks.

Inquiring Reporter

Peevish Groans About Pet Gripes

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is second in a series of brief interviews with students. Last week the subject of the interview was compulsory convocation, while this week the Inquiring Reporter has asked students about their pet peeves in their college life.

Question: What is your favorite "gripe" at the present time?

Eileen Robinson: I don't like signing up in general. I wish the date when the books are due would be put in the library books instead of the date they are taken out.

Polly Douglas: Students should be allowed to cut before and after holidays. I haven't any Saturday classes, and so it just means I can't cut on Friday.

Elizabeth Anne Webb It's wonderful how far they've gotten with cuts but I think the purpose is defeated by forbidding students to cut before and after holidays. It should be their own responsibility.

Margaret Stout. I loathe the singing of "Happy Birthday" in the dining room.

Betty Pearlman: We have too many petty rules. They put us on our honor and give us laws which limit the exercise of that honor.

Sue Rowley: I think students should have more cuts in a class a quarter than the number of credit hours; psychology lab for example.

Katherine Stevens: Sorority houses should be allowed to have music on Friday nights. If they won't let us dance, they could at least let us have music.

Sandra Packham: I hate girls who gripe about the food they give us at this school. None of them is emaciated looking and you notice that they always eat what is served.

Catherine Eckles: My pet gripe is the fact that underclassmen aren't allowed to ride at night without being accompanied by a host of chaperones. Why should a student have to have so many credit hours of "education" until she is allowed to ride at night.

Charlotte Rawls: Cuts should be given students before and after holidays.

Miss Liddell: Taking attendance and checking up on absences.

Florence Wynn: I don't like compulsory convocation. When I was in high school we were not compelled to attend a convocation but could go when we wanted to. Now that I am in college I don't see why I shold be made to attend.

Ellen McLeod: The singing of "Happy Birthday" and "Stand Up" in the dining room is one of my main gripes.

Dr. Richards: People who fool themselves into thinking that they are thinking when they are only using impressive words.

Evelyn Anderson: I haven't any gripes. Everything's O. K. for me.

Mary Ellen Teagle: I don't like compulsory convocation.

Marthe Thomas: I like everything.

Marian Alice Rogers: I don't like compulsory convocation and the new cut system.

Dean Opperman: The fact that there is no auditorium big enough for the artists series and no School of Music building worthy of the institution.

Morris Watson: Teachers who expect examinations to be mimeographed without giving me enough time to do it in.

Honor Maynard: They will not let a college girl go alone with a town girl whom she has known for ten years to dinner and a picture show, but they allow the same college girl to go with anything that wears trousers who is not on the black list. It seems her reputation would be much safer with this town girl than it would be with some of the approved dates. Another gripe is the fact that we have to remain here the Firday after Armistice, and another thing, girls are not allowed to study together after light flash. Also, I know that students would like to continue experiments in the laboratories sometimes after light flash. Why couldn't special permisison be obtained for this.

It is definitely not right for instructors to be allowed to smoke in the library if students are not allowed to smoke there too.

Ruth Prather: If you make good enough grades you ought to be allowed to cut before and after holidays. Some girls live too far away to go home without cutting.

Mary Alice Jackson: My gripe is the rule regarding the necessity of having a senior accompany underclassmen to football games.

Sarah Adams: Compulsory convocation isn't necessary in a school of this type. We're kept under the iron thumb so much, we ought to have a little freedom.

Jean Steffee: The extra-curricular point system is what I hate. It's like the property qualification for voting.

Martha Broyles: The new cut system is unattainable for me, and I would like unlimited cuts. It's the student's responsibility to attend classes when she should.

Janet V. Cook: Mine is the necessity of great ability to stay awake when looking at movies in the chemistry lecture room. Couldn't something be done about the lighting?

Merle Taylor: Orientation meetings and professors who don't come to tea when you have invited them. The attendance to the first and the non-attendance of the latter both take valuable time away from work.

Melissa Holman: I don't approve of the light system for npper classmen. I think only the students who wish to keep their lights on after 12 o'clock should be made to pay the fee.

Katherine Bacon: Why can't something be done about the line that forms in front of the post office window between the classes. It goes straight across the hall and causes all the congested traffic.

Dorothy Scott: Freshmen who ask for light cuts at 11 o'clock are a nuisance.

Susie Brown: Sweet potatoes.

Johanna Skagseth: People that scrape their chairs before the blessing is sung in the dining room.

Helen Dabney: I don't think we should have to go to school on the Friday after Armistice when we have both Thursday and Saturday off. We want a Friday holiday.

Kay Newsome: Compulsory convocation is my biggest pet one.

Delia Montero: The sounds that emanate from the practice rooms which seem to be located in the dormitories are what peeve me.

Mary Elizabeth Baker: Nothing bothers me except the homework.

Agnes Whittemore: Sweet potatoes nine times a week.

Nina Noel: Teachers who don't let you talk during discussion periods in class, but make them a lecture on their personal experiences.

Dot Luther: Why can't we have extra girls overnight in the rooms in the dormitories? It seems to me that if the students feel comfortable three-in-a-bed over week-ends it's all right.

Hazel Hinsey: "Happy Birthday" sung in the dining room.

Jeannette Mullis: I'm tired of hearing people gripe about parting with the dollar for the lights when they voted for it.

Miss Charlotte Stevens: Everything's beautiful.

'Where Does My Sole Go?' Is Question

College Maidens Wonder About Disappearance Of Shoe Leather

Two young college moderns were asking not "Where will my soul go?" but "Where does my sole go?" Of course they were just as interested in the former question as their parents and all those who love them dearly. Yet, they could not help but wonder where the shoe leather was disappearing so rapidly and mysteriously.

It all happened after a discussion of the payment of the $2 breakage fee that every student is charged. These two juniors were trying to figure how they could get the benefits of this fee without tearing down the campus. The power of logic, which the college attempts to give all its students, led them to the conclusion that they would be content to merely walk about wearing down the floors.

That question settled in their minds, another arose. Indeed, they got $2 worth of wear-down from the buildings. But, characteristically, they went on: "We wear out our shoes strolling around on the campus. But where does the sole go?"

These young ladies did not let the question haunt them long. They found their answer by consulting Dr. Harold Richards. His answer was simple enough. By friction the leather is torn into tiny fragments and wherever you walk, you leave a trail of "sole dust." If you could retrieve it, you would have a nice heap of powder.

Now, if only you could put it back together again! Well, you'd have something there!

Improvements Made Lately On Campus Are Described

Jennie Murphree Selected as Dormitory For Renovations During Past Summer

By ROSEMARY McDONALD

This year's freshmen probably do not realize the numerous changes that have taken place on the campus, and for that matter only a relatively few of the upper classmen are aware of the extensive improvements that took place during the summer months and are still being carried on under the supervision of Herbert D. Mendenhall, college resident engineer.

Probably the most obvious changes are in the dormitories. Of these, Jennie Murphree was the one selected for this year's renovation, as it is the policy of the school to do over one dormitory a year. New linoleum was laid on all floors, all rooms were painted and all woodwork was varnished. In redecorating the dormitories a three-fold purpose was maintained: first, the comfort of the students; second, the ease with which the object could be maintained and kept clean; third, the beauty and good taste of the article.

A system of extension phones has been giving efficient service since its installation the first week of school. There are four inter-communicating systems with their outlying telephones on each hall. Glichrist and Bryan each have six small 'phones; Broward, Reynolds, ant Jennie Muephree each have seven. A further communication idea has been planned whereby outlying phones may be placed at various points around the campus convenient to the night watchman, so that he might be reached on short notice.

Additional facilities for pressing have been added to the dormitories. Formerly there was only one large room provided for each residence hall, but increased convenience is noted with the new ironing boards installed on each floor. Jennie Murphree has six new boards, Broward has four, Gilchrist five, and Reynolds and Bryan each have three.

The guest room, provided for use of guests of the college, has been moved from Jennie Murphree to 221 Broward. This room is being redecorated and planned in an attractive color scheme. An adjoining private bath is being provided.

New upholstery is making its appearance at various places throughout all the halls. Bryan parlor and sun parlor have been completely re-upholstered and new drapes are being hung. Glichrist date parlors and music room have been refinished, as has Reynolds office.

One hundred new beds have been distributed in Broward hall, taking the place of that number of old and hadly worn beds. All radiators in Bryan, Reynolds and Jennie Murphree were repainted.

Students will find it easier to make use of their radios and reading lamps this year, especially in Jennie Murphree, Reynolds and Broward, as two additional floor plugs have been installed in each room. To take care of this added current new distribution panels were placed in these three halls.

This year for the first time each residence hall is provided with its own tea service. These useful sets are much in evidence during the regular Wednesday afternoon teas given in each of the dormitories.

The academic buildings have undergone their share of the changes. The old 203 Westcott, so familiar to freshman hygiene classes as a regular meeting place for all large campus groups, has been transformed into two rooms one a classroom seating 36 and the other an office for Dr. Elizabeth Andrews, director of personnel. On the fourth floor of the Westcott building a room has been arranged with temporary partitions for the use of the Flastacowo photographer, to take the place of the formar and more inconvenient studio in the Demonstration school.

The space in the Westcott building formerly occupied by the bookstore, prior to its removal last year to its present location, has been converted into work rooms for use of the physics department. Room 118 is now Dr. Richards' office; room 120 is a dark room for photographic work, and room 122 is a storage and experimental shop. The dark room is expected to be especially useful in carrying on the first extensive photographic work to be done on this campus and for increased use with the fine wave-length spectroscope, an expensive piece of equipment for work with light rays extending into the ultra-violet.

Dr. Richards stated that the addition of much-needed work space will do much towards widening the scope of the work done by the physics department. These laboratories are unusual in that ventilation systems have been installed in them, increasing the ease with which work can be carried on.

Barrett's Star Finder, an instrument for placing the stars at any time of night, is now a popular addition for general student use. This hangs on the lower floor of the Westcott building.

The Alumnae club office has moved from the second floor of the Education building to its original quarters on the second floor of the Westcott building.

To some extent the campus proper has been changed. Grading and planting has been done on the lawn east of the Education building and around the Music annex. The landscaping north of the Westcott building is also new this year.

Two new archery backstops have made their appearance on the athletic fields around the physical education building, bringing the total up to eight.

Armistice Day Program Gives Peace Problem

Round Table Discussion Offers Background To Convocation

STUDENT GROUP PRESENTS TALK

Economic Causes of War Brought Forward In Forum

Proving that college students regard Armistice day as more than a parade of khaki clad soldiers, the Student Peace service of the campus turned the spotlight on the basic causes of war this week in Tuesday's convocation program. Presenting a round table discussion, various students approached the different phases of the world peace problem from several viewpoints.

Student Discuss

The girls, Louise Gehan Phillips, Margaret Harrison, Arline Lorthart, Ermine Lawrence, Frances Gibson, and Barbara Thaxton, raised the question, "Is it naturally act really neutrality? If not, what would be the effect on trade, on international?"

Then offered as possible solutions to the peace problem military disarmament, improvement of living standards, seeing that actions will not have them have access to raw materials, opening international markets, trade on an equality basis, projecting for peaceful changes pointed in a world wide economic conference, and reorganization of the League of Nations.

World Planning Talked

It was suggested that the United States could do her part by withdrawing her forces from foreign areas, giving political and territorial recognition to warring nations, safeguarding the data of Philippine independence, encouraging the exchange of foreign students, and setting the quota system to include orientals, and applying the Golden Rule to the dealings with other nations.

From the discussion the student talkers definitely concluded that we must have world planning if we really want peace.

Dr. Eyman Gives Lecture Series

Talks on Education Given In Florida Cities

This week Dr. R. L. Eyman, dean of the college, is delivering a series of talks in Daytona Beach, New Smyrna, and Orlando. Monday night he addressed the Peninsula club members, P. T. A. and P. E. A. alumnae in Daytona Beach. His subject was "Recent Developments and Trends in Citizenship." The following day at New Smyrna Dr. Eyman spoke to the high school assembly on "Training for a Vocation," to the Kiwanis club on "Current Issues in Education." That evening he talked to the alumnae group on the value and need of religious education and also on training for citizenship.

At Tavares Dr. Eyman addressed the Lake County alumnae club Wednesday.

Year's Plans Discussed At Meeting of AAUP

Plans for the year were discussed at the first meeting of the American Association of University Professors held Wednesday night at the Methodist student house with Raymond Belamy, president of the association, presided.

Provisions were made for the appointment of the program committee which is composed of one official of the group and several members whose names will be announced at a later date.

Conard Replaces Thrush

During the next quarter Miss Grace Conard, of the faculty of the Art institute of Chicago, will substitute for Miss Helen A. Thrush, who is in Philadelphia because of illness.

Miss Conard has taught at the Chicago Art Institute for the past 15 years.

Medical Aptitude Test to Be Given

All students who intend to enter medical college next fall are expected to take the medical aptitude test to be given in Dean Dodd's names on December 3. Those who will take the examination are asked to give their names to Dean Dodd so that he may order the correct number of papers. A fee of $1.00 must be brought to the examination by each person. No central committee which scores all papers.

Three Language Organizations Have Programs

Greek Theatre, Living In Germany, Pledging Are Features

A discussion of the Greek theatre, a talk about life in Germany, and plans for pledging were featured at the meetings of the Classical club, the German club, and Theta Kappa respectively this week.

After a brief business meeting conducted by the president, Gladys Ware introduced the speaker on the Classical club's meeting, Professor Lillian Dedrick spoke on the Greek theatre, illustrating her talk with slides and pictures. Afterward Marie Anderson discussed the Greek theatre also illustrating her subject. Masks and costumes of the Greek theatre worn by members of the club were described by Mary Clyde Greer.

After the program the members were given an opportunity to make sketches which will be used in miniature theatres, costumes, and scenery for the next Greek festivities, in which the girls will be assisted by Miss Edith W. Weil, art instructor, who has charge of art in class on the Greek and Roman drama.

Elisabeth Knapp presided at the meeting of the German club on Wednesday afternoon. Following the business meeting, Blaine Fletcher presented some facts on German life. German jokes, told by Ruth Webber and two German games—"Ich bin etwas in dem Hause" and "Der oder Nein"—wound up the meeting.

At its meeting this week Theta Kappa, French honorary, voted on and accepted 14 new members. Evelyn Glasier, president, announced that bids will be issued at the end of the week and that pledging ceremonies will take place after Thanksgiving

The members also voted on identification of pledges as the initiation of the club. The bracelets will be a "Theta Kappa" and a "Theta Kappa" on them. Colors adopted by the members are turquoise and purple. The yellow chrysanthemum was selected as the club's flower. The members on the constitution was deferred until the next meeting.

Danish Figures Are On Exhibit

Education Building Has Porcelain Display

The exhibition of figurines of birds and animals which are works of the Royal Porcelain factory of Copenhagen will continue for two more weeks on the lower floor of the Education building.

The figurines are of unglazed porcelain, which is distinguished by grayish fineness of the finish, and delicate blue. The figurines are sent over the country on exhibition by Danish artists of New York and are for sale. Prices range from $15 to $50.

The Royal Porcelain factory, from which these figurines came, was founded in 1779 at the request of the dowager Queen Juliana Maria. It was supported in its early years by Frantz Heinrich Muller was the factory's first director and engaged as the first modeler Adrico Carl Luplau, an eccentric German who made models for the Flora Danica service.

Early Danish productions were inspired here by the contemporary factory productions of Meissen, Berlin, and Seures, though no porcelain had as yet achieved a distinctly national character. The Danish sculptor Thorvaldsen had work produced at the factory.

Conradi, Dodd Go To Atlanta For Meetings

Florida State President And Dean Attend Conferences

VARIED TOPICS ARE DISCUSSED

Financial Difficulties Are Brought Out By Delegates

Meeting In Atlanta

At the first meeting the Southern university conference held in Atlanta November 1 and 2, the question of making the college library of greater use to the students was considered. Also the exact place of the liberal arts college in modern institutions was formed the chief topics. After the business forums, the two representatives from Tallahassee attended a dinner given by F.S.C.W. alumnae and helped organize the Atlanta alumnae chapter at that time.

Wednesday and Thursday, Dr. Conradi and Dean Dodd went on to the meeting of the Association of Associated American colleges in Birmingham. Here also the main problems of the liberal arts colleges. Since high school inspection and accreditation was the principle subject of discussion. Also present at the meetings, the cooperation of secondary schools in regard to standards and the possibility of changing the entrance requirements in the Southern states were emphasized.

Finances Discussed

The difficulties of financing colleges were also discussed at the conference. Professor Gaines of Washington and Lee took the angle of the privately owned institutions in contrast to the angle of the state institutions taken by President Graham of the University of North Carolina. At the junction, the integration of the library with the social studies department was explained to the delegates by expert librarians.

Alumnae Week Plans Changed

Activities Substituted For F. S. C. W. Week

After much careful consideration, Dr. Edward Conradi has decided that F. S. C. W. week be discontinued and in its place other activities be substituted. The decision was reached with the completion of a study made by the Faculty Committee on Cooperation with the Alumnae.

The committee has been decided that rather than have state alumnae meetings concentrated in one week, it would be advisable to carry on this activity throughout the year. The various alumnae clubs now have the privilege of having representatives at one of their meetings during the year. In this manner, the clubs may choose their own dates and speakers.

It is hoped that this new arrangement will be more effective than the former F. S. C. W. week activities. The discarded plan caused much confusion in the alumnae clubs throughout the state and worked many hardships on faculty speakers who were in great demand by the clubs.

Art Instructor Attends Convention in Chicago

Last week Mrs. Beatrice Beyer Williams of the Art department attended the 25th annual convention of the College Art association in Chicago. The meetings, held at the Art Institute of Chicago and the Chicago Art Institute, were composed of a series of talks given by speakers from the art departments of Harvard, Princeton, University of Chicago, University of Illinois, New York university and others.

Mrs. Williams also spent quite a bit of her time buying lamps and wool for the residence halls of the dormitories.

Holiday is Given Students Tomorow as First Quarter Ends and Freshmen Granted Weekend

Marked by two holidays this week brings to a close the first quarter's work of the winter session. Armistice was observed quietly by the students yesterday, but tomorrow and Saturday many plans have been made by the majority of the student body.

Freshmen for the first time this year will be able to leave the campus this week-end. In addition, many upper classmen are joining in the exodus to all points over the state. Some will spend their time at home others visiting classmates, and others will witness the Florida-Clemson game in Gainesville.

Two conventions, the Newman club in Athens, Ga., at the University, and the joint meeting of the local F.R.C. group with that of the University of Florida, are important events of the week-end. About 100 girls from this campus will represent the former group and 15 are planning to attend the I.R.C. meeting.

Many of those who will remain here over the week-end are planning trips to the college camp. Others will spend Armistice in horseback riding, skating, and about 50 are talking the hay ride Saturday night. A dining club Saturday night.

Tomorrow is the end of the quarter. While grades will not be issued from the registrar's office, "unsatisfactory" slips will be sent those students whose work has been failing during the first quarter. A reminder that students who cut on Monday do so at their own risk was announced during the week. All cuts will be taken from this next quarter's quota which will be based on last semester's average. If no "unsatisfactories" are given. This weekend also counts on next quarter's number. Freshmen's cuts will be based on a "C" average, that is if they do not receive any "unsatisfactories."

Six Will Attend Catholic Meet This Week-End

Newman Club Convention At Athens Is Annual Southeast Affair

Florida State College for Women Catholic students will attend the Federation of College Catholic Clubs convention to be held this week-end at the University of Georgia, in Athens. Girls planning to attend the meeting are Rita May Hetrry, Rachael Erwin, Alice Hamilton, Mildred McCarthy, Elizabeth Lounds, and Marie Joffre. This convention is the annual meeting of the Newman clubs of the southeastern schools in regard to standards and the possibility of changing the entrance requirements in the Southern states were symbolized.

Dinners Planned

The difficulties of financing colleges were also discussed at the conference. Professor Gaines of Washington and Lee took the angle of the privately owned institutions in contrast to the angle of the state institutions taken by President Graham of the University of North Carolina. At the junction, the integration of the library with the social studies department was explained to the delegates by expert librarians.

Library Lists Reading About Modern College

Books, Articles Selected Concerning Present Day Education

As if in answer to the prayers of the students from the School of Education, Miss Louise Richardson, of the college library staff, has compiled a list of books and magazine articles available in the library for students interested in the modern college. This list includes articles from the discussions of fraternities, of Negroes in the educational system, and of the true value of higher education.

Miss Conard states that Miss Richardson suggested are:

Girls' New Clothes Good Index to Fall's Arrival

Camp, Fur Coats, Hikes, Football Games And Healthy Appetites Other Indications

By INA MARGARET ROBINSON

Fall has many ways of announcing its arrival, but college girls probably furnish one of the most interesting indexes.

As soon as a puff of wind occurs in October, F. S. C. W. is scurry to their rooms to don their new fall clothes. Everywhere on campus one sees EASY dresses, sweaters, trim wool skirts, neat jackets, and the conventional "bobby" socks which are worn with comfortable crepe-soled oxfords. Many girls at the University of Chicago and the Chicago Art Institute, were composed of a series of talks given by speakers from the art departments of Harvard, Princeton, University of Chicago, University of Illinois, New York university and others.

Mrs. Williams also spent quite a bit of her time buying lamps and wool for the residence halls of the dormitories.

If the girls feel the urge to really dress up, they put on their new fur coats. They usually rout the first few times they wear them. Pictures of coeds taken away under the influence of Florida sunshine. After one such experience with a fur coat, the good old fashioned polo jacket becomes the vogue.

Students get over their summer weariness, and begin to walk around campus. One encounters the pokine along and dragging their feet. The girls even work up a healthy appetite. Hamburgers a la Odd and Even rivalry comes to their minds. With this increased rate of activity, appetites increase, too. At any rate, girls are seen munching apples and candy bars oftener than before. With this increase of appetite, the taste for nuts also increases. Students are interested in the physical education classes because the physical exercises

I. R. C. Plans Joint Meeting At University

Local Club is Convening With Gainesville This Weekend

BANQUET WILL BE SATURDAY NIGHT

Further Sessions And Forums to Be On Sunday

A variety of events from entertainments to serious meetings will be the order of the day as the International Relations club of this campus joins ballots in Gainesville for a joint meeting with the I.R.C. of the University of Florida.

Discussions Planned

Discussions centering around world events and featuring the crisis in the Far East will be a part of the program arranged for the delegates. Programs will be led by representatives from both clubs led by Allen Searle and Margaret Stewart, presidents of the organizations.

Saturday will be a big day on the entertainment front with plans for the visiting club. They will attend the Florida-Clemson football game in the afternoon. Following the game they will be guests of honor at a banquet given by the Gainesville club. After the banquet a party will attend the F club dance.

Sessions Here

Representatives from Florida State college standing are: Olive Graham, Virginia Cubbedge, Anne Braverman, Marguerite Browne, Mary Lou Hamilton, Margaret Shirley Fields, Annie Jennings, Marian Lumpkin, Linnes Lundberg, Mary Stevens, Virginia Thompson, Glotron, Agnes Stiggins, Alice Whitman, and Betty Young.

Spanish Group Meets Saturday

Seven Attend Convention At State University

An invitation to the first general meeting of the Florida chapter of the American Association of Spanish teachers to be held November 13 at the University of Florida at Gainesville, has been issued to all Spanish teachers of the state by Dr. Marion Hay, president of the association.

The chapter's chief project for more than a year, textbook examination and evaluation, will be the subject for open forum discussion on the campus which will be summaries of findings, and perhaps group action. That this subject is of national importance to Spanish teachers who have examined one or more Spanish textbooks may send to Dr. Hay a statement of their findings. Such information is desired from every teacher whether or not he will be able to attend the meeting.

The complete program for the day in addition to interesting talks and discussions groups will also include a luncheon and tea. The meeting will open with a talk by Dr. O. H. Haughtmann, head of the Spanish and Italian department at the University of Florida, on the problems of teaching Spanish, a. m. Saturday morning. Following an address of welcome by Dr. Thomas R. Reed, president, Vice-president, University of Florida, Dr. Hay will speak on "Some Winter Haven high school, whose subject is "The Novel Americas Rediscovered," and Dr. Margie Burks, Florida State college, who will discuss "Poetry of the Americas." "The Duval County Language Program" will be the topic for an address by Mrs. Lenora Eckles, city director of modern foreign languages, Jacksonville, after which the meeting will adjourn until the afternoon session.

Following a luncheon at the Primrose Grill at 1:00 p. m. the meeting will again convene at 2:30 o'clock at which time text book examination and evaluation and an open forum discussion will be held. Dr. Haughtmann will close the day at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Haughtmann, 4:30-5:30 p. m.

Those attending from Tallahassee are: Dr. Arthur B. Seymore, Dr. Margie Burks, Dr. Dorothy Breen, Miss Margaret Campbell, of the college faculty; Miss Dorothy Purse, post graduate at Florida State college, and Miss Wilma Benson, instructor at Leon High.

Tickets for Series Will Be Given Out

Season tickets for the artist series concerts will be given out in the college bookstore on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, November 16 and 17. Students should not fail to call for them at this time. The date of seat-assignment will be announced in the near future.

Season tickets for faculty and other officers of administration will be on sale at the bookstore beginning November 15. The price is $3.50. This will entitle the owner to a reserved seat in the faculty rows, provided their reserved ticket is called for at the bookstore the day of each performance.

Faculty admission is $1.00 for the Nino Martini and Joros ballet concerts and $.75 for other performances. These tickets may be secured in advance but may be obtained at the box office the night of the performance.

Y.W.C.A. Plans Follow-Up For Religious Week

Sorority, General Forums To Be Sponsored By Denominations

This year's follow-up program for Religious Emphasis week as planned by Marion Lee Smith, Y. W. C. A. president, contains two new features. Sorority and general group forums are to be held, and second, the general student forum is to be sponsored by denominational groups.

The sorority forums will be conducted on the following basis. All of the sororities will be divided into groups of three. The heads of these groups, acting as a single unit, will meet in the sorority house they select, once each week for a month. Discussion leaders, selected by the groups, will lead the discussions.

In the general student sessions each denomination will have charge of a group forum. The meetings will be held once a week and will be in the student house. The denomination that is acting as sponsor. As in the sorority forums, the discussion leaders will act as forum speakers.

The first of these general student forums will be held at 7:30 p. m. November 18, at the Methodist Student house. The speaker for the evening has not as yet been selected.

The follow-up program, as sponsored by the Y. W. C. A., has as its primary purposes the continuation of the spiritual atmosphere that was created during the Religious Emphasis week, and the closer fellowship of all denominational groups represented on Florida state college.

The follow-up committee headed by Martha Lester, chairman, is composed of the following members: Katherine Bacon, Episcopal representative; Mary Ellen Tharpe, Baptist representative; Marie Joffre, Catholic representative; Lillie McGuire, Presbyterian representative; Margaret Holloway, Methodist representative.

Smoking Area Is Suggested

NSFA Recommendations Heard by Senate

A number of recommendations brought to the student senate by the chairman of the N. S. F. A. Bell Colvin, were discussed at the meeting this week. Chief among these was a suggestion that a smoking area be established on the campus be provided for the students. This recommendation was referred to the committee council for consideration.

Concerning the need for a time coordinator, one who would see that the various clocks on campus be regulated in time to prevent schedule and one who would investigate the curtailing of the college chimes during artists series and other programs, the chairman of senate was instructed to appoint such a person.

Another recommendation, that of changing the signing up regulations, was shelved by the senate, following a vote of the members. Another recommendation

College Plans Big Celebration Of Thanksgiving

Newsreel Cameraman To Photograph Pageant In Swimming Pool

GAMES THURSDAY TO BE BROADCAST

Entire City Will Join In Holiday Festivities For Next Week

Thanksgiving activities at Florida State will receive state and national attention this year as they go before the movie camera and radio "mike" for the first time in the history of the college.

Covering the annual pageant, given as a part of the Parents' day program on Thanksgiving morning, a Pathe Movietone news editor Jack Fahey will turn the latest newsreel cameras on the swimmers in the college pool. The swimming pageant includes different patterns done to music, with floral lights as a dramatic effects.

Games Broadcast

The second innovation of the day will be the broadcast of the Odd-Even games by the local radio station WTAL. Negotiations are now under way to hook up with the University City station, WJBY, Pelham radio, and the broadcast, another new feature of the Thanksgiving day program, will be the morning parade.

Led by a party of distinguished guests and college officials, the parade of motor vehicles will start from Florida College avenue through the business district, to the residences of members and other places of interest.

City to Cooperate

The city of Tallahassee as well as the college will cooperate in the plans for entertaining the hundreds of parents expected to visit the college at that time. In a proclamation issued this week by Mayor Leonard Wesson, the citizens are urged "to take special recognition of this occasion and welcome the guests of the state who visit us at this time."

The proclamation will be issued by the entire city at the close of the holiday festivities. Sorority houses will compete for a prize for the most appropriate Granadinas, Barrera y Calleja; Berceuse, Godard; Mr. Martini.

Miguel Sandoval; Mr. Martini.

A.A.U.W. Hears Popper Speak On War Crisis

Underlying Causes in Far East Conflict Are Discussed

"Underlying Causes of the Present China-Japanese Crisis" was the topic discussed by Dr. Annie Popper at the meeting of the A. A. U. W. Monday evening before a large group of members and friends.

Dr. Popper traced the course of events in China and Japan for the past 30 or 40 years and showed how China has been handled politically. She pointed out the fact that China has been slowly building up a united front to oppose those forces which are not considered for the good of the country.

She stressed the critical industrial situation which exists at present in Japan and showed how it has grown partially from the large population of Japan, the small amount of arable land and the scarcity of natural resources, particularly iron and coal. She also pointed out Japan's need for world markets for her commodities.

In conclusion Dr. Popper emphasized the world wide importance of this crisis, and stressed the fact that some outside nations have already become implicated and how others may easily become involved.

This talk was given under the auspices of the International Relations committee of which Miss Sadie Young is chairman. It was designed as an introduction to the study of Japanese-Chinese relationships which is to be undertaken by a group of A. A. U. W. members.

At the conclusion of the talk a short business meeting was held.

College Plans Huge Thanksgiving Program

lawn decorations and business stores will feature displays appropriate to the occasion.

Demonstrations Given

Among the outstanding activities of the season will be the Odd and Even demonstrations to be presented the two nights prior to Thanksgiving, an early morning service Thanksgiving day; the basketball and volleyball games; a swimming demonstration; and Thanksgiving dinner in the college dining hall. Open house will be observed at the residence hall parlors and in all sorority houses.

Miss Katherine Warren, an alumna and secretary to the dean of students, is in charge of "Parents' day" this year.

Girls' New Clothes Good Index to Fall's Arrival

behind Gilchrist and Jennie Murphree are so tempting.

Hikes and trips to Camp Flastacowo become more appealing as soon as fall rolls around. The days are shorter and the lingering summer twilights disappear, but this suits the hikers, for they can enjoy the campfire longer on an autumn day. One can almost smell the coffee, bacon and eggs when the subject of a campfire meal is suggested.

Most students return to school with glorious suntans which they spent three months acquiring. However, when October brings a few cool breezes and the sunshine is not very warm, all of the brown outdoor girls begin to lose their suntans. After looking at sunburned people for several months, the appearance of normal complexions is quite startling.

Coughs and sneezes are unpleasant indications of cold weather. At times it is almost impossible to study in the library for listening to all the various sneezes; it is really a fascinating pastime. Some of the healthy athletic girls have lusty sneezes that threaten to blow a partition of the library walls away. While some of the dainty little clinging vines have sneezes that would not even disturb a small piece of tissue peper.

The girls who live in the dormitories notice particularly the arrival of cold weather. Every morning about 5:30 or 6 o'clock, loud rumblings and knocking sounds suddenly start. Students awake with a jump and then sheepishly realize that it is only the heat being turned on.

In September and the first part of October, the students flock to the library to study after dinner. But when the nights get chilly and the wind blows a little harder than usual, most of the girls decide to stay in their warm rooms and try to concentrate. They all dread the chilly walk to the library after dinner, but they dread more the dreary little walk from the library to the dormitories just before light flash.

Gay pennants, band music, cheerleaders, songs, yells, fur coats, and yellow chrysanthemums help to complete the typical picture of a football game. Fall and football naturally go together, so the students from F. S. C. W. make frequent journeys to Gainesville and Jacksonville to joint in the merrymaking. Speaking of pep in the fall, a football game is one place where there is plenty of pep and enthusiasm. People can get excited over a hard fought football game on a crisp fall day when no amount of dynamite could move them away from the fireside for any other reason.

Speech Clinic Will Meet Tuesday Night

Lispers, mumblers, and word-swallowers will have an opportunity to have their cases analyzed and prescribed for by the Speech "doctors" Tuesday night from 7:30 to 8:30 in 108 History building.

Twelve competent "physicians" will be ready to give any person aware of a speech handicap a thorough examination. Those students whose curiosity has been aroused and who may be wondering if they have an unknown speech defect are also invited to attend the Speech clinic and be examined.

Tallahassee Mayor Makes Proclamation

Whereas, November 23 to 27 inclusive have been set aside as Parents' days at Florida State College for Women; and

Whereas, It is the desire and purpose of the citizens of Tallahassee to cooperate with the college an its various activities; and

President, Wife Visit Florida State Campus

Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Hendricks, who are visiting the educational institutions of Florida, selected Florida State College for Women as their first stopping place, Wednesday.

The college buildings, grounds, and college camp were personally shown to the couple by Dr. Edward Conradi.

Dr. and Mrs. Hendricks were very interested and impressed by the numerous college facilities and opoprtunities available at Florida State college.

Dr. Hendricks is President Emeritus of the State Teachers' college at Warrensburg, Missouri.

Former Editor of Flambeau Tells of University Rules

Answers Statements Made In Inquiring Reporter

Editor's Note: This article, written by Hasel Bowman, last year's editor of the Flambeau and now a student at the University, is in answer to some of the statements made in the Inquiring Reporter column last week. The question last week concerned student "gripes" and Miss Bowman has told how these problems are solved at the University.

By HAZEL BOWMAN

Disregarding the arguments hitherto presented in favor of coeducation, I would like to make the suggestion that Florida State students should transfer to the University of Florida. This momentous decision came to me rather suddenly as a result of reading "Inquiring Reporter" for November 5—student gripers at their best.

For instance Eileen Robinson wouldn't have to sign anything here except registration blanks. And the library here does stamp in the date when books are due (two weeks after the check-out) rather than the date on which they were removed from the library. In addition, freshman and sophomore reserve books are in open stacks. Quite an improvement over that nightly struggle in the Florida State reserve room.

Polly Douglas could cut to her heart's content before or after any holiday here. Elisabeth Anne Webb would have the responsibility of getting to class or not, just as she chose, if she went to the University of Florida. Except in the Law college where the administrative staff has arbitrarily set up a definite system, the University regulation on cutting is as follows:

"If any student accumulates absences or fails to do class work to the extent that further enrollment in the class appears to be of little value to him and detrimental to the best interest of the class, it should be the duty of the instructor to warn such student in writing that further absences or failure to do class work will cause him to be dropped from the course with a failing grade."

Margaret Stout wouldn't have to hear "Happy Birthday" in the local cafeteria, but the boys do indulge in a little campaigning from the floor occasionally. Eating is a precarious proposition when opponents for president of I Eta Pie vie in the matter of handing the individual eaters a copy of their personal campaign cards.

Betty Pearlman wouldn't have her petty rules here (except in summer when the women take over the dorms!). No strict quiet hours, plenty of tacks in the walls (with perhaps twenty-five cents deducted from the room reservation fee at the end of the year), no lights out anywhere and no fees for the privilege of keeping them on, no signing up for dates, privilege of having automobiles, maids to make up beds and sweep floors every day, and so forth ad infinitum. The most important campus problems are very often solved in Joe College's room at 3 a. m. with no snooping proctors and no C. G. A. taking names. The boys seem to survive it. In fact quite a few make high enough grades during four years to graduate from Florida's other state institution.

Katherine Stevens could have her sorority house music any day and every night. It's simply a matter of courtesy here—not a rule—that quiet prevail during the wee sma' hours.

Sandra Peckham should come down here for a real taste of food-gripers. But the cafeteria is not one to compare with F. S. C. W.'s dining hall; perhaps the fellows can be pardoned, considering all.

Catherine Eckles wouldn't have riding chaperones here. Imagine putting a chaperon on the back fender of a bicycle! One's best girl already has the privilege of sitting on the cross-bar. And worse yet, imagine an F. S. C. W. chaperon in a U. of F. jalopy with "To Hell With Georgia" and "Tally or Bust" glaring redly from the orange and blue background.

Miss Liddell would probably decide for herself whether or not she wanted to take attendance—if she taught at the University of Florida. Many classes here manage an overflow attendance without the expendiency of calling roll a la grammar school. Naturally since the new system of unlimited cuts went into effect down here many professors have had to throw away their notebooks from twenty years ago and get down to contemporary times in order to keep a class at all. And here it is easier to drop classes and take the profs one wants. That means a lot of people had to hit the ball or have no students.

Comulsory convocation at the University of Florida? Yes, four times a year for freshmen! On occasion the whole school shuts up for an hour to hear a good speaker, and he'd better be good or the boys walk out.

Dean Opperman has probably seen the wonderful way in which the University of Florida's organ has been placed—it doesn't interfere with stage productions because it isn't on the stage. The local organist sits at his instrument as it slowly rises out of the floor and comes to a stop either on a level with the stage (for concert work) or on a level with the auditorium floor (when it is being used for accompanying a stage performance). The auditorium stage is equipped with scenery, chairs that don't collapse under members of the orchestra and band, and good music stands. In addition, station WRUF has a sound control room right on the stage and does a great deal of its broadcasting from that point. The stage lights are so arranged that anyone can find the master switch immediately.

Honor Maynard should join the U. of F's 46 co-eds. We come and go as we please. We even spend the night with a girl friend whose home is in Gainesville if we like. Honor would also glory in the fact that many students here do work all night on experiments if they feel in the mood for research. As for smoking, all teachers are allowed to smoke in their offices, and students can smoke anywhere teachers can.

To Ruth Prather: Instructors here seem for the most part to be more concerned with whether or not students know enough to pass courses rather than with whether or not they cut classes to go home. Mary Alice Jackson will be surprised to learn that local lads find it unnecessary to find a senior to accompany them to games. It would look ridiculous, wouldn't it, for Jack Smith to have to escort Rat Johnny Jones to a high school game.

Jean Steffee might find it consoling to know that Florida men can carry as many offices as they can manage to capture. The only point to this item is that most of them would just as soon not carry any offices at all. But there are fellows who hold several offices, work their way through school, and manage to make Phi Kappa Phi. Prospective employers are impressed too.

Janet V. Cook: We haven't been to a chemistry movie down here, but we can assure you that the house lights in the local auditorium do not ruin the eyes of individuals in the audience.

Della Montero wouldn't be disturbed by practice room noises here for the simple reason that there are no practice rooms. Townspeople living near the Baptist church get the benefit of organ and piano practicing. But campus pianists do have the opportunity of practising on a grand piano in Florida Union, and members of the University band and orchestra practise in their rooms in the dorms and elsewhere. "Basin Street Blues" and Chopin lend atmosphere to the campus.

Dot Luther could have her best friend or anyone else in to spend the night in Florida's dorms simply by paying a quarter (if the visitor is not a student).

All in all, it would seem that Florida's school for women has been discriminated against. It is absolutely a fact that Florida State's students are discriminated against in the matter of rules.

Astronomy Club Goes On Annual Camping Trip

Members Spend Sleepless Night Learning About Stars, Planets

The Astronomy club spent a sleepless but very instructive Friday night at Camp Flastacowo last week. Twenty-five members accompanied by Miss Elisabeth Lynn, Dr. and Mrs. Barrows, and Dr. Harold Richards, all of the physics department, composed the party.

Before their traditional steak supper, the girls went canoeing on Lake Bradford and afterwards there was a campfire discussion on various astronomical subjects. St. George Lourcey talked about the Horeshoe and constellation of certain stars. "Mythology of the Sky" was the subject which was discussed by Elisabeth Ann Williams, and Zonira Hunter chose nebulae and star clusters for her topic.

Jupiter was observed after the campfire discussions. Then there was more canoeing; the campers joined together in a group on the lake while Gladys Ware pointed out some striking constellations.

Dr. Richards and Dr. Barrows assisted the girls in finding double stars, Saturn, and other planets. The small telescope and field glasses were used for these observations. There was a short period of recreation, and at 1 o'clock the students observed the change in the sky and saw more constellations.

The group returned to the campus at 6 30 o'clock on Saturday morning. Miss Lynn considers it the most successful trip in the club's history.

Nino Martini Writes About His Ideal Girl

"My Future Wife Mustn't Be a Career Woman," States Singer

"I should be honestly grateful to a girl who could make me lose my head completely! I'm looking for such a girl!" claimed Nino Martini in an article entitled "I Want to Fall in Love" which was published in the October, 1935, issue of Good Housekeeping. It is generally understood that one of the unwritten aims of Florida State college students has been "We aim to please." Next week, in loyalty to "deah ole alma mater" and its non-catalogue objectives, all of the Martini fans may find it to their advantage to see that Mr. Martini is satisfied in his search.

In order that the girls who are interested in this extra-curricular activity may know just where they stand, a few of the popular singer's requirements and expectations have been jotted down. He explained that he believed in fate and that "some day the right girl will come along."

"One never knows," Mr Martini said, "what really goes on inside the up-to-date American girl's pretty heads! She is an enigma, a puzzle! Does she feel deeply? Are her emotions genuine and profound? Is she merely out for a good time? . . . I declare I don't know!"

"Maybe nonchalance is much better than my own Latin way of taking one's emotional experiences very seriously . . . the casualness of the modern American girls puzzles me. It seems strange and makes me a little scared." In the vernacular of the campus, "He's got us all wrong!" It is the duty of his fans to set him right. Can we show him that the typical flippancy of the American girl is just a mask to cover the loyalty and feeling that she truly harbors? Forward comrades! The goal has been set. It must be attained. Honor and Reputation are at stake!

One last expectation: "I want to be sure that she (Mr. Martini's future wife) is sympathetic, intelligent, understanding, willing to be tolerant of me. . . . I want her to love music as I do. . . . I am a bit afraid of the Career woman. . . . I want my wife to make my home for me and keep it attractive." Listen to the advice of the

Pro and Con

Opinions expressed herein are those of the writer or writers and are not necessarily those of the Flambeau staff. All students are invited to contribute to "Pro and Con."

There have been rumors of discontent on campus regarding the attitude of the infirmary staff towards students who are taken ill in dormitories, class rooms, and off campus houses. There have, in fact been more than rumors. In some cases there have been out and out mumblings of discontent about the indifference of the staff. Such a show of ingratitude is, of course, painful to us when we consider the facts of the case.

It should be realised that the staff, due to the fact that its number is inadequate and that its duties are numerous, is overworked. It should be also realized that the college physician's time is necessarily limited as his hospital work and private practice demand a great deal of attention.

Instead of griping, we students should cooperate with the staff in caring for our sick. We should train ourselves to meet the emergencies which are sure to arise, for, after all, when we get "out into the world" we will not have the ever present consideration of the infirmary to turn to in time of need. If we really wish to cooperate, surely girl scout hand books can be had in the library in which much information may be found concerning first aid. Little study groups might be formed in each dormitory with a trained gym-major to lead discussions.

There is absolutely no necessity of disturbing the staff if a student should become ill after light flash. Though a stretcher may be had from the infirmary for the asking, it is a simple matter to improvise one in one's own room with a light weight blanket and two broom sticks. If the sick student's roommate finds it impossible to handle the stretcher and the patient at the same time, we are sure that the girl across the hall will be glad to help. Bearing in mind the fact that the college physician's time is very limited, the sick student, if she has any consideration, will offer to wait until the next day when the doctor has office hours.

Why should students get all hot and bothered when, because a girl in a state of serious hysteria temporarily loses her eyesight and refuses to go to the infirmary, one of the staff is unable to come over to the dormitory because it is out of her jurisdiction. This reminds one of the fireman who sat and watched a building burn because it was just out of the city limits. If people feel a case of hysterics coming on, the sensible thing to do is to go over to the infirmary immediately. This will save a lot of confusion for all concerned.

If students had taken the trouble to find out about things they would have realized that the staff is confined to certain territory and would have saved themselves lots of trouble last week when a girl was taken with a serious nose bleed. As it was, after the girl had been bleeding 15 minutes they called the infirmary and were told that if she needed attention she was to come over there. The only catch with that idea was that she was too weak to walk over. Finally someone got a wheel chair and the janitor took her over.

We hope this will make students stop and think a bit and make them realize that they should look into a situation thoroughly before criticizing. We also hope that in the future they will make every effort to help, rather than hinder, the infirmary staff.

Hazel Adams and Mary Sullivan.

Greek sages: "Know thyself," and if you fill the ticket don't be put off by a rain-check.

Dear Freshmen:

You have been students of our school for one quarter and I hope you have been having an enjoyable time. We are glad to have you here and want you to feel that you "belong" and are a part of us.

At present, I would like to ask each of you how you have scheduled your time. What activity receives most of your attention? Do you have a well-balanced, well-integrated program, or are you finding yourselves in the sad position of struggling with your studies to such an extant that you cannot possibly find time for other activities?

It is the latter group that I want to reach. You are unconsciously missing one of the most necessary and valuable services that your college offers you. The college program for the year is not yet fully under way, and already new students are finding difficulty in keeping up with the activities now going on. Please don't misunderstand me; I am not urging you to drop all your books and devote your time to other things. I am merely suggesting that you will have a much more enjoyable time, and will greatly enrich your college years if you will adjust your schedule to include a variety of activities. It can be done, but the first requirement is that you begin immediately, before you find your selves so accustomed to giving up opportunities to vary your program that you will lose the desire to do so.

Naturally, your studies should come first. But education does not imply merely the knowledge you get from a book. If you cannot meet many different types of people and get along fairly well with all of them; if you cannot become a leader when the opportunity demands; if you are not capable of constructively using your leisure time; if you do not realize the close relationship that exists between mind and body; if you cannot appreciate other fields than your own—if none of these things matter in your life after you leave colege, then you have not received what the college had to offer. You have deliberately ignored the opportunity to broaden yourselves and to develop your latest powers, and you are not an educated person.

Physical and mental recreation and relaxation, and participation in campus activities, either actively or as a spectator, are necessary phases of your college life. If you find that you do not have time for them, you must make time. It will be a mistake to wait until you settle down, because the habit of niactivity will be growing stronger and will definitely influence any decision you will make later.

Now is the time. The kind of Freshmen you are this year will determine the kind of Upperclassmen you will be. May you have a happy, active time.

Boiler Being Installed Will Be Completed Soon

Foundation for the new Babcock and Wilcox 500-horsepower boiler has been poured at the heating plant. The boiler tubes, steel beams, and columns have already arrived, and the rest of the boiler is to be brought to the plant in the next week or so. Three or four weeks will be required to set the boiler. Then the automatic stoker will be installed and the brick work will be done. It is expected that the job will be finished in nine to ten weeks.

Water softening equipment has been moved into the new wing of the plant, and a new 70,000 gallon permutit unit has been purchased. When the new unit is installed, there will be no shortage of hot water at certain times during the day.

Riding Classes Still Offered

Instructor Extends Time For Applications

An attempt to obtain horseback riding as an extra-curricular activity with the first quarter fees being made by Henry Walker, riding instructor and trainer, Dean Lee with the first quarter fees, rations were fixed this week. Mr. Walker announced this week, stating this Monday, October 25 as the deadline. Enough sufficient to maintain his riding stable for the convenience of the college's girls.

At any time students interested in riding may apply to Mr. Walker at his residence, 402 S. Duval street, and make arrangements for the hour of lessons and number of rides. Private lessons can be arranged at the rate of $1 an hour, or for more students on a group trip may call for $.75 cents an hour.

On every trip the riding instructor accompanies the riders. Mr. Walker is a skilled instructor, having taught riding for 15 years. For 4 years he was instructor at Fort Marianne, a village between Pensacola and Milton, miles from St Augustine.

For the use of the students there will be 20 horses available at all times. Of these horses there are five-gaited and four three-gaited.

Comments on Cooperative Government Reporter

Question: What is your opinion of the cooperative government dorm- try for upperclassmen?

Ms Evelyn Kennard, social director: Permitting the upperclassmen one of the most progressive that has been taken by this ege for a number of years. Margaret Rader: They would need some form of check on them. But if you choose the right people, it would be all right.

Ann Schwob: I think that it should be another year's trial. If a girl doesn't learn how to rules for her conduct the year before the person she will have a hard time learning it later. By the time students have reached their senior year in college, the greater majority of them are real- to intervening in getting an elec- tion and are thus usually the ones who know how to govern themselves. I think that seniors who are capable should be allowed to make their own rules.

Mercy Overman: I think it would be a good thing. Juniors would not be fresh and would know how to use their privileges.

Louise Wheeler: If upperclassmen were allowed to make their own rules it would help them for later life. With so many restrictions students have no chance to use initiative or experience in governing themselves.

Margaret Wheeler: If you took the best students out of dormitories you would have all the bad ones together. Then there would be a need of more restrictions than ever for the latter.

Sandra Peckham: In the long run I don't think it would work out. I don't see how the list of eligible girls could be chosen. I do think however that if government you need the representation of types of students. If everyone were perfect no government would be needed at all. How could you choose the girls who were capable? There are many restrictions that it is hardly possible for anyone to get through college without breaking some rule, though it may be unintentional. That probably is the cause of hard feelings among some girls.

Catherine Mays: I think when a girl is an upperclassman she is capable of deciding when she should maintain quiet and when she should go to bed. After two years of discipline, if she is ever going to learn how to govern herself, she should at this time If these students were allowed to make rules for themselves, the spirit of rebellion would be eliminated. I think the idea of such a dormitory is a pretty good thing. I am a senior and I should have been glad to have cooperated with such a plan this year.

Patty Barringer: I think it is a good idea, but it would be hard to draw a line between the students who were capable of taking care of themselves and those who were not. The majority of rules are unnecessary for most upperclassmen.

Marjorie Rader: They would need some form of check on them. But if you choose the right people, it would be all right.

J. E. Rogers Will Be F.S.C. Guest Speaker

Recreation Officer Will Address Convocation On November 30

Many activities are being planned for Dr. James E. Rogers, national secretary of the National Recreation association, who will visit the campus November 29-30.

Dr. Rogers is making this trip to Tallahassee primarily in the interests of the newly appointed state board for recreation and physical education in the state schools. During his stay here, however, the physical education department has asked him to speak at the college and hold round-table discussions.

The phy.ical education faculty members and the gym majors have asked Dr. Rogers to hold a conference with them November 29 at 4 o'clock. Everyone interested in will even be the guest of the physical education department at a supper and conference to be held at Camp Flastacowa. He will speak in convocation Tuesday morning, November 30.

Dr. Rogers' work is known throughout the country as an inspiring one. His addresses are frequently appears on nationally broadcast programs for physical education, health education, and recreation groups.

When you get to be a junior or senior you have enough intelligence to know what is good for you.

Jessie Keeler: I think it would be a good idea for the most well good grades and are responsible should be able to judge what is to do and what to do. My people think I'm responsible, and I think I should be treated accordingly.

Camilla Sewell: I think it would be all right for seniors. When you get that far you ought to have some sense of what you can or cannot do. I think it would be fine to try it. It is a good idea. Certainly, there is nothing wrong about it.

Wilda Bennett: I think it's a good idea. They would have to have some rules, but the student government could be depended on. The responsibility would help them and freedom. It certainly would not hurt to try it. That is the only way you can determine for sure. I think that we can take more responsibility in schools for liberal attitudes.

Frances Slade: I think it would be a good experiment. It would give juniors and seniors an incentive and a chance for having shown themselves capable and responsible. If it proves successful for juniors and seniors sophomores and freshmen will endeavor to do their work for. It will bring us near the goal in which there will be no need for law among institutions.

Georgia Collins: I think it is a good idea. When you come to college you should be able to make your own rules if you are too dependent in college, you will not know how to take care of yourself when you get out.

Martha Van Brunt: It is an awfully good plan A girl in school knows better how girls will act than the faculty might. There would have to be responsib le girls chosen. The plan would carry on to the other classes the idea of reward for responsibility

Harriett Post: It would be very nice for people who haven't broken rules, but the others might be envious. It would, however, be an added incentive for them to work hard and obey the rules we have already.

Dorothea Marsh: I think it would be a great step forward in putting students on their own responsibility. It it were successful, I should think it would give more privileges to all students

Louise Thomas: I think it would be fine. Girls would be more at home and less cooped in.

Mary Stoddard: If the group of picked girls choose their own rules, I do not think that any major changes would take place. It should be given a try.

Helen Bell Black: I think it is a good idea. It makes students have more confidence in their own judgment instead of feeling that they are being treated like third grade children.

Geraldine Ewell: I think it is a good plan, but not for only one dormitory. It would make the others feel that they are not capable of the privileges. It would be better to make the rules for the whole school more lenient. If there was more confidence placed in the good judgment of all the students, the majority would not break the rules.

Reba Kirby: I think it would be a good idea if the students are capable. Under the present system they have little chance to show whether they are responsible or not. Under the new way, the seniors might show themselves capable of the responsibility. When they leave college they will have

With quartettes in the foreground, sports have been kind of in the baccground this past week except for the ever faithful Odd-Even teams that have been carrying on as diligently as ever. We know that as far as we are personally concerned, the only activities we go in for regularly are mental gymnastics brought on by too dogging much work to get done in too dogging little time; and the exercise we've gotten from chasing squirrels around in different positions in front of a desk in a vain attempt to rest various parts of the body.

To be or not to be is still the question before the house as far as the horseback riding problem on the campus is concerned. We've got the chance to have a fine string of horses available for students at reasonable rates and it's all up to the students whether or not we can keep them there. The thing to do is to get out and go for a couple of rides during the next week or so instead of just doing a lot of talking about how swell it is to have horses here waiting around for some riders.

Tonight is the big night for the Outing club, and what with comfortable clothes, plenty of liter, and the promise of a good stock of food, it looks as though there is a swell chance for the 50 lucky people who signed up to go first.

We can't help remarking, even though it may sound a little radical, that we're definitely opposed to the idea of intramural sports that refused to go get a college girl who had fallen off her horse just because she didn't have a car" We might add that there are plenty of cars around here that would no doubt have been available due to the emergency. We wonder if the girl is still lying in the ditch.

Boy, we're getting right along with the rhymes of them. What with the Fox Movietone folks coming here to take pictures of the Tarpon club activities and Thanksgiving. If we can just get back to being nice enough to them mebbe there will be a chance of eating in the volleyball and basketball and too. Anything for a little publicity you know.

Coming back to more pleasant subjects, we might mention the fact that some people have all the luck. We guess you've heard about the girls from each dormitory who had the lucky numbers on the dorm match boxes. They were passed around by Ivan the Aviator; and those little numbers gave the girls the chance for a trip and even a chance to handle the controls as see how it would feel to be the pilot of a plane. Consolation for those girls students are going to take advantage of a chance to learn to fly?

Yes, we all know that it was a dreary holiday yesterday, but we'd like to let you know that our old sports action into the limelight. Bridge it is. At least judging from the physical energy some of the boosters have put in it. Then too is an awfully good excuse for exercising the evening muscles while making a six nu-trump or the smiling muscles while going down a couple.

Maybe scheduling tennis matches right along with volleyball and basketball wasn't a good idea that is judging from what we hear took place yesterday afternoon. It seems that one of our good upstanding Even volleyball champs broke a bit confused while playing the net in her tennis match, and when she was finished came she shifted her racket to the other hand and used the racket that nature gave her to assure a hasty return.

Odd-Even Class Games To Begin Next Wednesday

Basket and Volley Ball Winners Will Meet At Play Night

With the Thanksgiving spirit tingling the air, aspirants for the Green and Gold and the Red, White, and Purple await announcements early next week of the team lineups for volleyball and basketball as class games begin in the middle of next week and the Thanksgiving climax is only two weeks off.

In the meantime, the schedule for Odd-Even class games has been announced. Beginning Wednesday, November 17, on the volleyball courts, the Juniors will take on the seniors and the sophomores will attempt to put the freshmen in their place. Thursday afternoon a battle between the lovers of the two games will be played and Friday nights at play night a game between the class winners of Wednesday's encounter will be featured.

The basketball schedule matches the Juniors against the seniors on next Wednesday with the sophomore-freshman game following the next afternoon. The play-off between winners will also be featured in the dining room last Sunday by the old Tarpon clubbers.

Invitations are being sent this week to the new members who will swim with the Tarpons next Thanksgiving although they will not be initiated until second semester. During the second term further Tarpon club try-outs will be held.

Miss Thrush Leaves

Miss Helen Thrush, secretary to Dr. Edward Conradi, was called by illness to a Philadelphia hospital, and is not expected to return until second semester.

Miss Thrush has been at Florida State college since 1930

Barn Dance to Be Play Night Feature

The schedule for Play Nights From now until Christmas was recently announced. On November 19 the finals in class games will be played. A barn dance will be the feature on November 26. A fencing and badminton exhibition will be given on December 3, and December 10 will be Faculty-Student Play Night.

Beginning Modern Dance Class to Be Organized

Beginning Saturday, November 20, Sunny Lowery will instruct freshmen interested in modern dance as an extra-curricular activity. These classes will be held every Saturday morning at 11:30 o'clock. All girls interested in these classes are urged to attend this first meeting next Saturday.

Miss Lowery is being employed for the benefit of those students who desire to take beginning modern dance and who have been unable to do so in the past.

The basketball schedule match-

Tallahassee Alums Meet

The initial meeting of the Tallahassee alumnae club for the fall held on Monday, November 8 at Miss Louise Richardson, librarian at the college, will be the main speaker of the evening.

Lucky Students Will Fly Free

Ivan Munroe Will Give Flying Instruction

This week thirty-one Florida State college students got chances for a ten-minute flying lesson under the instruction of Ivan Munroe manager of Dale Mabry field. These students got their free lessons by holding the lucky numbers on clips of matches that Mr. Munroe had distributed.

Because none of the girls has yet received permission from home, none has come out for her lesson, but Mr. Munroe is anxious for the girls to come out as soon as possible and see for themselves the facilities for instruction at the field.

The summer a new steel and brick hangar and administration building were constructed on the field. A 3,500 foot paved runway was built, extending north and south, and the field was leveled. Located at the field is one of Florida's six Department of Commerce weather stations for pilot plots. Airplanes equipped with two-way radio and all-weather signals every 30 minutes.

Mr. Munroe has just bought a new Taylorcraft, a two-place plane with a new type side-by-side seating arrangement. He hopes that Florida State college students will come out and try their hand at flying it.

New "Minnows" Chosen To Swim with Tarpons

New "minnows" of the Tarpon club chosen after the try-outs held Monday, November 8 entertained in the dining room last Sunday by the old Tarpon clubbers.

Invitations are being sent this week to the new members who will swim with the Tarpons next Thanksgiving although they will not be initiated until second semester. During the second term further Tarpon club try-outs will be held.

The new "Minnows" are: Virginia Hood, Dorothy Hughes, Dorothy White, Lillian Alldredge, Elayne Bivens, Mary Stevens, Frances Battle, Frances Webber, and Martha Jean Cook.

Miss Thrush Leaves

Miss Helen Thrush, secretary to Dr. Edward Conradi, was called by illness to a Philadelphia hospital, and is not expected to return until second semester.

Miss Thrush has been at Florida State college since 1930

Life Saving Corps Will Lead Red Cross Drive

Beginning Monday and running through Wednesday, the Life Saving corps is sponsoring the annual Red Cross roll call. Any student desiring to become a member of the National Red Cross may do so by paying the $1.00 membership fee

Although to make this roll call a success, the corps will canvass all dormitories and sorority houses Off-campus students, however, are asked to leave their donations in 120 Broward with Ruth Agnes McClain who is in charge of the drive.

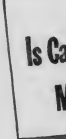
hagen factory during the period of Christian VIII.

In 1843 Bing and Schou became the director and Arnold Krog became associated with him in developing a new style of decoration representing Danish scenery, Danish animals and flowers. Christian Joachim became the director after the death of Philip with Grondahl in 1867. Martin-Hansen created beautiful figures in national costume. Gerhard Henning introduced a new overglaze decoration, and a type of stacked ware was first exhibited at the World Exhibition of Decorative Arts in Paris, 1925.

Malinowski created figures in solid and aqua with the main portion of the figure left white, the warm glaze making a contrast. Another interesting specialtan, of which many were made, is the green glaze through emission of the glaze Stoneware, a material related to porcelain, though harder, offered possibilities of development and appealed to the artist. And finally, of the Royal Porcelain factory is outstanding in this field as well as in ceramics.

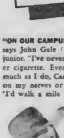
Fencing Demonstration Will Be Presented At Play Night Next Week

For the first time in three years, a fencing exhibition is to take place at the regular play night next week It will consist of a mass exhibition by all members of the fencing classes, demonstrating fundamental positions. This will be followed by two bouts, one for the beginners, and one for the advanced students



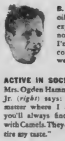
Marjorie Harris and Dorothy Donnelly will represent the beginner classes, and Elaine Fleaher and Marie Joffre the advanced. Miss Bettie will be director.

A QUESTION PEOPLE OFTEN ASK:



Is Camel justified in Spending Extra Millions for Costlier Tobaccos?

THE ANSWER IS THIS:



CAMELS ARE THE LARGEST-SELLING CIGARETTE IN AMERICA

"ON OUR CAMPUS, you'll say," Camel, says John Gale (right), college junior. "I've never found a milder cigarette. Even smoking as much as I do, Camels never get on my nerves or tire my taste. "I'd walk a mile for a Camel."

GIRL RODEO CchampION, Rose Davis (left), says: "Camels always agree with me, but I think the Camels as mentioners are the most enjoyable of all."

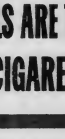
DOROTHY MALONE, foodeditor (right), says: "Commens show my women readers that in smoking Camels's pleasant way to encourage good digestion. I myself smoke Camels."

E. C. SIMPSON (left), Texas oil-well shooter: "Handling explosives makes me careful not to have frazzled nerves. I'm all for Camels. They couldn't be milder if they were made to order."

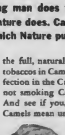
ACTIVE IN SOCIETY, Mrs. Ogden Hammond, Jr. (right) says: "No matter where I am—you'll always find me with Camels. They don't stir my taste."

It is homespun fact that nothing man does to tobacco can take the place of what Nature does. Camels are made of finer tobaccos into which Nature put extra goodness.

THERE'S only one way to get the best tobaccos. That's to pay more for them.



It has been a well-known fact for years that Camel pays millions more for finer tobaccos. It's the natural way to put more enjoyment into smoking.



People have confidence in the finer tobaccos in Camels. They find that Camels are naturally milder and that the full, natural flavor of the costlier tobaccos in Camels is brought to perfection in the Camel blend. If you are not smoking Camels, try them now. And see if you, too, don't find that Camels mean unfailing pleasure!

BLACKSMITH, Ed Deal, likes man-size meals and Camels with them. "For digestion's sake, I smoke Camels' le my mild," says Ed. "Camels add a lot to my meals."

FLIGHT DISPATCHER, H. G. Andrews, often contacts 6 planes at once. He says: "One of the advantages I find in Camels is I smoke plenty, and Camels don't frazzle my nerves."

"I'VE GOT TO have a mild cigarette," says Dick Hyer, girl parachute jumper. "So I'm a Camel smoker. I've found I can smoke as much as I wish without jangled nerves."

"EVE OUT TO have a mild cigarette," says Dick Hyer, girl parachute jumper. "So I'm a Camel smoker. I've found I can smoke as much as I wish without jangled nerves."

The World War Ended 19 Years Ago

Nineteen years ago the World war came to a close. Yesterday, the country observed Armistice day, and Florida State college students had a holiday. Armistice meant little to us students, as evidenced by the suggestion that we "celebrate" Armistice a day late—in order that we might go home for the week-end.

More or less this attitude is characterized by the comment raised concerning the convocation peace forum Tuesday. "Why have a program on war? We get tired of hearing about it. Why not something light and interesting?"

And so we sit in our Sangra La, shut off from the rest of the world, safe to pursue the scientific and interesting life, unaware as stark and realistic as peace, collective security, embargo, the Nine Powers' treaty, the Kellogg pact and war, couldn't possibly affect us.

Now could war affect us? In one, two, or three years we will have finished our education. Accordingly we will marry or get a job or live with the family, hit all the while be complete entities and live carefree. No war drums, conscriptions, marching men, battleships, economic aftermaths, could possibly come within our range of vision. Widowhood, sweethearts with their heads shot off, hands in wheel chairs, fathers maimed, friends gone, are things that could not possibly touch us.

Why should we get aroused? If there should be a war, perhaps it would be exciting to see the parades, to hear the bands play, to see the uniforms ad the badges of honor. For, of course, one need not see those small white crosses, those empty sleeves, little children without fathers, women destitute, the horrible battle scenes that will be recorded by the candid camera next time, the destruction caused all over the world by the most up-to-date war materials. One can be apart from such lurid realism, oft in a little world of one's own.

We, the flower of young womanhood, have inspired men to go to think of. We must have degrees, a veneer of culture, charm and personality and procure for ourselves a promised place in the social world. There's really no time for unimportant things like reading the newspapers, the periodicals, the information sent out by organizations devoted to the furtherance of peace, to listening to forums prepared by those who have wasted years in preparing them, to affiliate ourselves with action groups.

You, we students in Florida State college and other colleges, are fortunate in one isolation. The world may crumble about us but we can dance on like Poe's characters in "The Masque of the Red Death."

Dormitory Action Is Seen

Plans for a new dormitory to take care of the surplus number of students who crowd into off-campus houses each year are nothing new. Officials in charge of the dormitories have been reporting each fall for about four or five years that the housing situation on the campus of Florida State College for Women is becoming acute. Each year more and more students have to seek shelter in off-campus houses that at their best have many disadvantages.

This year the need for an addition to the dormitories has reached a new peak. More than 200 students are housed in 40 off-campus houses. Many students were turned away by the college authorities because no suitable off-campus houses could be found for them. This means that although Florida State has been proclaimed as a state institution free to all whose parents pay taxes therein, some students are being refused the privilege of using the college facilities. Such a situation is deplorable. If state institutions are going to be operated on the democratic principle of equal opportunities for all adequate space for all who can come should be provided.

The 200 that are living in off-campus houses must also be considered. They work under difficulty. The standards of off-campus houses are at their best far below home standards and inferior to dormitory standards. Rooms are often badly heated, poorly lighted and furnished, an few of them are equipped for efficient study. Many of them are a considerable distance from the campus thus adding the further disadvantage of inconvenience of location especially in bad weather. Students, especially freshmen in off-campus houses, often are not absorbed as quickly in the college and college of living as students living in dormitories. They lack the contacts that are a natural part of the dormitory environment.

In addition to the discomforts of off-campus living, the students who are forced into it from lack of dormitory space must pay more for a place to sleep and study than the student living in the dormitory. The student on campus pays $54 for a room a week, the off-campus student pays an average of $3.14 a week.

The answer to all the evils represented in students living off-campus is undoubtedly a new dormitory. Requests for appropriations for the new building have been repeatedly made to the legislature. So far the dormitory remains unbuilt. Cooperating with Miss Myrtle Fleming, chairman of residence halls, Betty Outland, president of College Government association, announced Tuesday that now a way has been devised for students to help in the matter. She requested that they write home and ask their parents to contact their congressmen concerning the appropriation. Here at last then is something we can do about the situation.

Senate Shelves Signing Up Change

Much new business came before student senate this week as a result of the N. S. F. A. student opinion night held last week. As a result, the student senate chairman was instructed to appoint a "time coordinator", the group recommended to the college council that the smoking area be changed, but the senate thought it advisable to shelve one suggestion. That concerned the inconvenience of signing up on engagement cards for absences from the campus at night.

Here is a ruling that affects the whole student body, that has been the center of discontent for more than a year. Are the legislative body of the students killed any attempt to find some solution or remedy for it. It seems rather strange that much time was given to discussion about a rule on campus, a problem that should be settled by those who have charge of regulating such time mechanisms, but something that seemingly is a matter of concern of all students was shelved.

There are arguments, of course, for both sides, but it does not seem that those students who are opposed to offering a substitution to the monotonous procedure of signing up have any better statistical facts to base their argument on than those who would change the system. It should be investigated to find whether these records are of much value to the dormitory director, whether students are easily found in case of emergency. There is also the question of whether it is not just as hard to find a student on campus as it is not as it is to locate a students when she goes off the campus in the day time.

Perhaps the solution offered during the N. S. F. A. meeting was not the best—that of signing on the student's door when she leaves—but it is a step toward remedy. And anything that can be done in changing social regulations that unnecessarily take away a student's independence is a step in the right direction. Let it be hoped that those students who wish something to be done along this line do something about it.

Along with several other "gripes" heard at the N. S. F. A. forum last week came the cry that the campus has been unusually dirty lately. Papers, bottles, and other trash are seen even in front of dormitories. Perhaps it would be wise to inaugurate a "clean up" week on this campus in preparation for Thanksgiving.

Japan, England Face Difficulties

Current events suffered from a hangover this week and little occurred that was not expected. The Chinese walked out of Shanghai and left the Japanese to squabble with the few remaining China's and to complete the severance of the city from all outside communications. While the retreating forces withdrew to their "Hindenburg" line in the Yellow river valley and the guards the way to Nanking, the victors landed 40,000 more troops in the Hangchow area preparatory to a drive on China's capital.

The various nations that have been attending the meet in the Far East entanglements ran up against Russian opposition and the threat of an immediate Russo-Japanese conflict. The disagreement came when Japanese forces hovered around the Soviet border and as Japan agreed to confer only with signers of the Nine-power treaty, meaning that she would not confer with Russia who was not one of the signatories. Russia's reply to the peace conference because of her interests in the Far East. The Soviet foreign minister, Maxim Litvinoff, consequently returned in a huff to Moscow, taking with him the assurance that China would attend the conference that aimed to exclude her ally.

England, besides having difficulty in trying to bring peace despite these quarrels, continued to have trouble in Palestine. Five Jewish were killed by Arabs and a British martial court was set up to try all rioters and arms-bearers. This order, which permitted sentences of death for offenders, was considered as a firm move towards establishing martial law in the Holy Land.

Great Britain was also disturbed by the death of former Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald. MacDonald, aged 77, died Tuesday of a heart attack on board ship bound for South America. His death renewed the old controversy over his political career, some factions praising him as savior of his country in the critical days of 1931, others blaming him for deserting the labor party which he had built.

In the United States, Attorney-General Cummings startled the conservatives by declaring that the administrative duties carried on by the Department of Justice should be put in the hands of the Supreme court. He suggested that the budget and various matters including assignments of federal judges, to various districts should be the responsibility of the Chief Justice aided by a "court manager." The attorney-general refused to say whether he would recommend this change to Congress or not.

American financial and labor matters made few advancements this week. In the stock market, stocks went up as much as seven points in some cases. The United States treasury shipped $10,000,000 in gold to France under the "Anglo - French - American."

And Others Say. . . . . .

A boycott on Japanese goods with silk hosiery as the principal object of the boycott has been started on the University of Rochester campus, recently states the Tower Times. This action has also spread to the students of Vassar college and Syracuse university in the boycott.

The action started when the college for women of the University of Rochester was affirmed within the past week that. We the students of the University of Rochester, realizing that the consumer's boycott is the most effective check on Japan's invasion of China do hereby resolve not to purchase silk hosiery and do not wish to aid even indirectly Japan's invasion."

The head of the Peace Council at Vassar, Miss Rosanne Walker, states that the Student Peace Organization and World Relations Committee of Syracuse University, M. Redney Walker, have both endorsed the action and have undertaken immediate steps to institute similar protests at their institutions. Miss Walker said, "I feel that a student boycott would be a step in the direction of helping Japan understand that the student youth of the world are emotionally opposed to her tactics."

Mr Walker stated, "In effect a boycott is, I feel, one of the most effective ways in which we as students can aid in the forming about of pacific settlement in the Far East."

Two Chinese students in the John Griffith School in Hankow, China sent a letter to the president of the Student Council of North Texas State Teachers' college with a plea for assistance against Japanese aggression, the Campus Chat informs us. The letter signed by Liu Teh-Wen and Lee Chang-Yiu, is one of the many being sent by Chinese students to schools in the states in the hope of stimulating sympathetic and concrete help from the United States and England.

The letter follows:

"Hankow, China
7th October, 1937.

"To the President of the Student Council.

"I venture to hope that this appeal will not be sending to you across the Pacific from distant China will find in you a responsive heart. I am a college student, and, in common with all students of war, especially, I have entertained bright hopes for the future. But now an evil power has cast a dark and malignant outlook of students in China and in other parts of the world. Our modern civilization should bridge oceans and countries, bring human beings into closer contact with one another, promote better understanding between them and refine human relationships.

"But today in China scores of bombing planes daily fly over our country raining death and destruction in their wake. Thousands of non-combatants in all of our big cities are being killed and wounded, and in stricken districts horrible sights of mangled bodies and heart-rending grief are to be witnessed. The district of Wuhan where I live has already been bombed and will inevitably be the object of future bombings. Winter is approaching. Many children have been made motherless and hundreds have been rendered homeless.

Collegiate Comeback

Exams are over, letters of explanation have been written to mother, and now all we have to do is wait for those little slips, make a few good resolutions about studying, and then settle down and rest until semester exams start the whole thing over again. The food shops around here have probably noticed an increase in sales during the last two weeks. It was the crammers who sleep-walked over between classes for black coffee to keep them going until the next period.

Much could be said about the teachers who spring surprise tests the day after the game—but why bother?

Under the spreading mistletoe
The homely co-ed stood
And stood and stood and stood and stood
And stood . . . and stood . . . and stood.

It's the woman that pays. A few weeks ago two Gainesville brainstorms were invited to eat in the college dining room. They did. At supper time the hearties said "Let's go out and get another meal on the state." They got the meal —but it wasn't on the state.

We hope the guy that didn't take advantage of the fact that there was a string of horses down here this week (riding purposes) will either do so or stop griping about it. Some people just get into the habit and don't realize it when the reason for their griping has been removed.

After listening carefully to a lecture on honor, one of the freshmen inquired just why the Spirit and Span is the only place around here where the honor system is used. We don't know whether she meant the spirit or whether the "around here" was all inclusive.

We have discovered that there's a very good reason for everything. We cut convocation last week and another wired because she didn't get her weekly letter.

To those students who were fortunate enough to win a free ride in an airplane may we pass on a word or two from an exchange—Airplanes are just like grownups, the drop in $5s).

Even parallel reading comes out with something of value from time to time. We read the following definition of social workers: "A mobile mob of maidens meditating matrimony." Sounds like shades of P. E. C. W. to us. There's no law against contemplating it.

The following was gleaned from the Campus News at New Jersey College for Women. (It will be understood, we hope, that a few changes were necessary.)

THAT OLD FEELING

Time and time again we get that old feeling,
When we see a man we get that old feeling,
Tho' we came to P. S. C. some knowledge to get
Yet,
To house parties and the beach our thoughts still turn,
Tho' Joe and Bis we all are still striving
And on sweet potatoes seem to be thriving.
We long for dates, and motor-boats, and steaks
à la carte,
For that old feeling is still in our heart.

Moons up in the blue give us that old feeling,
Eating Irish stew gives us that old feeling,
Although to lectures we are willing to hark,
We'd rather be sitting down in Palmer Parks
Cokes and Pond coupes give us that old feeling,
Bands like Sammy Kaye's give us that old feeling,
In lit and trigonometry we're doing our part,
But that old feeling is still in our heart.

Some people are easily amused. Last Wednesday night when a group of friends had to wait an hour before getting into the show they stood on the curbstone in front of the local drug emporium and entertained with the help of many town kibitzers. Such a way for young ladies to act!

A new game has been originated by members of the Flambeau staff which proves very entertaining. The game according to the mood one is in. The game is this. A person makes a normal remark and the funsters misinterpret it in a ridiculous manner. Example: one might say "Good-bye". The results are, "Yes, say it. I thought you were leaving". "Cry". What's the matter with you?" and so on. It takes a sort of low-grade mentality to really enjoy the game, but the prize "misinterpretation" was the remark made by the journalistic editor, that she was reading a book of advice for young people—Love Letters of Mike Jr.

College students can't read as rapidly or as comprehensively as professors in high school, according to Dr. Gilbert Wrenn, of the University of Minnesota. We knew higher education did be casualties, but we didn't know it could cause that many! It only four years what it took us twelve years to learn. Maybe the quicker we get out of here the better.

Many people are not conventioning this week-end. We know they'll have fun but we hope that between dances and football games they'll get time for a quick business meeting. Think of how fruitful they'll feel if they come home not having had a single one.

Internal Politics in Spain
By Louis Fischer

While Spaniards die by thousands, republican Spain lives more fully than ever, writes Louis Fischer in the November issue of the New Social upheaval and civil war indeed, changes. Remarkable progress has been made in the last three months. The army is more efficient, and the government's future power. The people's faith in victory is firmer and their discipline greater. The Socialists are strong, the Communists relatively weaker, and the anarchists have less chance of being admitted to the cabinet.

A few days before this article was written, author visited the Cortes session in Valencia. Prime minister Juan Negrin expressed his faith in the Loyalist victory in the democracies, not realizing the dangers that beset them. He said, "If these countries lack the sense to help Loyalist Spain safeguard their interests they will be forced to do the fighting themselves later on." (B. B.)

A Consumer's View of the T. V. A.
By George Fort Milton

As editor of a newspaper in Chattanooga, George Fort Milton has had the opportunity to see at close range many exciting events in connection with the Tennessee Valley project and the T. V. A.

In an article in the November Atlantic Monthly, Mr. Milton writes that he is delighted at the prospect and possibility opened with the performance of the T. V. A. Still he abhors the parts of what he calls "the mutually exclusive theories" that the administration and its critics must never be "of the people, by the people, for the people", second, the city ownership and the private ownership strait-jacket power must be public, because all private utilities always indulge in frenzied finance, curruption, political control exploit the hapless consumer.

Mr. Milton thinks that the Tennessee valley is particularly suitable for a demonstration of the coordinated development of natural and material resources.

Mr. Milton further states that people in the valley feel that private power companies cannot ever do one quarter as much for building the valley as can the Federal government through the T. V. A. Secondly, they are anxious for the T. V. A. to acquire, at a fair price, the existing power facilities. Finally, in the event of refusal by public power people to negotiate upon any other than a fantastic basis, the public would be represented with the right to build a line of its own, go ahead, erect the necessary public power transmission lines, and bring its power to competitive public utilities in towns and cities of the valley. Fourthly, the actual distribution within cities towns, and for cooperative rural lines, should be undertaken by the municipalities and cooperatives in the unit. According to Mr. Milton this is their taste, and it is to be hoped that the private power interests in New York will be wise enough to be willing to cease their guerrilla war and join common sense. Education For Living
By Philip N. Youtz

Philip N. Youtz, in the November issue of Forum, presents a challenging article entitled "Will have the revolutionary aim of preparing students for twentieth-century living."

According to Mr. Youtz the liberal curriculum must be developed as a unity for a young human animal who a an organic individual, not a collection of subjects. He says the whole man the curriculum must consist of well-knit and well balanced courses, presenting the whole panorama of culture.

Mr. Youtz's educational system would begin by training the student physically. It would develop habits, attitudes and methods and all the skills that would keep him fit through life. The second division of the curriculum is directed toward all phases of social and human relations. The purpose of this would be to train the tastes, form the imagination, and give the emotions pleasant and constructive outlets.

The intellectual phase of education would be divided into the parts natural history and cultural history. The natural history phase of the study of the natural sciences. Mr. Youtz thinks, is the training in scientific method. The course in culture history would include a unified study of all the social sciences, with special emphasis on the development of the habits of our current social structure.

Such a curriculum, Mr. Youtz points out, would cause a whole man, by aiming to shape habits interests and thinking. "The new curriculum he concludes, "will have the purpose of living a creative life of today and tomorrow." (P. C.)

The Truth About the C. I. O.
By Lewis Lorwin

In order to show the importance of the C. I. O. as a phase in American life, Louis Adamic presents in the current issue of Forum a clarification of this organization's recent actions.

Mr Adamic believes the C. I. O. has learned from its recent experience in the steel strike that the way to "get" Tom Girdler will be through a well-organized strike that will break at the opportune moment.

The author predicts the early downfall of the A. F. of L. for he says increasing numbers of

A professor at Michigan State college is seriously considering the adoption of movies to supplement the present system of instructors and textbooks in college classes, according to the Michigan State News.

The movement to educate modern youth by the use of sound films was started about five years ago. Dr. E. L. Austin, whose attention the movement has gained, stated that it may be a matter of one or two more years before sound films would be adopted and that no committee had been set up to promote the project.

Dr. Austin offers as proof that visual education is becoming popular in Michigan the fact that in the last two years there has been a strong demand for teachers who have had training in visual aids. He is a member of the national visual education society and the Michigan state committee for visual aid for vocational agricultural education. "The only thing holding up approval of the new course now is the lack of funds," stated Dr. Austin, while he might have added, "the interest of other states."

Personals

Two alumnae are expected to spend this week-end at the Sigma Kappa house. They are Jane Bebinger, Miami, and Emily Johnson, Clearwater.

Mrs. J. E Gibson, chaperone at the Zeta Tau Alpha house is in the college infirmary recovering from injuries received Saturday when she was struck by an automobile on Monroe Street.

Mildred Broxson of DeFuniak Springs spent last week-end at the Alpha Xi Delta house.

Mrs. H. P. Powers, national treasurer of Alpha Chi Omega, visited the chapter on this campus last week.

Mrs. Christian Frederick Heinlein of Baltimore, Maryland, mother of Dr. Christian Paul Heinlein will celebrate her eightieth birthday on Sunday, November 14. The parents of Dr Heinlein recently celebrated their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary.

Churches Make Numerous Plans

Conventions, Candy Pulls, Suppers, On Calendar

Out-of-state conferences and conventions, spaghetti suppers, and candy pulls will be some of the activities included on this week-end's full and varied religious calendar.

Representatives from this college to meet with delegates from other colleges at Gainesville Florida will be Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell, Miss Rachel Wylie, Mary Ensign, and Mary Ellen Tharpe. These delegates will get together on Friday and Saturday of this week to plan the Youth conference, which is held in connection with Florida Chain of Missionary assemblies. The meeting will begin Friday evening with a dinner at the Methodist church. Miss Wylie is state chairman of the Youth conference, and Mary Ensign is secretary of the Student executive. The Youth conference held for the first time at Tallahassee last February, is a state-wide organization.

Following a discussion last Sunday evening on "Qualities of Student Religion," Laila Iverson and Merryday Rosser will present this Sunday evening, at the Presbyterian Annex, a discussion on "Why Share My Religion?"

The dramatic club and the choir of the Presbyterian Student league sponsored a peace program over WTAL, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon on Armistice Day. Mary Frances Campbell and Frances Moss read the famous sermon drama "The Unknown Soldier Speaks." The choir, under the direction of Eleanor Daniells, sang three special numbers.

The chief activity of the Catholic students for this week-end is the sending of five delegates to the Southeast Province convention at the University of Georgia, Athens. The remainder of the Newman club is not planning anything for this week-end, as a great number of their members will be absent.

The Methodist students will hold their usual Friday night open house this week-end, with the added attraction of an old fashion candy pull. For Saturday afternoon, they are planning a hike. All Methodist students and their friends are invited to these entertainments.

The Baptist students have begun a series of freshman breakfasts, held every Sunday morning at 7:30 o'clock in the new student house, to which ten freshman Baptist students are invited. These breakfasts are planned and arranged by two B. S. U. council members.

Monday evening at 6:00 o'clock, in the Baptist student house, Miss Susan L Adams, State Baptist Young People's worker, will lead a Y. W. A. study group. A rest interval, during which a spaghetti supper is to be served, will take place after the first session of the discussion. After supper a second discussional session will occur. All those who are interested and want to attend the supper, may sign up with the Y. W. A. circle chairman.

Miss Billie R. Currin, Baptist student secretary, is spending a week, starting Monday through Friday, at Stetson college in interest of B. S. U. She will give a course in B. S. U. methods and speak to student groups at vespers every night.

Last Thursday, November 11, a confirmation class was held at Ruge Hall from 5:30 p. m. to 8:00 p. m. This morning at 7:15 there was a celebration of the Holy Communion. In the evening at 7:15 there will be the regular after dinner coffee.

Saturday, November 13, the Young People's Service league of the Diocese of Florida will hold a fall meeting at Ruge Hall. Anyone who is interested is invited to attend.

Sunday night at 7:30 the Student auxiliary will meet at Ruge Hall. Sue Pinner will be in charge of the program.

to take on responsibility, and this would be good training if they did not take advantage of their added freedom.

Mrs. Louella Wimberley, director in Bryan: I think it is nice to try it out. If seniors do not know when to study by that time, they will not make very good teachers. They should be allowed to stay out after 10:30 o'clock on week nights if they have kept up their work. Of course the responsible girls would have to be chosen. They should also have some place in the dormitory where girls may smoke with men. I think that is one of the things that is needed as much as anything on campus.

Co-education Looks Back On 100 Years of Advance

Advantages and Disadvantages of the System Pointed Out by Leading Educators

By FLORENCE GREGORY

With the celebration of its hundredth birthday as the first college to admit women as students, Oberlin college, Oberlin, O., has attracted attention not only to its century anniversary, but co-educational schools, as a whole, throughout the United States have been brought into the limelight.

During the first four years of existence the co-educational classes of Oberlin were in the preparatory department. By 1837 four women had sufficiently prepared themselves to enter college work and be enrolled as members of the college along with the male students. This, the first co-education college, existed before the first woman's college.

Other Colleges Older

Five other colleges in Ohio are older than Oberlin, and only 14 schools in the country are richer. In its early history Oberlin prohibited dancing and otherwise restricted the social relations between the sexes, but it took a text out of St. Paul and encouraged its graduates to marry. The college regulations permitted seniors who were engaged to call on their fiances until 8 o'clock, whereas less serious callers were required to leave at 7:30.

Oberlin was also among the first colleges to draw no distinction on the score of color. John Brown drew many of his most active partisans from its faculty and student body. Until recently, the bells in town were always tolled on the aniversary of his execution.

Interest has been areated in Oberlin's fellow co-educational schools for many reasons. Old questions are cropping up concerning the number of schools of this type that are in the United States; how many are state controlled; and what are the arguments for and against co-education.

390 Co-ed Colleges

There are 390 co-educational colleges and universities, technological and specialised included, in this country. One hundred forty-nine of these are state controlled, the others being under church, private, or board authority. Ohio, Illinois, California, and Pennsylvania head the list in the number of institutions within their own boundaries. Ohio has the total of 33 colleges for both men and women, six of which are state controlled.

Florida, Delaware, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont and the District of Columbia do not have a state co-educational school. Delaware had the distinction of being the only state in the union having no co-educational institution whatsoever.

Thinkers in the education world have claimed advantages and disadvantages of co-education in intellectual centers. Leaders in favor of the combined school have five concrete arguments:

1. With the growth of women's participation in modern problems and business, it is obvious that as men and women have to work in the world together, they are best prepared for it together. It is also pointed out that all the boys cannot be educated in one school, and all the girls in another, and at the last minute throw them together and expect them to make a successful world.

2. Co-education makes for an enlargement of school activities and interests. Many advocates of separate schools maintain that in the combined college the boys tend to take lead in most of the activities, and thus the girls are deprived of the opportunity of training in leadership, which they get in the individual schools. Defenders meet this argument with the statement "In this matter, the girls are only meeting what they will find in the world altogether."

Contacts Are Important

3. Education, claims one co-education supporter, in its widest sense of learning by experience is a matter of contacts: contacts with things, contacts with ideas, contacts with people. The two sexes need that last contact, especially, in order to follow William James' philosophy of education: "To be able to know a good man when you see one." Youth has to have the wide and varied range that the co-educational school offers in order to be educated intelligently in accordance to James' definition.

4. Plato in his "Republic" brings out that "women are of kindred nature to men." Great philosophers believed in the similarity of interests of both sexes: Oxford and Cambridge, great intellectual institutions, welcome women to their campuses.

5. A sane attitude toward the other sex is instigated in the co-educational school because of constant class and social contact of the two. When persons stay around other persons for a length of time, a normal and intelligent opinion is formed by each of the other. Girls learn to meet men with poise and thus work with them more naturally; boys get the opportunity to understand the feminine interests and, to some extent, their attitudes toward life and its problems.

Careers Receive Blow

One of the strongest arguments against co-education is that the careers of women receive a blow. In combined schools the head or president is always a man. This, it is held, will teach girls the lesson that "only men are qualified for supreme responsibility." The reply to this objection is this: "It is true that men are usually heads of co-educational institutions, but it will not always be so, for the more boys and girls grow accustomed to governing each other, the more ready will they be in the future, as governors of schools, to give headship to the one best fitted to lead—regardless of sex."

Three other objections expounded by advocates favoring individual education institutions are as follows:

1. "Girls become rough, take less care of personal appearance and generally lose feminine charm in co-educational environment."

2 "Boys become effeminate."

3. "The presence of the opposite sex detracts from their studies."

These suppositions have been answered in fervent tones by writers in favor of the combination: it is absurd to conclude that girls take less care of their looks when boys are around; the boys' masculinity is decidedly emphasized with constant association with feminity; it is better to have them both together and distracted once in awhile, than to have miles between them, and thus have neglected studies by the students trying to cover that distance every week-end.

In the entire United States Florida and Delaware are the only states having a state university and a state woman's college and do not have a state co-educational school. The University of Florida and Florida State college are the government controlled schools of Florida. Numerous arguments have been made advocating the consolidation of the two schools into a state institution. All the above contentions favoring co-education have been and can be applied to the problem of this local consolidation. Added advantages include:

Co-ed Advantages Listed

1. Tallahassee is the logical place for the Gainesville law school, for the main reasons that it is the seat of the Supreme court and the state capitol. The entire law school and law library is housed in one building at the university. It could be easily moved to Tallahassee.

2. In the near future it is going to be necessary for the University and Florida State college to do a great deal of expanding; new dormitories are needed, more classrooms are in demand. The solution is to do the building together, with one school designated as the location. Gainesville, is that, in reference to the first argument.

3. At F. S. C. W., it has been suggested, the Normal State Teachers' college might be established also. The paramount reasons that these proposals have not been accepted involve two things:

1. Lack of money. This is the biggest drawback. It would cost thousands of dollars to consolidate the two schools. This has been met with these questions: "Is the future and welfare of the coming generation worth it How much money is yearly dedicated to the enlargement of armaments?"

2. The reason that so little effort and energy have been spent in that direction by those most interested in the change. It will take legislation to make the change and "legislation results from pressure of public opinion."

To get the best results out of a thing one has to put something into it; to get the best results from the consolidation, two things have to be contributed; propaganda favoring the movement and money to carry the plans out. Students and advocates of co-education can contribute the former and automatically the later will take care of itself.

In making a pound of honey, bees average about 40,000 miles of flying.

A D Pi's Install New Chapter at Mercer

Representatives from the Alpha Delta Pi chapter on this campus are attending the installation of a new chapter at Mercer university, Macon, Georgia, this week-end.

While in Macon the girls will be guests of members of the local sorority which will become an Alpha Delta Pi chapter at this time. They will be honored at a luncheon Saturday noon, and at a banquet that evening.

Members who are making the trip include: Emily Blackwell, Gibson Dey, Sara Moor, Virginia Dowling, and Leone Thornton.

KAPPA DELTA PLEDGES ENTERTAINED AT PARTY CELEBRATING CHAPTER DAY

Under the illusion that they were on their way to goat court Kappa Delta pledges went slowly and fearfully to the chapter house last night, only to find upon their arrival that they were guests at a surprise kid party given for them by the actives in honor of Chapter Day.

The chapter on this campus was installed on November 11, 1904 and a large birthday cake with Kappa Delta written across the top appropriately bore 33 lighted candles. Ice cream was served when the cake was cut later in the evening.

Members were dressed in kid costumes, and many kid games were enjoyed. A feature of the party was a "fish-pond." June Quina, social chairman, was in charge of the affair.

Pledges who were entertained include: Alleyne Calvin, Frances Cofer, Helen Dabney, Mary Kate Erwin, Betty Evans, Sara Fuller, Jean Gilbert, Mae Hampton, Katherine Hague, Mary Ellen Long, Vivian Lanier, Betty Langston, Hope McCain, Anne McMorris, Frances Morrison, Betty Nickinson, Louise Phillips, Katherine Perkins, Virginia Rowe, Ellen Rice, Beth Rickards, Lucilla Walker, Nancy White, May Weitner, Elizabeth Wing, Selma Wight, Martha Anderson, Barbara Anderson, Mary Myers Alford, Carolyn Brinson, Frances Battle, Margaret Marie Bryant.

Writer Draws Comparison of Governments

Constitutions of College, Federal Set-ups Are Described

By AILSA McKELVEY

Monarchy, dictatorship, democracy, or anarchy—what do the students here on campus live under? Neither to be exact. There is a republican form of government in operation on this campus which in many ways resembles the system of the Federal government.

The first step in student government on campus came when the faculty, like the early states, gave over their rights to the central government. In this particular case, it was the College Government association.

The constitution of the College Government association closely resembles the national one in that it defines a division of powers, saying what lies under the control of the student government and what remains as "vested rights" of the faculty committee on student affairs.

There is also a separation of the government into executive, legislative, and judicial bodies, but there is no true separation of powers as found in the national organization as the membership in these branches is interchangeable in many instances so they have no true check on each other as separate units.

The executive department does not consist of the president and the cabinet as in Washington, but of the executive council which is made up of the president of the College Government association, the chairman of judiciary, the secretary, the treasurer, and the freshman adviser.

When it comes to the legislative department at Florida State College for Women it is not bicameral like the national set-up, but it is unicameral and this one house is called the Senate.

The faculty committee on student affairs has the right of discussion in Senate meetings, but it has no power whatsoever to vote.

Next in order comes the judicial department which consists of the Judiciary, the lower courts, and the faculty committee. The Judiciary and the lower courts act in a sense like the Federal courts while the supreme power lies in the faculty committee. The faculty committee is supreme in some cases but does not hold all the powers of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The school constitution, like that of the Federal governmen[t] has a preamble which states i[ts] purpose. It has no "Bill of Righ[ts]" and in fact the authorities of the college have the power to withdraw all or any part of the powe[rs] granted. 30 days notice being given, and the College Gov[ern]ment association can relinquish the same under the same term[s].

Like the national government the qualifications for all offic[es] are stated but they are not p[ut] forth in the original documen[t] as the framers of the federal document placed them.

Just as there are rules for the amending power in the national government, so there are definite ones for the college constitution. In the amendment power lies the 'sovereignty of the people' in the United States, and also the 'sovereignty of the students' on campus.

Although there are no political parties with their national conventions for choosing and nominating candidates for election there is a nominating committee which closely resembles them.

The greatest resemblance of the citizens on this campus to those in the nation is that only a small percent of the population bothers to vote not realizing that to vote is a privilege, not a right.

Quarterly Exam Week Brightened By Many Informal Parties

The activities of sororities during the past week have been confined to short, informal parties, planned to bring relief and relaxation from the worries of quarterly exams.

Theta Upsilon members and pledges took advantage of the Armistice holiday to enjoy a skating party in the morning. At noon a luncheon of weiners rolls, coffee, and apples was served at the chapter house.

Members and pledges of Alpha Chi Omega gave a birthday supper at the chapter house Tuesday evening for Carolyn Irvin, and entertained again on Thursday evening with a lawn party and weiner roast to which rushees were invited.

Alpha Xi Delta actives and pledges will give an informal party for rushees tonight from 8 till 10.30. Sandwiches and coffee will be served during the evening

Members, pledges, and guests of Delta Zeta will spend a gay week-end at camp to celebrate the end of the first quarter.

4-H Club Has Tables

Next Tuesday night new and old members of the 4-H club will have tables together for dinner. This will take the place of the regular monthly meeting. All 4-H members who wish to sit at these tables Tuesday night may sign their names on the list on the 4-H bulletin board on the lower floor of the Westcott building

VV Plans Spring Dance

The Village Vamps meeting at the A. D. Pi house Thursday afternoon, made plans for a dance to be given next semester. After the meeting, refreshments were served.

Those present included: Virginia Dowling, Dot Hill, Betty Curtis, Sara Moor, Virginia Wiggins, Betty Cashen, Nelwyn Brooks, Mickey Mickler, and Ann Towson.

LUMPLESS PILLOWS

Since proper rest depends so largely on a comfortable bed and soft, resilient pillows, one manufacturer has designed a pillow which cannot sag or lump. The filling is sewed in five separate layers. The center layer is of goose feathers; the four outer layers of softest down. They come in regulation sizes in five different colored cases.

Day Students To Have Point Activity Plan

New System Will Include Recognition of Most Active Member

Going to rec and visiting girls in their rooms, pastimes that to dormitory students are listed as pleasant recreation, have become duties for freshman day students.

Under a new point system inaugurated for the yearlings, these two activities are listed among the many for which points will be given. At the close of the year, the freshman accumulating the largest number will be recognized in some way.

Several other activities fall in the class of the purely enjoyable, for instance attending Play night and dormitory teas. Farther down the scale of pleasure come membership in an organization, participation in athletics, and taking part in dramatics. Still lower is attendance at various meetings including convocation, class meetings, and senate. Honors such as assisting C. G. A., holding a campus office, and attaining high scholastic averages complete the list.

The activities with the points given for each are as follows: "B" average, fifty points; "C" average, twenty-five, membership in an organization, fifteen; attending meetings, five; attending play night, three, attending rec, three; attending convocation, five; extra-curricular activities, five (for each practice); attending D. S. O. meetings; attending programs, three; try outs, ten; getting a part, twenty; attending dormitory teas, three; attending senate meetings, five; office on campus, twenty-five; elected to second primary, fifteen; attending class meetings, five; for each visit to a dormitory girl or not well acquainted day student, two; and assisting C. G. A. committees, five.

Book Store Has Twenty Year Record As Semi-cooperative

Other Campus Enterprises Linked up with First Experiment Along This Line

By MURYL ROLAND

More than 170 girls are receiving student aid as the direct result of Florida State college's most outstanding example of a semi-cooperative, the bookstore.

This unit which has been in operation more than 20 years works on the following partially cooperative principals. Prices are fixed as low as possible in order to give the best service. Only a small profit is realized on each sale. At the end of each year when all the profits are totaled they are deposited in a special fund which is used for either student aid or some other student facility. If the purely cooperative principle were employed and each student received her individual share of the profits, she would be paid approximately $3.00. By pooling all of the resources a lump sum of some $6 000 is the result.

First Installed in 1915

The first bookstore, which was installed in 1915, operated on a minute scale as compared with the present organization. It was located in the small office that Dr Guy Diffenbaugh now occupies, and text books composed the store's entire stock. Due to a popular demand, however, pens, pencils, paper, ink, erasers, and others scholastic supplies were soon added.

About the same time the bookstore opened the Y. W. C. A. on campus undertook to establish a combined soft drink and lunch counter. Unable to operate except at a loss, they abandoned the venture. Nevertheless, the demand for such a service continued to exist, and so the bookstore added a small soft drink counter as its first enlargement.

Store Enlarged

In 1918 the bookstore moved into larger quarters, a room about where the present post office is situated. One end of this room was then partitioned off and designated as the new college post office.

Twenty years ago when the enrollment was less than half the present number, mail delivery and collection was a relatively easy matter. In fact the first system of mail transportation used on the campus was exceedingly simple. The letters were collected in a box, carried down to the Tallahassee post office and mailed by some college official. This same pseudo-postman brought the campus mail back with him. With the advent of free delivery service, mail facilities took another step forward. The college then had a regular mail box where the postman collected outgoing mail and left incoming parcels and letters.

Post Office Grows

When the small post office was finally established, the government offered to make it a federal branch office. The proposition was rejected, however, because of several disadvantages. First, the government offered to supply $200 a month from which the college was to maintain a postmaster and all of the post office facilities. Also the colege unit would be under the usual federal regulations, one of which prohibits two persons not of the same family using a post office box together. Such an arrangement would requira a separate box for practically every girl and also a much higher box fee would be levied. The college favored a system which would allow all the girls in one room to receive their mail in a mutual box, and also a minimum box fee that would be payable by the semester. The system inaugurated then is still used in the post office department. Since officials feel that it could operate more economically alone the post office remained a separate division although still a phase of the bookstore.

Mail Service Begun

Another mail service was begun at this time which had to do with special delivery letters. The college arranged with the Tallahassee post office to have two girls appointed at the college as special delivery agents. All special delivery letters were brought to a small room in Bryan hall where the girls were waiting to sign for them. The letters were then delivered to the difefrent rooms exactly as if they were local residents of the city. The girls received a small commission from the postal department. Because of federal objection, however, it was necessary to discontinue this service last year.

Another outgrowth from the bookstore was the establishment of a supply room. In its early stages this was simply a room near the bookstore where general campus supplies were kept. Fuses, bolts, screws, janitor supplies and general repair equipment were bought in wholesale lots and then distributed to the various departments as they needed them. Not only was it cheaper to buy in large quantities, but also it was more convenient than making a special trip to town whenever some new supplies were requested. As the college grew it became necessary to have some definite place for the receiving and sending out of freight and express. The supply room seemed to be the most logical place for such an office, and so this service was incorporated into it.

Supply Dept. Plant

All the college freight and express orders now go through this department which in turn, receives all the shipments and distributes them to the proper places. Also all the express and freight that is sent out from the college is handled through this department. There is only one exception to this arrangement. The dining hall freight and express is delivered directly to the dietary department.

The financial plan upon which this branch of the bookstore is operated is a very efficeint one. Since all the supplies are bought at wholesale prices when they are sold to the various departments it is at a price high enough to produce a small profit. This profit is used to pay the expenses incurred in operation an dthe salaries of those employed in the supply room. The second outgrowth of the bookstore has thus become a self-perpetuating unit.

Begin Mimeographing

In 1920 the bookstore purchased a small mimeographing machine valued at $200, and began mimeographing some college programs, announcements and examinations. This was the origin of the present duplicating department. With equipment valued at $4 000, this department now prints most of the college business forms, checks, registration cards, engagement cards, examinations and announcements. A simplified multilith which was installed two years ago prints nearly any kind of photograph. A new process ditto machine and a mimeograph machine of the latest model have been added to increase the speed and efficiency of the duplicating division.

New Site Fixed

Last February the bookstore moved into the site it now occupies. It was especially designed to insure the greatest convenience. The room which measures 41 by 44 feet, contains three specific sections, the book section, the general supplies section and the fountain. From a small supply of text books the stock has grown to a collection that is valued from $12 000 to $15.000. Text books are still the primary feature an ever-growing collection of tion, poetry and travel books been added.

At this time the post office duplicating department and supply room were established organizations independent of book store. This was done two reasons. First, because of growth of the system that was corporated under the head of book store and because of the creased space in the West building.

More Laughter Than Weeping, Prof Declares

University Psychologist Says Collegians Rarely Cry

URBANA, Ill. — Maybe "recovery" has had something to do with it, but Prof. Paul Young of the University of Illinois psychology department announces that this world is at least for college students, far from a vale of tears.

Research conducted among students at Illinois indicates that laughter is 400 times more prevalent than weeping.

Professor Young's conclusions were that collegians take down their hair and cry less than once in every 20 days but laugh more than 20 times every day.

Women weep three times as often as men but their funny bones are not tickled as often.

Weeping is caused 80 to 90 per cent of the time by environment.

Laughter is caused 98 per cent of the time by social contacts.

The chief cause of joy or gloom among students is class grades.

Letters—received or not received—ranked second. Especially letters containing checks from home.

Dates, however, were relegated to tenth place among the sources of cheer.

Freshman Deadline Set for Year Book

Freshmen may continue to buy Flastacowo picture tickets through Saturday, November 20, Eileen Robinson, editor of the yearbook, announced yesterday. The editor is also requesting that junior and senior picture proofs be returned immediately.

Show Is Postponed

"Sleeping Beauty" to have been presented here by a Federal Works project marionette company Saturday afternoon has been indefinitely postponed, it was learned Thursday afternoon. The show which was to be sponsored by the Tallahassee Historical society and the Florida State college Alumnae association will be given at some later date.

Recital to Be Given By Faculty Members Next Friday Night

A faculty recital will be given in the college auditorium Friday evening, November 19, at 7:45 by Miss Mary Esther Winslow, pianist, and Owen Frink Sellers cellist, members of the faculty of the School of Music. Miss Clara Guerry will accompany Mr. Sellers.

Selections which will be included on the program are as follows: Caprice on Airs from "Alceste" by Gluck-Saint Saens; Nocturne, Op. 48, No. 1, by Chopin; Scherze, C sharp minor, by Chopin, played by Miss Winslow. Mr. Sellers will play Concerto, Prelude, Intermezzo, Introduction, and Ronde by Lalo.

Miss Winslow will conclude the program with Night Winds, by Griffes, Le Cathedral engloutie, by Debussy; Poissons d'Or, by Debussy; and Sevillana, by Albentz.

Distaff Will Come Out This Week-end

Day students and off-campus students, except those living in sorority houses, may get their copies of the first issue of the Distaff, campus literary quarterly, by calling at the postoffice window this week-end and next week. Students living in sorority houses and dormitories will receive their magazines through their postoffice boxes.

Correspondents Discuss Music

Origin of "Pitchin' Woo" Is Investigated

Newest collegiate origination to replace the "Big Apple" is the romantic expression, "pitching woo," put into song by co-composers Sam Mineo and Sidney Prussian under the title, "Let's Pitch a Little Woo." One of New York's more publicity-minded maestros went to the extreme of canvassing the nation's college editors as to the origin of this new synonym for "necking."

Most of them named other schools as the point of origin, the date being indicated generally as some time during the past two years. If we recall rightly, it was generally used in Big Ten schools four years ago. Of all the phrases used to indicate the effect of that big moon over "Observatory Hill," however, probably the most descriptive was the Colonial Fathers' creation, "bundling."

New York at Large

Success story of the week is presented in C. C N. Y's Roger Brower, chief production man of the Mutual Broadcasting system. . . . Class of '25, Brower was one of the early pioneers of radio and has served in every phrase of ether activity since his commencement. Last week he was elected president of the American Radio Producers and Announcers Guild. For you music lover Victor is issuing discs on the chamber music concerts to be sponsored in Town Hall here by the New Friends of Music. Don't miss Tommy Dorsey's arrangement of "Who" from "Sunny." Jack Leonard's vocal with the ensemble background is along the same lines o fthe famous "Marie" disc. One of the more swingy new tunes you'll probably like is "Nice Work If You Can Get It." Still on music, Glen Gray's Casa Loma crew has made a sad mistake in scrapping its grand "hot" style for the Goodman type of swingeroo.

Grid Prognosticator De Luxe

Eddie Dooley, former Dartmouth All-American and present New York sports writer and radio sportscaster, has a consulting board of 250 college football coaches who advise him on his regular CBS grid prognostications Every week, Dooley contacts these mentors by telephone and telegraph as to their frank opinion about the chances of their respective teams in games of the ensuing Saturday. Football, according to Dooley, is one sport where coaches are honest in their opinions. This in contrast to the attitudes of baseball and boxing managers whose pose invariably is one of extreme optimism.

Predictions based on best times, defenses, running power, passing attacks, etc., can be invalidated by one freak intercepted pass, or one inspiring run. Realizing the uncertainty of the game, coaches are willing to admit that the other team stands a chance. And back to the telephone, Dooley's weekly bill averages $100, which reminds us of one of our more romantic fraternity brothers during undergraduate days whose long distance calls and resulting phone bills earned him the nickname, "A. T & T."

Chatter

Campus band saxaphonists, themselves once a national menace, need not fear any longer the menacing prod of the slide on the trombone being played behind them . . . one of the latest patents issued from Washington is for a short-positioned trombone, more specifically, one with a very short slide. Frank Crumit, veteran radio singer, wrote Ohio U.'s college fighting song, "Buckeye Battle Cry," when he was a student there Seymour Simons, composer of "Honey" and new maestro on that CBS auto show, was a classmate of Mentor Harry Kipke and the late George Sisler, of baseball fame, at Michigan.

ODDS AND ENDS FROM OTHER COLLEGES

Co-eds working at Pennsylvania State college earn approximately $150 apiece. Their jobs range from chaperoning to clerking in a telegraph office.

A fire which swept North Hall at Slippery Rock college sent 167 co-eds scantily clad out into early morning cold. No one was injured, but damage totaled about $400,000.

Two freshmen at Loyola university have identical names—Leonard Francis Kowalski. They are both taking premedical courses, are enrolled in the same classes, use the same locker, write similarly and got the same grades on the entrance tests. They are not related.

Four University of Toledo football players are "washermen," but they're not sissies. To earn their way through school, they do the laundry for the varsity team and the gymnasium. Their normal week's wash is 1.000 towels and 200 jerseys.

"Joe College," 427-pound mascot of the Baylor university football team, likes ice cream cones. It takes about six of them before "Joe" will consent to wear his freshman cap. "Joe" is a grizzly bear who delights in slapping husky guards and tackles around.

A member of the University of Deleware's physical education staff claims to be the first college instructor to live in a trailer. He has rented space on the rear of the lawn of a family in Newark and students are wagering on how long he will remain in it once the weather turns cold.

Metropolitan Opera Star Opens Year's Artist Series Program

SANDOVAL WILL PLAY TWO SOLOS

Tickets for Performance May Be Procured November 15

The famous voice of Nino Martini, tenor star of the Metropolitan Opera company, will open this year's Artists series program Monday night in the college auditorium at 8 o'clock.

Mr Martini is noted as a singer of outstanding ability in the fields of opera, radio and screen productions. His popularity is testified to by the overflow audiences at his recent concerts. In Milwaukee he sang to a packed auditorium and at the Constitution hall in Washington he had to give one encore in addition to his program of 13 numbers.

Program Listed

Mr Martini has chosen the following songs for his performance and Miguel Sandoval, accompanist, will play two groups of piano solos:

Tre giorni son che Nina, Pergolesi; Gia mi dicon dal mattino, Valenti; Non e Veri, Mattei—Mr. Martini.

Gavotte and variations, Rameau-Leschetizky; Rondo Humoresque—Mr. Sandoval.

Ciile que je preffere, Fourdrain; L'heure, Benedictus; Je crois entre encore, from "Les Pecheurs de Perles," Bizet—Mr. Martini.

Intermission

E'noevai la stelle, from "Otello," Puccini; The Night Flower, Campbell-Tipton; London Bridge, Burr-Percival; Have you seen a dream, Frank Bridge—Mr. Martini.

Nocturne, G. Respighi; Vive vivaro, Larregla—Mr. Sandoval.

Ornadinas, Barrera y Calleja; Beirr M. Carrillo; Bim Bo Amor, Major Sandoval—Mr. Martini.

Tickets May Be Obtained

Lists of eager students are expected Monday as they procure their seats for the performance. These tickets will be obtained from the box office of the auditorium.

Season tickets for faculty and other officers of administration will be on sale at the box office beginning November 15.

Persian Cloth Given School

Graduate Sends Material From Sage College

Amanda Katherine Martin, a graduate of Florida State College for Women in the class of 1914, has recently presented the home economics department of the college a piece of Persian hand woven and embroidered cloth. These are done by home economics majors in Sage College for Women, Teheran, Persia, during the years from 1930 to 1936.

The most artistic bit of work is a rectangular piece of material of beige de chine called "Types of Persian Life." On it appear numerous human figures dressed in purple, yellow, green, red, and blue hues. These figures, which are characteristic of all Persian weaving, are shaded at equal intervals between the colors. The colorful figure is emphasized by a black background.

Other hand embroidered articles included in Miss Martin's gift to the college are a pink organdie fancy bowl mat, which a worker can easily make in a day, a round ribbed linen square piece to a cushion set, and a strip of black silk mat banding on which is embroidered a colored design.

Also in the recent contribution are samples of silk, both old and new, of which the women, in clothing a bit of a shawl, wear more than 60 yards.

Miss Martin, who received a B. S. degree from Florida State in her teaching at Campbell college, Buies Creek, N. C.

The college home economics department here plans, after framing the samples of Persian weaving and embroidery, to put them in display soon in the show case in the front hall of the Science building.

Odd-Even Tickets Will Be Given Out

Guest tickets and tickets for off campus students for Odd and Even demonstrations will be given out in the box office in front of the auditorium today until 3 o'clock and tomorrow until 1:30 o'clock. Only one odd-even ticket will be given to a student. Tickets for dormitory students will be put in post office boxes.

Students must have their tickets to be admitted to the demonstrations. There will be no reserved seats and no students may save seats. Ushers will fill all vacancies.

Day Students' Organization Gives Program

Group's Problems Shown During Convocation Entertainment

Bringing the day student problem before the student body and at the same time presenting an entertaining program, the day students' organization took over convocation program Tuesday.

Skating the part of day students Mattie Lou Love, president of the organization, pointed out that of the 175 day students about 100 live so far off the beaten contact with the college and the extracurricular activities, appreciation of which is made actually happening on this campus and not more than 50 participate in any out-of-class activities.

Carrying on a dialogue with the amusing figure of Mr. Woodbead of Washington, alias Mary Emily Sasser, Miss Love explained further pointed out that day students' organization is the only one of its kind quite difficult. She described the day day students' room which is located across from the book store.

During the student body meeting, Miss Rowena Longmire stated the requirements for three off campus houses and campus halls aspiring to the 50 per cent attendance award by the Alumnae association to the best decorated house on Thanksgiving day. This year a second and third prize award of $5 and $2 was announced.

Any house deciding to decorate for Thanksgiving day must leave a note in the Alumnae office stating the time. The organization desires have to be ready by 4 o'clock Wednesday, the day when the judges will make their decisions. The final decision will not be made, however, till the judges have had an opportunity to return all the houses. Wednesday night in order to see the lighting effects. Prizes will be judged on originality, general appearance, and decoration.

An announcement relative to the Odd and Even demonstrations was made, stating that each person will be allowed to get only one guest ticket to the demonstrations and that no seats may be saved that night.

Florida Alumnus Discusses Advertising with Reporter

Douglas Leigh, Lamp-Lighter of B'way, Is Hero Of Horatio-Alger-Like Success Story

By DOROTHY BARCLAY

The reporter who interviews one who knows more about the white lights of Broadway than Douglas Leigh in New York is a young fellow of 27, named Douglas Leigh.

With the words Walter Winchell, cynical columnist of America's "Hardened Arteries" Has-addressed Leigh, alumnus of the University of Florida and hero of one of the generation's most amazing success stories.

Leigh in New York in the midst of the depression with eight dollars in his pocket and nothing. Young Leigh has risen in six years to his present position as electrical advertising expert and has built the company bearing his name, with contracts totalling over three-quarter of a million dollars.

Slight and lithe, in collegiate tweeds and with a quiet Southern voice, he is scarcely the accepted picture of the dynamic young man. Sitting behind the broad, flat-topped desk in his office, he leans back and turning in his swivel chair, and putting his hand to his face now and then in an unconscious gesture, he is the physical antithesis of the modern dynamo we were to be introduced as president of the Gainesville Olee club or as the "best-dressed man on campus," no one would consider it odd.

Work as Hobby

But when he begins to speak, as he enthusiastically tells of his business, when he leaves his listeners bewildered by the complex jargon of his more complex industry, the reason for his success becomes more easily apparent. Douglas Leigh eats, sleeps, and breathes advertising. These spectaculvrs, or "specs," are huge animated signs involving the glowing use of more than 200 feet of neon tubing or the equivalent in electric bulbs; and it is his genius in this line which has sky-rocketed him to the top.

Douglas Leigh is a native of Alabama and came to Orlando, Florida, with his family, haberdashery business, he still retains the

Group To Ask For Extended Library Hours

N. S. F. A. Will Appoint Committee to See Dr. Conradi

FORUM DISCUSSES OTHER QUESTIONS

Flickering Lights And College Politics Are Debated

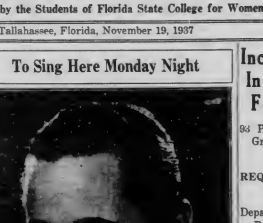
The much talked about need for extended library privileges oves the week-end will be presented to Dr. Conradi this week by an N.S.F.A. committee appointed after the forum held Tuesday night. Need for these privileges was one of several campus questions including the flickering of lights in the dormitories, compulsory voting, and open politics, which were discussed in the second student opinion forum.

Discuss Play Night

Continuing from the decision of the administration as to whether the library will be open to students on Sunday and Sunday night, or Sunday afternoon, are requests for the investigation of the possibility of changing playnight to Saturday night and changing the time for taking out reserved books for the week-end.

Out of the discussion of the annoying flicker of the lights in the dormitories grew a resolution to see J. O. Sanderson, business manager, about them. It was also suggested that the control of these lights is to continue, that the lighting system in the dormitory electrical connections be put on separate meters.

Vote Not Heavy



The fact that so majority of the student body votes in the elections led to a warm debate over the necessity of having increased student interest in college governments. After much discussion, a suggestion that the college campaigns be abolished was dropped.

The question of developing open politics and political parties on this campus was argued at great length. Points arrived with the discussion centered were the advantages of having a longer period of time between the nominating of parties for office and the final elections, the necessity for having nominees and their platforms brought to the attention of the entire student body, and whether political parties might develop from such a situation. The group finally agreed to investigate the possibilities of open politics on the campus and to report the findings to Nell Colvin, chairman of the forum.

Oil Paintings Go On Display This Morning

F. P. A. Exhibit to Extend Through November 27 In 307 Westcott

An exhibition of oil paintings will be sponsored by the art department of this college beginning today and extending through November 27. This exhibit, which is under the auspices of the Federal Art project, will be in 307 Westcott hall and will be open to all visitors from 9:30 to 5 o'clock during the week. Miss Canfield will lecture on the paintings at 4:30 o'clock on Monday and Tuesday afternoons.

This collection includes work done in New York, Mississippi, Illinois, Iowa, Colorado, and Louisiana by the W. P. A. Federal Art project. Landscapes, still lifes, and figure subjects in this group though having a wide variety of style and treatment, tend for the most part toward the more conservative trends in contemporary style. This display is one of the large series of exhibitions which have been sent out from headquarters in Washington, D. C., by Holger Cahill, director of the Federal Art project, for circuit showings throughout the country.

In general the works in this exhibition exemplify one of the statements made by Mr. Cahill in his introduction to the catalogue of the Museum of Modern Art exhibition of project work in New York City:

"In every section of the country there are honest, vigorous and independent artists whose work has also firm discipline and intelligent craftsmanship which gives assurance of solid achievement in the present and stimulates high hopes for the future. "The period of experimentation and research through which artists have passed in the last 20 years or more has given them a technical equipment of great range, and has made for a high standard of performance. This technique is no longer being used simply for technique's sake. It is being turned to vital and useful ends in searching out expressive form for that is what a most positive and valuable in the unfolding experience of the American community."

This collection is composed of 94 paintings, of which some of the most important ones are: "Peoples" by David Burliuk; "The Country Church" by Arthur E. Covington; "Landscape" by Helen Dickson, "Still Life" by Emil Ganso, "Sunday Morning on the Bayou" by Caroline Durieux; "Old Mountaineer" by Warren Wheelock; and "Religious Fiesta" by Jerome Myers.

Eyman Speaks at Meeting

W. A. A. Extends Dancing Time

Questionnaire Will Be Compiled by Group

Everything from horses to roller skates was included in the decisions made by the Athletic board in their meeting Wednesday night.

The W.A.A. announces that in the Future Friday play night will be extended to 10 p. m.

The association has also decided to begin overuse the horseback riding project undertaken by Mrs. Inez Carlyle.

Due to the fact that students have been careless with the skates provided for their use and pleasure by the association and because of the disappearance of several pairs of skates, a new regulation governing their use has been made. Students who wish to use skates will have to, from now on, sign out on a paper which will be posted on the door of the equipment room. Only a faculty member will be allowed to open this door.

The W.A.A. will plan to sponsor or try to arrange to have the Coliffon club to do social dancing lessons for upper classmen as well as for freshmen.

A survey committee will compile the results of the questionaires filled out by the students in a past convocation and new regulations will be made possibly to make after a careful examination of the student opinion.

Increase Made In Placement For This Year

93 Per Cent Four Year Graduates, Alumnae Get Positions

REQUEST FIELD IS MUCH LARGER

Department of Personnel Reports Decrease In L. I. Group

The report of the placement bureau issued this week by Dr. Elisabeth Gordon Andrews, director of personnel and head of the placement bureau, shows that 93 per cent of the four-year graduates and former alumnae were placed when the bureau were aided in securing positions. This is an increase over the 86 per cent who were placed last year.

Request Field Increased

The field of request has increased from the three fields of business, home economics, and social service. Since the close of the nine fields of advertising, business, camp counselor work, dramatics, home economics, journalism, nursery school, personnel, psychology, social service, salaries, and Y.W.C.A. of this year. The request for teachers increased from 402 in 1934 to 645 in 1937 with opportunities in agriculture, English, history, home economics, industrial arts, Latin, librarians, mathematics, modern languages, music, physical education, principalships, sociology, science, social studies, and elementary vacancies. The greatest number of requests for elementary school teachers with 116 vacancies in this field; home economics came second with 56 openings, commerce third with 52 openings, and Latin and English 45.

Percentage Change

The percentage of two-year graduates placed this year dropped from 94 per cent of last year to 90 per cent this year, which is the cause of the drop in the total teaching percentage.

Seventy per cent of the 90 per cent placed were definitely assisted by the bureau of placement.

Best Sellers Are Exhibited For Book Week

Library Also Features Illustrations And Movie Reel

Milne's "Winnie-the-Pooh" and Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men" share equal honors in the Book Week exhibit in the library this week in the library. Current best sellers, fiction and non-fiction, Mayflower Cup winners and nominees of last season. "Hith Tor," E. M. Delafield's "Thankful's Inn," and "The Nile," a life story of a river, by Emil Ludwig, and a richly illustrated edition of "The Ark" by Hendrik Willem Van Loon, present a list of books with wide appeal to readers.

Early dainty figures of the three musketeers, Evangeline and Gabriel, as well as fiery dragons and romantic princesses of fairy tales come to life in the illustrations of many of the novel and favorite children's stories which are on display. Illustrations represent the work of such famous artists as James Daugherty, Arthur Rackham, and Maxfield Parrish.

In these exhibits the librarians have cooperated with the nation wide observance of Book week. This year marks the nineteenth anniversary of this project which is being sponsored by the National Association of Book Publishers.

Annual Parents Day Open Tuesday Night

Seats for Concert Will Be Assigned

Seats for the Nino Martini concert will be assigned Monday, November 22, at the box office from 8:30 to 5:30 o'clock. To students who are unable to appear personally to get their seats at this time it is suggested that they give their artist series ticket to person who can secure places for them.

New Enrollment Exceeds Former Registrations

Out of State Enrollment Is Led by Georgia, Alabama Second

The total first semester registration of 1772 students at Florida State college this year is the greatest in the history of the institution. Since the close of enrollment comes in February with additional registrations at the beginning of second semester, it is possible that the total enrollment then will exceed that of any semester in the college's history.

Of those 1772 girls, 17 are in the graduate division, 1847 in the College of Arts and Sciences, 603 in the School of Education, 233 in the School of Home Economics, and 52 in the School of Music. Since 1908-09 when Florida State College for Women was the Florida Female college, total yearly enrollment has increased almost nine times.

In all divisions of the college except the School of Music freshmen have the greatest enrollment. In the home economics course entered, having 16 enrolled in the freshmen class and only 13 Enrollments in the School of Home Economics and School of Music show increases over preceding years. Enrollment this year in the School of Home Economics is the greatest in the history of the division. Enrollment in the School of Music, however, was at its greatest the first semester of 1932-33 when 59 students were enrolled in that division.

Without taking special students into consideration, seniors have the smallest enrollment in all divisions of the college with the exception of the College of Arts and Sciences. In that division, juniors have 411 enrolled as compared with 173 for the seniors.

Seven hundred eighty-four freshmen are enrolled this year as against 738 last year, and 721 in 1935-36. Seniors also show an increase over preceding years, but juniors and sophomores show slight decreases from 1936 to 1937.

Greatest class enrollment in any division of the college is in the College of Arts and Sciences with 314 freshmen in that division.

Smallest registration of anyone in any division is one.

Chemical Meet Is Held Sunday

Miss Vermillion Elected Officer of Society

Miss Gertrude Vermillion, chemistry instructor of Florida State college was elected vice president of the Florida section of the American Chemical society, at a meeting of the committee held in Gainesville November 14.

Other officers elected at the session include B. J. Olde, department of chemistry, University of Florida, now the head of the Florida section of the organization, president; Dr. R. E. Gaines, University of Florida, secretary-treasurer; Dr. A. R. Middleton, Melrose, and Dr. John F. Conn, Stetson university, councilors.

Other faculty members from our campus present at the meeting were Dr Leland J. Lewis and Miss Isabel McElmeel. They were accompanied by Martha Wilson and Dorothy Molnar. After dinner, which was served at the F. inroe home, the group attended a meeting held in the Chemistry build ing.

More Than 500 Visitors Are Expected Here Thanksgiving

CITY WILL AID IN CELEBRATION

Odds and Evens Will Vie For Honors During Festivities

When the curtain rises Tuesday night on Even demonstration, the five-day observance of F. S. C. W.'s second annual "Parents Days" will be officially opened.

Expected to exceed last year's total of more than 500 visitors to Florida State college during this celebration, parents and friends from every part of the state will come to Tallahassee during the five Thanksgiving period which begins Tuesday, November 23, to end with a formal dance in the college gymnasium the following Saturday.

Tallahassee to Decorate

Not only the college but the entire city of Tallahassee will don gay decorations for the holiday festivities. Sorority houses, off-campus houses will vie for the prizes offered by the Alumnae association for the best decorations while buildings of the business district will feature colorful displays. The entire city of Tallahassee in response to a proclamation issued by Mayor Leonard Weeson will "take special recognition of this occasion to welcome the parents of the state who visit it in this time."

Planning the famous of Odd-Even rivalry will be the demonstrations which will open the coming Thanksgiving day. In these musical productions each group will show the triumph of their side in the games Thursday.

After Even demonstration, Odds will serpentine through the pine trees in their traditional lantern parade celebrating Odd night out." The following night's annual bonfire will show that the Evens are getting the campus afire on their night out.

Church Groups To Make Plans For Visitors

Arrange Varied Program For Entertainment Of Parents

Plans for entertaining visiting alumnae, parents, and guests, have played quite a major part in several of the church groups' advanced programs. Some of these plans have been definitely made; others are still in progress.

Baptist students are eagerly looking forward to a Baptist alumnae homecoming at the Baptist student house where the alumnae are to be entertained. Preparations are being made for a party Friday night in their honor, to which all Baptist students are invited.

Saturday night a "slumber party" will be given to the alumnae who are spending the night in the student house. The next morning a sunrise service of early morning worship will take place, after which the B.S.U. council members will cook breakfast for the alumnae. Thanksgiving morning the B.S.U. members are in charge of a church program beginning at 7 o'clock.

A greater council meeting, at which the of[illegible] will discuss business, is to be held at 7:45 Friday night at the student house. This meeting will be followed at 8:15 with a mass business meeting of all the Baptist students. A guest speaker is expected.

Four Y. W. A. circle meetings will take place in the different homes of members of the Ladies' Missionary society, Saturday night at 7:45.

At a meeting of the district auxiliary in Lake City next Monday, two Episcopal students will give brief talks on the experiences which they had doing volunteer work during the summer vacation. Louise Lingo, who was in New York city this summer studying religious education at Columbia university and doing social work in the Italian settlement house, will review her experiences. Charlotte Kamper, who also spent the summer months doing social service work and teaching in a mountain mission in Dante, Va., will discuss some phases of her work. Miss Julia Gehan, Episcopal student [illegible] the gath- [illegible] attend the [illegible] Bacon, [illegible] Lewis, [illegible] Charlotte [illegible] han, and Dr. Anna Forbes Liddell.

State Alumnus Discusses Advertising with Reporter

"yes, sir" and no ma'am" habit. He began his selling career early and during his high school days he often earned as much as $100 a month selling magazine subscriptions. At Gainesville he worked for an A. B. in journalism ("A crip course?" he smiled.) and continued his business activities, making $5,000 in his sophomore year on the sale of space in the Seminole.

Comes to New York

He came to New York by way of Atlanta, where he worked for an outdoor advertising company. The Georgia concern apparently did not appreciate his peculiar talents and so young Mr. Leigh, then 21, headed north. Just before the last of his original eight dollars was spent, he went to work for the General Outdoor Advertising company of New York, the biggest concern of its kind in the world. This was during the depression and the company seemed to feel impelled to cut salaries every few weeks regardless of the salesman's ability. As might be expected this did not appeal to an ambitious young man on the way up, but there was a more important reason for his ultimate resignation from this firm.

"They told me I didn't know how to do business," he says. And indeed there was a basic difference in opinion as to selling procedure. The company held to the idea of "social selling," of playing golf with prospective clients or going to dinner with them and mentioning subtly in the course of conversation the wonders to be wrought by advertising. Young Leigh, impetuous and energetic, considered it all "a waste of time" and set forth on his own.

His job is to make people believe in signs and this he does with amazing results. When he left General Outdoor, he approached the A. & P. coffee company with his idea for a new sort of spectacular—a sign which would represent a gigantic coffee cup, steaming as naturally as those on America's breakfast tables. So completely did he sell his idea that A. & P. underwrote the total cost.

Sign Startles City

At 7:15 p. m. of Inauguration day, 1933 ("I'll never forget that minute,") the first of Douglas Leigh's spectaculars startled New York. And startle it did! The steam—50,000 pounds of it, purchased monthly from the New York Steam company at a cost of $60—came under too high a pressure, condensed in the dry atmosphere, and rained on passersby. It was a dismal beginning for a great enterprise but the difficulty was soon adjusted and for three years—the average life span of a spectacular—the cup steamed cheerily.

The big problem in display advertising is finding locations, for options on space must be obtained before any further negotiations may be carried on. The value of sign space to Times Square landlords is over $355,000 yearly, the outside surfaces of some buildings being worth two or three times more than the rental value of the interior. [illegible] a spectacular is expected to make about 300,000,000 impressions a year, suitable locations are limited, the circulation through the area and the "night life, light life, NIGHT LIFE" of the section being important factors to consider.

Times Square has a circulation of 1,100,000 daily—mostly pedestrian—and Columbus Circle, Mr. Leigh's favorite locale, a circulation of 640,000—mostly vehicles. From his observations of past history Mr. Leigh believes that the present northward trek of business houses and theaters and consequently of electrical advertising will culminate at Columbus Circle, the official center of New York and a natural amphitheatre placed impressively at the southwestern corner of Central Park. What was until recently his greatest sign is located here. "It has fourteen animations," he will state proundly. "More than any other sign in the world."

Reads for Ideas

The fact that almost every sign produced by Douglas Leigh, Inc., is in some respect "more than any other sign in the world" is largely responsible for the development of the firm. To get ideas Leigh reads straight through a copy of the Sunday Times and goes to the Radio City Music Hall. This stimulates his mind and sets his imagination to work. Originality is the quality that makes a sign memorable and ideas such as a kitten playing with a spool of silk, a winking penguin, or a clown tossing quoits—all in flashing lights—are not easily forgotten.

Once an idea has been evolved it is put in shape by an artist, and the prospective buyer is approached in a direct manner. In a darkened room, by means of small lights and moving pictures, he is shown what the sign will be like in its finished form. If he accepts the idea Mr. Leigh's company will handle all further details. "They just pay their money and like it—the sign, I mean."

The erection of the sign is a delicate procedure, for of all the unions in the country those that control the sign industry are perhaps the most powerful. Sheet-metal men, steelworkers, painters, and electricians must be carefully dealt with; and Leigh's determined refusal to work on Sundays has cost him both argument and money.

Care Required

Once the sign is erected it requires constant care. All of the big displays are controlled by electric clocks, which turn them on at sunset and off at 1 a. m. Since official sunset changes daily, an adjustment is made by the astronomic dial on the clock controlling the mechanism. Though this important detail is easily handled, a fleet of 15 trucks is needed to keep the signs in order for every one is inspected twice or three times every evening for everything from dead lamps to short circuits. The vari-colored bulbs in these signs are not standard products but are individually dipped in dyes. Two companies in New York prosper doing just this work.

Another of Mr. Leigh's problems is meeting the requirements specified by New York's stringent laws. The Building department requires more than double the actual strength necessary for every outside sign; and so strict are the rules concerning electricity that there is less danger of fire from the largest of signs than there is from a cigarette stub. Signs jutting over city property incur the extra expense of ten cents a foot each year, which considering the usual cost of signs—$2,000 to $4,000 a month—is almost ridiculous.

Although the greatest spectaculars are concentrated in New York, the largest display in America is far removed from Broadway. It is the sign "Hollywoodland," 33,750 square feet on the side of a mountain near Los Angeles. This is the same sort of publicity Citroen acquired when he paid 80,000 francs a month for the privilege of putting his name on the Eiffel Tower.

First Sign Erected

The beginning of the Great White Way was an electric for "Manhattan Beach — Swept by Ocean Breezes." The developments since that first attempt are amazing. The rapidly spinning wheel which advertises Chevrolet contains 2,500 bulbs and covers 63 miles an hour without ever leaving its spot. The New York Times news sign, which encircles the Times building, is the most expensive one on Broadway to operate. It cost $12,000, has 14,800 bulbs and requires the full time services of two operators. If it be true that "There's a broken heart for every light on Broadway" there must be almost 170,000 broken hearts. The brilliance of these lamps causes a pink haze which rises five miles in the sky. The haze, which is stronger on damp nights, can be seen in three states and aviators can detect it 25 miles away.

Television Coming

It is Douglas Leigh's belief that before very long television will be shown on electric signs and with forethought he has obtained a 17-year monopoly on the only process existing today for such projection. The sign, called Leigh-Epok is the product of eight years' experimentation by an Austrian, Kurt Rosenberg. Only recently were the various mechanical difficulties preventing its commercial use solved, however, and in the manner of a trial a sign was erected on Broadway, running a comedy routine with a cat and horse as central characters. The success of this was so great that another sign was constructed, twice the size of the first, and was rented by Paramount Pictures company to advertise "High, Wide and Handsome." The present superiority of these signs is based on the variety of animation possible. New material can be run at any time without changing the construction of the sign itself.

Instead of turning drums making and breaking the electrical contacts as in the usual sign, this method involves a complicated system, half movie cartoon, half television. The second sign, which Mr. Leigh considers his "chef d'oeuvre," is 24 by 30 feet, with 4,104 specially made six-watt bulbs. These flash on and off in squares of four, each square controlled by a photoelectric cell. ("Pecks, we call 'em," said the red-faced profeetionist.) These cells are in a projection room back of the sign—1,026 of them in a miniature of the outdoor screen. Light from a cartoon film controls the cells and they transmit the image projected on them to the big sign by means of 200,000 feet of wiring with 15,122 soldered joints.

Cartoons Made

The all-important films are made in about the same way as Mickey Mouse pictures, two former Disney artists being engaged in the work of making 200 graph drawings for every minute of running time. The projection of these films must be done with nerve-racking exactness, and when the sign is in actual operation the projection room is, according to Mr. Leigh, "no place for white clothes nor a lady."

About a year and a half ago Douglas Leigh's former employers lighted a new sign on Broadway. Seventy-five feet high and a block long, containing 29,650 bulbs, it stands unchallenged as the most beautiful display in the city. The Wrigley company cancelled ten electric signs to buy this new one at $15,000 a month — the profit from 3,000,000 packs of gum. That sign is a bitter dose for Mr. Leigh. He wants to beat it and so he sighs for the tower atop the Empire State building.

If the authorities in charge could only be convinced, Douglas Leigh would bring them $500,000 a year for the use of that tower as an advertisement. Surround the tower with white lights, cover the dome with red ones, pipe steam to the top and there will stand a glowing cigarette, a thousand feet above the streets and visible for miles.

"What a man can imagine, he can do" is Mr. Leigh's belief, and considering past performance it would seem that the Empire State tower is not yet safe!

Ghost Writer Goes to Bat For Giddy G'ville Gigolo

University Makes Ready for Gala Homecoming Celebration for This Week-end

By The GIRL ABOUT GAINESVILLE

(There are columnists and columnists. Gainesville's jookerarounder for the Flambeau must have visited the jooks once too often this week. However, nothing ever daunts a Flambeauite and this week's Girl About Gainesville was there with or without a Crosley.)

Gainesville makes ready for a gala celebration this week-end as throngs of alumni, parents and friends arrive for the biggest event on the year's calendar of events—the annual Homecoming celebration.

The famous Gator Growl at the stadium will begin the university's open house week-end. Over 8000 spectators are expected to attend this first event which will be featured by Mr. Charles Francis Coe, author and sportsman, as master of ceremonies, illuminated band maneuvers, selections by the Florida glee club, eight campus-wide championship boxing bouts, a big display of fireworks and a huge bonfire.

Florida Blue Key, the national student leadership society of the University which has sponsored Homecoming since 1924 will entertain alumni and distinguished guests at an invitation banquet at 6:15 Friday night. New members elected to the society recently are: Harry Bower, Tom Fleming, Dick Ezzard, Fred Gilbert, Spencer Burress, Dell Gibbs, Tom Leonard, Paul Shelly, Alford Parker, and Bill Jibb.

A general university-wide reunion of old grads and professors will be the big event of Saturday morning in front of the Florida union. Social fraternities will hold gala reunions at their chapter houses at various times during the week-end.

Saturday noon alumni, their wives and members of their families, if any, will gather for a barbecue and Brunswick stew on a gigantic scale. Carl E. Perry, 1921, captain of the Florida Gators, will be in charge.

A major event of the week-end celebration will be the Florida-Georgia Tech game Saturday afternoon. With all the old grads there to yell for their alma mater, and with the freshmen still waving their orange rat caps, and with the build-ups both teams have been getting in the papers plenty of excitement is predicted for the Gator-Yellow Jacket clash.

Freshman football fans will be in the stadium Friday afternoon to cheer for the freshman squad as it meets the Riverside Military academy team. Predictions for a good game are in order as Riverside is as yet undefeated.

Although the week-end has been advertised as a "no-woman" affair and dates for the affair have been definitely frowned upon, a round of social events in the fraternity houses have been planned and we imagine that they won't be dateless. The F club dance will be the big event of Saturday night. Of course the wives of alums can attend.

News does drift in. Take for instance the snatch that the girl about Gainesville heard the other day—that the shadow on the campus had changed three times already. From what we'd seen so far of the shadow's shadowing it ought not to be hard to find new ones. You ought to be able to pick them up out of the sewer-pipes almost any day of the week—or are we infringing on the quip rights of collegiate comebacks?

Time for Pictures May Be Extended

Freshmen should complete picture appointments by November 20, but if there is sufficient demand picture scheduling will continue until November 27, definitely the last date. Anyone may buy tickets until this time.

All proofs should be returned as soon as possible. Junior proofs should be in by next Wednesday.

Seniors are also requested to return questionnaires.

Modern Drama Club Convenes

Kemper Moore is Speaker At First Meeting

Speaking on "Modern Dramatic Appreciation," Miss Kemper Moore of the speech department addressed the modern drama club at its first meeting Wednesday afternoon. This club is one of the several freshman interest groups and is sponsored by the Masque, honorary speech association.

Miss Moore emphasized in her talk the connections between modern drama and the moving pictures of today.

After the talk the club members met in groups headed by members of the Masque club and decided that next quarter each group would work on scenes from various plays.

Members of the modern drama club are: Saidee Mae Arnold, Georgia Askew, Irene Bannerman, Ines Barefoot, Elizabeth Blair, Margaret Blanton, Bertha Bloodworth, Floread Brown, Gene Bryan, Margaret Marie Bryant, Rosa Lea Cain, Kathryn Camp, Bette Jane Campbell, Agnes Chalker, Frances Cofer, Barbara Conine, Jean Crawford, Helen Anderson, Ruth Harris, Marie Crouch, Constance Cureton, Alma Lucy Fudger, Mary Louise Gordon, Anne Hill, Leonora Hyde, Anna Kurtz, Kathleen Lamber, Velora Manning, Carolyn Mays, Virginia Mestrezat, Carolyn Mims, Mary E. Nichols, Sara Nooney, Barbara Northen, Margaret Oldham, Lucille Ketterer, Rudine Light, Frances Palmer, Jarrett Parker, Betty Pearlman, Jean Phillips, Betsy Prior, Marie Purchase, Virginia Rowe, Ida Mary Scharfschwertt, Pauline Schulte, Margaret Roma Simmons, Marjorie Smith, Joyce Stone, Ruth Treasure, May Weitner, Julia Winn, Selma Wight, Iris Walker.

Marriage Is Announced

Mrs. Pearl Beverly, cashier in the business office, will be married to Wade Weaver, Wednesday. Mrs. Beverly is sister-in-law of Dr. Roy Hinson.

Human Guinea Pig Gives All For Science

Eyebrow Pencil Wielded In Kinecologist's Experiment

In Harvard they use monkeys, in the Home Economics department they have white rats, but the Physical Education majors have them all surpassed. They have a human guinea pig and she walks around campus.

Recently at the Theta Upsilon house, a large audience watched some of these gym majors, Frances Thill, Val Hunt, and Dorothy Colburn work on their subject in an experiment for kinecology.

The instruments used in the Thill, Hunt and Colburn laboratory can be found in various places around the campus. In order to mark her scapula, or shoulder blade, the experimenters used an eyebrow pencil. When they were finished the victim's back looked like an architect's drawing plans. The only other instrument used in the experiment was the common and overworked ruler.

Because the subject was so thin, the experimenters used her back and shoulders in order to measure the abduction, adduction, elevation, and rotation of her scapula.

Much to the said experiments' surprise, when she adducted her arm, her scapula jumped up and jumped up and over her backbone and crossed. It seems the whole class in kinecology including the instructor are from Missouri because they do not believe the subject could be such a contortionist and want a public demonstration.

After the experiment was concluded, all helped to bathe the human subject, wrap her up and place her near the stove in order that she might recover. She may even submit herself again to the worthy cause of science.

New Enrollment Exceeds Former Registrations

however, is in the School of Home Economics with three special students in that division.

Eighteen graduate students were enrolled in 1932-33 which is the largest number ever enrolled in the regular term. Last year 17 graduate stuents were registered here.

Georgia has led in greatest out of state enrollment from the beginning of the college, with Alabama second. In 1925-26, the year of the largest enrollment, there were 56 students from Georgia enrolled here. Alabama also reached its peak of enrollment here in that year with 48 girls registered.

Dade, Duval, Leon, and Hillsborough counties have led in greatest enrollment with 202 students registered here last year from Dade county. That number was the greatest enrollment ever registered from one county. Second largest enrollment from one county was in 1935-36 when 200 students registered from Leon county.

Governor Appoints New Control Board Members

Governor Fred P. Cone this week appointed three new members to the board of control for four-year terms. They are H. P. Adair, Jacksonville, succeeding George H. Baldwin, Jacksonville; Charles P. Helfenstein, Live Oak, succeeding Oliver J. Semmes, Pensacola; and W. M. Palmer, Ocala, succeeding H. C. Duncan, Tavares.

A successor chairman to Mr. Baldwin was not designated by Governor Cone. Other members whose terms have not expired are Thomas W. Bryan, Lakeland, and R. P. Terry, Miami.

Lounds Chosen As Secretary

Seven Delegates Attend Catholic Meeting

Elizabeth Lounds who was one of the Newman club delegates at the province meeting of the Confederation of College Catholic clubs in Athens, Ga., last week, was elected corresponding secretary of this group.

Mary Crepeon and Rachel Erwin were chosen from the Newman club to serve on a committee which will consider the question of admitting Alabama and Tennessee into the province. This group is now composed of groups in Georgia and Florida.

The Florida delegation numbered 14, half from this college and half from the University of Florida. An unusual fact was that this group was as large as that from Georgia Tech which is located only a short distance from the University of Georgia in Athens.

At the banquet at the Georgian hotel on Saturday night the delegates heard the mayor of Athens and also Bishop O'Hara who is the bishop in Savannah.

Next year the annual province convention of the federation will be held at the University of Florida.

Three Faculty Members Will Appear in Program Of Language Gathering

Three Florida State college faculty members will take part on the program of the Southeastern Modern Language association when it convenes on November 26-27 at Winthrop college, Rock Hill, S. C.

Dr. Arthur Romeyn Seymour, head of the modern languages department, will talk on "To Have and to Hold a Vocabulary". Dr. Margie Burks, associate professor of Spanish, is chairman of the Spanish section of the convention; and Dr. Dorothy Breen, associate professor of Spanish and French, will read a paper on "Francis Drake, the Hero, the Villain, the Man."

The convention will be the guests of Winthrop college.

Moon, Mules, Hay and Hills Enliven Ride

Over Fifty Girls Go On First Outing Trip To College Farm

A group of over 50 girls, chaperoned by Miss Ruth Lehman, member of the physical education faculty, went on a hay ride to the college farm Saturday night.

Accompanied by a beautiful moon, two wagons filled with hay and girls left the road by the gymnasium at 8 o'clock. Slowly the wagons, which had been lent with their drivers by the college farm, followed the winding road to that spot which had been chosen for the serving of refreshments to the students.

... losing basketball teams, the sophomores and the juniors met in an exciting tilt yesterday afternoon in the gym. The sophomores came though with a smashing victory for the Evens. The plucky sophomores kept the junior team on it's toes throughout the entire game and at the finish had rolled up an eleven-point lead.

With the beginning of the second quarter Betty White made a free basket for the juniors. A few minutes later Fay Corey shot another free goal. The swift-moving sophomore guards broke up the next junior play and regained the ball for the sophomore forwards. In the next few minutes of play Carmen Lytel succeeded in making a basket. A technical against the sophomore team meant another free goal for the juniors. Soon recovering the sophomores went into some fast action and scored another basket. In the midst of some good, hard fighting the whistle was blown and the first half of the game ended with a three-point lead in favor of the sophomores. The score at the half was 6-3.

Second Half Begins

Receiving the initial throw-in Louise Prine started the second half of the game. With some clever pass work the ball was worked down into the goal area and Sara Jeno Stambaugh made short goal. The next minute Carmen Lytal had the ball and made a clear shot from the middle of the court. In another moment Louise Prine had made a short side basket. At this point the upset teams called time out to send in substitutes. The juniors put in Dot Colburn for Rood and the sophomores sent in Eugena Munnerlyn for Carmen Lytle. As soon as Munnerlyn entered the game she scored a good long shot for her team. Bunny Lowery made another long basket which was declared unofficial just before the third quarter ended. The sophomore team had continued to gain in the lead with a score of 16-5.

Sophomore Triumph

In the last quarter the juniors attempted two long shots but fumbled. Betty White, junior forward, received the ball and made a free shot. Louise Prine followed up making a free basket for the sophomores. The juniors regained the ball and Betty White shot goal. The sophomores receiving the ball on the throw-in made a basket. Quickly the juniors gained the ball to score another goal. Carmen Lytal back in the game playing for the sophomores made another one of her clear long shots. Sports Squints

What with more and more Odd-Even spirit being evidenced on campus, we can be sure that Thanksgiving is not any too far off—in fact, we can depend on those signs pointing towards November 25 even more than we can depend on the good old calendar method. Pep meetings for the purpose of boosting the stock of either the green and gold or the red, white and purple have been going full force and the colors of each team have been flaunted in the face of their rivals so vigorously that our only worry is that all the energy will be gone before the big day gets here.

By the way, if we can judge by the turn-outs at pep meetings, we're going to have to admit that the Odds were really speaking the truth at the beginning of the year when they did all that bragging about their new crop of freshmen. With the usual first year enthusiasm, the freshmen have been turning out loyally for their Odd pep meetings, whereas the Evens only had approximately 50 sophomores and seniors turn out for their last meeting. We have to hand it to those 50, however, because they had the pep they needed to put their yells and songs across, and bouquets should go to the three cheerleaders who worked up the pep. (P. S. Scallions to the other dozens of Evens who failed to participate!)

Mother Nature went back on us the other day during the volleyball games and turned the weather too cold for comfort. Not only did the players suffer in spite of their activity on the court, but the poor fans who sat on the side lines were having a terrible time of it. However, their enthusiasm must have kept them warm because they managed to stick it out. Due to the cold weather the players were dressed more for the sake of comfort than for the sake of beauty, and that was fine until somebody from the publicity office came tearing out there with a camera for the purpose of taking some action pictures of the teams. And then what a howl went up, and we discovered that under those slacks and mittens and sweatshirts there still existed the feminine pride that rebels at the thought of having pictures taken except in decent dress. Those gals wanted their own little team uniforms before they broke into the newspaper column of fame.

Those losing volleyball and basketball teams had really better be provided with adequate protection, or hasten to the front to ... can ... to help pay off the debt seeing as how we have long bet our next whip cream dessert on the results of these good ole class games.

Horseback riding is beginning to get some of the publicity it so rightly deserves what with huge posters on the dormitory bulletin boards with pictures of beautiful horses, beautiful gals and beautiful scenery that aim to show the fun that can be had from getting astride a horse and then trying to manage him. It looks as though we are really going to manage to keep riding as an extra-curricular activity here on the campus, and that fact immediately brings up visions of breakfast rides, moonlight rides, and brisk canters during long afternoons.

Mebbe the physical education instructors are guilty of overworking their students, too. At any rate something must be upsetting their physical balance. Right out of the blue one of these good upstanding majors made a three (?) point landing on her way up Bryan steps. Guess no bones were broken, but plenty of the red stuff was brought near the surface of said sprinter's face.

Guess it's just too bad that we have to be so fortunate as to have an indoor swimming pool, or that we lack the ability to convince "the picture taking men" that indoor pictures could be taken. It is a bit dampening to our spirits to wake up with a splash to the fact that the much talked of visit of the Fox Movietone cameramen is a thing of the past. If we had just known a little sooner maybe we could have arranged to have the pool moved outside for the day. But then there's one thing to be thankful for. At least we can stop worrying about those bathing beauty proportions, and break our promise to our dinner partner in regard to forking over hot rolls and desserts.

Even Classes Win Volleyball Preliminaries

Seniors and Sophomores Are Victorious In Class Games

Even volleyball players led the field this week as they ran through the preliminary class games in anticipation of the big games on Turkey day. In the games Wednesday afternoon the senior team broke through the junior's line of defense to score 31-26 on a closely contested battle and their class sisters, the sophomores, took on the freshmen in a 35-18 victory.

A friendly game between the Even winners will be part of the program at Play-night tonight. A losers match between juniors and freshman yesterday afternoon ended in a 36-18 junior victory.

Seniors Win

In the junior-senior game the seniors won the first serve, and immediately ran up a lead on the juniors which they were able to hold throughout the game. After the first few minutes of play, the game settled down with the juniors making telling blows on the amassed lead of the seniors. Toward the end of the first half the juniors picked up several points, but the half ended with the seniors in the lead, 22-17.

In the second half the junior team tightened down and clicked with such precision that the senior team was forced to call time out for a huddle. Afterwards they settled down and the game moved on with neither team making serious threats until the closing minutes of play when the juniors rallied to make one last strike at the seniors. The game ended with the seniors in the lead, 31-26. The game was marked by the beautiful line plays of Marjorie Horton, Betty Ostlund, and Louise Gehan for the seniors and the excellent recovery of net balls and sinks by the juniors.

Melba Parks went in at the half for Dorothy Molnar.

Sophomores Win

The freshmen, receiving first serve, got off to a running start in the beginning of the first half only to have the sophomores come back in the last few minutes with a long scoring streak to take the half, 16-13.

On the first three plays of the second half the ball changed sides several times with neither side scoring. Then the sophomore team broke loose on a scoring streak which lasted the remainder of the half with the sophomores winning 35-18.

Georgia Harmon was substituted for Magda Waring at the beginning of the second half.

Losers Game Played

The juniors scored a smashing victory over the freshmen yesterday afternoon in a consolation game with a score of 36-15. The teams were evenly matched and tied the score up several times. But the juniors always came out on top and the half ended with them leading by the small margin of 14-12. In the second half the juniors by steady pass work and well placed sinks walked away with the score to win 36-18.

Starting line-up for the juniors was: Nancy Williamson, Dorothy Molnar, Valerie Hunt, Betty McMullen, Martha Moore, Sara Lytle, Louise Whitting, Dorothy Rickards.

Melba Parks was substituted for Molnar in the second half.

Starting line-up for the freshmen was: Dolores Fleischer, Mary Wells, Barbara Thomas, Georgia Harmen, Brenelle Mobly, Jane McCarty, Leota Kirkpatric, Marjorie Wells.

Magda Waring was substituted for Georgia Harmen at the half.

Quiet Requested For Broadcasting

In order to make broadcasting possible during the Thanksgiving games Viola Brooks, president of the Athletic association is asking students to make some attempt to be quiet during the tenser moments of the game so that the announcer may work without difficulty.

Tarpon Club Gives Pageant Three Times

One Performance Will Be Thursday; Two Given On Friday

The Tarpon club will present its Thanksgiving water pageant three different times this year so that everyone will have the opportunity of seeing it. The first performance, which is especially for the parents who are only going to be here for one day, will be given on Thanksgiving day immediately after the games. Guests who will be here for more than one day are requested to wait until Friday to see the pageant.

There will be a program at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon, and the last one will be at 8 o'clock Friday night. The afternoon performance will be open to all students so no tickets will be issued. Tickets for the Thanksgiving program can be procured Tuesday in front of the post office between 1:30 to 5:30 o'clock. Tickets for the reserved section for the Friday night performance will be given out Friday morning in front of the post office between 9:30 and 12:30 o'clock.

Pupils on Politics

Question: Do you think the time between the annual nomination and election of campus officials should be extended and that campus politics should be more open?

Mildred Stovall: I think you should have at least a school week between nominations and elections. Something should be done to let nominees get better known. Now, a lot of the girls elected are not known to the students as well as they could be.

Mickie Hearon: Yes. Because the students can't make snap judgments, at least, they shouldn't on a thing as important as the election of officers. Now the students don't know the majority of the nominees or what their platforms are. You'll have more pep and interest on this campus if you make student politics more open and have a few campaign speeches to arouse interest.

Natalee Houchard: Yes, I do think so. Now students don't know half the girls they are voting for. As a freshman last year I didn't know whom I was selecting. I checked the name I liked best.

Marjorie Nee Smith: I think it would be wise if the candidates and the students would cooperate. It might create more interest among the students. I think it would be wise to try it.

Larene Holabird: I think it's a good idea. It would create more interest in elections and arouse more enthusiasm among the students.

Frances Jones: Yes. They should give us more time to get to know candidates and to have campaign speeches so that we can know what we are voting for.

Jean Steffee: I think we could use a longer period between the time of nominations and elections. It might make the students more interested in elections, though at times one wonders if anything ever will.

Tessie Backman: I think the present system is all right the way it is.

Catherine Keen: It takes up less time the way it is but it might give some of the lesser known candidates a better chance.

Felicia West: I think that it is a very good idea. This would give candidates more freedom in making statements about the office they are running for. In the past campaign, speeches have been rather stereotyped. Candidates have had to make a speech and then students ask questions and it puts the nominee on the spot. A longer campaign period would give the students a chance to know nominees. Now, often students, particularly the freshmen, do not know the officers they are electing.

Ruth Eyman: Well personally, I don't know anything about politics.

Lucille Smoak: What this school needs is a period in which to really get to know the candidates. Speeches alone are not enough to determine whether or not a person is qualified for office. The students need to watch and observe candidates on the campus.

Tommy Steele: I think the students should have time to get to know nominees so they will know whom they are voting for. Last year, a lot of the students didn't know half of the officers they were electing.

Madge Glenn: There should be enough speeches to introduce girls to the student body, but long campaign speeches are unnecessary.

Betty Barthorf: I think there should be a longer period between the nominating and electing of officers. All nominees should have a chance to speak if they want to. It would stimulate more interest in college government.

Dr. Coyle E. Moore: More open politics would do much to focus the attention of the students and faculty to problems of student organization and to the regulation of the activities of group life which they will have to face.

Eloise Frink: To have a longer period between nominations and elections, and more open campaigning would be better than the way the elections have been run before.

Emily Blackwell: The period between nominations and elections is long enough now. It would create just that much more disturbance if it were longer. Only nominees for the major offices should be allowed to make campaign speeches. It's unnecessary for minor offices.

Betty Bow: Open politics is a very good idea because many people do not know the candidates and the introduction in convocation is not enough to tell anything about the candidates. A longer period of time between nominations and elections would give the students a chance to know the policies of the girls and what they would do in office and whether they would be the right type to represent the school to the outside world.

Esther Goodwin: The campaigning should be continued as it

Miller-White Enter Finals

Faculty-Student Games Reach Last Round

By defeating last year's title holder, Dr. William Hudson Rogers and Evelyn Fisher in straight sets, 6-1, 6-4, Dr. Miller, philosophic raquet wielder and his partner, Betty White, entered the final bracket in the student-faculty match yesterday afternoon. They face Mr. Donald Loucks and Mattie Lou Love in the final match some time the first of the week.

In the match yesterday afternoon the winners sailed through the first set almost without opposition, taking five straight games. Neither the English professor nor his partner seemed able to get warmed up to their usual game. They rallied in a hard-fought game to take it and to keep the set from being a love score, but lost the next game to make the set score 6-1.

Playing a more consistent game in the second set the Fisher-Rogers combination lost a heavily deuced first game but retaliated by taking their service in the next game. Mr. Miller came back with a service win to make the score 2-1. Dr. Rogers then took his service with a love game to even up the game score at 2-all. The Miller-White team stepped out in the lead again with the next three games to make the score 5-2. Fighting for a comeback the losing side of the score rallied to ward off the Miller-White bid for victory and took the next two games to bring their score up to 5-4. With Miller serving the team smashed their way through the next game to take the game at 6-4.

Throughout the match the winning team showed a steadiness of shots, placement ability and lightning ... that should give the fast stepping Loucks-Love combination plenty of competition in a final match.

MILLIONS MORE FOR FINER TOBACCOS!

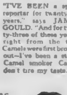
IS IT GOOD BUSINESS TO BUY COSTLIER TOBACCOS FOR CAMELS?

the answer is: Camels are the Largest-Selling cigarette in America

"WHEN I'M at the table Camels are right there with me too. Yes sir! I'll hand it to Camels for keeping digestion in trim," says BILL MALLORY, class of '39.

"I SMOKE Camels and my nerves stay unruffled. I don't want irritating nervous habits," says display expert, POLLY PETTIT.

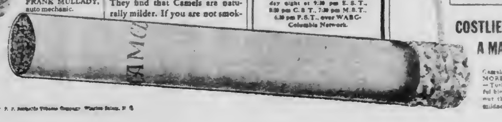
"CAMEL is the cigarette. When I'm tired, I light a Camel and back to work I go with a 'lift' in energy," says FRANK MULLADY, auto mechanic.



The pleasure you get out of a cigarette depends on the quality of the tobaccos put in it. And in the case of Camels that means finer, costlier tobaccos!

THERE'S only one way to get the best tobaccos. That's to pay more for them.

It has been a well-known fact for years that Camel pays millions more for finer tobaccos. It's the natural way to put more enjoyment into smoking.



People have confidence in the mildness and goodness of the finer tobaccos in Camels. More and more smokers turn to Camels. They find that Camels are naturally milder. If you are not smoking Camels, try them now. And see if you, too, don't find that Camels mean unfailing pleasure!

Is There a Chance Here for Open Politics?

A plea made in the S. G. A. student opinion forum Tuesday night for open politics on this campus resulted in the appointment of a committee to investigate the advisability of student political parties and whether or not they should be legalized into the constitution of our college government association.

Need for open political action from the glaring faults so in evidence at present under our student government. Especially at the time of three departments executive, judicial and legislative to elect. We have the right to choose our own representatives and to speak our minds, aloud. The nominating committee requires that candidates for major offices give campaign speeches in conversation. Democracy has never been the keynote of last year only a minority of the student body voted a very small per cent attended the convocation to hear the candidates speak, and the two most important offices on campus were filled by unopposed candidates.

Political parties have never been encouraged here for two main reasons first that partisan in play would be out of place in a women's college and secondly, parties would foster corrupt practices in student government.

Space does not permit discussion of all the disadvantages and disadvantages of party politics. Most of the two objections mentioned above the first applies only to a man when one considers that women have been given an national party politics for the past 15 years. As to the second, it is highly improbable, since student organizations are not salaried. The sole incentive offered a candidate is the honor responsibility and trust given her by her fellow students.

On the other hand open politics with two centre and well-organized groups which have worthwhile policies and present the opposite sides of every issue would stimulate student participation in the affairs of their government. Candidates would be compelled to have definite policies thereby giving the voter something tangible upon which to base her choice. Student rallies provided by all parties the opportunity of speaking to the voter would to a large degree alleviate the appalling lack of interest shared by the majority of the student body in things political. Political parties might also prove a solution to the problem of non-cooperation among sorority factions which have a strong tendency to develop near election day.

College politics should be a training for politics in the world outside there should be certain of our present system does not give us much semblance of actuality. With open politics we might meet some of the requirements of democratic government and avoid disadvantages. Political parties however, are not formed simply by legislative laws or amending constitutions. They spring spontaneously wherever groups of people come together with similar ideas and purposes. History shows that wherever a free government has existed political parties have arisen and flourished.

When our Founding Fathers drew up the Constitution in 1787 no mention was made of political parties as their men were violently opposed to party government. Today political parties have a definite function in our national government. William Bennett Munro says in his book, The Government of the United States: "Give a people the right to govern themselves, to choose their own representatives, and to speak their minds aloud—do this and political parties will develop, no matter what the constitution may intend."

Since we have a democratic form of government on this campus the surprising element is that we have not had political parties long ago as most other colleges have.

Strange Mood Has Invaded Classroom

There is a strange mood on campus this year. It is one of carelessness, to the point of breaking. Students, particularly upperclassmen, complain of being overworked, their are morose and often hysterical. According to some, it's the amount of extracurricular activity, but the most significant attitude seems to originate in the classroom. It can be exemplified by the statement made the other day by a student. I've never seen students so afraid of their classes and their teachers before. They don't dare go to classes unprepared and they work themselves sick over grades.

The student's educational life seems to be at the root of the trouble. His attempt to pursue her studies she worships at the shrine of grades. To her they are all important. If they weren't, she would scarcely worry herself into a fret over them if she felt that she was getting something out of her course, somethine that on the other hand might not be measured arithmetically. However, the student can't be blamed if the instructors insist upon putting too much emphasis grades and not on the content of their courses.

Of course it is apparent that the grading system cannot be dispensed completely with, at least for the present, but to put to place. Grades are necessary but the should not be the dominating factor in education. Instead of properly subordinating them it seems that professors continue to make them the end instead of the means.

And so the student is literally scared to death to go to a class without a prepared lesson. The professor reshapes theirs this is pretty good as the class is small, but when work will be done by the student But is fear a good motive for the student? It would stand to reason that the student who learns because she is frightened or coerced into it is not learning as much as she is to use to advantage when she leaves her educational surroundings.

It is the question again of what is the fundamental aim of education—to learn by rote or by a process of evaluation and intellectual assimilation. It might be well if the professors looked oftener to their basic philosophy of education for the answer will agree with the progressive educators that education should be made alive and real and not a thing apart from life.

Debating Gets Under Way

The Florida State college debating team is about to go into action with plans tentatively made for a debate with other colleges and universities. Since collegiate sports are not sponsored by this college entirely for good reasons, and since the college Glee club has been unsuccessful thus far in any attempts to give concerts away from the campus, the debating team serves as our only direct contact with other institutions. This is of course excepting the social conventions attended by individual classes.

The value of intercollegiate debating is broad. Not only does it serve as this link between colleges but it serves as a medium for exchange of ideas by the public speakers of the state. Students questioned during the study related that the college outlines simplified their work by giving them a definite basis for their essays as a whole in advance of the field to be covered and were subsequently valuable for review purposes. Faculty members, while cautiously opposed to this use in cramming for exams, favored the outline as materials around which to build lectures and class discussions and in encouraging more thorough preparatory reading.

Investigation found that the use of college outlines and other supplementary aids to study was in direct proportion to difficulty in the subject experienced by the student and that the number of students in organic chemistry using college outlines far exceeded that of any other course.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

Roosevelt Speaks To Congress

Roosevelt's message to Congress this week gave his opponents and followers another chance to wrangle and to call upon the public's fears and wants for the control of events was occasioned by the president's insistence that business be protected, if not by private enterprise, then by governmental action. With the Senate and House committees already in acquiescence to Mr. Roosevelt's plea for a limited revision of the tax laws on profits in order to encourage small business concerns and still at the same time to keep the revenue at approximately the same level.

This phase of the presidential address brought forth a flood of disapproval from a majority leader of Potsdam N. Y. Barrand Snell. He assailed the New Dealers principle of governmental interference as a step toward dictatorship and, conversely, blamed the administration's request that business do something about our economic conditions as the plea of a desperate man who has tipped over the boat by unsound policies and is now crying for help from those whom he has capsized.

In the general tone of his speech, the president was complacent, towards things which he did, however, condemn one of its branches—public utilities—for poor financial management. Coming just at the moment when the T. V. A. and Muscle Shoals tried before Federal district courts for its constitutionality this accusation was not without interest. Along with this criticism too, came a laudation of the Supreme court for its recent decisions and an expressed hope that this body was at last recognizing the Constitution as a broad charter of democratic government which can function under conditions of today.

Despite his emphasis on economic problems, Roosevelt repeated to believe that the present business recession was more than a temporary ill. He even reiterated his desire to balance the budget, though he had to do this in the face of an adverse treasury report for the year and a half months since the beginning of the fiscal year on July 1, the Federal deficit has mounted to $700,000,000. In order to effect the budget balance this debit must be kept below $481,000,000 for the next seven and one-half months. As a background to this the increased revenue from the Social Security has been partially offset by an increased amount of expenditure. And the stock market is still looking downward.

And Others Say. . . . . .

The most difficult college subject is organic chemistry, according to a study made by the Bureau of Educational Research, New York and printed by The Blue Stocking.

Organic courses as a group are a major source of difficulty with history particularly ancient medieval and European not far behind. Physics and Latin, against popular rates hardest of the English literature courses.

The subjects most baffling to students, in order of their difficulty, organic chemistry, inorganic chemistry, physics, astronomy, economics political science, psychology, general chemistry, philosophy, history of Europe, history of American government and English literature.

Students questioned during the study related that the college outlines simplified their work by giving them a definite basis for essays as a whole in advance of the field to be covered and were subsequently valuable for review purposes. Faculty members, while cautiously opposed to this use in cramming for exams, favored the outline as materials around which to build lectures and class discussions and in encouraging more thorough preparatory reading.

Investigation found that the use of college outlines and other supplementary aids to study was in direct proportion to difficulty in the subject experienced by the student and that the number of students in organic chemistry using college outlines far exceeded that of any other course.

Of all the editorials on Armistice day and its observance in exchange college newspapers, the most striking comes from The Purple and White. Under the heading Armistice Day Call," it urges students to support a plan by which peace may be promoted.

"Armistice day on the American campus has come to mean for renewed efforts on behalf of peace this year. With a major war in the East with the Fascist invasion continued in Spain American students must not despair of peace but increase their efforts. Recent aggression and keep America out of war. There are certain values and potentialities in American life that are worth preserving therefore it is a matter of life and death to the generation that the United States remain at war. At the same time we must bring into play on the world scene the great ideals of our country might express for peace in cooperation with other nations

The nineteenth anniversary of the end of the first world war sees what may well be the threatening clouds of another. These emergency circumstances, the United Student Peace committee urges students to support the following points, in such ways as they deem most effective:

1 Keep America out of war by exercising increasing vigilance against those forces that would utilize the present crisis to involve the United States in war, groups that foster compulsory R O T C and large military budgets, that promote fascism in the United States by the organization of vigilantes and Nazi groups, that exploit for imperialist purposes the present representment of the common people

An unknown friend (?) has suggested that we remind those who would fall in love with their (masculine) instructors that one can get nowhere by putting the heart before the course. Not being a Dorothy Dix, we wouldn't know, but from what we've observed, a smile at the right time goes a long way towards grades that please.

Authors Decry Japan's Attitude

The Triumph of Lawlessness

By Norman Angell

In an article for the November Forum, Norman Angell, the English writer, views with alarm the indifference of the world toward the lawlessness of Japan, Italy, Germany and Spain.

He rebukes his country for curtly refusing American government's proposals of Anglo-American cooperation to restrain Japan in her conquest of Manchuria. Other than British retreat before the lawless nations they outgrew Mr. Angell that international violence will in no way diminish. The effect of allowing the aggressive nations to obtain their conquests has deprived the large colored races of the "one fundamental and constitutionally perform in organized society—the right of determination, prevention, or resistance without war."

Mr. Angell points out that the combined British and French armed forces before they is not pacifism. Increasing armaments are to the rejection of the pacifist philosophy. Even the refusal to pledge aid to the victims of collective security.

In the past, the author states, if the aggressive nations were threatened with the sanctions they were guilty of today, all the powers would have risen up to protect the victims. But today since the League of Nations is challenged as well as the peace, Empire, the English imperialists let the Italian and Japanese powers go unpunished. He concludes, "No one a few years ago could have believed that lawless violence could be committed by not only Italy and Japan, but by Germany, with amazing success in terms of international law and morality. Before those guilty of outrages against the law of treaty faith, of international good faith, of mercy, or of piety." (P. C.)

Japan's Divine Mission

By Willard Price

Willard Price, in a recent article in the Foreign Affairs, discusses the Japanese mind. Not only as a greedy and aggressive people but as a people conquest for her own material advancement, but as a people who have a mission to perform. This mission, he says, is essentially religious and spiritual.

We shall build our Capital all over again, he quotes a Japanese as having said. We want to be a world-leader." I thought you read rook-finder. Another of course that's terribly, terribly out of place just at present.

* * * *

Recently the rescript of the Emperor Jimmu Tenno to have been issued by him on the founding of the Japanese Empire 2597 years ago. The modern Japanese people still have in this doctrine faithfully.

Mr. Price says that the Japanese are strongly spiritual people. Not only in the self-emitting of a sword a formal religious ceremony, but in the most mundane of everyday affairs. He cited out in a store or tea ceremony for instance. This great pride, if not conceit in possession and destiny of the Japanese people that she has been celestially appointed to lead the world. Mr. Price says, that such an ideal means sense of responsibility toward the world fantastic only until we look at the reasons why and it becomes reasons are diligently doled out in the mind of every child and the Empire grows up believing with every fiber of his being that Japan is the only divine land Japan Emperor is the only divine Emperor. Japanese people are the only divine people. Therefore Japan must lead the world across chaos.

This religious patriotism of Japan centers in the army. According to Mr Price it is the "flame of the Japanese Soul." And it is with faith in their army. In fact it shares a peculiar sense the sanctity of the Emperor. (P. C.)

1937 Is Not 1914

By I. F. Stone

Another statement for collective security is presented by I. F. Stone in the current issue of the Nation. He contends that the opposition to American participation in any plan to realize security on the grounds of the parallel between 1914 and 1937 is not valid, for since the end of fascism in Italy from 1914, a decided rise of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Stone asserts that we all are interested in the Soviet Union's progress in the world as well as its achievements, "for we can learn more from it that may save many lives and prevent anguish in the West. We can learn from the defects of socialism as here we can see the effects of capitalism. The rise of fascism is one stumbling-block to a plan that would work carefully and gradually to avoid both."

Further, he says, democracy as exists at threatens the world's first socialist commonwealth, Mr. Stone states, for it opens the way for fascist encroachments. Democracy is the rationalism, the individual freedom, the free institutions that characterize and sustain capitalism. (P. C.)

Reading While You Run

By Kenneth Burke

"Every once in a while in the orthodox press there is an article in which, at almost every step, you find something and one way and you must read it attentively," so we read Kenneth Burke in an article in the November New Republic. He says it is something like the "dramatic irony" of classic tragedy, because characters in plays interpreting the signs to mean plus but the audience sees that a different frame of reference knows that the same signs would be interpreted to mean minus. The author continues by stating that there is much of such dramatic irony in the news—with the highly unpleasant additional fact that the audience who would read this news differently that it is written is itself implicated in the threatened debacle of capitalist hubris. A news story on the front page of most any newspaper is apparently rich in this sort of irony. Nearly every passage requires translation.

In line with this editorial we find a columnist in the Echo Weekly complimenting American Youth on the role it is playing in events here and abroad as the world prepares for the next stages of what has been called "the second World War."

The article states that youth in Europe has for a long time been recognized as a vital, dynamic force, and governments have taken advantage of this in seeking to enlist youth in their respective programs. Nazi youth has been led to serve Socialism, Italian youth is trained in war and Fascist philosophy from the age of six. About American youth the following is quoted:

"In America, youth is for the first time beginning to become coherent. The stark realities and conditions revealed by the depression smashed a powerful blow against the naive sophistication of a jazz-drunk, materialistic youth. Youth began to feel its power and groups sprang up throughout the country, prompted more by objective conditions than by idealistic aims. Continued unemployment and retrenchment in education brought forth a spirit of revolt in some, defeatism in others.

"Unemployed youth organized, students organized, and church groups extended their sway, as the protest continued. Sporadic attempts at political organization of democratic and republican youth were in evidence.

"It has only been in recent years that American youth is forming the bases of a national youth organization. The American Student union, formed in 1935, has been one of the leaders of this work. Student anti-war strikes which brought out 500,000 in protest last April, demands for educational opportunity, employment and academic freedom have been its rallying points. Y. M. C. A.'s, Y. W. C. A.'s, the American Youth congress, Young Methodist and other church organizations, youth in labor unions and professions, Socialist and Communist youth, have been organizing and are taking a more active and decisive part in American government and policies.

"The materialism and sophistication of the major portion of the 8,000,000 youth, potential field for the inroads of fascism, are gradually giving way before a youth that is unchanging in a changing world."

The Texas State College for Women has recently come into possession of a modified night club known as "College Club." The Club was made possible by the efforts of several faculty members and student committees. The club can entertain more than 75 couples, and has capitalized on trucking and the Big Apple since its opening.

The upperclassmen can dance, eat, play games, or just watch the fun on Wednesday nights, and everybody is admitted on Saturday nights. Besides dancing, the Club offers target practice, bridge, checkers, and "five, six, pick-up-sticks." Short orders of food are available, while a nickleodeon furnishes music.

The parade will include girls on horseback, Dr. Conradi, the officers of the administration, the teams in decorated cars, and all parents who are willing to have their cars decorated. The motorcade will be routed down College avenue, through the business district to the Governor's mansion and other places of interest.

Turkey Is Highlight

Turkey and cranberry sauce, with all trimmings, will be the highlight of the Thanksgiving dinner in the college dining hall at 2:30 o'clock, following the games. An order for 200 turkeys expected to weigh from 12 to 15 pounds apiece has been placed by the Florida State college dining hall staff. One hundred fifty pounds of cranberries will be served with the turkeys that day to approximately 2,000 people. Speeches by college officials, members of the rival factions, and toasts to the victors and distinguished guests will be made at the dinner.

After dinner coffee is to be served in the dormitories for students and their guests and members of the faculty. Open house will be held in each of the sorority houses and student centers, where receptions, teas, and various entertainments will be given in honor of the visitors.

A special student entertainment which will feature a one-act play, "Close the Book," by Susan Glaspell, will be given Thursday evening in the Augusta Conradi little theater. Other features will be music by the Little theater orchestra and dances from the Odd and Even demonstraitons.

Friday morning, members of Mortar board will act as guides for parents on a tour of the campus. At that time, the visitors will be shown the library, academic buildings, and other points of interest. The Thanksgiving entertainment will close with a formal dance in the Physical Education building Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock.

Sororities Entertain At Parties Feting Friends, Faculty

The Alpha Chi Omega actives and pledges entertained with a buffet supper at the house Wednesday night. Tomorrow night they are having a studio party in honor of actives, pledges, and rushees.

Actives and pledges of Alpha Gamma Delta will entertain Sunday evening with an after-dinner coffee in honor of faculty members and friends in town.

The Beta Phi Alphas were recently entertained at the home of Mrs. Ida Simmons, patroness of the sorority. At the end of a delightful evening, refreshments of coffee, cake, date rolls, and candy were served.

This Sunday the Beta Phi Alphas are planning a tea for actives, pledges, rushees, and friends.

Alpha Xi Delta members will entertain at an informal rush party in the sorority house Saturday night from 8 to 10 o'clock. Dancing will be enjoyed during the evening. Sunday the members and pledges will entertain at an after-dinner coffee honoring members of the faculty.

Last Sunday, November 14, a new chapter of Alpha Xi Delta, national social sorority, was installed at Louisiana State university at Baton Rouge, La. It is the fifty-seventh chapter of the sorority. National officers were present at the ceremony.

Alpha Omicron Pi members will entertain at an informal reception in the sorority house on Palm Court Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Informal Reception

Delta Delta Delta members and pledges will entertain in the sorority house tomorrow night honoring Mrs. Frank Bisbee of Jacksonville, financial advisor of the chapter. Town alumnae, advisors, and friends have been invited to meet Mrs. Bisbee.

Sunday afternoon the members and pledges will entertain at one of their weekly Sunday teas for friends.

Visitors at the Tri Delta this week were Jeanne and Anna Tilden, of Orlando, Mrs. Linton Allen and Adelaide Duval of Ocala.

Jeannette Litschgi: I think it would be fairer and more democratic to have a longer period between nominations and elections and more open campaigning.

Margie Raulerson: I think politics on campus can be much more open than they are. Open politics might be tried out, and might create more interest in college government offices.

Mary Ellen Tharpe: I like the idea of open politics I think a lot of officers are elected by students who can not cast an honest vote because they don't know them. These students only vote for one candidate rather than another because someone tells them to.

Olive Alderman: I think a longer period of time should exist between nominations and elections and that there should be much more open campaigning. It would give us better officers and the students would know them better.

Winifred Ewart: It is a fine idea to have a longer period of time to think over the candidates.

Ina Margaret Robinson: Open politics might be a good way of getting more interest in college government.

Dorothy Barclay: Anything to arouse the students would be better than a disinterest such as last year's.

Alicia Meacham: It seems to me the thing that stands out is the fact that open campaigning would make our system resemble the national set-up. This would be most undesirable.

Funeral Held For Mrs. Kurz

Wife of Faculty Member Dies After Illness

Funeral services for Mrs. Herman Kurz, who died Tuesday night at a Thomasville hospital after an illness of several weeks, were held this morning at 9:30 o'clock at the Blessed Sacrament Catholic church. Rev. Father W. J. Carroll officiated at the services.

Classes were dismissed from 9:30 to 10:30 o'clock this morning in order that students might attend the services. The burial took place in Oakland cemetery.

Mrs. Kurz was the wife of Dr. Herman Kurz, head of the botany department of Florida State college. The couple moved to this city in 1922.

Pallbearers were Dr. Mark H. DeGraff, Dr. R. L. Eyman, G. E. Lewis, S. R Doyle, Ben H. Bridges, Dr. E. V. Gage, Dr. Alben Stewart, and Eugene Pickard.

Mrs. Kurz is survived by her husband, Dr. Kurz, two daughters, Rose Marie and Flora Mae, of Tallahassee; her mother, Mrs. James Daneker, Chicago; three brothers, James Daneker, William and Jerry Conway, Chicago; an aunt, Miss Minnie Trant, St. Paul, Minn.; and a cousin, Mrs. Jack Delaney, St. Paul.

Professor's Mother Dies

Dr. Christian Paul Heinlein, professor of experimental psychology at Florida State college, was called away Monday because of serious illness of his mother, Mrs. Christian Frank Heinlein of Baltimore, Maryland. Dr. Heinlein reached Baltimore before her death from a heart attack on Tuesday at midnight. She was 80 years old.

Dr. Heinlein will return to Tallahassee after several days.

Thanksgiving Program

Y.W.C.A. vespers will be held Sunday evening at 7:15 o'clock in the Augusta Conradi theater. A Thanksgiving program under the direction of Charlotte Kamper will be given.

Stories Told Of Martini's Human Slants

Famed Singer Has Blind Date With Co-ed At Washington

Gay and aristocratic as the cocktail that bears his name, Nino Martini, leading lyric tenor of the Metropolitan opera company who will be heard in the college auditorium Monday night at 7:45, is able to achieve almost superhuman effects in his art because he is so much the human being in everyday life.

In illustration of this, the story is told that Mr. Martini while strolling about the campus of the University of Washington, Seattle, Wash., on the morning of a concert, became so impressed by the good looks of the co-eds that he called the local concert manager and asked her to arrange a "blind date" for him with one of the most attractive students. The girl selected turned out to be a singer and she and the Metropolitan star spent the afternoon and the dinner hour together. It is rumored that Mr. Martini intends to take a post-graduate course at that institution.

Usually, however, instead of this type of amusement, the tenor finds relaxation from watching western pictures on the screen. In explanation of this pastime, he confesses candidly that "I just love cowboy pictures with their rip-snortin' action and six-shooters—really, it's a sort of seventh heaven to me!"

Conventions Dine Here

The Florida Public Health association and the Florida Association of Architects will have convention dinners in the Florida State college dining hall during December. These two will make a total of four state organizations to have held dinners on the campus this fall. The Florida Press association held their gridiron dinner here last week while the Florida Bankers' association dined here Wednesday night.

Y. W. C. A. Now Numbers 250 Members Here

Organization Directs Four Playgrounds Out in City

According to the latest figures, membership of the Y.W.C.A. now numbers about 250, which makes it one of the largest extra-curricular organizations on campus. Plans are being made to incorporate the help of those 250 members in a program designed to do the most good to people outside the college as well as for the students.

City playgrounds have been benefitted by aid from the Y.W.C.A. in the past, as it was under their leadership that Tallahassee's present park system was set up. This system is now in its third year and consists of two playgrounds for white children and one for colored children. Bunny Lowery is active in directing these recreational centers and, together with Jackie Oates, has held classes at the Armory for instructing dancing and games.

Vesper, on Sunday night, and the early morning worship on Wednesday are two services sponsored by the Y.W.C.A. in order to fulfill their purpose of reaching all students and in an effort to satisfy the religious needs on campus.

On December 5 Rev. J. E. Johnson, Y.W.C.A. secretary at Gainesville, will be presented in Sunday night vespers, making another of the well-known religious leaders of Florida to be presented at these services under the sponsorship of the Y.W.C.A.

Plans for a cooperative dress shop are to be worked out, whereby students may remodel clothing which will then be modeled and sold. Marie Potter has charge of arrangements for this shop and will announce further plans at a future date.

Organic Chem Said Hardest College Course

Students Here Agree With Reports of Survey Made Recently

The sciences, newest of all educational courses, are also the most difficult, according to a survey made by the Bureau of Educational Surveys in New York City. If the attitude interviewed here at F.S.C.W. are truly representative of the entire student body, this assertion holds true for this campus as well as for the other schools throughout the country.

F.S.C. students stated that organic chemistry tops the list of difficult subjects with physics, inorganic chemistry, psychology, and the integrated science courses following closely behind. Next are all forms of history and English literature, and last of all come the languages.

According to the Education Survey, the use of outlines and other supplementary aids to study was found to be a good indication of the difficulty of a subject. Thus the more outlines, the harder a subject is to master. Faculty members, however, join with their pupils in affirming that outlines simplify the work of such subjects by giving them a picture of the course as a whole and in being especially valuable for review purposes.

Opinions differed widely when students were questioned about the proportionate difficulty of subjects. Some stated that a foreign language is easier than their own 'cause others find Spanish and French hard to master. The same holds true for any subject often students rated subjects according to the amount of time necessary to prepare assignments, although the subject itself might be easily grasped.

Lack of a high school foundation was given much of the blame for failure to understand a course which presupposes a working knowledge of the subject. Especially was this true of the sciences.

A personal turn of mind was also held responsible for the ease in which a subject matter may be grasped. It is naturally understood that some students are more adaptable to one set of courses than other students might be, but there are a surprisingly large number of girls who find themselves taking a fancifully disliked subject and discovering a hidden talent in that line.

Doctor Speaks On Swimming

Aquatic Adjustment Cited In Specialist's Talk

Approximately 800 students heard Dr. H. Marshall Taylor, ear, nose and throat specialist of Jacksonville, speak on the necessity for man to adapt himself to the aquatic environment in swimming in a lecture-illustrated lecture given at the request of Dr. Sarah Parker White last night.

Dr. Taylor, who specialist in the field has been working for some time on the problem of the relationship of the nose to prevention of sinusitis and speed swimming and diving.

In discussing the problem, Dr. Taylor stressed the fact that man, unlike other animals, has no physiological means except correct breathing to protect the mucous membrane of nasal cavities.

"When a seal dives he shuts his nose," he stated. "Man must do this by maintaining a positive pressure in the nasal cavities by exhaling and breathing when his head is submerged."

He also stated that man has no way of controlling the water pressure when he is in colder atmospheres, such as Canada, the arctic, he pointed out, can maintain body temperature higher than that of man because of the fatty portion and the make up of the skin.

Warning the students against chilling in the water he said, "In my opinion pure inflections result from chilling in the water than by any other means."

Using further correlation of animals the speaker mentioned the fact that alligators and other animals whose habitat is in water close their ears when they dive. Man cannot do this. If, the doctor warned, he has perforated ear drums he had best stay away from the water entirely.

In conclusion he stated four rules for healthful swimming: Breathe properly, he said first of all. Secondly don't go in the water if you have skin infection or cold. Third: don't stay in the water after chilled. Last: don't go in water with perforated ear drums.

The government's national program of housing will be discussed at the session.

Keown Plans Meeting Held At University

Demonstration Agents Have Five-Day Conference

The 1938 conference of Florida's county and home demonstration agents, the program of which was planned by Miss Mary E. Keown, state home demonstration agent at Florida State college, was held for five days in Gainesville last week.

Joint meetings of the county and home agents and other Florida extension workers were held in the assembly room of the P. K. Yonge laboratory school in the mornings; while in the afternoons, separate gatherings were called for the county and home agents only.

The conference is an annual event for the purpose of bringing all workers of the state agricultural extension service together to study and discuss problems pertaining to their work and to formulate plans to fit the needs of the state for the new year.

Some of the subjects discussed were agriculture, animal husbandry, horticulture, economics, marketing, farm financing, 4-H club work, soil crops, truck crops, soil conservation, poultry, dairying, rural electrification, pasture, farm records, and transportation.

Among the prominent speakers at the conference was Harry L. Brown, commissioner of agriculture, whose office is in Washington.

Mr. Brown, who is well-known for his leadership in agriculture, served as county agent, district agent, and director of the Georgia agricultural extension service before his appointment as assistant to Secretary Henry A. Wallace.

Fifteen representatives from Florida State College for Women were at the conference. They were: Mary E. Keown, state home demonstration agent; Ruby McDavid, district agent; Dr. Margaret R. Sanders, Dean of the School of Home Economics; Miss Anna Mae Tracy, head dietitian; Miss Tillie Roesel home demonstration agent; Miss Ruby Brown, home demonstration agent; Miss Anna Mae Sikes, specialist in food and nutrition, Miss Hilda B. Barrus, home demonstration agent; Miss Isabella S. Thomas, specialist in food conservation; Miss Clarine Belcher, specialist in textiles; Miss Sara Meacon, instructor in clothing and textiles; Miss Virginia P. Moore, specialist in home improvement; and Miss Lelia Venable, assistant professor of home economics.

Fox Movietone Unable To Photograph Pageant

According to word received this week from the Atlanta office, Fox Movietone will be unable to photograph the Thanksgiving swimming pageant as had been announced. The letter stated that such an assignment would be difficult in an indoor pool because of lighting conditions.

It is possible that the moving picture company may visit the campus later in the year, photographing swimming events in an outdoor setting.

Wife of China's Generalissimo Was Once Pupil Of Two Teachers in Language Department Here

Madame Chiang Kai-Shek, wife of China's generalissimo and often termed the most powerful woman in the world, was formerly a pupil of two Florida State college faculty members.

The Chinese woman once studied at Wesleyan college, Macon, Ga., under Dr. Margie Burks and Miss Lucy Lester, both of whom are now members of the state college for W. Yonge laboratory school. At Wesleyan she took Latin under Dr. Burks and French under Miss Lester.

Dr. Burks, associate professor of Spanish at Florida State college recalls that Madame was "very sprightly, bright, and a good mixer." Dr. Burks last saw Mayling or Madame Chiang in 1910 following her graduation from Wesleyan. She visited Dr. Burks in New York before she set sail for her native country. Both Dr. Burks and Miss Lester still hear from Madame Chiang though the present war has interrupted the correspondence temporarily.

Madame Chiang, at that time Mayling Soong, came to America to join her sisters who already were prominent in this country. Her older sister, now Mrs. H. H. Kung, is wife of the finance minister of China, and the second sister, now the widow of Sun Yat Sen, were also students of Dr. Burks at Wesleyan.

M. P. Courtois Gives Address

Speaker Tells of French Life and Customs

Speaking entirely in French, Monsieur P. Courtois, director of the educational department of the Information Office of the Free French universities, addressed an audience of students and faculty members yesterday morning in the Augusta Conradi theater on several questions relating to life and customs in France.

The speaker, who was introduced by Dr. Arthur Seymour, professor of romance languages, discussed customs of the French provinces and described the university life of the French students during summer school in France. The routine of study is lightened by occasional pleasure trips and speeches by noted authorities.

In answer to a question by Dr. Marion Hay in regard to the political situation in France and nearby countries Monsieur Courtois replied that in his opinion there will be no war in that part of the world for a long time. His reason for this is that no one in there has any money and without money there can be no war.

When questioned as to whether there is a great deal of difference in the attendance of the American colleges and universities and those in France, Monsieur Courtois answered with an emphatic yes. He stated that the closest approach to social life at the French universities is found in the congenial groups which gather in the cafes. There students meet and carry on informal discussions about politics and other controversial questions. There is no social life whatever during the winter and no campus life in regard to activities other than the classroom.

Each student in the universities must have for an entrance requirement the baccalaureate degree which is granted only after several oral and written tests before highly impartial judges. Many fail these examinations which are so difficult that an effort is being made to alleviate the condition as being too harsh for young minds. The student entering the French university is approximately 16 to 17 years of age and has already covered the work which is included in the first two years of most of our colleges.

"In France," said Monsieur Courtois, "education is not forced upon you." Class attendance is optional and the professor doesn't care whether the student is present or not. However," added M. Courtous, "it is always a good idea to be able to answer any questions the professor may ask."

Each student does independent work toward a definite goal set by himself, and doctors' degrees are granted only to those who are recognized as leading authorities studied in their field of the masters of their subject.

An appreciative murmur arose when Monsieur Courtois remarked that the Big Apple is an interesting dance which slightly resembles a modernized version of the old French peasant which originated in Martinique. However the speaker stressed that the resemblance is only slight.

Before departing, Monsieur

Scholarship Cup Given Watrous by Omicron Nu

Lollie Watrous, sophomore, this week was awarded the Omicron Nu home economics cup for having made the highest average of any freshman in home economics last year. Her average was 2.629, only a few points less than an "A" average. The presentation took place at the meeting Wednesday of the Home Economics club and was made by Miss Edna Mae Mellnish, faculty advisor to the local chapter of the national home economics honorary society.

Honorable mention went to Dorothy Townsend who had an average of 2.25 and to Geraldine Albritton whose average was 2.46.

Courtois paused to remark: "Co-education? It has many advantages, and is the natural thing!"

Local Alumnae Hold Banquet

Richardson is Principal Speaker Monday Night

The Tallahassee alumnae of Florida State college attended their annual dinner Monday night at the Dutch Kitchen. Approximately 50 people attended. Speakers were Mrs. Frank D. Moor, college alumnae president, Miss Louise Richardson, college librarian, President Edward Conradi and others.

Mrs. Moor and Mrs. George Lewis, president of the Tallahassee Alumnae club, sketched the organization of the state alumnae board and introduced the other speakers of the evening including Miss Florence Tryon, chairman of the 1938 Alumnae college.

Miss Richardson, principal speaker, in telling the group that it is both a privilege and a responsibility to be a state college alumnae, cited the benefits that Tallahassee graduates could now derive from their alma mater. Entertainments at the institution, the library, and all other facilities are open to them, she said, and faculty members are glad at any time to talk matters over with the alumnae. She told also of the school's readiness to develop creative ability within its graduates and the service which the personnel office renders in placing them in positions throughout the state.

The college colors were carried out in the decorations of low bowls of chrysanthemums and in autumn-colored leaves. Programs were bound with covers of garnet and gold alternating as the different places. During the program the group sang "With Spirit As So Bright" and the alma mater, "Garnet and Gold."

In charge of the affair were Mrs. Charles D. Stephens, Mrs. Arvah B. Hopkins and Mrs. Julian Alford. Others present were Miss Sara Harwell, Mrs. Frances Tippetts Johnston, Mrs. Helen Smith Hall, Miss Irma Feinberg, Miss Bernice Oliver, Miss Margaret Pfluge, Miss Winifred Hansen, Miss Dorothy Purse, Miss Alta Deahl, Miss Doris Tyrrell, Mrs. R. H. Leake, Mrs. Mabel B. Hodgson, Miss Julia Gehan, Mrs. Charles Hopkins, Mrs. Gordon Long, Mrs. Jewel Thorpe, Miss Mary Eleanor Nicholson, Mrs. B. K. Roberts, Miss Brooks Spencer, Mrs. G. K. Walker, Mrs. A. G. Fairson, Mrs. Annie Rose Moore, Mrs. Maxine B. Putnam, Mrs. L. D. Appleyard, Mrs. James Hayde, Mrs. Leroy Collins, Miss Jean B. Hazmer, Miss Frances T. Parks, Miss Mary Parker, Miss Rachel Pitchford, Miss Zoe Manning, Mrs. C. D. Gunn, Mrs. Lefe Chesley, Mrs. James Cranling, Mrs. Theo Proctor, Mrs. Ben Bridges, and Mrs. Ira Storrs.

According to computations, 1355 pounds of food are consumed during one year by each adult in the United States.

Mass Demonstration In Fencing is Postponed

The fencing exhibition, which was to be this playnight, in the gym, has had to be postponed until Dec 3. At this time there will be a mass demonstration of fundamentals, and two bouts.

Anyone interested in learning how to fence can enroll Thursday afternoon on December 7 at the gym. Marie Joffre is beginning a new class for those girls who could not come to the fencing classes at the beginning of the school year.

Saturn Topic Of Astronomy Club Meeting

Naked Eye Observation Is Made With Use Of Sky Maps

Saturn and its [illegible] moon and rings and meteors were the topics discussed at the meeting of the Astronomy club Wednesday night.

Mary Cochran, in developing the first subject, explained the composition of the three rings surrounding Saturn, and the six moons rotating around the planet.

The talk on meteors, given by St. George Lourey, pointed out that even though meteors are always out in space, the only time they are visible is when they enter the earth's atmosphere.

Following the talks, the group members met in the observatory to find this year for the first time, to read magazine articles parallel to the topics.

A naked eye observation of Saturn was made. With the use of sky maps, the stars and planets now in prominence were observed. Special attention was given to the observation of Pleiades, Saturn, the milky way, the southern cross, the little dipper, Jupiter and Mars. Cloudy Wars prevented of the astronomy group as were the guide-in points in making the various stars and constellations.

Because of Odd-Even demonstrations a meeting of the club will not be held next week as the regular meeting will be held the following week on Wednesday, Dec. 10. Telescope observations as well as part of the [illegible] for that time

Even Spirits Rise And Odds Go To War

Two Traditional Demonstrations Are Presented Tuesday and Wednesday Nights as Part Of Thanksgiving Program

While the Odds made the world safe for "demodderacy," the Even spirits rose again in the Odd and Even demonstrations which preceded the Thanksgiving day celebrations at Florida State college this week. Each year these dramatic productions are given by the members of the rival factions and are a part of the traditional celebrations which take place during this holiday. The Odd cast was chosen from members of the freshman and junior classes and the Even cast from the sophomore and senior classes. Uniforms were assigned to each group and Elosie Frink, while Elosie Trott headed the Odd entertainment.

Evenetta Sets Sail

"World made safe for democracy"

The Odd woman warriors, carried away to battle, left behind them much broken-hearted husbands and children Wednesday night in their demonstration which was presented in the college auditorium.

As the play act the gallant warriors, aboard the Odd special, bid their mourning families a sad farewell. Just before the whistle did cessarire of the train, the pilot man ran down to the depot to give their loyal Odd mothers a "au revoir" to the front. The Odd sailors donned the fond mothers to be brave and to learn to be veterans of future wars against "insects like the Evens."

As a band goodbye, the musicians skipped around in front of the observation car bravely singing that stirring old "Keep Her Away From Burning."

The next act depicted a daily meeting of the Silver Circle Husband club, the purpose of which was to promote greater loyalty. To console one another at the meeting, the husbands undertakes themselves by wholeheartedly participating in the wives' former duties—going to classes, taking modern dance, and attending basketball games. Each member busied himself either by taking up dancing or by knitting there or doing ballroom dancing.

Trial Held for Twins

At this meeting, the poor overworked husbands held a trial for Pat Campbell's unfortunate Even children. In order to get relief, the two wild Azaleas and the condemned mother wall out their troubles in song. At the entrance of Mr. Dot Colburn, who "ac-knee-ent" to perform a dance for his wife, the husbands returned home to display his newly acquired talent in an acrobatic dance.

Meanwhile, reports broadcast on a nation-wide hook-up from the Even camp showed the members the certainty of Odd victory on the battlefield. WTAL offered the Even the satisfactorily recorded programs and the men gave up.

The last act of the demodderacy pictured the husbands carrying their wives over the victorious return to the friends of

Seniors Asked To Begin Data

Personnel Office Starts Placement Records For Positions

Registration for seniors with the Placement Bureau will begin November 29 in the personnel office. Although requests for teachers are not received until March or April, and the bulk of placement is carried on late in the spring, the personnel office is requesting that the enrollment to be completed now.

The department announced that it is necessary for every student to have a permanent placement record in the personnel office, whether or not a position in any field is desired.

All four-year graduates are asked to report promptly to Miss Helen Parker for ten or fifteen minute conferences, as these conferences are scheduled consecutively all day. If any student is unable to come at the time designated, it is necessary that she talk to the personnel office in advance and change the hour of her interview.

Registration with the placement bureau for two-year certificate candidates is optional. Two-year students expecting to receive certificates in January, May or August of 1938 may sign up now if they do so by making an appointment with Miss Marian Nelson, afternoon during the weeks of November 29 and December 6.

Tri Delts Win Thanksgivings Prize Awards

Alpha Xi Deltas Receive Second Position For Puritan Motif

THIRD PLACE IS GIVEN TO A D PI

Colorful Displays Lend Holiday Spirit To Student Homes

The Delta Delta Delta barnyard won a picture and gold ruler button and $5 in the Thanksgiving decorations competition Wednesday. On one side of the Delta Delta Delta lawn are two small turkeys. They represent the Odds and Evens, as one wears a cap and the other a bonnet. Between them is a worm which symbolizes the games. On the opposite lawn stands a haystack and another turkeys holding a sign of welcome to the parents. The house itself is the barn, and the gable ending is a lighted pin. Second prize, a green and white ribbon and $3, went to Alpha Xi Delta.

Alpha Xi's Are Second

Carrying out the Odds and Puritan idea, the Alpha Xi Delta's have a cardboard Puritan on one side of the door, and a small table loaded with fruit. The Puritan is dressed in black and white across the walk near a fire simulated an Indian in Odd colors. Their theme, carried out in evening, a moon in the tree and siena with a cardboard Indian, and Even colors on the lawn adds to the atmosphere. Their prize is a hay stack stand on the lawn. The school seal hangs on the porch. Their prize was $2.

Third prize, a purple and gold ruler button and $2, was awarded to Alpha Delta Pi.

Southern Scene Depicted

Life-size figures of an old Southern colonel and a Negro mammy welcomed visitors to the colonial house of Alpha Delta Pi. Picturesque cotton field in the side yard give further Southern atmosphere. The Alpha Delta Pi lawn is a small field in which whole setting is lit with floodlights.

Figures of pilgrims shoot at a huge turkey on the other side of the Chi Omega porch. Streamers in Odd and Even colors are strung from the columns to the quarry. To complete the picture, a cardboard Indian stands stretch around the lawn, and Odd-Even colors wind around the porch pillars.

Sigma Kappa Tern Cooks

With the exception of frosting, bowl and ingredients are part of the decorations in front of the Sigma Kappa house.

The cookbook which is placed on one side of the lawn, lists the ingredients as Demonstrations, games, and dances on the side of the page and gives the procedure on the opposite page. A large turkey is built shaker in Even colors, a pripper shaker in Odd colors, and two packages containing Odds and Evens are placed on the opposite sides of the cookbook. New York Club Of Graduates Plans Program

Project of Hotel Service During World Fair Made Ny Group

Six graduates of Florida State College for Women are members of the first formal alumnae club to be established in New York city by graduates of New York and New Jersey colleges. The Florida Alumnae association, this club, with the assistance of Florida women to New York, has grown into an active and progressive organization.

Some enthusiastic discussion was presented at the first meeting of the group held November 12 at the Park Avenue Presbyterian Grant restaurant on Park avenue in New York city. One idea under discussion is the advisability of plans to establish a hotel service for Florida visitors during the fair, which opens in 1939. This service is planned to care for the students, their parents, families, and friends directed to a recommended hotel of moderate means.

Alumnae plans to work through alumnae divisions and members of the student body to establish a hotel through which will avail Florida citizens of this opportunity. A committee from the club of alumnae will be collected by the New York alumnae group and will consist of the Anna Chartis scholarship and the planning of the alumnae facilities on the campus.

The club members organized interest in suggestion to investigate scholastic and cultural advancement of the college.

They discussed the need for publicity to identify the Florida graduate and scholarship of the college.

Florida State college graduates who were present were: '21 Ila Horner, '1935, interior decorator; Flor Lenkert, '1935, teacher; '36 Lyrinton-on-Hudson hospital; Katherine Blood, 1936 technician at the Presbyterian hospital and graduate student at the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Josephine Binion, 1937, graduate student at Columbia university; Polly Flint, 1937, window designer and instructor; Mary Anderson, 1937, graduate student at New York university.

Second Annual Parents' Days Provide Varied Activities

Miss Canfield Gives Lecture On Exhibition

Describes Good and Bad Points of Paintings Now Displayed

"Both good and bad points are evident in many of the various oil paintings," Miss Lillian Canfield, assistant professor of the art department, commented in her lectures, given Monday and Tuesday afternoons, at the art exhibition held under the auspices of the art club, now a project, in the Wescott building.

Miss Canfield Criticizes

Miss Canfield's remarks consisted of criticisms and explanatory statements concerning the 24 paintings on display.

A typical scene of New England, illustrated in "Early Work" by Marion Huse, showed an old lady mending a chair. The picture, she said, was good although the subject was commonplace, the picture is brought by means of excellent compositional devices.

Another painting with excellence in composition emphasized, according to Miss Canfield, is Miss Canfield's lectures, was Marshal D. Hunter's "Lone Pine." A fine effect she showed gave the painting, a study of a small mountain, a feeling of loneliness. The villans atmosphera was very fine.

"Old Mountaineer" by Warren Wheelock was outstanding she said, because of the excellent texture of oil. The color scheme is blue and brown, spotled by two intensities of red, one on the vest shirt, and one, directly behind, on the road.

Local Color Dominates

Painting by Viva B Chambers Sturdy, a scene from lower East Side of New York city, by the artist, Lower Manhattan, Miss Canfield showed how he grasped local color and atmosphere. The monotonous lives of the people was expressed by drab, stark lines of the buildings. Brief sentiments towards life was made apparent by the placing of clothes and expressions of the two people. Schanda's "The Last Dress" independent droop of the man's shirt and the woman's shoulder strap, also sounded out that Ernste Heidner made land ty-pography on every detail in the painting. "Sunday Morning on the Bayou" by Mary Lou Ferguson gave scale to the church in the background, and a picket fence and flowers added a feeling for local color.

Oil Painted Depicted

Another typical New England scene, "Sunday Morning" by Ethel H. Littlefield in "The Fisheries" painted at Wood's Hole, Mass. The fishermen's church, the watch rebit by an upward movement of the church's steeple, and the fish in the middle by an old fashioned bridge, an effect which is known as the "Golden Section." Balance of the painting were evident in the composition of a fish net, outlined too sketchily, and in the small boats, which she said that the technique was too impres-

Icicle Lure Sonh To Morning Plunge

Last Sunday morning the thermometer registered 32 degrees. A South Florida sophomore on the campus shook like the leaves on the fountain so well that she wanted one for a souvenir She leaned forward, but couldn't quite reach it She leaned just a little farther . . . splash! Into the pond she fell—cool millions, shoes and all. An icicle in person, she made her chilly way through the dormitory to the fifth floor of Gilchrist Manor. Most of the brides, but didn t try to

Honorary Conducts Tours for Parents

This morning from 10.30 until 12.30 members of Mortar Board conducted for parents a special tour of the college campus and buildings.

During this tour parents were shown exhibits, consisting of both student and professional work, of the art department in the Westcott building, as well as a display of work in the industrial arts department on the first floor of the Education building. In the Library building the or inspections ot-io FI HT clusion department was oper for inspection.

Other places of interest included in the itinerary of the tour are the zoology department in the History building, the home management house, the library, the dining hall, the student activity offices, and the entire Demonstration school.

Rain Causes Damage

Leaden skies and drizzling rain, however, did not behave and changed some plans. Sorority house and campus decorations donned Wednesday afternoon in hood of rain and many parents and visitors who have come for the Thanksgiving festivities were ruined after bessifying the campus for a few short hours. The decorated planks of some of the innovations of "Parents' Days" was automatically washed.

Today's program will include a tour of college campus and buildings beginning at 10:30 o'clock. Mortar Board Guests who wish to attend this tour are asked to meet in front of Bryan between 10.30 and 12.30 o'clock. Exhibits are open to visitors who are also invited to attend classes Tonight a special play outfit will be held at the Physical Education building.

The second annual "Parents' Day" celebration will come to a close tomorrow night with a formal dance at the Physical Education building.

New Dormitory Need Seen Against Background Development Of College from the First Beginning in 1823 to Present Time

By JEAN STEFFEE

Looking toward an appropriation for a new dormitory for dormitory for Florida State college, plans for the building and selection of the site have already been made, according to H. G. Mendenhall, business manager. As proposed, this U-shaped residence hall will accommodate 400 students and will be located west of Gilchrist.

Land Bequeathed in 1823

Though the growth of Florida's institutions of higher learning has been rapid since the last few years, the beginning was slow. Florida's first interest in higher learning was shown in 1823 when the General Government of the territory of Florida and bequeathed "seminary lands" for the purpose of aiding in the maintenance of two higher educational institutions.

In 1826 a university was proposed, 14 trustees were named, but the movement died. During the years following, legislative bodies passed acts for the leasing of lands set aside for educational purposes. Money from these leases was lent out at 6 per cent interest.

Land Secured

When Florida was admitted to the Union in 1845, additional lands reserved by the federal government for the purpose of "seminary lands" to 100,000 acres. The state constitution provided that "such proceeds from lands be and remain perpetual fund." United States Treasury with the state money coming in from leases.

The year 1851 saw the law passed providing for seminaries, east and west of the Suwannee river. The first object of these schools was to train teachers second, to give instruction in mechanic arts, agriculture and in the fundamentals of learning and the regards duties of citizens.

Location Chosen

In 1853 towns for the locations of seminaries were chosen; Ocala for the Seminary east of the Suwannee river, and Tallahassee for the one west. As an inducement for selection, the city of Tallahassee gave property known as the Florida Institute, embracing 10 1/5 acres and a new two-story brick building, complete with furniture and valued at $15,000.

Not until after October, 1859, was the seminary west actually in operary. The year before the president of Leon Females Academy decided to discontinue his school with a house in the north section of the town.

Co-education Appears

During the War Between the States the seminary was a military school for men only, but in 1862 it became co-educational again During these years the institution was known as an elementary school for the children of Tallahassee and Leon county.

In 1880 the primary courses were abolished; in 1882 military training was adopted. The next year the campus was enlarged, new equipment bought, and a normal school was established. Development that year was 74 students, 15 of whom came from outside the state.

In 1887 military work was discontinued until 1898 when it was introduced into two years high school and two years college. A new building was added that year.

Yellow Fever Rages

As an example of the activity a teacher in 1899 taught, President Conrad Mitchell conducted classes in philosophy, mathematics, chemistry, physics, astronomy, and political science. The enrollment had fallen off to 38 on account of yellow fever and high scholastic standards, which caused many students to go to Tallahassee.

In 1899 two wings were added to College hall. Since there were

Student's Peace Group To Ban Silk Hosiery

Action Is Taken During Round-Table Talk About Japan

Student Peace service participants will ban silk hosiery.

A round-table discussion of the significance of a Japanese boycott and the economic, financial and psychological aspects of the recently held Geneva conference led to this decision on the part of the students attending the meeting.

Ernest Gale, acting as chairman of the round table, pointed out that the U. S. could financially cripple Japan by boycott. Japan cannot afford to buy much for her supplies, which are chiefly silk and cotton, exported to the United States, Ermine pointed out.

Thus, she continued, Japan's income would automatically diminish; this would probably force Japan to her knees economically, the people. This step would cause further dissatisfaction within Japan herself. It might even lead to a civil war, she said. Picking a war within itself without the nation would prove too strong a force for Japan would have to ensure her merciless aggression in China.

Discussing the boycott from the humanitarian view, Ermine presented Japan's weak arguments in self-defense of her actions. Japan declares, she pointed out, that it was the Russian power and what she is protecting her "territorial integrity." In conclusion Ermine stated that U. S. might forego the few hundreds of thousands of dollars which the annual payments of business men will lose and to finish a war against the wholesale slaughter of human lives.

The next commentator, Ruth Eyman, declared that the British consider her cities its purpose and that the boycott intended its proceedings. Norman H. Davis, American ambassador to Japan, joined with the British and French foreign ministers in condemning the unofficial anarchy of mobbing respect for treaties.

Following the line of thought Miss Eyman drew Nelson instructor, declared that the boycott would be futile as a Sicilian situation. The first principle of boycotting Japan's products she stated, cannot with consistent logic be done. In addition, Theodore Roosevelt showed a definite change in American sentiment. Miss Eyman went on to say that America still is no friend to the least of the Chino-Japanese crisis. Although the United States actually sent a delegate to the conference Miss Eaton said, this country and the various nations are not willing to cooperate with one another. Miss Eyman declared the written declaration against Japan as a note saying that the nations did "not care" of Japan to the war as she had. That this was a misnomer of sentiment, declared to avoid collective security as evidenced that the present was a flop in non-intercourse declared.

A boycott individually sponsored by students of the United States would not involve any serious hardship, Miss Eyman declared. She said. The effect of such a boycott would merely be felt in individual pocketbooks, she said.

Following Miss Eyman's address Prof. Rose made a few pertinent remarks concerning the conference that had in session in Geneva. He declared that the conference was a failure because of the fact that the United States actually refused to participate in the conference. Mr. Rose declared that the United States was not willing to cooperate with other nations.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

All schools from the kindergarten or nursery school at one end, and the college and university at the other, are real builders of life. The personal contact and hearty cooperation between parents and teachers and other school officials through the whole process of education is a fundamental factor in bringing the whole educational program to its highest achievement. It is therefore a real pleasure to all of us here at the College to have fathers and mothers come here and make personal contacts with the members of the college staff, both teachers and other officials.

I wish also to emphasize that your presence gives a cheerful stimulus to the students—a stimulus that helps to build that fine spirit of co-operation and good will amongst the students here on the campus which is a basic factor in our endeavors toward achieving our ideals.

An expression of welcome is really not necessary for you are welcome all the time. The latch string hangs out to you every day of the year. Yet on this special occasion I want to express to you in behalf of the College the heartiest welcome and the choicest greetings.

I also wish to say to those fathers and mothers who would find it impossible to come, that we appreciate it most heartily that they are with us in spirit.

—EDWARD CONRADI.

Manuquins Used

Garnet and gold, Odd and Even colors are the theme used in decorating the Florida Alumna Club's house. In the center of the porch is a manequin dressed in a gold gown, with a garnet velvet wrap and a gold crown on her head leading up to the figure is a carpet, and on either side of the figure are horns of plenty with fruit and flowers in them. Autumn leaves are strewn over the floor.

Odd and Even colors and the school scarf's are worn by those who carry out the Thanksgiving decorations at the Beta Phi Alpha house.

One side of the Kappa Alpha Theta lawn provides a tug-of-war between life-size basketball players. On the other side is a pigeon roasting a turkey at a spit in place. Streamers from the porch to the gate post complete the color scheme. Garnet and gold are the colors used.

In 1908 Florida supported six institutions of higher learning, the University of Florida, Lake City; Gainesville, DePuniak Springs, Bartow, and Chattahoochee. The Buckman bill of that year consolidated the schools back into the one provided for by the act of 1851. The two schools were Florida Female College at Tallahassee and the University of Florida at Gainesville.

Female College Opens

Florida Female College opened in the fall of 1905 with a faculty of 21 and the following departments: College of Liberal Arts,

R. F. Maguire, Orlando; Hon. and Mrs. Edward Lace, Jacksonville; Hon. and Mrs. John Cooper, New York City; Hon. W. L. Weaver, Perry; Hon. and Mrs. Frank L. Wideman, West Beach; Hon. and Mrs. John B. Sutton, Tampa; Hon. and Mrs. J. B. Hodges, Lake City; Hon. and Mrs. W. W. Flournoy, DeFuniak Springs; Hon. and Mrs. F. K. Jennings, Jacksonville; Hon. and Mrs. Frank P. Fleming, Jacksonville; Hon. T. B. King, Arcadia.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moor, Tallahassee; Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Benson, Inverness; Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Cole, Jacksonville; Mrs. Frances Tippets Johnston, Tallahassee; Dr. and Mrs. T. M. no dormitories, students boarded in town for $12 a month. In February of that year the normal department was begun. It offered 1½ months of teaching training endorsed by the state board of public instruction.

Six members composed the faculty of 1833. Three courses were offered: classical, literary, and scientific, leading to the degrees of B.A., B. L., and B.S.

Name Changed

In 1900 the legislature provided funds for two dormitories. In addition the State appropriated the college had $45,000 in bonds, $5,000 in real estate, and West Florida Seminary. The college was estimated to be worth $175,000. It was also in this year that the school's name was changed to Florida State college because "seminary" had become to mean a women's school.

Two dormitories were built in 1902. East hall accommodated 60 women, including seven sitting room and kitchen. All women were required to live in East hall under such regulations as the faculty might prescribe. It was located where the present science hall stands. West hall was built for the men's dormitory, and was on the site of the history building.

New Department Listed

In 1903 the following departments were listed: the College of the School for Teachers, the School of Music, and the College of Academy. In that year two new departments were added: the Department of Art and Physical Culture and the Commercial Department.

The south wing of Reynolds hall was completed in 1913, and contained accommodations for 150 students, as well as a "gym" room (recreation hall), the infirmary, a parlor, and a suite of rooms for the matron. The west wall of this was also south end of the dining hall, capable of seating 300 persons.

The year 1913 saw the beginning of college government. Officers were supervised by a committee of faculty members.

College Government Begins

The first student government organization was placed in the Graduate School, College of Arts and Science, College of Education, School of Agriculture, School of Business, and School of Music. A department of psychology was added.

At that time no mines covered the Administration building, nor did any trees stand in front of it. In 1910 the college campus was enlarged by each class to plant some ivy each year. The statue was not placed in front of the administration building. A sapping stone for grilling in and out of carriages stood in front of the building. An improvement that year was filling in the hollow in front of Bryan, making the sunken gardens.

Education Building Erected

The original education building was erected in 1917. The auditorium was also built in that year and was enlarged in 1923. Up to 1917, each hall had its own furniture, but a central heating plant was built that year. It was located where the college shops are now. Brevard hall was begun in 1917 and added to in 1920. The north and and lower room of the dining hall were built in 1918.

The next few years saw a number of buildings erected on the campus. The south wing of the demonstration school was built in 1926 and the structure was published in 1926. The infirmary was built in 1920, and the kitchen was added to the dining hall. The west end of Reynolds hall was built in 1921.

Library Finished

The south wing of Jennie Murphree hall was built in 1921, the west wing in 1924. In 1923 the west end of the library was built. The Library was finished in 1930. To replace the dangerous old history building, a new one was begun in 1927, and finished in 1928. The physical education building was built in 1930. It is designed to have a wing added to the north. Also built that year was a new heating plant west of the gymnasium and the Governor's house was built.

Athletic fields were laid out in 1931. In 1933 all equipment in the kitchen was made electrical.

The old education building was not satisfactory because of wartime construction. It was torn down, and a new one finished in 1936. The north wing of the Westcott building was also made, and the new wing was built in 1937.

Land Bought

From time to time land has been bought for the campus, until now it contains about 300 acres. The campus was originally pine and live oak woods. Pecans, dogwoods, palms, and magnolias have been planted.

The first paved road was the circle in front of the Westcott building. The story is told that the legislators in coming to the college for years one with the mire in the mud roads leading to the college. The next day they appropriated funds to pave the street around by the dining hall and Bryan. The road by Christie and Broward was finished in 1929 and road ready for use in 1931 and was finished in 1932. Other roads have been built in the past year.

Girls from the graduating classes have done much to beautify the campus. The classes of 1915 and 1917 gave the fountain, the class of 1916 and 1918 gave the front gates. The bronze doors of the Westcott building are a memorial to the classes of 1925 and 1927. The West Jefferson street gates are the gift of the classes of 1933 and 1935. The classes of 1934 and 1936 gave the chimes in the Library tower.

Precedents Topple When Nino Arrives

Two precedents were set when Nino Martini, celebrated lyric tenor of opera, the concert stage, screen and radio, made his motion picture's Artist Series program here Monday night.

He turned back on his audience in one number, but only to sing to another audience seated on the stage behind him. And he sought out his interviewers when requested for a mass interview on the campus by student reporters. The hilarious view took place in the Flambeau office where some 25 reporters and staff members kept up a barrage of questions for half an hour.

Mr. Martini proved the biggest attraction ever enjoyed by a college Artist Series. Extra seats were put up on the stage and in the aisles and yet scores of people did not get to hear him.

West Hall

West hall, sister building to East hall, is another of the old dormitories which has been remodeled by the present administration. West hall was located where the Education building is now.

Yacobin, brought everyone to tears with the story of "My Man."

To bolster up the flagging spirits of the unsuccessful pirates, a lively nautical chorus showed their talents in a novel tap and acrobatic number. The dance was brought to an unexpected close when three unaccustomed seagoers had an acute attack of the illness that generally affects a seafaring landlubber.

Two Weeks Elapse

Two weeks later, at the time of the second act, the party became accustomed to the routine of life at sea and the five skating swabs rolled on the stage with the original intention of mopping the decks, but they became much interested in some new skating steps. They ended in a compliment to Evens by the smallest swab, Viola Brooks.

Evenetta soon stopped all this play acting, however, to get to their meaning exercises and singing. She and her partners attention to the piracy drill in which seven pirateers in red bonnes and black tights went through their maneuvers. All events were forthcoming, however, when Mr. Jew shouted, "Land!"

It was Thanksgiving eve on an island where Captain Blood and his men were sleeping. The side of the island opened, the Evens spirits, rising again, entered from the mouth of the canyon. The blackhearted pirates, refusing to fight spirits, dragged their prisoners, the Evens, to the stage. While the victorious Evens entertained their ragained liberty, Evenetta and the entertainers came upon them and were disappointed to find that they didn't need rescuing.

Heroine Loses Kers

Almost the first question by the would-be rescuer was about the treasure but Mr. Stevens, Evenetta's henpecked husband, had lost the chest. Evenetta noticed that her spouse was not wearing his rubbers even though it was damp weather and as he complied with her request to put them on, he found the missing chest in one of the rubbers.

After the save, the treasure chest was brought into the open and the life was especially lifted, all drawing near to inspect the contents. The treasure, emeralds and gold, were the members of homs. When some of the visitors returned, the mob prepared for their entertainment: snatches of the Odd demonstration they had planned. Four of the brainiest gave an inspired creative modern dance to the maddeng beat of a drum and piano accompaniment.

Volunteers Return

At last the frit drafted volunteers who had been at the front return to their husbands with a snappy military tap finale. They made an entrance also for the real heroes of the war—the Odd basketball and volleyball teams whom the husbands welcomed with open arms.

To add the perfect touch of victory at the front, the two Evens rushed joyously into the room with the startling announcement that their mates had a baby and now they were Odds once more!

Tallahassee Offers Historical Spots For Interested Sightseeing Parents

Old Houses, Graves of Princes, Hundred Year Old Church, Wakulla Springs Listed Among Most Famous Sights for Visitors

By FLORENCE GREGORY

There is almost Florida's capital a peculiar charm of historical tradition and a delightful setting of the old with the new for the parents and visitors on the campus this week-end is offered the opportunity to visit one of the attractions in and around Tallahassee.

Becomes Capital

The year 1824 in which Tallahassee became the capital, Lafayette, the French general who helped America during the Revolutionary war, was awarded $200,000 and a township which might be selected anywhere in the public lands of the United States. His choice the township in the northeast of the capital of Florida, a part of which he within the present city limits of Tallahassee today.

The records was never able to carry out his plans for a city for there were but hundreds of countrymen were attracted Florida although this general who was already in Florida or who was about to come. Not about this time was Prince Murat, son of the King of Naples and Caroline Bonaparte, sister to Napoleon. In Tallahassee Colonel Murat is believed to be called, met and loved Catherine Gray Wilkinson who was a niece of George Washington. This lived near here for some of the remainder of his life. The beauty and accomplishments of the princess and the charm of the Murat home are the subject of many stories.

Haunted Home

Many romantic tales are told of the unquiet and experimental nature of Prince Murat. While his wife was visiting a friend and he was alone in the castle and gave orders for the horses to be hitched immediately and departed. Later the coachman who had a premonition of trouble in the air refused to obey orders in time to save his master from being shot by a Spanish guard. Her husband's body was then sent to her and was buried in the old cemetery. Her husband's body was then sent to her and was buried in the old cemetery.

Mother Nature was generous with Florida when she passed around the wonders of the earth. Wakulla Spring, 26 miles southeast of Tallahassee, a spring which is reputed to be the largest spring in the world, is a prime example. From the cavernous mouth of Wakulla Spring flows 166,000 gallons of water every minute. The great spring nestles in a setting that has been lavishly endowed with natural beauty. Its crystal waters, 185 feet deep, reveal the fact that a silver dime, resting on the bottom of the great bowl, may be seen as clearly as if it were but a few yards away.

Springs Are Beautiful

Divers have scraped the walls and bottom floor of the spring in search of relics and many of the five skeletons of the prehistoric mastodon largest of the species of elephants. These great beasts must have roamed the section in large numbers before they became extinct thousands of years ago. In the bedrock of the state Marion buildings, included in a zoological survey of Florida, a skeleton of one of these animals is displayed.

Among the beautiful fish make up the army of marine life in the spring. They swim in great schools as tourists pop the surface above, looking down and the fish raise bottom to give show boats

Dr. Clarence A. Mills Believes Weather Has New Theory About War

CINCINNATI, Ohio —(ACP)— A professor of experimental medicine at the University of Cincinnati has a new theory for the cause of war. He is Dr Clarence A Mills, who has made an intensive study of the effect of weather on military forces and movements.

Dr. Mills contends that the ease with which body heat is lost may be thrown off dominates the entire existence level of man." He points out that in areas of moderate temperature the body can easily dissipate the heat it generates thus stimulating bodily activities and increasing energy.

In hotter climates, where the warm moisture in the air is high, the body finds difficulty in throwing off its heat, resulting in a slowed vitality.

If 1917 had not been an unusually cold year in America the United States might never have entered the World War. And if the period from July, 1917 to the middle of 1918 had not been unusually warm in Austria and Germany, the Kaiser's rule might have won the war.

Dr. Mills argues that the disregard or ignorance of these factors in the movement of troops has played an important part in determining the world's history.

The most unfavorable for American war of 1812, America's entrance into the Great War—all occurred in years of subnormal temperature following years of moderate or abnormal warmth.

"Revolutions against tyranny, demanding greater freedom of individual action, have shown an almost uncanny predisposition to take place in cold, stormy years that come after prolonged warmth," Dr. Mills said.

Martini Goes Gay In Encore Numbers

Nino Martini went gay in his encore Monday night with two songs from motion pictures in which he has appeared. The World Is Mine Tonight and I Carry You in My Pocket were the popular pieces which he sang in response to one of the greatest ovations ever tendered an artist series guest.

Accompanied by Mr. Martini's accompanist was called upon for more than a dozen numbers which he and played a waltz of his own composition, "Il Bacio," music from Schubert's Rosamunde.

Other encore numbers by Mr. Martini were Vois Dan-Rose, Serenade of Toselli, Tambourin, Rose Mio and Goodnight, au Revoir.

Record Of Ten Years Shown By Personnel

Andrews Directs Bureau And Vocational Work For Florida State

Since its beginning ten years ago, the personnel department under the direction of Dr. Elizabeth C. Andrews has been carrying on its intricate work of personnel.

In connection with this work Dr. Andrews holds the positions of chairman of the scholarship and loan funds, chairman of the committee of rooms and reduced loads, and chairman of the college guidance committee. Dr. Andrews, the new staff member, has as her secretary Miss Helen Beatrice Hodges.

Personnel Keeps Record

The personnel office keeps a complete record of each individual student from her entrance on the Florida State campus until her departure. This record includes such things as the student's picture, her high school and college grades. A short record of the student's activities in her life is kept for a character study.

The process used in securing this data is as follows: Each professional workers interview the freshmen when they register during the first week of school. In this way the personnel worker attempts to help the student acquaint herself to college life. The interviewer tries to discover what the problem is worrying the student. Problems of educational guidance, social relationships, financial assistance, employment, loan, scholarship, extra-curricular activities are discussed. When the interviewer sees that she can help the student she observes the student to learn what outside influences are at work on the problem. When she discovers what is causing the difficulty, she tries to find a solution for the problem.

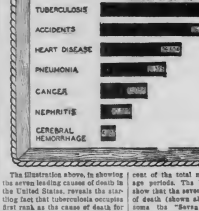
New Students Helped

The new student is also helped to make a study schedule. It is hoped that this schedule will give the student sufficient time for thorough preparation of her assignments and also provide for the recreational activities.

Dr. Andrews is in charge of all student employment on the campus, including the aid available through the National Youth Administration and dining room scholarships. The three year program has students employed under the N. Y. A. and 90 girls employed in the dining rooms.

Scholarships Given

Dr. Andrews, serving in the position of chairman of the scholarship and loan fund, is responsible for the awarding of scholarships awarded to any student. Scholarships and loans are given according to the individual's need and capacity.



She is also the director of Freshman week. In this capacity she attempts to orientate the new students into college life. Activities are arranged for them with the director of personnel, the student counsellors, faculty advisors, and college sisters. Floor parties are held in the dormitories and receptions are given in their honor. All facilities available are used to initiate and help adjust them to college life.

Vocations Discussed

As chairman of the college guidance committee Dr. Andrews gives advice on vocational problems. In this connection she gives a series of lectures in vocational and personality problems.

One of the most beautiful departments of her office is the placement bureau through which graduates and students are aided in procuring positions. The success of this service may be judged by the fact that 96 per cent of the graduates have secured positions through this office in the past two years

T.B.—First Cause of Death between 15 and 45

The illustration above, is showing the seven leading causes of death in the United States, reveals the startling fact that tuberculosis occupies first rank as the cause of death for the productive years between 15 and 45. Nearly 60,000 men and women in that age group died last year from this preventable disease. Tuberculosis accounted for almost 10 per cent of deaths from all causes during the 15 to 45 age period although it was responsible for only 8 per cent of the total mortality for all age periods. The latest statistics show that the seven leading causes of death (shown above), called by some the "Seven Horsemen of Death," continue to be led by tuberculosis as a robber of lives in these highly important years. Until tuberculosis ceases to kill our young men and women in such large numbers Christmas Seals must be used as ammunition in the war on the Great White Plague.

A few weeks ago 562 students of Florida State colleges were vaccinated against the "white plague." Next week the 126 who reacted positively will be X-rayed by a man sent from Jacksonville for this purpose.

The students and faculty at the A. and M. college were tested and the senior high school classes from Lincoln high were given their Dr. Evans and Dr. Poole gave the tuberculin tests and Dr. Logie made the X-rays. All of the tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades at Leon high were tested and 185 students were X-rayed.

Dr. Logie, who conducted the tests at the college, has stressed the necessity of X-raying yearly the positive reaction to the tuberculin tests who show no positive X-ray evidence. He also suggests that individuals should be retested yearly in order that the dread disease can be prevented.

Second Parents Day Reviewed

Homecoming Now Will Be Some Time In Spring

Parents gathered here yesterday from every section of the state to be honored at the second Parents' day celebration to be held on this campus.

Parents' day was instituted last year at the time the alumnae home-coming was discontinued. This program was planned in order that there might be a special time set aside for the parents to visit the college. In this way every possible courtesy is extended to them and special effort is made that they have the opportunity of seeing the physical plant, meeting the professors, and becoming acquainted with the various phases of school life here.

Although Thanksgiving is no longer home-coming the Gold Even battles still rage. The parents were catapulted into the midst of the friendly rivalries and found themselves confronted with bows on backs, girls shaking and yelling taunts and characters, and wild displays of red white, and purple colors, and green and gold combinations. They entered into the contest yesterday with varying degrees of enthusiasm but before the games were over most of them could be found with either an Even feather in their hat or a "beanie" cap proudly in evidence.

Dr. Evman Gives Talk At Education Banquet

Dr. E. L. Eyman, dean of the School of Education, addressed the annual banquet of the Duval County Educational association held Friday night in the roof garden of the May-Tower hotel in Jacksonville.

Approximately 300 people including many Florida State college alumnae, were present as Dean Eyman spoke on the "Responsibility of the Schools in Changing the Character of Our Culture."

Outstanding Graduates Do Varied Things

Records Show Them Busy In Teaching, Writing And Marriage

What do C. O. A. presidents, judiciary chairmen, Y. W. C. A. presidents, and college publication editors do after graduating? In a survey of these officers from 1921 through June of this year, as recorded in the alumnae files in the Personnel office, it was found that the majority have acquired teaching positions, many do graduate work, some are interested in newspaper work or social work, and some get married.

Although complete records were not available, most of the officers and their present occupations are given according to the years in which they served in office.

1926-27: Mary Jeanne McKay, high school teacher in Orlando, is state vice president of the Florida School for Deaf and Blind in St. Augustine. Frances Forth, Tallahassee editor, teaches history at Leon High school.

Blood Studies

1935-36 Katherine Blood, C. O. A. president, is doing graduate study at Columbia university. Margaret Lyle Hughes (Mrs. Ira) is also a teacher, English and science in Tampa. Ruth Perona, Plambeau editor, was reporter for the Lake City Reporter before taking a position teaching science. English and journalism in Cross City Sara Krentzman, Distaff editor, is librarian in Lake City. Edith Webb, Flaridentro editor, is doing social work in Jacksonville. Lucy Gee Lewis, Y. W. C. A. president, went to Western Reserve for further study.

1924-35: Carolina DeMontigne was librarian at Landon High school. Mary Lou Wetherell, Y. W. C. A. president, is now Mrs. Oscar Rawles of Little Rock, Ark. Helen Mary Fritch, judiciary president, is teaching English in Jacksonville. C. O. A. president, is dean of graduate work in political science at Washington university. Martha Makemson, judiciary chairman, is studying in the New York university School of Retailing, store service school. Janice Borton, Y. W. C. A. president, is now housemother at the Florida School for Deaf and Blind in St. Augustine. Frances Forth, Flaridentro editor, is teaching commerce at Punta Gorda. Dorothy Hall, editor, teaches history at Leon High school.

Students to Visit Farm

Five psychology majors will visit the Florida Farm colony in Gainesville and the girls industrial school in Ocala Saturday.

The students, accompanied by Dr. Heath L. Wenkam, associate professor of psychology, are Marjorie Horton, Louise Cowan, Marguerite Boatman, Kathryn Pratt, and Kathleen Grupps.

"Mix-party" Tree

The "May-party" tree in Lewis Park on East Park avenue has been the scene of gay and varied Tallahassee Mayday festivals. Since 1844 the annual May party decoration while the English settlers began in memory of May Day in the old country has been held beneath its moss-draped branches.

In 1905, when the State Normal school, established in 1887, was changed from a school for white women to the state board of education to the board of control it became known as the Florida A. & M College for negroes. Because of an appropriation of 15 students, this school has increased to a total of 1,000 personal contacts to such an extent that during the academic year 1934-35, 1,000 students received instruction from the college. The campus, beautiful and situated on a gorgeous looking, consists of 350 acres, a part of which is continuously under cultivation.

Church Has Centennial

The Presbyterian church, which celebrated its centennial in 1932, was on several occasions used by negro women and children from possible Indian attacks. The group with the exception of a few few benches were destroyed by subscribers.

In the original deed the north balcony which has been left intact was reserved for the slaves.

Welcome Parents— How About Some Criticism?

In conjunction with the rest of the campus the Flambeau extends a welcome to the parents who have come up here for the "Parents Days" celebration.

While we hope you like the beauties of the campus—for it is a lovely spot, all told —we hope that you will offer your criticism of anything you do not like. We hope that you will make an extensive tour of the physical plant of the college. Go through the dormitories, the kitchen and dining hall, the gymnasium, the auditorium, the class room buildings, the library, and the infirmary.

We hope that you will investigate any phase of campus life that you wish to and report your findings. We hope that you'll visit the various departments, that you'll consult ourselves with the survey committee enumerated last year. In visiting the dormitories and observing the off-campus life we hope that you'll realize the need for a new dormitory. Not only do we hope that you'll realize the need but that you will help the oldest chain a new residence hall. You can be of invaluable help if you'll write your senators and representative at Washington concerning an appropriation.

"Social Diseases" Are Brought Into Open

Almost simultaneous with the renewed nation-wide fight against tuberculosis comes a concentrated attack against the "social diseases," as they are popularly called. And with this action against the spread of the venereal diseases comes a plea for more education particularly among young people of high school and college age.

In line with this widespread agitation for more open discussion of syphilis and other social diseases the college press in many parts of the country is doing its part in the education of college students. At the Intercollegiate Newspaper association of Pennsylvania, at its meeting this month organized an anti-syphilis campaign to be carried on by its member papers. Its purpose is to bring information to the collegiate world.

Although the rate of venereal diseases among college students is low, possibly the lowest of any group, according to United States Public Health Service, there is a need for enlightenment. These students who leave college for the outside world go into a world where the percentage of social diseases is much higher. And they should go knowing just facts that until recently were either ignored or whispered about. Syphilis has been considered a disease contracted by people of the lower standards of living, but now its presence in every class of society is recognized.

In this fight we must square ourselves with facts and stands and we must [illegible] social sentiment [illegible] of opinion [illegible] campaign of work, which [illegible] of social college [illegible] with the laboratory [illegible] a number of institutions, [illegible] community and the United States [illegible] are made available to the students. I am [illegible] satisfied in to know that we have a campus full of healthy morals, however, I should [illegible] feel more secure at ease to know that the institutions their children attend are progressive in matters of health. It is foolish to associate any feeling of indignation with Wasserman tests. If there are cases among students they should be discovered and cured if possible.

Florida State college has made available for students this year the tuberculin tests which have been given all over the state. Following up these skin tests will be the X-rays given students who reacted positive to the first test. Next, it is hoped, Wasserman tests will be made available.

Florida State college is doing its bit along education lines at the meeting next week of N. S. F. A. At this time a forum will be held on syphilis in all its phases and in addition to student speakers Dr. Sarah White, resident physician of the college, will take part. She will explain the nature of syphilis and the various tests which are used to determine its presence. During the open forum she will answer all questions asked. In this issue of the Flambeau the Inquiring Reporter has interviewed students and faculty on the subject of making Wasserman tests compulsory on the college campus.

Why Not Combine The Two Demonstrations?

The height of Thanksgiving festivities seems a poor time to do any rational thinking about anything. The whole world is caught up in a gala celebration spirit. The two demonstrations seem to embody this spirit. Yet this very time of celebration is the time to look at these two major entertainments objectively in terms of what they cost. Facing the facts we are inclined to conclude that a combined demonstration would save time, money, energy, and at the same time it would bring all the talent of the college together in one production.

This is not the first time a combined demonstration has been advocated. Editorial writers, deans, professors, alumni, and participants have suggested it in the past. Even students who have not participated in the demonstrations realize just how much time and energy are spent in the writing, casting, directing, and rehearsing of the productions. A combined entertainment would also cut down on the cost. There would be one set of scenery, costumes, and stage properties instead of two. More important than any of these advantages would be the fact that the production itself would be one which would combine all the talent—writing, singing, dancing, dramatic, productive—of the college, both Odd and Even, into one superproduction.

Opponents of the idea of combining the two demonstrations make several points. First they say that the two entertainments as they now exist foster the traditional Odd-Even spirit which seems important in adding color to our college life. They feel that some of the "pep" of rivalry would be taken away if the demonstrations were brought under one production. In answer to this, we would point out that in actuality the demonstrations are not rival productions now. No one decides which is the best entertaining. The cheering sections and Odd and Even "spirit" that accompanies them could still be retained under the new plan. Let the Odds sit in one half of the auditorium and the Evens in the other. Cheering might to be even more stimulated, as it is at the games, by the yells and songs of the rival faction. A clever script writer could handle the presentation of Odd and Even stunts at the end of the entertainment easily enough.

Looking at the thing quite seriously, it is well to remember that the red, white, and purple and the green and gold all combine to make up the scarlet and the gold. If a combined demonstration would give visiting parents and the majority of students a better production at less expenditure of time, energy, and money, then we would do well to consider the step seriously.

Our Concert Etiquette Questioned

Tonight marks the inception on this campus. When they do arrive, students seem to forget that they are used to a certain amount of consideration. This week the university symphony orchestra's Nine Martini performances opened particularly obnoxious. Not only did they manage to disrupt the last numbers on the program by making a rush for the door at the end of the printed program instead of during encores, but they also mobbed Mr. Martini backstage to the point that he was unable to reach a reception given in his honor on time.

There have been a few other breaches of correct etiquette that are disturbing enough point out. In the first place there seems to be some confusion as to the proper time to applaud. For better results in the future it might be well for the social committee to announce that students should follow the same [illegible] in the matter of clapping.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

The Old Fox Again

Wooing both capitalists and proletariat by proposing a new spending bill that would benefit both classes without hitting many sore spots, Roosevelt moved himself once more to be a crafty fellow. He appealed to the upper classes by calling on them to ease the tying conditions of the lower classes and sought their capitulation to this plan by promising the chairmanship of this relief system to one of the capitalists. He appealed to the lower classes by seeking to wrest assistance for them from their heretofore "oppressors," the upper classes. He also, through this program, avoided accusations of dictatorship by putting the plan's execution not into his but into private hands and shunned Communistic leanings by offering no new proletariat without giving them any say in the matter. Roosevelt, in addition, intended to keep his hill from the claws of the Supreme court by framing it not a law whose constitutionality might be questioned, but a voluntary program for private industry.

Congress continued to make a fuss like a class of naughty children who were set to work against their will and were taking it out on the paper on which they had be wanted. The House thrashed lobby but valnly to get the war-time bill out of the grasp of a labor committee but was brought short by the committee's stubbornness and by the demand of William Green, A. F. L. leader, that the act either be rewritten or be dropped. The Senate, after arguing for a whole week over an anti-lynching bill, got out the crop control measure and also pondered the question of tax revision. In regard to the latter, the senators tentatively agreed on some reform, possibly along the line of a plan formulated by the Republican senior representative. Under this scheme, those on profits of $25,000 or less would be shaved and some modifications would be made on incomes greater than this.

In European circles, the Japanese began to rate higher as they drove further into China and tightened their bonds with the Fascist nations by trade agreements. After the capture of Hoochow, key city on the Chinese Hangchowpu line, the invading forces backed the Chinese into a new line running from Wushi, 26 miles north of Soochow, to Kiangyin, 25 miles away on the Yangtze river. The seriousness of the Japanese advance towards Nanking was attested by the evacuation of that city by Chinese and various foreign nationals. The Chinese government moved to Chungking in Szechwan province, and the United States embassy retreated to temporary quarters in Hangchow. At home, Japanese authority was concentrated in the hands of an "Imperial Headquarters."

And Others Say. . . . . .

This week Homecoming is being celebrated on the campuses of many American colleges. The college exchange papers recently have carried many programs for the entertainment and welcome of alumnae, with estimates of the number of old grads present. Thanksgiving games and dances apparently are to be used in entertainment in all colleges.

Lehigh university, at Bethlehem, Pa., is expecting 1,000 alumni to return there for a big week-end, with the football game of the year as the big attraction. To date 3,000 reservations have been made. The alumni office has plan social activities and decorations, flash, and electric signs, urging the victory of Lehigh in the ball game against Lafayette. To start Homecoming off in the proper manner, all the graduates will go to Saturday morning classes for the express purpose of talking about "the good old days" with their former professors.

Homecoming at Miami university was officially started Wednesday with a "fresh dig." This is the first freshman class day to be held in history of the university, the purpose being to determine through a number of contests between freshmen and upperclassmen whether or not restrictions on freshmen are to be removed. The freshmen team won in their contest with representative groups of the upperclasses, the entire class will participate in a ceremonial dinkburning, but if they are defeated, they will be obliged to remain on restrictions for an indefinite period. The contests are to consist of a sandbag competition, shoe race, greased pole climb, relay race, baseball and basketball games, and a pie-eating contest.

Other Homecoming festivities there are stated by the Hurricane to be "the most extensive the university has ever seen." Open houses are being sponsored by the fraternities, and there are dances by the Panhellenic council and the alumni. A pep meeting, bonfire, and parade will be climaxed by the Drake-Hurricane varsity football game Friday, with the annual Alumni Homecoming dance scheduled after the game. Saturday the Tampa-Miami freshman game will round out the program.

The University of Kentucky plans for the annual Homecoming dance to climax the activities for the alumni after a round of parties, tea, open houses, and the big football game. Winners and runners-up cups will be presented to the sororities and fraternities having the best Homecoming decorations. The freshmen at the university will participate in a pajama parade and bon-fire, built primarily for the burning of freshmen caps.

The Alabama Polytechnic institute at Auburn recently chose Miss Eleanor Wright, of Dothan, as "Miss Homecoming" to sponsor all events during the holiday. The Auburn-Georgia game, and the big dance in Columbus after the game.

The bonfire will feature the burning of the red and black jackets of the University of Georgia in effigy, and will follow a pep rally. The Thanksgiving game with Georgia will renew one of the South's oldest grid feuds.

Homecoming at Michigan State will also be climaxed by a football game, with Georgia Tech and Carnegie Tech. The State News

The visiting alums are probably sighing for their lost school days, while the memory of the dinner they so recently devoured, of the games which they are yesterday is still fresh in their minds. But alumnae, we ask you, do you remember—

It'll be rather nice to settle down Monday and have time to go to classes for a change. We suggest that the month out of the year be put aside for "return-curricular activities" and the rest of the time be devoted to going to classes, studying, sitting at home and such things of that sort. We also offer a prize to anyone who can prove that she is not involved —yes, we say involved—in at least one activity that will in no way help prepare her for "the world in which she must soon take her place."

Five scientists have labored hard and discovered at last that the brain emits faint electrical currents and that different parts of it "shut down for the night" ahead of others. If the brain were electrically lighted, they say, it would look like the successive winking out of lights in an office building. Which is all very well, but the idea hasn't got practical possibilities. No telling when lights flashes would start around here if we were unable to pay the power, in fact we'd probably have to go back to candles.

Author Discusses Labor Situation

The Labor Crisis
By Alvin Johnson

The new factors in our national life that led to a "labor crisis" by making the point of adjusting industrial relations more acute are discussed by Alvin Johnson in the autumn issue of the Yale Review.

The evolution of the workers from "raw human stuff" to "graduates of the public schools" has increased labor's independence, the author states. The New Deal, too, has taken part in making labor more powerful. It is no longer possible to starve out a strike, he says, if men strike, relief comes to the aid of the families. The Social Security act has removed the necessity of having to save for a rainy day and the Wagner act has made a direct attack on industrial discipline by declaring collective bargaining legal.

The recent clashes between labor and capital, Mr. Johnson believes, will not make necessary either a Fascist or Communistic form of government in the United States. He advocates a middle way, which he calls the discipline of consent, to replace our present industrial system of discipline by dictatorship. Stating that history has proved through the ages that a new conquest cannot be effected except by means of the conquered, the author says: "We shall have an adequate machinery for industrial peace until our captains of industry develop the political wisdom to inquire not what organization is what leaders are the most friendly to management but what organization and leaders are the most authentic bearers of the workers' consent. The problem, therefore, is one of building up labor organizations that command the confidence of the workers and also make contracts and keep them. (P. C.).

Man's Unique Discontent
By John Hodgdon Bradley

The emotion of discontent is the one by which has made a man different from all other animals, states John Hodgdon Bradley in the November Forum.

This professor of geology at the University of Southern California believes that no external pressure, but only a powerful inner drive, can ever make man remaining static. All old species have failed to survive because of rapid and automatic mode of action, but man's brain has not conformed to this precedent; his mind is forever changing.

Nature has set up strict standards of survival for the lower animals, but human adaptations "are not selected by man's fate at the hands of the welfare of the species but by whims for the temporary advantage of part of it." It is for this that has kept the human species in such confusion socially.

In conclusion Mr. Bradley brings forward the hope that this social confusion may some be overcome by internal adjustments, just as we have made external adjustments in our physical environment. He says: "Many of us would brand as fantastic the hope that some day the habit of human nature might be altered. But it is not fantastic to hope that it may some day be better directed." (P. C.)

Fear Hits the New Deal
By Max Lerner

The eagerness of both business and government interests to stop the recent downward trend of industry has stifled the usual desire for new things, Max Lerner believes, in his article in the current issue of the Nation.

This is, however, the long-trend prospect. The immediate there are elements of conflict and struggle in the ranks of both business and political circles. Morgenthau, the secretary of the treasury, still adheres to the idea of maintaining the budget while the Administration insists that only a real government spending program will arrest the economic recession and bring prosperity. The President himself appears to be trying to hold off from heavy direct government expenditures in order to effectively stimulate industry.

Business politics also follow two sharply different policies. Many who have capital for investment have been holding on to it, losing confidence in the future and preferring to keep it liquid in cash or to put it into safe corporate securities. But another section of the business community, perceiving that the country has gone too far for comfort, are now applauding government spending.

Lerner says members of both the business and the government interests are realizing they have to cooperate with each other. Mr. Lerner says: "Business does not fight the New Deal to the last ditch because that would be suicide. And the Administration is still trying to make capitalism work, and is wholly committed to that effort upon the willingness of capital investors to play the game."

Odd-Even Traditions Handed Down from Past Generations

Ten Years Ago Saw Odd Demonstration Cast Victims Of Floor Cave In During Rehearsal

By MABEL BENNETT

Ten years ago Thanksgiving time and five hundred Odds, one bed sieve, and one piano, were all thrown together in a caved-in floor.

In 1927 the Odd demonstration dress rehearsal was held on a cold night in what is now the music annex. A fire was roaring in the large stove in the middle of the floor, and the whole rehearsal was in full swing, when suddenly the floor caved in, dumpin' 500 girls, a piano, and a stove below. Although the resulting shrieks of surprise and terror would have frightened otherwise no one was hurt beyond a few bumps and bruises.

Rivalry Was Greater

What is now the Odd lantern parade was then the Odd palaces and lantern parade. That night towns people would swarm around the gates to witness the celebration, for Odd-Even rivalry was much greater ten years ago than it is today. Almost every event that took place on the Thanksgiving re- volved around this Odd-Even feeling.

In 1927 Sophomore day evolved into Torch night. Sophomore day started on a Tuesday and ended Friday night. At this time the freshmen had to do every thing the sophomores told them, from scrambling like an asy. rolling peanuts with their noses, and standing up in tiny chairs in the dining room as they ate their breakfast food with a knife, to wearing their clothes backwards and being docked in the fountain Friday night the sophomores put on an entertainment for the freshmen, who replied to this by singing a song composed for them by their junior advisor to the tune of a popular piece of music, telling the sophomores that they were good sports and were just waiting for the freshman class the next year.

The freshman-junior wedding, which has been replaced by Prally, was a big event of the year. The bride was the freshman voted the prettiest by her class. The groom was always a stalwart junior. All the attendants and junior ushers of the bride and groom were attired in formal dress for the most elaborate ceremony uniting the freshman and junior classes.

Annual Hell Fest Tradition

On April Fool's day it was an old tradition for the juniors to steal the seniors' caps and gowns and do everything they did for one day. Juniors started planning weeks in advance how to get the caps and gowns while the seniors had either hidden or locked up.

Because of having a junior senior prom there was given a junior-senior banquet. There were no men at this affair, which was a hold-over from war days when there were no men at home.

These girls of ten years ago, with the spirit around the unpaved campus, had to attend compulsory chapel four times a week, which was a recent reduction from seven times a week. On one particular day the seniors would march down the aisle in their caps and gowns to give a bit of variety to the usual program. Unlike today there were no cuts for convocation. To add to the list of meetings that had to be attended each week were the regular Wednesday night class meetings. Each class held a separate meeting which no one would think of missing, according to Miss Ethel Schonhorst. Then and the poll taken from the freshman class

Sophomore council acts as a link between its class and the campus as a whole. The members are expected to take the lead in helping to develop and carry out a well-rounded, constructive program of campus activities. These students help the freshmen and the girls during Freshman week by staying in the freshman dormitories to answer questions and give advice. Checking convocation seats, spend the night in the room of-campus lists, and taking care of the flag are just a few of the duties of this group.

There is a very interesting history behind the sophomore council. Sophomore council is a new name and a new organization on this campus; in fact, this is only the second year of existence under the present organization. Before this council was formed, there were two organizations which served the same purpose as Sophomore council does now. One group of

Our present gym suits came into existence this year to take the place of the former black bloomers, middie blouses, long black stockings, and dry or sexy it out to Negro wash- women. All washing had to be done and come at a certain hour. Ch- christ and Jennie Murphree halls were the only dormitories equipped with showers. The lights went out over the campus on an average of once a week and were apt to be off anywhere from five minutes to the remainder of the night. This was because Tallahassee was later than its light plant.

Bryan atrium was the most important gathering place. Miss Schonhorst declared that she wouldn't have thought of going to her room without first looking into the Bryan reception room. It was here that the college mother, who held the place of the dean of women, held an informal at home each Sunday night and gave talks on manners and etiquette. Due to the smaller enrollment it was possible to give more real parties and dances in the gym and receptions were held. Each month the Y. W. C. A. gave a party, usually a hike, for all the girls who had birthdays during that month.

Dating Differences

One big difference in the dating system of ten or twelve years ago and today is that then freshmen could have as many dates as they wanted. All they' ere allowed to do on these dates, however, was walk up and down in front of Bryan hall and walk up to the library or sorority house. There was no dancing in sorority houses on week-ends, and smoking was a shipping offense. A chaperon was required to go from the college and stay in Call ville every time there was a function.

At this time there was no prohibition. If a student over-cut, quality points were taken off for each class missed. The system of using quality points started 11 years ago. Until then no one had any cuts, and girls were excused from class only through the dean's office or the infirmary.

The curriculum has not changed fundamentally nor the courses of-

Leadership, scholarship, and service are the qualifications for the members of this group. The actual final selection is made by the members of the executive oublets of C. G. A. and Y. W. C. Two Hundred Turkeys Consumed by Two Thousand Hungry Diners in Festive Thanksgiving Meal

Two hundred turkeys were consumed by approximately 2,000 people in the college dining room Thanksgiving day. However, this number exceeds by only 800 the daily attendance of 1,500 at the noon meal.

At the 2,000 meals served daily throughout the year, 350 pounds of bread, 2,940 biscuits, 2,166 muffins, 2,360 cookies, 150 pounds of butter, 180 pounds of sugar, 5 pounds of cocoa, 3 gallons of honey, 1,440 eggs, 20 pounds of coffee, 3 grains of lettuce, 8 tallons of salad oil, 180 gallons of milk for drinking, and 25 gallons of milk for cooking, are consumed.

Besides the following articles are served they are served in these quantities: soup, 180 gallons; roast beef, 300 pounds; baked ham, 600 pounds; mashed potatoes, 600 pounds; green peas, 75 cans; and 2 pounds of butter; spinach, 500 pounds; green beans, 300 pounds; carrots, 800 pounds; peas, 300 pounds; pudding, 85 gallons; and 1,600 pieces of cake.

Unlimited planning and forethought are required to keep the dining room running with the smooth efficiency which is accepted as a matter of course by those who eat there regularly. At four o'clock, when the bakery has the bread, cake, tart bread, until lights flash, when the last dishes are washed, the kitchen is in a turmoil of activity. The meals are necessarily planned two weeks in advance because most of the food is shipped in and requires that long to arrive. The menu for any meal can be its are kept from year HTHTHT to year, after many statistics are kept from one year to another. After every meal a record of the tables used is made and these figures tally almost exactly from year to year. Then there is big week-end in Gainesville or Jacksonville when the student confidence fluctuates accordingly. All of which is taken into consideration.

Demonstrations Had Origin In Boisterous Presentations

Themes of Former Programs Varied from Gay Nineties to Murder Mysteries

Odd and Even Demonstrations as we know them today had their origin in 1923, when plays with prophecies of victory and the presentation of teams were given for the Turn Home. The Thanksgiving issue of the Flambeau that year states in a glaring headline that "Demonstrations Vary From Former Years."

Previously the presentation of Odd and Even teams had taken place in chapel amidst wholesale singing and shouting of college songs and yells. The earliest record of Thanksgiving games is in 1915, when the Seniors publicly challenged the Juniors to a basketball game on that day. Until then, class games and inter-mural rivalry had been held throughout the year, with chapel programs of songs and yells, and the "lining-up" of the teams. From 1916 until 1929 even these activities ceased while the college did its bit in the World war. When the tradition began to flourish again demonstrations were held on separate nights, as today in the form of short plays adapted from well known productions or on familiar themes, while the cheering sections played the major roles. In 1923 the Odds presented that for four years the Odds and Evens had been superstitiously for Tuesday and Wednesday games.

In 1926 both the Odds and Evens deviated from their former practice of adapting plays and travelled from the depths to the heights in original sketches. Odd Demonstration presented Satan in Hell burning the Even bones to show them how it felt. Meanwhile the Evens portrayed the splendor and beauty of Fairy Land in their own.

"Ali Baba and his Forty Thieves" was adapted by the Odds for the Even demonstration of Oriental background. In this production Even was represented by the help of an Oriental Sultan to receive a treasure chest which the Thieves had stolen. When the chest was found and opened, the Even team found that the Thieves' treasure proved to be its treasure. The Even ceremony was dramatized by the Even band some year, with Princess Victoree-ree and Princess Even-ee as Even brave and his warriors. After the Even band had played several times Victoree-ree he called out his warriors who had aided him—the Evens.

"Sing a Song of Sixpence" was the name of the Odd demonstration in 1929. The "Song" was climaxed with the birth of a pie, baked by the Odd Baking company, with the release of the Odd basketball and volleyball teams. The Evens traveled to Fairyland, Texas, for their theme to picture the Japanese maiden Victory engaged to marry Prince Even, but the wedding never came off. This sad fate was averted when Even found a rather large arrival of Captain Even who rescued her.

The gay Nineties formed the setting for the Odds in 1930. The story centered around Miss Mehitable Flower's Finishing School, where a student, Miss Victoria, was being sought by Bashful Bertie (Odds) and Steven de Feat. Of course Oddy won out. The Evens were mean while found in California City, where the capitains of the two teams had a battle royal. Odd and Ed Even, via for the hand of Miss Victory. Needless to add, Ed won the suit.

In 1931 Prince Evensky and his green-skirted Follies were going to be Odd," and was proved by the record of Glory Wynn, who the year before by the Evens, the Evens achieved the recreation of Winnless Victory from the Arcopolis in Athens.

Tallahassee became the backgrounds for the Odd demonstration the next year, which began with Indian and Colonial days to be presented by the present day. A treasure hunt given by Wee Even at his hunting lodge and continued in his yacht encountered difficulty in the form of Odd pirates and spoil. The Hunters overcame the Odds, however, to find the treasure chest empty.

1934 found the Evens in Egypt, fighting their way to victory over the mummies and the obelisks. The Odds meanwhile found difficulty with Alice Odd and Bluebeards who went to school to find the so-called highbrows played poker and drank. Both troubles were solved finally with the introduction of love and the Odds lived happy ever after.

An "Odd Murder Mystery" confounded its audience in 1935, with harrowing details of a lost necklace, blighted love affair, and a murdered gypsy to be solved by three master-sleuths. The Evens' audience was left in a half-way view of Odd and Even spirits, with Lady Luck bestowing her favors on the Even team in a "Odd-Even Numb Night's Scheme."

Last year the Evens marched with time through the ages from prehistoric days to the jazz-age. The specific theme was "A dream's pay to be Odd," and was proved by great men all through the ages. The basketball and volleyball teams participated during a futuristic prophecy of Even victory on Mars. The Odds meanwhile with political-minded, musical-comedy campaign parade for their candidate of Grand Old Party, Miss Nancy Petunia Plaint. Dur-ing the campaign, the Odd party proved its superiority and strength through various vote-getting schemes, electing its candidate overwhelmingly.

So have the Odd and Even demonstrations of years past presented many varied themes. From chapel programs to the presentation of famous plays to original sketches, by alumnae have the demonstrations progressed. The participation and confidence of their fellows, in neighborhood and class.

1910 Veterans Greet Visitors To This Campus

Five Members of Faculty Have Been on Staff Over 20 Years

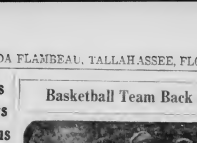
By MURIEL ROLAND

If a graduate of the class of 1910 returns to Florida State college campus for this year's Thanksgiving celebration, she will be able to greet at least five teachers who were members of the faculty when she was in school. These are Dr. Edward Conradi, Mr. J. G. Kellum, Mrs. Reubin Bullard, Miss Mary Smith and Dr. William G. Dodd.

Dr. Conradi, who came to this campus in 1909 to assume the office of president, has seen the enrollment increase from less than 300 to approximately 1,800. He attributes this growth to the fact that "we have always been characterized both the student and faculty bodies of the college."

Miss Rowena Longmire, who has been here longer than any other faculty member except Mr. Kellum, is the author of this year's cr it opened as a school of music and art in 1907 and structor since 1906. She has seen many changes take place. One of the most pleasing to her is the change in the attitude of the students themselves.

The financial development of the college has been largely in the hands of Mr. Kellum who became treasurer and business manager in 1910. Since that time the Manasserial duties of the present college system necessarily cover a large field. He took charge when he first assumed this office, and many new departments have been created in order that more efficient service might be rendered.



In 1906 Professor Mary Smith became instructor of mathematics and astronomy here. After more than 30 years of service Miss Smith holds the position of being the oldest member of the college faculty.

Dr William G Dodd came to Florida State college in 1910. In 1913 he assumed the dean of the School of Arts and Sciences

Students "Spoonfed"

"I expected to find a great vitality and outspokenness in the students. I believed that there would be more honesty and even a certain amount of vulgarity but I do not find this to be true . . . Profound immaturity," visiting French instructor at the University of Buffalo, thinks American college students are "spoonfed"—(A.C.P.)

Basketball Team Back in 1910

F. S. C. W.'s best athletes back in the days when young ladies were young. If they wore black bloomers that covered most of their limbs they were quite temperish to participate in such sports as basketball. Above is 1910's team which won from Stetson that year.

Voluminous Black Bloomers and Long Cotton Hose Were Garb of Fast Stepping 1910 Team Players

As compared with our present day short romper type sports costume for Odd-Even games, the voluminous black bloomers, heavy middie blouses and heavy black cotton hose worn by the F S C W athletes of 1910 may have looked funny but they had it all over us in lots of ways.

Those were the good old days when we had intercollegiate basketball on the books and F. S. C. W. State had a jamb up club. The girls were all in it, too, and while they were the toast of the campus, having just defeated the Stetson team, they took good care to let that prove.

And another feature for which we can score for the girl of 1910 —she was immune to hard scuffs on the head. Note the unusual hair dress. Imagine getting up with the breakfast bell and trying to screw that mop up on the way to the dining room!

But to get back to the sports —the basketball team of those days didn't have the advantage of a modern brick gymnasium with all the trimmings that we have today. They took their floor on the contrary, she sped across the court and aimed for a basket which was nailed to the wall in some part of our municipal building. How she missed it that was the old gym.

And naturally the old gals lacked the speed of the modern sports generation. It definitely would not have become the accepted, fainting blushing, maiden of 1910 to tear around the floor, sidling from one foot to half the time, with no poise, no self possession, lots of hair and waving arms and legs in an ungainly manner. The game of yesterday was dignified, graceful and ladylike. And even we remember the old arrangement of the team

Thinking is Called "Difficult Business"

AMHERST, Mass. (ACP)—College students are getting into a difficult business if they are urged to think. Dr. George E. Vincent former president of the University of Minnesota and of the Rockefeller Foundation, said in an address on "The Pain of Thinking" before the Amherst College alumni council.

"When we urge college students to think, we are getting them into difficulty," he said. "They are in the self-discipline arduous; they are facing the likely to get themselves thoroughly disliked. People resent differences of opinion.

"We see to perceive the essentials of a unified society and of good government as we do depend increasingly on an efficient democracy and society's status but of brains and character, who by their qualities can command the respect and confidence of their fellows, in neighborhood and state."

Reading is Blamed

"Horatio Alger and pulp magazine literature creates in the youthful mind a false idea of success, a belief that it's easy to marry the boss's daughter—hence youth attempts a disastrous short cut to happiness"—Merle Curti and Goodwin Watson, two Columbia university Teachers college professors in adolescents' reading matter for their dissatisfaction with life.

Former Stars Are Revealed Among Profs

Faculty Members Recall Sports Feats Of Younger Days

Although many professors at Florida State College for Women have not had the privilege of taking part in such novelties as Odd and Even games, they have frequently engaged in sports even more vital than these contests which hallow Thanksgiving day for Florida State college students.

For example, strange though it may seem, Mr. William Joubert once won a gold watch and a silver loving cup in an equilibrium test. The contest, held in Tampa, involved a 150-foot plank, 4 inches wide, which stretched across tennis courts. Over this the entrants had to cross on bicycles, the prize being given to the one who made the greatest progress with-out falling off. Mounted on his steed, Mr. Joubert won and advanced 1,000 other contestants to the city of the tiger and the cup—empty, of course.

Some years ago, Miss Rowena Longmire was a star swimmer and around the basketball court in one of those fluffy gym suits that Hilda Spradlin models in every demonstration.

Believe it or not, too, Mr. Shankewiz now smokes a briar pipe, rather than Camel cigarettes because as coaches are the cause of ter-mule instead of the mule. Professor Cody Moore, as a student, was somewhat harder on his pets, extremities than was Mr. Shankewiz, for he took great delight in baseball but, as he said, played "fetball" as well.

And believe it or not, Mr. Vance the sharp critic of Bob Dunbar and other sports writers, actually indulged in swimming and tennis. Mrs. Ruth Bullard (professional), also catered to the inquitous practice of Y. M. W. A. handball.

Still more remarkable were the recreational habits of Dr. Mark De Mott. Before he spent most of his time throwing a ball around the diamond, exploited most of it raising Cain in other fields.

To get back to more harmless sports, Miss Christine Scarborough, the scholar, poised in deep concentration over a golf ball? Well! And can you picture easy-going Dr. Williams getting to get over the bar, not for liquor but for the glory of dear old Alma Mater.

Another dignified figure, William Dodd, who is always "among those" attending conventions, used to be, believe it or not, "among those" competing in the 100-yard dash or in the broad jump. And his present Shakespearian eloquence which owes English master's degree and thumper one's backyard in many a game of soccer and baseball.

No one, of course, could guess where the serious-minded Miss Rachel Pitchford got the pet nickname of "Socky?" Nor would anyone believe that graduate-to-be Dr. Ralph Hinson used to spend valuable college hours trying to cruel to snag harmless little fish on ugly barbed hooks. It is not to be doubted, on the other hand, that Miss Mildred Finnegan owes the energy she expends in promoting Florida State to that she wasted none of it on athletics in the days of college.

But to give one last incredible fact, you never heard, did you, the story of a Mr. Ernest Smith who added to the distinction of his family name by dazzling humanity over the gridiron with a football tucked under his arm?

Cuban-Reared Student Gives Ideas on Youth of Two Lan

Madeline Curran Believes American Young People More Outspoken Than Southern Brothers

By ELIZABETH TURNER

"I am so afraid I will misrepresent something or give you a biased opinions of something about Cuba," were the first words of Madeline Curran when I asked her to talk to me about the youth of Cuba. Madeline, though not a native Cuban, was born there, of American parents, and has lived in Havana all her life.

"I would like to picture the youth of Cuba to you through comparison with my younger generation of the United States," she said, "but I do not feel that I really know American boys and girls well enough to give a fair or valid comparison."

Considers Herself Cuban

It was interesting to me to note that Madeline, throughout the interview, spoke of the United States as "your country" in the manner of a true foreigner. When I mentioned this to her she said that is just the way she has come unconsciously thinks of herself as more Cuban than American.

In speaking of the educational system of Cuba, Madeline emphasized the fact that the rather delicate caste system of Cuban society is reflected in every phase of the schools of the island. Mixed classes are all the public schools; there are no Negroes, Orientals, and Cubans. Naturally, with such a mixture, the Cuban children are the best children attend these schools. This is especially true for, to a great extent, the many private schools which so far surpass those public supported schools. Most of these private schools are mission schools organized by various denominations and are attended by the Americans in Cuba and by the Cubans of the higher classes.

Different Levels of Society

"Most Americans, I have noted, on refuse to realize that there are different levels of Cuban society. You all seem to take it for granted that they are all of a low class intermixed with the Negroes. This was wrong. The most aristocratic Cubans are so proud of their position and social standing that they would not even don't mix with anyone of their own social set and even frown on marriage or association with an American.

However, in speaking of education in Cuba, Madeline took pride to the private schools and the universities preparatory school, which stands to our high school and more rigid in its requirements than many of our colleges. University work in Havana is very difficult.

Most of the girls marry early age before their school has much chance to complete its course. In recent years, the girls of Cuba are beginning to realize that they are losing a great deal by this early marriage and are beginning to delay the marriage of this sort. For instance, one of girls' smoking has not been a common practice in Cuba. It is only recently that Cuban girls of the better class have been, to think it a crime to smoke. As for drinking, it has been used to wines all their lives they know how to use it. Cuban boys usually prefer beer for a few years before they acquire a taste for stronger drinks. It doesn't take much money to buy a good wine or beer and just live a leisurely life for several years before entering the military.

Rather Unscrupulous

When I asked Madeline about the Cuban young people as a whole she said, "There is only one thing I dislike in the Cubans, they are often unscrupulous. I suppose it is because they have been brought up so rigidly they have had to be like that in order to get ahead out of life. Cuban girls are adept pense to be hypocritical. I can see no other reason for this duplicity.

Odd Basketball Team Beats Evens, 28-18

Red, White, Purple Comes Out on Top After Swift Battle

PERFECT PASSES HELP ODDS WIN

Watson, Frosh Forward, Stands Out With Her Sensational Play

A quick-passing Odd basketball team with Cornelia Watson leading the game, reformed the Odd faction in their first Thanksgiving basketball victory at two years over an Even team. Throughout the tilt the Odd squad held a big lead over the Evens and at the close of the game returned victors with a ten point lead, 28-18.

The contest from the start to the end kept the high-spirited crowd on its feet with the perfect passwork of the Odd team. Beautiful long basket made by Watson, the sensational new Odd freshman forward, were nothing short of amazing. Though the Even squad was well organized and played good hard basketball, the Odds outplayed them in teamwork, passing, and shooting goals.

Odds Receive

In the first quarter the Odds received the initial throw-in when Fay Corey tossed the ball into the Odd territory. With clock-like precision the forwards worked the ball over to the Odd basket. Watson tried for a goal and missed. The Even guards gained the ball and sent it into the Even territory. Sandy and Louise Prine, swift-moving Even forward, shot for a basket but missed.

A personal on the Evens gave the Odds a free shot. Corey took the shot and missed, Hilda Spradlin making the ball out for the Odds. With close teamwork the Odds set the ball to Corey and Dot Colburn, fast-stepping Odd guard took the ball out when Louise Prine was called for traveling. The ball passed rapidly from one goal to the other with both Evens making wild shots.

After several unsuccessful plays by Watson, Watson scored the first goal of the game for the Odds. With the ball again on round Carmen Ezell made an unsuccessful attempt to score a short time Odds and Evens battled fiercely to get the ball into goals. Finally Watson received the ball and shot for a basket. Toe ball went out of bounds and the Even passwork sent the ball to Corey who made a beautiful long basket from the center of the court.

Evens Recover

The Evens recovered the ball and both Lyland and Prine shot for goals, but the ball went out for the Odds and then Vonnie Marchessera for the Evens. Watson received the ball and the Odds threw it to Watson who scored a fifty-fifty shot. Soon recovering the ball, Watson made another try for the Odds but the ball went out for the Odds and passed to Watson. A technical foul on Marchessera gave a free throw to the Evens. Prine threw the free and missed. Sandy received the ball and passed to Colburn who lost the ball to Prine. Prine missed a long shot for the Evens but as the first quarter was brought to a close with a 6-0 lead for the Odds.

With the opening of the second quarter the Odds and Evens came back on the floor ready for a fast game with the Even victor. With the toss-in Corey passed the ball to Watson who lost it to Prine. Colburn matched the ball for the Odds and Lyial received the ball but Watson threw to Prine, who passed to Frances Thill. Lyial shot for the Evens but missed. Watson and Colburn took the ball and passed to Green. Smooth passwork sent the ball sailing to the Odds' side Spradlin took the ball out for the Evens and threw to West. Back to Spradlin the ball went. A long pass to Lyial who sent the ball to Thill sent the Evens time for a pretty shot. The ball bounced

The next few seconds the ball was sent in a series of passes from

Repeats Will Be Given Of Water Pageant

Visitors Unable to See First Performance Are Invited

Repeat performances of the Miniature water pageant given Thanksgiving day by the Tarpon club and selected underclassmen groups will be enacted this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock and this evening at 8 o'clock. Visiting parents and other guests who were unable to see the show yesterday are invited to attend today's performances.

Harvest Time Celebrated

The pageant staged under the direction of Miss Betty Washburn, swimming instructor, and Valerie Hunt, student advisor of the Tarpon club, portrayed the American Indian and the Pilgrim Fathers as the celebrated Thanksgiving. The Indian theme was enhanced by the music which accompanied the swimming performances. The "Indian Love Call" and the "Water of the Minnetonka" were woven into the spirit of the show.

Four groups of students who staged before four tepees at the end of the pool dressed in red, blue, green, and yellow bathing suits went through the various formations which were planned by the club and which enacted the scenes read and written by Betty Dalland. Parents say the front crawl formation of the "Indians" in the totem pole relay. Following a simple overarm formation by ten students, came the Water Ballet which was a graceful formation of swift girls and the back crawl. Dorothy Colburn's fancy diving which consisted of dives from the pool's exact line closed the carnival as was the Tarpon club formation performed by 16 members of the club. The grand finale came with the spelling out in the water of P. S. C. W.

Swimmers Named

Cup Presented To Chi Omegas

W. A. A. Award Is Given During Convocation

For the second time in seven years Chi Omega won the intramural sports cup, which was presented by W. A. A. President Viola Reaves to that group's sports manager, Louise Brown. The award was given on the basis of points won in W. A. A. intramurals as well as in Tuesday's convocation. Other features of convocation were a talk by Student President Edith Atwood, and Miss Leia Venable, instructor in home economics.

D. Crandall used Nine Martini's musical ability as an example to illustrate the importance of the right work for achieving a goal. He mentioned that, when he practiced only 10 hours a day for 30 years to become the world's greatest violinist like Martini, Dr. Crandall encouraged students to make their particular endeavor with their abilities as well as with the physical to plant of the college during Thanksgiving.

One-tenth of the college population will be faced with the problem of how to carve a turkey effectively, began Miss Venable in her talk on how to manage the Thanksgiving bird. Proper and careful use of the knife and fork, fingers if necessary, will result in an artistic performance and a delicious repast.

A new feature of convocation was the College Government association board headed by Betty Neal, president. After Martha Lester, V. P. of the association, read a letter from the Red Cross of Rainbow, China, the student body decided that afternoon to have a tag day for raising funds to aid starving Chinese non-combatants. The money was to be given to the Red Cross for that purpose. Students discussed programming the handbook into two pamphlets; one of social regulations only, the other on the constitution and general information, but urged each student to tell her Senate representative what she thought of the proposed change.

Odd Sprinters Plant Colors

Red, White, Purple Wave On Six Buildings In Color Rush

The Odd sprinters were overwhelmingly victorious in the annual color rush held Wednesday morning, when they planted red, white, and purple streamers on six of the buildings and tied the Evens for another.

The Odds won the right to claim the Education, Physical Education, History, and Science buildings and Bryan hall and dismal room theory, while the Evens won the race for the Library where green and yellow ribbons are tacked. The race to the Westcott building was called a tie and both groups' colors grace the front door.

Entered for the Odds were Betty White, Westcott building; Roanna Posey, History building; Margaret Grinnell, Education building; Sally Lamb, Science building; Betsy Wiley, Library; Lois O'Haver, dining hall; Linny Lou Cassiter, Bryan hall; Marjorie Wells, Library.

Runners for the Evens were Peggy Bess, West Westcott building; Vivian Brooks, Library; Meta Helms, physical education; Louise Prine, dining hall; Ruth Agnes McClain, Bryan hall; Honor Coleman, History building; Ruth Arndt, Education building.

Odd and Even sport leaders are pictured here amid scenes of the great athletic activity which resulted in a victory for the Odds. Leaders are, lower l.-r., Hilda Spradlin, Evens, and Fay Corey, Odd, basketball; lower right, Marjorie Horton, Even, and Valerie Hunt, Odd, volleyball.

VOLLEYBALL, BASKETBALL REIGN SUPREME FOR A DAY

Former Odd-Even Games Show Background of Team Rivalry

Victories and Losses Between Two Factions Balances Back and Forth Since Beginning in 1914

By HAZEL ADAMS and RUTH ATKINSON

Way back in 1914 when the seniors challenged the juniors to a basketball game, they started something that has since developed into the traditional rivalry between the Odd classes and the Even classes and which has reached its peak of excitement each year at Thanksgiving time. Not only freshman and junior teams come up against the sophomore and senior teams to decide the supremacy of the basketball and volleyball courts.

The senior team of 1914 upheld their challenge by a decided victory over the juniors with a score of 26-6, and therefore rang up the first victory for the Odds. This decision was duplicated the following year. The Evens redeemed themselves in 1916 only to lose to the Odds for the next three years in a row. However, in 1920 the Even classes came back to prove that "them bones could rise again" and won three games for four consecutive years. In the game of 1921 those bones almost stopped their rattling when the Evens were seized with a bad case of overconfidence due to their 22-6 lead at half-time. The wearers of the red, white, and purple were quick to take advantage of the slack in the Even defenses and succeeded in running up 13 points during the last half while the Evens added only four points to their score. Their early game luck ran out for the Evens and the final score of 26-15 gave the green and gold the right to wave victoriously for another year.

A new sport was added to the Thanksgiving day program in 1923 when the two teams met in volleyball in addition to the usual basketball game. That year the Odds and Evens captured the volleyball honors but lost their hard-won basketball supremacy to the Odds. The next year the decisions were reversed with the Odds taking the volleyball by a four point margin, and the Evens swamping their opponents under a 62-30 score in basketball. The next year the Odds kept their basketball title and the Evens burst on to their volleyball title. In 1929, the Odds made history by closing the Evens out entirely and walking away with the highest scores in both the major sports. The basketball win margin was only one point, however, with the final score standing at 33-32.

Wins Tied in 1936

Therefore, in 1930, after 15 years of Odd-Even competition, the number of wins was tied with each team having six years victory and four years of divided victory to its credit. That year the red, white, and purple came through to break the tie by winning the volleyball game 34-13 and the closely contested basketball game 23-16. At the half the Evens had a two point lead over the Odds, and during the last two quarters the score see-sawed back and forth, but the Odds managed to cinch the game in the last three minutes of play.

The year of 1931 saw the Evens more than double the Odd score on the basketball court to win the game for the first time in four years. In volleyball the Odds won by a three-point margin. The green and gold banner waved again in 1932, when the Evens overtook the early game lead of the Odds and won, 29-20. The Odds again took the volleyball game. The following year the teams traded places in the win column with the "bones rising" on the volleyball court, and the "weary bones" pulling through on top in the basketball court.

Evens Win 1934

In 1935, the Evens made a clean sweep of the games for the first time in the history of team competition. In basketball they took an early lead and managed to hang on to it throughout the game although the final count they held only a three basket lead. In volleyball the story was the same, with the Evens taking the first point and keeping out in front all the way. The score at half was 11-6, but the Odds came back flashing and the green and gold managed to win by the very slim margin of one point.

Last year the united Even classes watched their teams take both the volleyball and basketball wins for the second consecutive time. The games were closely contested, and the Evens managed to keep down to defeat. The basketball score was 21-18 and the volleyball count was 28-22.

Wisconsin Studies Grades

Statistics at the University of Wisconsin extension division show that persons from 40 to 49 years of age are better students than youths of 15 to 18. The oldest students received 26 A's and three D's in college cou es, compared to 17 A's and 13 D's for the youngest. (ACP)

Day Students Are Organized

Club is Formed to Help Town Girls Adjust

A wail often heard around campus is "I'm only a day student."

The day students are those girls who live at home and attend college classes during the day. For the reason that they have one under the college government rulings, it is consequently they do not become as closely connected with the school as other students. So the Day Students' organization has done much to erase the unfavorable feeling that exists for day student and the campus student.

In 1934 through the combined efforts of the day students themselves, the dean of students, and the officials of the college government association, the Day Students' organization was formed with the expressed purpose of helping the day student find her rightful place in the college.

In its three years of existence town residence particularly fits them. Among these duties have been the provision of transportation for college activities, and the housing of vis iting college groups. The faculty advisors are Dr. Ralph Bellamy, Miss Ruth Schornherst, and Mrs. Dorothy Breen. The present officers are: president, Mattie Lou Love; vice president, Mary Emily Parker; secretary-treasurer, Dorothy Brock; social chairman, Emma Bradford Bellamy; activity chairman, Meta Helms; religious chairman, Mavis Stradley; publicity chairman, Margaret Greene; parliamentarian, Elizabeth Jinks; and Mary Ann Outlo, representative to the system for freshmen.

Evens Conquer Odds, 44-23, at Volleyball

Class Finals Gives Seniors, Freshmen Win

Odds Ahead in Basketball And Evens Tops in Volleyball

The senior class, retaliating from a hard fought basketball tilt lost to the freshmen by a margin of 13-16, fought its way back into the limelight with a volleyball victory of 35-16 over their sister class, the sophomores. These games, the finals in a series of class contests, were played last Friday night at play night.

With the Odd and Even rosters leaving no doubts concerning their enthusiasm for the outcome of the basketball conflict, the freshmen and senior teams each played a hard and fast game to bag the finals class championship.

In the first quarter of the game the seniors gained a 10-point lead over the freshman team. The senior team continued to roll up the points during the second quarter of the conflict. The half found the score 7-4 in favor of the seniors still holding the lead.

Toward the end of the third quarter the freshman team came to the forefront with a startling recovery to surge ahead with the score 12-8 in their favor. Fighting with all its efforts, the freshmen, using perfect teamwork, held their ground to triumph 16-13 over the Even senior squad.

In volleyball the seniors winning first serve, made four points before they were stopped by the sophomores. The ball then changed sides several times before the seniors broke loose in a scoring serve streak which netted them eight points. The sophomores, trying valiantly to overcome this lead, held them to an average of one point a minute for the half ended with the seniors leading 16-8.

In the second half the seniors came back doubly strong to start an onslaught of their former rampages, and to win in their own style 35-16.

Line-up of the senior team was Marjorie Horton, captain; Mattie Audrey Cooper, Betty Ostlund Charlotte Engstrom, Frances Lewis, Marjorie Raulerson, Kathryn Pratt, Marguerite Sjostrom and Mattie Lou Love were also substituted at the half.

Line-up of the sophomore team was Louise Thompson, Connie Ash, Meta Helms, Kitty Ford, Lillian Alderdice, Martha Robbins, Elaine Fleischer, Ernestine Makemson, Janet Bellamy, who substituted at the half for Lillian Alderdice

Mad Scramble Seen In Dorm Color Rush

While Odd and Even runners sprinted towards the buildings to plant the green and gold or the red, white and purple on the doors, the dormitories were having their own battles for the highest supremacy. Suspicious hads appeared in doorways almost a half hour before the morning clock struck nine. Then rising bed finally sounded, assorted shrieks and other rushes tore down the hall to "get" certain rivals.

Divided rooms which housed members of both factions were the scenes of hectic struggles for supremacy. One member of the Odd color faction, with beautiful blue-black eye which she acquired in the color struggle, battles with her elbowing Even roommate.

Late risers snatched up anything that held the colors in a frantic effort to get their own offending rival colors. One green and one yellow sock graced the feet of another one green and one yellow sweater graced the form of another, another boasted a colorful wash cloth. Whoops of glee when a green colors pinned on the doors of rivals who walked out under the banners of the enemy.

Perfect Teamwork Helps Green-Gold Group Reach Victory

EVENS TAKE LEAD EARLY, HOLD ON

Horton, Hunt are Leaders of Teams in Annual Athletic Tilt

With constant diagonal passing, long range recoveries and dependable net plays which showed perfect team work, the wearers of the green and gold once again rang up a victory on the volleyball court with a score of 44-23 in the annual Odd-Even game Thanksgiving morning.

The Evens started the game by taking the first serve and won the point when Hounds slammed a hard drive into the back court. This point was a prophesy of the score to come for the Evens never lost their early lead.

Odds Recover

The Odds recovered on the next play and took the ball by a net risk only to lose it again to the Evens. After a long volley during which each team seemed to be the forgotten the ability of the skilful Even finally managed to take the point and followed it by another point won by a drop just over the net. Then the teams traded serves and points for the next few plays until the Evens took the ball from the Odds by a beautiful recovery from the right wall in the corner. Horton then took the serve for the Evens and won four straight points by an unrestricted game of serve to the base line and one up over the net placement.

The Odds then broke through the Even serve to score but dropped the next two on Even serve, and recovered again in a drop over the net. Hunt then won took the next two points for the Odds by two well-placed pick-ups in mid-court. Horton drove the ball out to give the Odds the point but in a row redeemed herself on the next play by skimming a low ball over the net that was not returned by the Odds. The Odds took the serve again by the same method and won the next two points with a drive over the net and two straight balls in the net. Hunt kept the serve and took another point by a placement. Mail over the net on the side line that wasn't even touched by the ball.

Then with only a few minutes left to play the first line of Horton started sinking the net shots that characterized her play throughout the rest of the game. Two points were chalked up for the Evens by an Odds' shot, then after the Odds had held the ball for the serve, Horton again came through with a net shot that just over the net. The score at the half stood at 17-8 in favor of the green and gold team.

When the Evens took the start of the second half, the Odds came on the court to overcome the fatal handicap held by the Evens and made a good beginning by scoring five points on their own service, only to lose the ball on a double fault. Then the Evens took the ball and the Even that showed perfect team work began to roll up points that raised the count against the Odds a few more points. The Evens took the ball after a long volley between the net men, and won the next point on a net placement by way out of the court by Cohan. After taking the ball held by the Even unreturned serves, the Evens lost the ball by a serve into the net, and had the ball given to the Odds by driving the ball out of bounds over the side line. After another long volley which the Evens finally stopped by a back court drive, the Odds made beautifully placed serves into the Odd court that were not returned. On her fourth serve, however the Evens were able to return the ball and Rickards put the ball in the back court to take the serve for the Odds. That was the only time during the entire game that the Even team failed to click.

Evens Step Out

After a serve sent deep into the Even court by Hunt, the Evens returned by the dependable diagonal pass. Whose net placement won the point. In a row. One point was won by a drive to the middle court and the next four by net play.

Church Groups Give Programs For Visitors

Worship Services Are Held for Parents Here This Week

Centering their activities around the visiting parents the various church centers planned entertainment programs this week.

At Ruge Hall, the Episcopal student home, there was a short Morning Watch to commemorate the fourteenth anniversary of the Rt. Reverend Frank A. Juhan as Bishop of the Diocese of Florida. From 4:30 o'clock to 6:30, Thanksgiving afternoon the students were "at home" at Ruge Hall to all parents, guests and friends of the students. The student vestry under the direction of Katherine Bacon acted as hostesses for the occasion. Riva Hemphill was in charge of those serving.

The Presbyterian students will give an informal tea at Miss Wylie's home this afternoon from 4:00 o'clock until 6:00 for their parents and friends.

The Methodist students had open house at their student home on Thanksgiving afternoon, and tonight they will have open house for all the friends and guests of the students.

The B[illegible] Student Union and the [illegible] Training Union combined had a sunrise service at 7:30 o'clock Thanksgiving morning at the F[illegible] Baptist church. Margaret Green was a speaker.

Thursday night from 7 until 8 the Baptist students were hostesses at a coffee honoring the alumnae and friends of the students. Julia Beckman, house hostess at the Baptist student union was in charge of the reception. Ton[illegible] the alumnae and [illegible] Baptist students will be given a party in the recreation hall of the student home. Dot McCullough, social chairman, and James Bi[illegible] will have charge of the party. Saturday night the alumnae will be guests at a slumber party in the student home, which will be followed by a sunrise worship service and breakfast Sunday morning. Mary Ellen Tharpe, president of the Baptist student union, [illegible]. Elsie Renfroe, devotional chairman of B. S. U. will conduct the worship service and Mavis McMillan, Sunday school president, has charge of the breakfast.

Arbitration Offered In Washington Strike

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (ACP)—Students at Washington university have offered to arbitrate the month and a half old building employes strike at the school because "the picketing is a black mark against the university, unless we are sure that the university is standing behind a just cause."

Thus an editorial in Student Life, campus newspaper, explained its offer and suggested a student assembly at which both sides would be heard in the dispute which began September 30 when 39 janitors and building service employes went on strike.

Sigmund Barack, law student and former managing editor of Student Life criticized the editors for "pussyfooting" on the most important issue of the school year by failing to bring to light the pros and cons of the controversy.

Washington university has been placed on the unfair list of the American Federation of Labor because of the refusal of the university's trustees to enter into a contract with the local branch of the Building Service Employes union.

Colleges Hold Student Legislative Assembly

RALEIGH, N. C. (ACP) — The first student legislative assembly ever held in the south convened recently here when students from 18 colleges met at the capitol.

It was conducted exactly as the State [illegible]ennial legislature, even down [illegible] sprinkling of lobbyists.

Fif[illegible] senators were named for the u[illegible] house and 129 represen[illegible] for the lower house. A lieu[illegible] governor was elected to [illegible] the senate and the [illegible] selected a spe[illegible]se.

Th[illegible] considered the state [illegible] problems — tax[illegible] code revi[illegible] county [illegible] changes in educat[illegible] appropriations, the federal [illegible] amendment, and others that may confront the next [illegible] session.

[illegible] delegation sponsored a bill to make North Carolina's university the outstanding institution in the nation. It would be costly they admitted, but worth it in the end.

Statements on Syphilis Tests

Question: What do you think of compulsory Wasserman tests for all college students as a part of the nation-wide fight against syphilis?

Virginia Davis: By all means drag syphilis out in the open and step on it like a snake. We must depend on education to eradicate this disease, and college students should lead in the stamping out.

Mrs. Beatrice Beyer Williams: If a Wasserman test were necessary it would be a good thing to require it of the students. Certainly, the help who work around the college should be examined regularly.

Anita Jaekel: We owe it to the next generation. I would not hesitate to take such a test.

Viola Brooks: It is about time something is done about syphilis. The colleges should do their part to help check it by making such a test as the Wasserman compulsory. I would be glad to take it.

Ella Virginia Brooks: It is an excellent idea and I am all for its being compusory, especially with college students. College is an excellent place to start such a drive. It should be required of all students.

Mrs. Mary Bethell Alfriend: I think it is a marvelous forward step toward social legislation that is most needed. There is no way to check the disease except by such a test. There is no disgrace involved because it is so easy to pick up. It might save a young person untold trouble in later life and marriage. No matter what your family background you can catch the disease. It is the facing of a social problem that we have hitherto pretended did not exist. Anything that leads to the truth is fine.

Martha Lumpkin: I think a compulsory test is a good idea.

Dot Luther: Such a movement should come from the college group because they are not afraid to openly discuss and act, and they are not tied down by the social taboo that has existed against such discussion and action.

Alice Whitman: I am for anything that will help stamp out this dreadful disease. Florida State college should lead in supporting the American Medical association drive against syphilis.

Dr. Paul W. Shankweiler: It is a very good idea. Not only that, there ought to be a state law making such a test compulsory for a marriage license.

Harriet Duke: As a prospective medical pathologist, I am definitely for compulsory Wasserman tests for college students. This disease should be put on a par with cancer in an endeavor to stamp it out. Any clear thinking, progressive, intelligent person should urge this means of knowledge of the disease leading to treatment and cure.

Helen Daniel: It should be government standardized and required for all colleges, all students, every year.

Marguerite Brown: If they had this sort of test and it was compulsory, they could find out where the disease is prevalent and find definite grounds to work on against it.

Miss Esther Smith: I think it would be a pretty good thing.

Gladys Ware: It would be a very good idea for colleges to require all the students to take the test early.

Dot McCullough: I think the Wasserman should be compulsory for college entrance every year.

Elizabeth Korst: It should be made compulsory not only in colleges but in secondary schools, too.

Betty White: It's a good idea, there is too little stress on the need for wiping syphilis out. Compulsory tests would lead to more open treatment with less stigma attached to it.

Miss Elizabeth Lynn: The test should be required of everyone. It should be carried on by the community, sponsored by the government. It ought to be carried on all over the country. Requiring the test of college students only would not necessarily eliminate it from campus as it is an infectious disease.

Leila Badger: It would be a wonderful thing. I think that every girl of college age should realize the importance of taking such a test and would be willing to cooperate.

Elizabeth Becknell: I think it is a good thing. The test can not hurt a person. It certainly is important to discover any instances of the disease so that others will not be exposed. This is especially true where people are so closely associated with each other as they are in college. Nothing can be gained by the ostrich philosophy of closing one's eyes to the existence of such things.

Hilda Spradlin: I think a compulsory Wasserman for college students would be a very good thing. I would submit to such a test gladly.

Felicia West: I think everything possible should be done to stop the spread of syphilis. Only by compulsory examinations could it be stopped.

Miss Evelyn Kennard: Following in the footsteps of great cities like Chicago who have made the Wasserman available to their citizens, it would probably be wise for American colleges to do the same.

Elizabeth Turner: I do think it is a good idea to have compulsory Wasserman tests. I think the larger schools such as Florida State college should take the lead in the movement.

Dulcie Cavagnero: I think it is a fine thing. There should be this protection for all students against the disease.

Alicia Meacham: I think it would be a very good thing to have the Wasserman compulsory here and on other campuses, too.

Miss Rachel Pitchford: It should be universal just as fingerprinting probably will become some day.

Nancy Rogero: Although it would be considered radical, it is undoubtedly progressive and necessary. If it is at all possible, it should be carried out on this campus.

Dr. Mark H. DeGraff: Why not put it on a basis of universal prophylaxis? Any group that can be easily reached by a relatively simple prophylactic measure should not only be willing but glad, from a standpoint of individual and social health to submit to those prophylactic and diagnostic measures.

Sarah Beth Davis: I say give it at least once a year. From compulsory tests in colleges it will become universal.

Carl Ahrendt: It is a good idea for the individual's own good and that of the community.

Dr. Guy Diffenbaugh: It is a good idea, particularly since so many negroes who may be afflicted with syphilis may be working in and about the sorority houses and the college.

Katheleen Gruppe: I most certainly do. I think if you had it compulsory throughout the nation one time, there would be no further need for making it compulsory in colleges. I think it is a fine thing.

Allison Harrison: Yes, I certainly do. It ought to be made compulsory before you come to college. I think it very definitely should be required.

Marjorie Raulerson: Yes definitely.

Evetta Means: Yes, I think so very much. Compulsory tests are the only way you will ever get this under control in this country.

Martha Lester: No, because I think students should realize the importance of the Wasserman test without being required to take it. An active educational program would be better. It is a very fine thing but students should be taught to recognize the importance of it to take the test without compulsion.

Rosalyn Baer: I think it is definitely a very good idea. I really do because the schools are places where the disease can be easily spread.

Margaret Walcott: I'm all for it.

Winnie Ewart: I don't see how it would hurt anybody.

Esther Showe: I think it would be a good thing.

Madeline Curran: I think it should be. Compulsory tests for syphilis should not be avoided. The problem of social diseases should be faced openly.

Polly Eveleth: It's not democratic to make it compulsory but opportunity to take free tests should be available to every student.

[illegible] Mattice: Yes, I think so.

[illegible]an Steffee: At first, people [illegible] to smallpox vaccination. Perhaps compulsory Wasserman tests in colleges will swing public opinion favorably.

Rita Henry: It should be. For students who are future citizens should be compelled to take the test. It will be a real aid to society to check the disease in schools.

Julia Rosser: I certainly do. If cases are detected in early stages and given treatment, the spread and mortality rate of syphilis will be greatly decreased. Because the young people attending the college usually come from the upper classes, less attention is apt to be given to the possibility of social diseases among this group. Many people are insulted at the suggestion of the compulsory Wasserman test but this is a false and dangerous attitude. Because of this attitude the spread of these diseases is increasing and the innocent persons affected the rate of death and insanity caused by syphilis has become a national problem of importance.

Anne Lange: I think this test is absolutely necessary. Not only would it be beneficial to the person with the disease but also to the health of all other students.

Frances Waterhouse: I surely do. It is unfair to the majority of students not to have a test of this sort compulsory.

Marjorie Jessup: Yes I do. Now people won't go take the tests because of common attitudes to-

Streamlined Chaperones Are Agnes Scott Dream

Chaperones at Agnes Scott college are going streamlined. A group from the senior class have been chosen by the Student Government association to "keep an eye on the young folks."

According to the freshmen, the ideal chaperone will be a senior who is attractive—but not too attractive — pretty perhaps, but never beautiful, who has an abundance of sympathetic understanding but not too much enthusiasm, who talk when there is a lull in the conversation between the girl and her date, who will enter into the fun but who will never, never, under any circumstances be more witty and attractive than the bright young thing she is chaperoning.

Students are hopeful, but there's the indisputable fact that date—that is, boy plus girl—plus chaperone, equals the well-known eternal triangle.

Unless, of course, boy friend brings along another man to sort of even things up. (ACP)

Various Gifts Are Presented By Each Class

Bas-Reliefs, Chimes And Sundials Are Among Presents Given

Gifts ranging from bas-reliefs to sundials and chimes have been given to the Florida State college by outgoing senior classes.

The first class to give a definite gift to the college was the class of 1910 when it left for all underclassmen copies of Donatello's "Dancing Boys" and Luca della Robbia's "Singing Boys," bas-reliefs, which are now on the walls of the reserve book reading room in the Library.

Two Classes Give Arch

The handsome arch at the front entrance to the campus under which many students walk many times each day is a memorial to the classes of 1916 and 1918. The style harmonizes with the Tudor architecture of the main building.

The classes of 1915 and 1917 presented the fountain which stands in the center of the circle in front of the main building and which some of the students insist upon using as a wading pool on the coldest of winter morns and nights.

Many of the classes have presented the college with funds for certain specified purposes. The class of 1919 presented a fund of $350 which is to be loaned to worthy students who need financial help to complete their college course. This fund has been placed under the management of the alumnae association. The class of 1920 gave $650 to be applied toward the student activities building which will be erected when the appropriation is made for it. But until it can be used, $400 of this amount is to be a loan fund, under control of the alumnae association. The classes of 1922 and 1923 gave respectively $500 and $542.08 to be applied to the student activities building. Both these sums have been placed in the alumnae loan fund for temporary use until said building is erected. The class of 1924 gave $565.36 to be applied to the student activities building. A loan fund of $500 to be used for students was given by the class of 1928. The class of 1937 presented $408 in a scholarship fund.

The marble bench and a sundial which are in front of Bryan hall were given by the class of 1821.

Bronze Doors Presented

The classes of 1925 and 1827 presented $704 and $506.95 respectively, to be used as a fund toward purchasing the heavy bronze doors for the main entrance of the Westcott building.

The Normal School class of 1921 gave two handsome light fixtures for one room in the Education building; that of 1823, a jardiniere for use in the Education building, that of 1922, a marble pedestal now in the Education building.

It used to be that there was only one entrance to the college which was the entrance at the top of College avenue. When they made a new entrance on West Jefferson, the class of 1933 gave $782.85 toward the erection of college gates at this entrance, and the class of 1935 gave $534.59 also toward this cause.

The browsing room in the Library was equipped by the classes of 1926, 1928, 1932, and the College Government association of 1930. The class of 1926 gave $450 for books; the class of 1929 gave $650 toward furnishing the room; the class of 1932 gave $500 for additional furniture; and the College Government association of 1930 presented $200 for books for the browsing room. This is a room especially equipped with an eye to the student's enjoyment of the better and more interesting books to be read.

Another class, the class of 1930, with their gift of $550, furnished the new Alumnae room. The classes of 1934 and 1936 contributed toward the erection of the campus chimes which are in the tower of the Library.

One of the classes gave $500 to purchase a silver service to be used for social occasions in the dormitories.

Methodists To Attend Meeting

Five College Students Will Participate

Five Methodist students at Florida State college will attend the National Methodist student conference from December 28-31 in St. Louis, Missouri. They are: Jane Dowdell, Ester O'Byrne, Pauline Flake, Marie Lewis, and Alice Royster.

The conference is a delegated meeting of college and university students and adult counselors and leaders who are members of the three largest branches of the Methodist church in America. The purpose of the conference is to reinterpret the fundamental principles of the Christian faith, to link these principles to the problems of the campus and the world, and to discover the methods for their application. This will be done through meetings and talks held during the convention.

The convention will be held at the Centenary Methodist Episcopal church, and student headquarters will be at the Marquette and Claridge hotels.

Miss Billie Ruth Currin returned Saturday from a week spent at Stetson where she conducted a study course with the Baptist student union. She worked with the council members and was a speaker at vespers every night.

The state Baptist training union convention was held in Tallahassee Tuesday and Wednesday. Mr. W. A. Harrold, south-wide Baptist training union worker of Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. T. V. McCaul, president of the Florida Baptist convention; Mr. T. F. Callaway, pastor of the First Baptist church of Thomasville, Georgia, were speakers at meetings held Tuesday afternoon and night and Wednesday morning and afternoon. Mr. Warner Fussell, officer of the Baptist student union at Gainesville led the music.

The Methodist students are planning to undertake some Sunday school classes with an underprivileged group in Tallahassee. The classes will be in the nature of settlement work, with the students aiding in conducting the classes. The details for the plan will be developed later.

Translators Are Needed

Students of foreign languages, take heed! Able translators could have averted a heated controversy now raging between Artist Rockwell Kent and the federal government. The dispute is over the content of an inscription on a painting Kent made in the federal building in Puerto Rico which, it is said, is designed to incite the Puerto Ricans to throw off the rule of the United States. The disputed passage is written in an Eskimo dialect, that the government had tremendous difficulty in translating.

Blank Column Appears In School's Newspaper

A poem containing the names of several of the teachers at St. Christopher's school, which was to appear in the student bi-weekly The Pine Needle, roused the wrath of the teachers—and indirectly the curiosity of the student body.

For in place of the poem one entire column on the editorial page of the paper was blanked out with a bold, black, "CENSORED."

The co-editor-in-chief explained that there wasn't time to fill the space with anything else before the paper went to press. (ACP)

The Social Week

Annual Dance Will Close Thanksgiving Festivities

The annual formal dance, sponsored by tha Cotillion club assisted by tha Village Vamps, will be held Saturday night from 8:15 until 12 o'clock in the college gymnasium. Bob Willard and his orchestra from Orlando will furnish the music for dancing. This affair will close the Thanksgiving festivities on campus.

Gym to Be Decorated

The gym will be decorated by the members of both clubs in a Thanksgiving motif with pumpkins, turkeys, and the Odd-Even colors.

On the floor committee will be Dr Marion Hay, Dr. C. P. Heinlein, Dr. Jennia Tilt, Mr. Royal Mattice, and Dr. Harold Richards.

Both the Cotillion club and tha Village Vamps will tap new members during the dance. While this ceremony is an annual tradition for the Cotillion club, it is the first time the V. V.'s have tapped at the Thanksgiving dance.

Pan - Hellenic Here Includes 17 Sororities

Fraternity System Begun At This College Back in 1904

Nineteen hundred and thirty-seven marks the sixty-seventh year of the existence of fraternities for women. These social societies are based on the same fundamental principles as those for men, namely: the achievement of good scholarship, high ideals, and social contacts.

17 Sororities Are Here

Seventeen of the 23 national Panhellenic fraternities for women are represented on this campus. The fraternities are ruled by the Panhellenic association, which is composed of representatives from each social organization. It is formed for the purpose of bettering fraternal conditions and for advancing cooperation between the groups. The officers are elected from the fraternities in the order of their installation on campus.

The present system of fraternities at Florida State College for Women was installed on the campus in 1904, when the institution was coeducational, under the name of Florida State.

There was an active chapter of the Kappa Alpha fraternity, and it was through the efforts of the members of this group that a group of girls received a charter from the national sorority, Kappa Delta, in 1904. It became the Kappa Alpha chapter of Kappa Delta named in honor of their coworkers, and was the first organization of its kind on the campus.

Had Room in Tower

The girls had no chapter houses, but carried on all business and social activities in their chapter rooms on one of the towers of Bryan Hall. The room on the second floor was used for all rituals, while the lower one was a reception room.

In 1908 Beta Rho, a local organization of several years' existence, was recognized by the national group known as Chi Omega. It became the Gamma chapter of Chi Omega, and occupied the other tower of Bryan Hall. In the same year a group colonized and was granted a chapter by Alpha Delta Phi, which later changed its name to Alpha Delta Pi because there was already a fraternity of the same name.

In 1918 Alpha Eta chapter of Alpha Kappa Psi was taken in by Delta Delta Delta and established as a chapter of that fraternity.

Three charters were granted to organizations on the campus in 1925. A group was recognized by Sigma Sigma Sigma, which became the fifth sorority here. This group has since disbanded. The Omega club was granted a charter by Sigma Kappa, and Alpha Omaga, also a local organization, was made a chapter of Pi Beta Phi.

Alpha Nu, a local club organized in 1923, received a charter from Delta Zeta, and became the Alpha Sigma chapter. In 1923 Kappa Alpha Theta granted a charter to Alpha Theta, a local Panhellenic organization, and it became Beta Nu chapter of that fraternity.

Zeta Tau Alpha Installed

Zeta Gamma chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha received its charter in 1924 It had formerly been Phi Epsilon, another local group. In 1925 charters were granted to Alpha Gamma Delta, Theta Upsilon P Kappa Sigma, and Delta Phi Epsilon, Jewish fraternity.

Omicron Pi, a local established in 1926, received a charter from Alpha Omicron Pi in 1828 and is known as the Alpha Pi chapter. In 1929 Phi Mu was organized from the local group, Alpha Epsilon. Alpha Xi Delta was given a charter, and Alpha Chi Omega was established from Delta Phi, a local.

The youngest national fraternity on campus is Beta Phi Alpha, which was formerly Chi Gamma, a local; it was granted a charter in 1931 and is now Psi chapter.

VISITING PARENTS ARE HONORED BY SORORITIES AT SERIES OF PARTIES

Many delightful parties, at which daughters play hostesses to their mothers and fathers, are being given during the annual Parents' Days celebration by members and pledges of the seventeen national sororities. This series of affairs, which began Wednesday night, will continue throughout the week-end.

Nino Martini Rambles Around Campus With Roving Reporter

Flambeau Office is Scene Of Mass Interview Of Famed Singer

By ARLINE LOCKHART
And PLIP TURNER

Suave, poised, darkly handsome Nino Martini, seated in a specially reserved chair in the Flambeau office Monday afternoon, parried a cross-fire of questions shot at him by a mob of college reporters and onlookers who interviewed him collectively. During the barrage of questions the college publicity manager took various photographs of the young singer with his interviewers for the Associated Press.

From the reporter was gleaned interesting bits of the life and personality of the versatile artist who has rapidly advanced to great popularity among American music lovers. Mr. Martini first came to the United States from Paris in 1926, entering the American musical world by way of the Philadelphia Opera House where he appeared for five years. Then concert, radio and the Metropolitan. Intermittently he has starred in motion pictures, just completing last month, "Music for Madame." When asked if he were starting work on another movie soon, he said "No, not now, thank God!" Of the four musical fields in which he has attained such success he prefers the opera and concert, although he would rather live in California than New York. His year's schedule is divided into four definite seasons: From October to December, concert tours; during the winter months, the Metropolitan Opera House; in the spring, broadcasting with commercial programs, and in the summer, cinema work in Hollywood.

Will Return to Italy

Next summer, however, Mr. Martini expects to return to Italy for his first visit and first vacation in three years. His family lives in "the town of Romeo and Juliet, the town of Shakespeare's two gentlemen," in other words, Verona. He admitted that he is an only son, but that he has three sisters, and chuckling, added that his eldest sister is married and has five boys, which is, he thinks, quite a family. Brushed with the subject of marriage and the articles printed about his ideas on this matter, he blushingly retorted, "I changed ideas. Unmarried? Oh, yes, sure, in a big way, really."

In comparing the musical appreciation of Italians and Americans, Mr. Martini said simply, "In Italy everyone loves music. They go not like concert there. All must be opera." Several of the Italy theaters are maintained by the government, but even in the smallest towns operas are presented three seasons of the year. All the operas are in Italian, even though he believes that radio and the motion pictures are playing all increasingly important part in creating a finer appreciation of the higher type music in the American public. In all probability motion pictures in the future will feature long length operas, but that will be the better known only as the American people must learn to love music before they can really love and enjoy it.

The Italian tenor, who before coming to the States interpreted numerous operatic roles on the continent, expressed a liking for all opera, but he is partial to the French and Italian. As for jazz, "It is only for dancing. They make me do it in radio and picture work." The question of politics elicited the response that he has not seen Mussolini and that he is "too busy with his career to pay much attention to politics."

Sees Campus

Upon leaving the Flambeau office, Mr. Martini was joined by his accompanist, Mr. Miguel Sandoval who is from Guatemala and who has been with the singer for four years. Together with members of the college music faculty and four roving reporters they set out on a tour of the campus. Mr. Martini's comment on the auditorium was, "It's cute!" He did not wish to see the library and insisted on walking to the gym since he had been riding in an auto all the morning.

Along the way student seeking autographs and Kodak candid camera pressed up everywhere. Signing the tiny slips of paper he handed to him, he smiled and sparkled and his smile grew broader as he remarked, "Paper must be expensive here!" Amazed at the interest in the visit and the fact that there are no bars in the college he asked "Why do you have no bars?" thereby admitting the subject of co-education on a friendly basis. He inquired about the classes we attended and seemed glad to take an English course, because, though he could speak many languages, he knew it "not so good at English." He went to school in Italy but confessed, "I hated school. I was dumb. They kicked me out because I cut classes and played cards."

Plays Ping-Pong

At the gym Mr. Martini and Mr. Sandoval were introduced by the ping-pong tables and proceeded to play a game with the singer and pianist, after abandoning their coats, in which they moved furiously back and forth across the floor. Mr. Martini said excitedly in Italian and laughed heartily when they missed a point. Mr. Martini declared that he kept knocking the balls out of bounds because "I am such a strong today." The bet was a dollar a game, but they broke even as the debt was cancelled. Mr. Sandoval commended playing ping-pong with a student while your opponent conducted Mr. Martini around the gym. He viewed the dancing class, viewed the pool, the stables, and tennis courts.

Prior to the concert there, Mr. Martini declared that he swims a little, but tennis and horseback riding are his favorite sports. He has his own horses and rides frequently. Gymnastics according to the artist, are good for singers, they warm you up. He was very much with a definite "no" when asked if he had a special diet or exercise routine. Nevertheless he does not eat dinner before he is to sing and immediately after a performance has a tongue and rye toast sandwich with a glass of milk. He has smoked the same American brand of cigarettes for four years and was very amused at our surprise to find that grand opera stars smoke. "I smoke a lot. Never before I sing, but I can't wait until after the concert to get my cigarette."

Refuses to Rest

Returning from the tour of the tennis courts we found Mr. Sandoval in tired from playing ping-pong that he had to go to the hotel for an hour's sleep before the concert. Mr. Martini, however, did not care to go back to the hotel, saying, "It is too lonely. I don't like solitude."

Enthusiastically he accepted the invitation that he attend a basketful sorority houses. Walking across campus, we were accompanied by an increasing throng of college students. More autographs. More photographs. More questions. Was this Mr. Martini's first visit to the U. S.? Mr. Martini has been in Florida several times before, giving concerts in Orlando, Daytona Beach, Miami, and Tampa. Had he been to other colleges? "Oh, I don't know. I have been to many—Washington, Duke, Lafayette—or, many, many."

Since he must protect his throat Mr. Martini sat in the solarium of the Alpha Delta Pi house where is was neither too warm nor too cold. Hollywood and movie stars were the topics of discussion as this girl wanting to know about her favorite actress and actor. Were the stars as beautiful off the screen as on? It all depends on one's idea of beauty, Mr. Martini pointed out, but he thinks the chorus and ensemble girls with the exception of Anita Louise, are the only beautiful women in Hollywood.

In the Pi Phi house the girls entertained him by playing some of their favorite songs and were in turn entertained with more talk of Hollywood by the artist. "They get me engaged, married, and divorced many times in Hollywood—like that," he said, snapping his fingers. He does not like to sing at a business. Back to his point, he told about the time Toscanini praised a violinist for his magnificent playing but could not understand why the man made such ugly faces while he was playing, to which the violinist replied, "I hate music."

Attends Reception

After the concert, one of your rambling reporters, still of an inquiring mind, followed the famous singer to the reception given by the Glee club at the Alpha Chi Omega house. There he entered the cloakrrie he couldn't wait-ter vet while he stood in the receiving line. Then he was literally mobbed for more autographs. Several of the language students had their fluency in French, Spanish, and Italian conversation with Mr. Martini. One student attempted her German, but the artist does not speak it. Nor has he ever played a role in a German opera. He considers it more difficult, however, to sing the Italian, than the French, German, or English, because there are so many different dialects. He complained that he became confused thinking in various languages. He talks in his sleep, but he is safe since when in Italy he dreams in English and when in America he dreams in Italian. He believes that in no other language are the words "I love you" and "sweetheart" so beautiful as in English.

Fame has its disadvantages. He likes the publicity as a matter of course but P makes his personal life difficult to live. "I cannot go where I wish, and I must be careful with whom I associate." He has been subjected to kidnap attempts frequently. "Chicago . . . it is the worst for that," he shivered. A new cocktail connected in California was named the Nino Martini cocktail, but said he knew nothing about it.

D.A.R. Organize On This Campus

Chapter Here is Fourth College Group

The organization of the Daughters of the American Revolution on the Florida State college campus last April formed the fourth college chapter of this organization in the country.

Approval to organize the club was granted by Mrs. E. M. Brevard, state regent of Florida. On April 27, 1937, Mrs. William H. Pouch, national organizing general, announced the acceptance of the college chapter by the national society.

The officers of the club were elected unanimously in April, 1937. They are: Virginia Brooks, regent; Mary Cobyr, vice-regent; Marjorie Judd, treasurer; Janice Wrankle, secretary; Elizabeth Bow, registrar; Madeline Duncan, chaplain; and Martha Jean Jones, historian.

Miss Brooks is a junior in the College of Arts and Sciences and is active in the public schools of Florida by taking various courses in education and psychology as well as directing the work of the certificate.

The School of Education, that division of th.. college set apart to train those educat on and training of educational leaders, has an enrollment this year of 603 students. Students in this division meet all requirements for the standard bachelor degree while they are getting their professional work. All other subjects of the college are taken.

The School of Education, headed by Dean William N. Stone, offers the A.B. degree in education or the B.S. degree in education to those students who follow the general four-year curricula in education, physical education, elementary education, industrial arts education, or nursery school education. In addition to this, a two-year diploma is offered in junior high school education, elementary school education, and nursery school education. The first year course of the student getting a degree is the same as organized that she can get a general idea of the possibilities of public education.

Offers Nursing Course

The School of Nursing Associates, under the leadership of Dean Margaret R. Sandels, has an enrollment of 353. This school offers courses dealing with the various phases of nursing and its relationships, family economics, the modern kitchen, textiles, clothing and textiles. A training course is offered for nurses which meets all requirements of the Florida State Examining board for nurses and the National League of Nursing Education. Upon satisfactory completion of the course the student will receive a B.S. in nursing. If she successfully passes the state examination for nurses, she may in addition secure the title of Registered Nurse.

The School of Music, which has an enrollment of 92, is headed by Dean Ella Scobie Opperman. This school confers the degree of Bachelor of Music upon those students who have completed the courses of the school in the listed major in applied music or composition. Those students who have completed the outlined course for public school music may take the degree, Bachelor of Music in public school music.

The completion of a course does in no case mean one year's work; the advancement depends on the intelligence, diligence, perseverance and the musical ability and talent of each individual student. Students in the School of Music

Varied Degrees Offered

Four Divisions of Florida State Give Students Excellent Opportunity to Major In Different Fields

By LUCY KELLY

The 1,773 students who enrolled at Florida State college this year had the opportunity of choosing one of four divisions of the college as a field in which to take a degree.

The three degrees, A.B., B.S., and B.S. in commerce, offered by the College of Arts and Science attracted 847 students. This division, headed by Dean William G. Dodd, offers an A.B. to those students majoring in such subjects as languages, speech, art, economics and the social sciences, and a B.S. in general science to those students who choose mathematics or one of the sciences as their major subject. Those students taking a B.S. in commerce are required to take courses in business, public business law, business English, accounting, statistics, and typing in addition to the integrated courses for freshmen and sophomores.

Graduates May Teach

Students who take their degree in the College of Arts and Sciences may teach in the public schools of Florida by taking various courses in education and psychology as well as directing the work of the certificate.

Alumnae Work Progressing For Florida

Variety of Activities Is Directed by Office Located Here

By MADELAINE CURRAN

The colossal task of keeping in touch with 5,000 alumnae living all over the world is Mrs. Laura S. Leslie, alumnae secretary, in charge of the work of the alumnae office. Mrs. Leslie's work involves correspondence and daily methodical routine work in the office.

Report Kept

Various types of alumnae reports are kept in this office. Everything from newspaper clippings to "post alumnae" names is contained in the files. There is also a list of the alumnae names arranged according to their cities and a sales on steel plates in the addressograph, a file which saves a great deal of time in addressing envelopes to the alumnae. The plates with the names written on them may be placed in the addressograph machine and the envelopes quickly run through.

The first alumnae club to be organized on the campus was in 1909. It had a membership of 30, and Dorothy Dubose Hathaway was the president. The present alumnae organizations of the newly organized club were in preparing of a constitution. Among the duties of the newly elected twelve, by laws, and the establishment of a scholarship.

Scholarship "ounded

For many years this scholarship ran under the name of the number one, until ten years ago when the alumnae members gave it the name of Miss Rowena Longmire. This scholarship which for years has given her services to the Alumnae association. Although at first there was scarcely enough money to back up the scholarship this carries a gift value. It is a $200 yearly scholarship. $100 of which is a gift and $100 is a loan fund. The loan fund began in 1919 with a gift of

Ticket Sale Ended For Annual Today

Today is the last time that annual tickets may be bought, Eileen Robinson, editor of the Flatacown, has announced. All four classes may purchase their tickets and make their appointments at the desk in front of the poinsettia. Seniors have been asked to return their activity sheets and all students have been urged to return their proofs right away.

$300 from that year's graduating class, but the total loan fund of today is $5,000.

Clubs Active

"Recent work of the alumnae show a decided growth in the association," says Miss Rowena Longmire. "There are now 26 F.S.C.W. clubs whose business is to work for the interest of the college in every possible way. These clubs are not confined solely to the South, one of the finest is in New York. About a month ago a new club was organized in Atlanta, Ga.

"Out of state clubs keep recent with entertainments and help raise funds for new projects. The function of the club in Florida state is chiefly to advertise the college and to attract high school graduates to come. They look out for patronage and for the legislators in their district informed of the advantages and work of the state college. They try to help people realize its worth and the fact that they are paying for it."

Work With College

Alumnae clubs serve as a link between the college and the alumnae. The clubs play an important part in the work of the alumnae association, because through them alumnae have the opportunity to work for the college and the association in their respective communities.

Prior to 1929, when an alumnae secretary was first employed by the association, all alumnae records were kept by the various officers of the association. In 1929, at the Golden Jubilee celebration at F.S.C.W., the graduating class arranged for the college to provide a room, which they furnished, for the association in the Westcott building—this being their gift to the college that year.

Aside from the scholarship loan fund, which has been in continued service for over 20 years and through which approximately 16 girls are yearly enabled to carry on their college education, several important projects are carried on by the association.

Award Given

In 1935 an award of honor was established. This award (first made in 1936) is in the form of a bronze medallion and is given to the alumnae who have brought distinction to themselves during wards social diseases. If it were made compulsory, much could be done in controlling syphilis, preventing its spread and in giving proper treatment to infected persons.

Dr. Coyle Moore: I think the test might be used for all of our population. If it were used on a nationalized scale the disease would be more easily checked. To do that, certain popular attitudes would have to be changed as to the social diseases. Hereto, the facts about them have been kept in arcanes of secrecy.

Marjorie Butler: I think that this is a very good idea. Last year a group of home economics students discussed this subject and a large majority decided that it should be compulsory. It would be beneficial to the health of every student.

Miss Curran loves the Cubandance and burns inwardly every time tourists make suggestive remarks with reference to the rhumba and other native dances. She says there is much beauty of form and movement in the true rhumba and only natives can render such a dance as it should be done.

"They also have 'books' in Cuba" she said, "but they never heard of that word. They call them rhumba palaces for the benefit of the tourists."

College Library Brings Total Number of Books Up to 66,000

Circulation Figures Placed At 12,522 for Last Year In Annual Survey of Facilities

By POLLY DOUGLAS

Growing with the total number of books up to the 66,000 mark with recent addition of 2,000 books to collection, the library at Florida State College for Women is nascent and efficient shelter for the many phases of library work required of the student body.

Last year the library circulated 12,522 books and as an additional 1,000 mounted more than 2,850 periodicals.

Reference use is increasing in one of the most beautiful buildings on campus the library contains various rooms for individual work.

Newspapers Read

The periodical room of the library is the most frequently used. Here are found the current magazines and magazines bound in the 8 magazines which should be used in this room easily kept. Students also miss the reading of their hometown newspapers while on campus because the college has 35 daily newspapers, 24 of these are placed in the periodical room and are easily obtainable.

Daily Papers Taken

The Tallahassee Daily papers, the Florida Times-Union, Tampa Morning Tribune, Gainesville Daily Sun, the United States News, Florida News-Journal, and the Christian Science Monitor. All newspapers are bound back are kept on file.

The library subscribes to 375 periodicals, 40 of which are duplicated. Such magazines as Foreign Affairs, Foreign Affairs, Current Opinion, Scribners, Literary Digest, Literary Digest, and other magazines pertaining to courses in the college curriculum are available to students for reference.

Bindings Provided

The reference room can be found the encyclopedias and general reference books arranged alphabetically and shelved. Space is provided for the shelving of books—fact and fiction—kept in the stacks. Here the students take books they wish to use them. Also the back issues of periodicals are kept, neatly tied and labeled and used for reference. Unbound issues are available to students for binding the material.

Reading Room Given

The reading room, a most attractive room, is the library. Situated on the third floor, it is furnished with rugs, deep chairs and floor lamps that give an appeal to the student. Here is found a large collection of books on travel stories, fiction, biography and poetry. The Browsing room is for the sole purpose of books and peaceful reading. It is cared for by two assistants and is open on Monday, Tuesday and Saturday afternoon, and evenings, and also Sunday afternoon.

Librarians Provided

The Library Science laboratory, on the third floor, has a collection of about 800 books for the library science students. A well selected group of children's fiction, travel stories, et cetera, is in this room very familiar to all those who do any amount of story reading is the reserve desk at the request of faculty members books from the stacks are placed to this room to be used by the students for special work. Books are checked out of the reserve room between 7:30 and nine-thirty each evening and returned before nine the following morning. It is a major rule to keep a "reserve book" overnight—a fine of ten cents an hour or portion thereof, is charged.

The library is manned by ten full time librarians who are thoroughly trained and experienced. Also 15 student assistants. This is always eager to help the students find the material they need. They also plan ways of making the library more attractive to the students. They do this across ways, one of the chief being the selection and grouping on display of books pertaining to the historical events, books interesting to freshmen, new additions, posters of educational value, etc.

The library has a very valuable and increasingly interesting collection of Florida material. In the maps, pamphlets, books on history, travel, fiction, documents, original plantation records, and diaries. Most of these are owned by the library but a few of them is an indefinite loan from a former student. This material, especially the original documents and the like, is on display in one of the several display cases from time to time throughout the school year.

Classical Dept. Housed

Very Diligently, the Classical department of the college is housed on the lower floor of the library. This department has an interesting collection of ancient Greek and Roman relics which are on exhibit from time to time. In this collection are three "tear vases" excavated from Italian tombs which date back to the period of the Etruscan kings. These vases were originally clear glass, but through the years they have taken on a luster which is the result of the chemical action of sand on the glass. It was from these vases that Tiffany evolved the process by which his beautiful Tiffany Lustreware is manufactured.

Tile Exhibited

Other interesting articles are found here for exhibition, among them a piece of mosaic tile from the pavement of Horace's Sabine farm, his villa in the Sabine hills, known by scholars as the place where he lived and wrote. A collection of old Greek and Roman coins dating back as far as B. C. reproductions in miniature of a number of statues showing the life of Greek and Roman women occupied in different tasks; a larger scrolls showing color reproductions of old manuscripts of the Bible and ancient authors; and two lamps which date back to the Christian period. One of these lamps is a "lamp of learning" from which comes the "lamp of learning" often used as an insignia on rings.

Astronomy Club Has Successful Year Of Study

Excellent Equipment And Varied Program Make For Active Group

The Astronomy club this year is enjoying one of its largest and most successful seasons under the leadership of Gladys Ware, president. This club was formed four years ago to fill the need for further knowledge of this subject which the regular course in astronomy was dropped from the school curriculum. Dr. Harold Richards, head of the physics department, is sponsor of the club and has been active in its guidance and sponsorship.

Two telescopes are part of the club's equipment and are both valuable instruments. The larger telescope is a five-and-three-eighths inch refracting telescope with eyepieces with a magnifying power ranging from 50 to 300 times. The smaller telescope is a two-inch telescope with a magnifying power of 32 times. Weekly meetings are held, alternating between business with indoor planned programs. At the semi-annual meetings speakers, both faculty and student, are presented and give talks designed to broaden the members' knowledge of the great progress being made in this field. On the telescopic observations are always popular, at which time the physical aspects of the moon, the planets, and many of the stars are studied. The constellations are pointed out as frequent naked-eye observations and the changes of the stars' positions are noted.

The two trips a year to camp are among the most popular features of the Astronomy club's program. These visits are always well attended and a great deal of work is accomplished because late permission is granted for study of the stars. After the customary steak dinner the club members fill the war canoes and watch the movements of the constellations from the point of Lake Bradford's surface. Afterwards, around a campfire, talks are given on legends and facts concerning the solar system and a discussion follows which lasts until late into the night.

Other officers besides the president are: Florence Evers, vice president; Sara Adams, secretary-treasurer; Marie Betty Russell, in charge of the telescope team; and Rosemary McDonald, in charge of the bulletin board.

Fall Flowers Are Supplied From Gardens

College Nursery Keeps Dining Room Vases Full of Color

By ESTHER SCHOWE

The chrysanthemum season, with its red, yellow, and purple flowers, is here. Proof of the fact is evident by the colorful bouquets of chrysanthemums, broomit from the college nursery, on the tables in the dining hall.

Of all the flowers grown, says Julius Steinfurner, the college gardener, roses are the most popular flowers for the dining hall. "I don't know why, but the girls seem to like roses best," he said in a slight German accent.

Gardener Is German

Born in Neubrandenburg, Mecklenburg, Germany, this congenial, gray-eyed, and rather short gardener has worked in the Berlin Botanical gardens, more commonly known as the Royal gardens, which belonged to the late Kaiser, in the Hamburg nurseries, and in the horticultural college at Konitz. After arriving in the United States in 1906, he became a caretaker on the Flagler estate at St. Augustine and West Palm Beach.

Since 1914, Mr. Steinfurner, with the help of negro assistants and a labor foreman, has been in charge of planning the campus landscaping and of managing the college nursery, which covers a territory of four acres on the southwestern end of the campus.

Nursery Divided

The college nursery can be divided into three sections; the hothouse, the slat house, and the garden, rows of flowers, vegetables and shrubs.

The hothouse, of which the dimensions are 36 feet by 125 feet, is constructed of glass in order to let the sun in and keep the frost out. In it are kept half-hardy plants, such as pansies, sweet peas, and calendulas. On extremely cold days, heat can be supplied by a small wood stove which is in a corner of the building. Such an occurrence is rare, however, since with additional heat from the warm dirt, the temperature in the hothouse at noon is usually 80 degrees.

Propagation or multiplication of plants is done in the slat house, a building shaped like the hothouse and covered with thin strips of wood in order to furnish a partial shade. In it Mr. Steinfurner keeps slow growing plants and shrubs, ferns, ivy, and and excellent collection of evergreens, all of which are eventually transplanted to various places on the campus.

Flowers Are Varied

The outside division of the college nursery is arranged in well-kept rows of English daisies, phlox, Shasta daisies, sunflowers, Mexican daisies, nasturtiums, chrysanthemums, hyacinths and roses, and a few rows of tomatoes, radishes, cucumbers, and spinach. The vegetables are planted merely to take up left-over space in the garden.

As the college grows, so does the garden grow. When Florida State college was quite young, a few rows of vegetables and flowers were kept near the nurses' home. When the college began enlarging.

Esteren and Spirogira Receive Spotlight This Week As Scholastic, History, Journalistic, Language Honoraries Reviewed

By ANNA LANGE

Thanksgiving with its games, demonstrations, and all the bustling activity that it brings into the index, but not the final determiner, for prospective members of Esteren and Spirogira. Odd and Even honoraries which recognize loyal participation in class activities. The ultimate decision for membership in these organizations and the twice other honoraries on this campus rests upon consistent hard work on the part of the student during her entire college career.

Odd-Even Societies Tap

Esteren, Even honorary, and Spirogira, Odd honorary, are the embodiment of school spirit between the Odd and Even classes. Their purpose is to keep this enthusiasm high during the whole school year. Odd and Even may call themselves loyal members of their respective clubs are issued bids to the organizations.

Girls who have proved themselves outstanding in both the Odd classes and have been "posted" into Esteren and Spirogira have been, since 1900, are: Flica Spradlin, Ann Mizell, Mickey Cone, Betty Ostlund, Kathryn Prall, Viola Brooks, Louise Geban, Louise Lingo, Esther Goodwin, Gresham, Frances Slade, Janet Wilson, Frances Lewis, Eileen Robinson, Evelyn Fisher, Sara Sealey, Marjorie Raulerson, Madge Dillon, Dorothea Marsh, Jean Lykes, and Elizabeth Ann Webb.

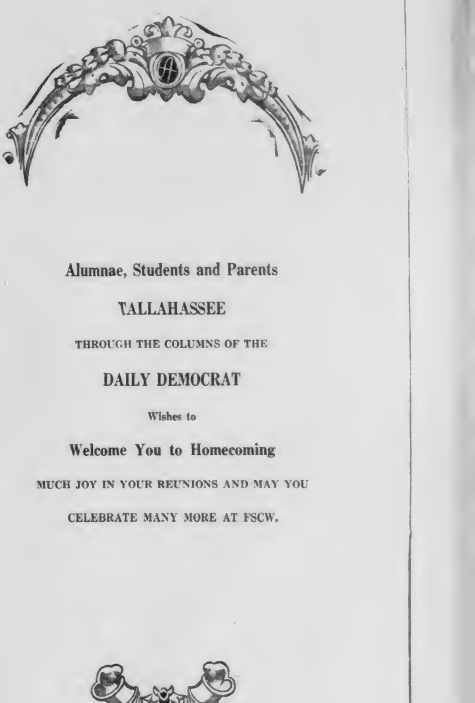
Girls who are interested in the home economics field, either for domestic or business motives, may become members of the Pi chapter of Omicron Nu. This organization, was installed on this campus in 1932 and admits members according to scholastic achievements. Eligibility is further determined by the required fulfillment of advanced home economics courses. Omicron Nu at the present time has only two members, Irma Day and Geraldine Mayers.



History Work Rewarded

Meritorious work in the field of history brings its reward to students by offering membership in Phi Alpha Theta, history honorary. This society, which was installed here in 1930, endeavors to foster interests chiefly in the social aspects of history. Members of Phi Alpha Theta are Ruth Prather, Mary Enslen, Mary E. Parker, and Esther Goodwin.

For the girls interested in foreign languages there are three honoraries. Eta Sigma Phi, Beta Pi Theta, and Phi Beta Sigma. The classical students, who have maintained a "B" average during five semesters of either Latin or Greek, are tapped into Eta Sigma Phi. Those students must have proven their interest in both the study and the appreciation of the classics. Phi Beta Sigma, a local Spanish honorary established here in 1927, awards membership to students who have a high general average and who have a high scholastic average in Spanish courses. Besides these requirements the society demands that the students have displayed an active interest in both the Spanish language and literature. The local French honorary, Theta Kappa, installed on the campus last year, selects its pledges on the same scholastic requirements as the Spanish honorary, and it has as its purpose the promotion of greater interest and understanding in French.

Members Listed

Members of these organizations are: Marcia Bellamy, Mary Grace, Grace, Geneva Nelson, Fredericka Roberts, Polly Ann White, Marie Anderson, and Dorothy Dietrich. Eta Sigma Phi: Evelyn Glazier, Elsie Andrews, Gwendale Perry, Geneva Nelson, Dorothy Marsh, Dorween Morrell, Martha Thomas, and Evelyn Fisher. Theta Kappa, and Mary Lopez, Jane Cate, Frances Howells, Rose Appel, Hazel Donegan, Elizabeth Finch, Mercer Warmack, Phi Beta Sigma.

Survey Courses Offered General View Of Field

Integrated Work Enters Second Year Period At Florida State

This fall, Florida State college entered the second year of the new educational program of offering integrated survey courses to first and second year students.

The primary object of the course as has been said, is to give a student a liberal background or knowledge in a variety of subjects before she enters into specialized work in any given field. Before this plan was instituted a student came to college and took an elementary course in which the subject matter was highly technical. She had no opportunity to discover which of the sciences, for instance, she wished to study, or whether she was even interested in any phase of this field.

Five Fields Offered

Five fields of study are offered in the integrated courses. Biological science which is a survey of biology, zoology, botany, and bacteriology and physical science which covers physics, chemistry, astronomy and geology are the two science survey courses offered. The humanities is a five hour course which offers three hours of literature, one hour of philosophy, and one of public speaking. The social sciences are offered in the two social studies courses, one of which is a study of the historical development of modern civilization and the other is a general survey of contemporary social, economic, geographical problems.

Courses Required

These courses are required for all freshmen and sophomores except those enrolling in the School of Music, and candidates for the B. L. I degrees. Here the integrated courses are substituted by those subjects required of the students to complete her work in a specific field.

Though it is a common idea that this plan corresponds to a general college such as the present program at the University of Florida, Mr. Doyle stated that these integrated courses are offered solely to give students a more liberal background of knowledge on which to base an education and are in no way a part of any general college project. The general college does not fit in with the set up of a girl's college such as we have here, he said.

Not a General College

Under the general college plan, a special college is set up with a dean at the head who selects his own teaching staff. In creating the integrated courses at Florida State college, nothing has been done "to disturb or change the divisional organization of the college as it now exists," the registrar said. The organization of an integrated course is left to the members of a specific field. Representatives from each department of a named field plan the subject matter and methods of teaching to be applied in the integrated course.

Exemptions Given

In full operation for the first time this year, exemption tests are being offered in connection with the plan of courses now in operation. Through last year, students were allowed to take such tests in English and modern languages. Those in the five integrated courses were inaugurated only this fall. The purpose of these tests is to allow any student who has already attained a broad knowledge in a given field to go ahead and take up more advanced work. Those students passing the tests are exempted from the corresponding integrated course.

the garden was shifted behind the kitchen, and finally to its present location. Because the tennis courts are so near the garden, another change in location is coming. Mr. Steinfuhrer hinted as the flowers are often trampled by people looking for their lost tennis balls.

Odd-Even Tradition Began With Athletic Game in 1910

Rivalry Between Two Factions Has Gathered Impetus For Twenty Years on This Campus

The Odd-Even rivalry that now also has the freshmen and juniors wearing red, white, and purple caps and "whooping her up" and the sophomore-junior faction sticking green, feathers in their hair and declaring "Them bones gonna rise again" had its origin more than 20 years ago, back in the days before the war.

Rivalry Began 1910

The rivalry started around 1910, when the freshmen and sophomores began to feel a certain kinship as opposed to the sophomore-senior alliance. It was not until 1914 that the athletic games became well regulated. The first Odd-Even basketball game was played in 1914 between the classes Odd and the normal school team. The next year the teams were chosen from students at random so as to show that the normal school had been added to the sports. Also color, purple, became a part of both Odd and Even colors. Later the Even element took to green and gold, the green being one of the college colors and the gold representing the college colors, garnet and gold. The Odd colors were selected in the same way: white for the class color and red, or garnet, for the college color, the normal school purple added.

their Alma Mater. Anybody who measures up to the requirement through being distinguished in any one of five lines is conferred with the honor award. They may be distinguished in the college of Arts and Sciences for literature, art proper, music, or for research work. The medallion may also be conferred for scientific advancement or for advancement in social and civic work. Outstanding work in any profession or general service to college and alumnae will qualify an alumnae for the receipt of the honor medallion.

Honor Roll Listed

Alumnae on the roll of honor so far are: Mrs. Ireta Van Doren, for journalism; Miss Katherine Risca Hahn, music; Mrs. J. W. McCallum, social and civic service; Mrs. Georgia T. Davis, social and civic service; Carol Perrenot Gunnison, music; Shirley V. Long, literature; Clara McDonald Olson, profession of teaching; Ingo Otis Hester, teaching; Mary Barley Sloan, profession of medicine; Frances Longmire, teaching and general service to the college and alumnae. One of the greatest interests in the Alumnae association now is in who will be the next to reach distinction.

Through the alumnae office, visiting alumnae are endeavored assisted in finding their former college professors and friends, and given the latest news about the college and members of the associations.

Last year an alumnae college was conducted by the association as a F.S.C.W. The association hopes to make such a success that it was unanimously agreed at the annual alumnae meeting in May to continue the alumnae college in the spring, rather than go back to the annual home coming for alumnae at Thanksgiving.

Membership Requirements

In order to be an active member of the alumnae association and to be eligible to hold any office, each alumna must keep her dues paid up to date. The regular annual dues are one dollar a year. A life membership a and will continue to be, fifteen dollars until the next annual meeting in May, 1928; after that it will be raised to twenty dollars. This life membership may be paid in yearly installments of five dollars until the entire amount is paid. Alumnae beginning life membership payment before May will be included under the fifteen dollar fee.

From 1920 till 1926, the publication of the Alumnae association was a small leaflet known as the "Alumnae News." For the last two years, however, a monthly paper in the Flambeau, compiled by the alumnae secretary, has been furnishing the alumnae news.

Perhaps the biggest undertaking the alumnae has ever carried on is the present one of helping to raise funds for a student-alumnae building.

first the Evens to the Odds. Watson recovering the ball from an unsuccessful attempt to score made good a short side basket. Hard playing, with the ball again sailing all over the court from one player to another led the Evens to call for time out.

On the court again Watson passed the ball to Corey who cleverly retuned it. Watson scored a good side goal for the Odds. The Even guards took the ball and passed to the Even forwards. Prine shot for score and missed. The Odds retained the ball and Lipscomb Walker made the basket. The Evens sent the ball to Thill who made a wild try for basket. Prine tried for free shot given to the Evens by a technical on the Odds. A second later a technical on Lytal gave Corey an attempt at free goal. Corey made good and the Evens and Odds fought for the ball. A toss-up gave the ball to the Evens. Soon the Odds recovered and Watson made another long shot from the center of the court. The Evens got the ball but Watson intercepted a pass, again shooting for score. Once more the Evens sent the ball to the forwards and Lytal made a basket. A personal on the Odds gave the Evens a free basket. Thill shot for it and missed. A toss followed by another one in quick succession led to a technical on Marchesseau. Walker made a pretty free shot for the Odds Regaining the ball, Walker passed to Corey who made a crypt shot for the Odds.

Evens Rally

As soon as the Evens recovered the ball, Lytal made a crypt basket for the Evens. Immediately following, Thill made an unofficial basket. With the Odds holding the ball again Watson made a pretty try for basket. The Evens retained the ball, Walker passed to Corey who made a crypt shot for the Odds.

Dr. Bellamy Absent From Color Racing

When the pistol shot rang out to start the runners around the fountain Wednesday morning the trigger was not pulled by Dr. Bellamy as in years past. This is the first year in a long series of Thanksgivings that Dr. Bellamy, who is recovering from an appendicitis operation, has not started off the Odd-Even color rush.

Horton. The Evens finally lost the serve when they touched the net on a return shot. Taking advantage of their serve, the Odds took the point on a beautiful placement just inside the side line, and took the next two points on hard serves to the center of the court that the Evens failed to return. The Evens resumed control of the ball when Horton made a net shot count, and then made good use of their service to take three points in a row by placements from the first line.

Williamson recovered for the Odds by picking up a placement from the side line and driving it back into the Even court, and then the next white, and purple team took another point before losing it to their opponents. The Evens clinched their third even point editely as the playing time drew near the end. Horton made the two points by sinking two consecutive volleys at the net, and when Gehan made a center court placement from the net The Odds retaliated by taking the serve and then a point, only to lose the ball to the Evens. The whistle blew ending the game as Lofland sent the second of her swift serves just inside the end right side line.

The line-up for the Even squad was as follows: Thompson, Gehan, Ford, Cortlund, Helma Lewis, Ash, and Horton. Substitutions: Cooper for Helma, and Pratt for Ford.

The Odd line-up follows: Rickards, Hunt, Molnar, Thomas, Harrison, Williamson, and Prine. Substitutions: Lytle and Fletcher.

Seven Years of Research And Writing Spent By Physician

After seven years of research and writing, Doctor Sarah Parker White has recently sent her book, "A Moral History of Woman," published by Doubleday Doran and Company, Inc., of New York, come off the press and go into the hands of the public.

Book Is Literary Study

A Moral History of Woman" is literary study, conducted along anthropological and sociological lines, of the advance woman has made toward economic and sexual freedom from prehistoric times. In the book touches the physical, social, and psychological side of the complex civilization of today. Woman's life, at the same time is a history of the change in the western world in its moral concept of woman's position. It discusses amidst which women have had whether in the shepherd tents of the Semites on the plains of ancient Troy, in the empire of Nero or in Victorian England or America. It traces the development of the glamorous and parasitic types into which Dr. White divides women. She then takes up modern times, when the growth of modern industry brought forth a new type which the author calls the proportionate woman, that is, one with knowledge and understanding her biological functions transcends it.

Dr. White's book is regarded as one of the first serious attempts of woman to understand and explain herself in the light of her history.

Rev. Worcester Comments

The author's breadth of vision, her clear insight into the past and present, made this book illuminating to the intelligence and cheering to the spirit." says the Rev. Elwood Worcester, rector emeritus of Emmanuel church, Boston, well-known writer and theologian who has written the foreword for the illustrated 307-page account. "Woman's story, as it be continues, "can combine the resources and the gifts which Dr. White reveals in the light of retrospect."

Dr. White, orthopedic physician and associate professor of hygiene at Florida State college, is recognized as a scholar and psychiatrist. She received her M.D. degree from New York Medical college and her Ph.D. degree from Syracuse university. She has taught at the Florida State college for women, New York Medical college and Syracuse university, and also has served on the medical staff of the

Speaker Cites New Frontiers Of Education

Recreation Leader Gives Convocation Audience Talk on Play

That there are countless educational frontiers to be faced by the teacher today was the theme of a talk by Dr. James Rowe, executive secretary of the National Recreation Association, who spoke at the Tuesday convocation. Dr. Rogers, who is visiting in the city was accompanied Tuesday by Ralph Carter, city recreation manager, and Joe Hall, teacher and trainer of health and physical education in the state department of public instruction. Mr. Hall introduced the speaker.

Every child has three birthrights which are, he pointed out the right to adequate education, sound health, and the right to wholesome play. The fulfilling of the demands of these rights should be the aims of modern schools.

Emphasizing the great problem of sound health facing the child of today, the speaker stated that 75 per cent of school children had physical defects. These defects, he pointed out, are usually unhealthy persons are unable to do work as well as they might and it is a duty of teachers and authorities to discover the nature of these defects and to attempt to remedy and help a student to overcome them. The problem of sound health is increasing as our civilization tends to become more and more mechanical and wearing on the individual's nervous system. In the last decade, this country has seen the introduction of such new diseases as bronchial college, has been resident physician at Syracuse college and Syracuse university, and also has served on the medical staff of the

Senate Elects Two Delegates For Convention

Ostlund and Colvin to Go To New Mexico For N. S. F. A. Forums

REPORTS GIVEN BY COMMITTEES

Handbook Revision Voted Down by Legislating Group Wednesday

Betty Ostlund and Nell Colvin were elected delegates to the N.S.F.A. convention to be held at Albuquerque, N. M., during the Christmas holidays at a meeting of the senate Wednesday afternoon. Arline Hendricks was elected as the alternate delegate. The delegates will leave Florida Christmas day to attend the five day meeting of the National student Forum associations.

Reports Given

Other business carried on in the senate included the report of Marjorie Jessup, who had been appointed on the point system, possibility of procuring a room or area next to the dining room where the girls might go to smoke between classes. Due to the lack of vacant space for the increased in insurance rates which the presence of a smoker room in the academic buildings would necessitate, there is no smoking room. However, there is a possibility of smoking being allowed in the day students' room since that room is located in the new five-story unit of the Westcott building. A convenient smoking area on the campus is being considered.

Time Studied

Ollive Alderman recently appointed time co-ordinator, reported that arrangements had been made to prevent the future interruption of any special program by the ringing of the chimes in the college library. She also stated that due to the three different systems of clock regulation being used to check the time, both college and dormitory clocks a standardized time is impossible. On the other hand, steps in the class rooms and in the dining room are already accurate.

Division Refused

A motion was passed that senate recommend to the handbook committee that the handbook remain as a book in preference to the division into two separate units. Further action on the revision of the 1937-38 handbook is to be taken by the legislative and the handbook committees.

Speech Majors to Give Joint Play Recital Soon

Becky Ashton and Dot Barr, speech majors, will give a joint play-recital Wednesday evening, December 15, at 8:15 o'clock in the auditorium of the Westcott building. "The Shoes That Danced," by Anna Hempstead Branch, will be presented by Becky. Dot will read "Hot Corner," by Ruth Forrest Emerson and Colin Clements.

Ushers for the recital are Janet Lockwood, Eleanor Mae Bell, Jerre Crook, Myrtle Butts, Margaret Roberts, Dorene Medlin, and Meredith Remiz.

Typical Working Girl Likes Her Job and Is Admired for It

Writer Finds Independence and Self-Reliance Most Frequent Attitudes Among Workers

By JEANNETTE MULLIS

The typical Florida State college student who is working her way through college likes her job, and her typical non-working classmate admires her for it. That is the attitude gained from the results of a survey of the working girl made recently on this campus.

Girls Are Frankly

Judging from the survey it was found that the average student who is working on the outside work feels that the working girl is to be praised, and most non-working girls admitted that they thought themselves incapable of making passing grades while carrying extra work. In this connection it is interesting to note that dining room girls and N.Y.A. students are scholastically among the highest averages on campus.

When asked if they liked their work, most non-working girls said they prefer not to work so as to have more time to study and to participate in extra curricular activities. One non-working girl, however, answered that she would like to work in a tearoom so that she would not have to eat her meals in the dining room.

Every working girl, when asked if she liked her job, answered in favor of her work. Dining room girls and N.Y.A. students pride themselves as enjoying their work N.Y.A. girls as a whole found their work interesting and stimulating and are of the opinion that they are getting something invaluable by working.

Like Meeting Faculty

One N.Y.A. girl stated that she liked her work because in the office she has the best to meets many of the faculty members and really gets to know them. "They are

First Official Signs of Approaching Christmas Vacation Seen in Dormitory Signs and Parties

First official herald of the approaching Christmas is the tree in the bookstore. Decorated with fairy colored lights which go on and off regularly, it is the center of displays which are designed to remind students that two weeks from today the real vacation begins.

Dormitory teas and floor parties will add much to the feeling of Christmas which is in the air. Already freshmen and childlike upperclassmen have begun to decorate the doors of their rooms with paper-dolls on chicken-wire. little Santa Clauses to be torn down as the great day nears, and other hopeful hints. One upperclassman used her tuberculosis seals to decorate her door. Another has a bright wreath and Santa in a red suit welcomes visitors with Merry Christmas. Added to the feeling of mirth of expectancy, is the talk of when the trains and buses leave. Wails are heard in the halls when some students discover that there is not room enough for them all.

Freshmen who have pledged sororities look forward to the Christmas parties and wonder about what they will give their "big sister." Freshmen in the dormitories look forward to the trees and the candy that they have heard hangs on them. Plans are being made to take buses this or that dress, to send clothes to the laundry during the holidays, to have "permanents" before greeting parents, and to get back to school in time for that 8:30 class on Monday, January 3, 1938.

Eyman Goes On Speaking Tour Of Southeast

This and Similar Trips Will Take Place Of F.S.C.W. Week

Dr Ralph L. Eyman, dean of the Florida State college for women leave Tallahassee Monday for a tour of the southeastern section of Florida. While away he will speak to alumnae clubs, Rotary clubs, and to student school assemblies.

West Palm Beach will be the first stop on Dr. Eyman's schedule. Miss Virginia Bird, Florida State alumna, is in charge of the arrangements during her visit there. While in West Palm Beach Dr. Eyman will address the alumnae club, the West Palm Beach Rotary club and high school assembly.

From West Palm Beach Dean Eyman will go to Key West, where he will remain until Friday. Miss Olive Allen, recently appointed time co-ordinator, reported that arrangements had been made to prevent the future interruption of any special program by the ringing of the chimes in the college library. She also stated that due to the three different systems of clock regulation being used to check the time, both college and dormitory clocks a standardized time is impossible. Business Group Holds Meeting

Three Delegates Attend From Florida State

Attending the convention of the Southern Business Education association held in New Orleans November 26-27 were Dr. Beulah Finley, head of the department of economics and commerce, Miss Lisella Richey, assistant professor of economics and Miss Ruth Memendes, instructor in the department. Miss Finley read papers in the School of Education and Miss Richey presided over a discussion in the Demonstration school.

Representatives of southern college and high schools were present at the convention.

The rapidly and radically changing trends, both as to content and methods of teaching in the business courses offered by colleges and high schools today was one of the topics discussed at the convention. Leaders in the business colleges represented are making elaborate surveys and experimenting with new methods that are passing the results on to other colleges and high schools.

Vespers for Christmas Will Include "Pageant Of Christ Child's Birth

Special Christmas vespers service, presented by the choir and at Florida State college, will be held in the auditorium Sunday, December 12 in the Augusta Conradi theater.

The modern dance class will present a Christmas pageant depicting the birth of the Christ. Different nationalities in typical costumes, all following the Bethlehem star. The various countries represented illustrate the worldwide interest in the birth of the Christ child.

Kathleen Gruppe is in charge of the pageant. Assistants on the vespers committee are: Jean Jernigan, Elizabeth Bowen, Dorothy Cook, and Gene Charlotte Kersh.

Varied Books Are Added To Library Stacks

Majority of New Reading Is in Specialized Study Fields

Noel Coward's Present Indicative, Vaughan Wilkins' And Dan Victoria, and John Erskine's The Brief Hour of Francois Villon, are among the varied new books included in the bi-monthly list of books added to the college library by the Library. Although the greatest number of books added to the stacks are in the fields of social science and literature and philosophy, philology, and philosophy, psychology, and religion, many new books in the fields of education, science, and general subjects have been placed on the shelves.

Wyly Talks to Debaters

Miss L. Margaret Wyly, of the speech department, will give her interpretation of one of the principles of debating at the next meeting of the debating club on Thursday.

The group plans to begin work on impromptu debates applying the principals which they have learned since the club started work. If anyone else is interested in taking debating now, it is still not too late to enter this extra curricular class.

Modification Of Cut Rules Is Announced

First Quarter Overcutting To Be Deducted From Second Period

CONCERNS ONLY FIRST SEMESTER

Students on Probation Will Automatically Lose Hours

Since this is the first quarter during which the cut system has been in effect the cut committee yesterday announced that a modification has been made in regard to the ruling concerning cuts in the first quarter. This modification, however, will apply to the first semester only.

Overcut to be Deducted

Overcuts in specific courses during the first quarter may be deducted from cuts in the same courses earned for the second quarter, the committee has announced. The ruling also stated further, if there is no overdrafts in the first six weeks period there will be no loss of credit at the end of the semester. Thus students who by overcutting the first quarter have not earned the full credit in their courses will have an opportunity of avoiding the loss of credit by distribution of cuts over the entire semester.

The committee has made the emphatic announcement that "no such allowance will be made in the future for overcutting within a quarter. The ruling was stated in the handbook." And it adds further, "Please do not ask for exceptions to rules."

Those who are on probation this quarter will automatically lose their credit hours, since they have no cuts to make up their first quarter overdrafts. Those who will be forced to make up extra credit hours by day or by taking additional course in the case of a major subject in a field where there are no more available courses the student, with the permission of her major professor, may take a class in a related field, according to S. B. Sleppy, registrar. In addition, Mr. Doyle said, credit will be given for a particular course taken in the major but the insufficiency of hours will have to be made up in some other course.

Penalty Incurred

Overcutting in classes incurs a penalty of one-tenth of the credit hours of the course. This ruling was made by the faculty committee for the fall term and is included in the handbook. The committee in its interpretation issued several weeks ago, however, made an exception in the case of students due to late buses, sleeping through classes and missing 8:30 convocations. The committee in its report stated: "No penalty will be taken on cuts if the student has cuts. If she has no cuts they will be credited to the number earned for the next quarter. If at the end of the first quarter she has not been repaid the case will be considered by the cut committee. These absences should be reported to the registrar's office."

Other changes have been made for special occasions and absences during examination periods, before and after holidays, death in family, and marriage in family.

College Glee Club To Present Vespers

The college glee club will present its Christmas vespers service on Sunday, December 12, at 5:30 in the auditorium. A program of Christmas songs will be given under the leadership of Miss Etta Robertson, director.

Assisting the glee club will be Mary Reeder, harpist, and Jessica Jane Mackey, organist.

2-Day Lecture Series Begins Next Thursday

Pierre Frederix to Give Four Addresses Here Last of Week

Pierre Frederix, author, world-wide traveler and Parisian, will begin the campus lecture series today for a two-day series of lectures. Monsieur Frederix who has traveled in Germany, Russia, Siberia, Italy, Indo-China, the United States, and lately Spain, is the last speaker on the college lecture series.

Thursday morning at 11:30 o'clock Monsieur Frederix will speak to French in the Augusta Conradi theater. That afternoon at 4:30 o'clock he will speak on "Political Parties in France," also in the Augusta Conradi theater.

The next day he will lecture at 11 o'clock on "The Economic Situation." The place for this talk will be announced later. The last in this series of lectures will be delivered Friday night at 7:45 o'clock in the Augusta Conradi theater on the subject, "Spain and the International Situation," with discussion afterwards.

Monsieur Frederix was educated at Lycee Condorcet and at the University of Paris. At the latter institution he received the Licence-es-Lettres in history, as well as the Licencie in Law. For his service during the World war he received the Croix-de-Guerre and became a member of the Legion d'Honneur.

He began his career as a writer in 1925 and has written a book on contemporary, political France entitled "Etat Her Parce eu France." He wrote also "Machines en Aide," a study on Soviet industry. In addition to these he has written several novels and contributed to a number of periodicals and daily papers, particularly "Europe Nouvelle" and "Le Petit Parisien."

Student Tells of Interview With Buddy Rogers in Miami

Arrives in Austin at Hotel Where He Is Playing And Forgets Questions to Ask Him

By ELLA VIRGINIA BROOKS

"Why not write an interview on an interview?" asked Audrey—when she discovered we belong down suggestions for a journalism article and after a few minutes' consideration,

"I took Journalism at the University of Miami as a freshman, and I've been crazy about it since. It never was printed, but if still have hopes. Maybe it would work!"

As I began to show signs of interest and ask questions as to where, when, and how, Audrey deposited her long length on my bed, and in her own way began an amusing account of a combined interview and escapade.

"We were attending a tea-dance at the Biltmore Hotel in Miami to which the University students were given admission free," she began, "Buddy Rogers was playing an engagement with his orchestra there, and that night he picked out the most attractive girls in each sorority. My best friend, Jane Austin, was dancing with our dates when she dared me to ask the man for an interview."

"But were you on the Hurricane staff at the time?" I asked.

"No, but I had a credentialization from the paper to ask for an interview. I just did it because Jay dared me to. I still think she didn't believe I'd do it. But, heedless me, I dashed up as he came into the lobby and said in my most poised manner, 'Mr. Rogers, I'm a student at the University, and want to ask if you will give me an interview for the Hurricane.' Much to my surprise

Syphilis Causes Probed During N.S.F.A. Forum

Resolution Made to Help State Wide Fight Against Disease

WASSERMANN'S ARE MADE AVAILABLE

Large Audience Listens While Speakers Give Facts of Menace

More than 200 students, center of statewide controversy, decided Tuesday night that the drive against syphilis on this campus must be carried on in as many ways as possible. In one of the larger N.S.F.A. forums ever held the students resolved that an educational program to bring the disease and its cure to the attention of the people as a whole will be continued until the seal of universal detection and treatment is reached.

Speakers Give Facts

Speakers, who told of the history and cure of the disease, were South. Florida, and the college infirmary, were Ruth Eyman, Barbara Hall, and Mary Emily Sasser. Dr. Sarah Parker White described in detail the many fluid tests which is used to detect syphilis in its first stage. She stressed the fact that trained people in a well-equipped laboratory are qualified to give any test. The cost of making syphilis as rare in the United States as it is in Europe, European countries would be no greater than the cost of the present treated waste.

Hospitalization, she explained, is only necessary in extreme cases. Ambulatory treatment is preferable. Office must be taught not to spread the disease in answer to questions from the patients. She also stated that although gonorrhea is not as prevalent as syphilis, it takes four times longer to cure the latter.

Treatment Described

Though women are more susceptible to syphilis during pregnancy, they are also more susceptible to cure at th a time, and should be encouraged to have the family doctor give careful following of treatment and produce a healthy child.

She commended the student movement to eradicate the disease and educate the general public to its seriousness and cure.

Ruth Eyman, in summing up the "Pathcraft" made in the South stated that perhaps the best-known experiment was that conducted by C. C. Pfeiffer at the

Group Proposes Five Year Plan Of Instruction

Miss Tryon Brings Back Report on St. Louis Council Meeting

A five year course of study and training for social studies teachers, including one semester of practice teaching, was one of the n e w e st and most important trends noticed at the convention of the National Council for Social Studies held in St. Louis last week-end, according to Miss Frances Tryon, of the demonstration school faculty.

The University of Pennsylvania is trying out this plan of training the prospective teachers four years of college to get a broad general background and one semester of practice teaching, during which time they will have complete charge of a class for the whole day. When this period of training is over, the students will be better equipped to teach social studies.

Another innovation is a new basis for selecting these prospective teachers. Only those with a "B" average in all of their work would be allowed to enter the school of education. In that way only those with a greater intelligence level could be teachers of social studies. The University of Pennsylvania is also leading the way in trying out this new idea.

At the convention there were many speakers well known in the field of training social studies teachers. Among them were Dr. Daniel Knowlton, of New York university, who has written several text books; Dr. Harold Wilson, of Harvard; Miss Mary O. Kelly, of the University of Chicago, who is one of the foremost persons in training social studies teachers for elementary schools; Dr. Rolla M. Tryon, of the University of Chicago, who has written books on teaching social studies.

One of the highlights of the convention was the presentation of the eighth year book entitled "The Contribution of Research to Teaching Social Studies," to which Miss Tryon wrote one chapter. It was learned that there was much room for research especially in the elementary field.

There were more men than women attending the convention. The field of social studies is the only one which can boast of having a gradual increase in the number of men instructors. Among the few representatives from the South Miss Tryon was the only one from Florida. The majority were from the North, East, and Middle West.

The National Council of Social Studies is a branch of the American Historical association and held its first independent convention last year in Detroit.

"How I had brains enough by then to ask him when it would be most convenient, I don't know, but he set the time a few days later for 4:a. I asserted, withdrew gracefully , and swooned into Baker's arms."

"But what did Inez say? I'll bet she didn't like you so alone, did she?" I questioned eagerly.

"Not Inez!" Miss Mallory. She immediately demanded to be taken along in return for transportation. The next couple of days we spent discussing the affair with the girls in the apartment, borrowing finery for the occasion, and deciding what to order if he asked us to have a drink. Our longest debate was on the advisability of having a dinner ale or a Tom Collins. We wanted something that wouldn't look silly and dumb, but we wanted something that wouldn't un to our heads, too. What we decided I don't remember, but he didn't ask us to drink after all!

"Of course our own clothes weren't good enough! We had to borrow things that didn't fit. I never forget the hats we borrowed —the silliest things that perched on our heads like bees. When we were all decked out in everything that wasn't ours, we climbed into Mercedes and started out."

Girl With "Mercedes"

"Who and what was 'Mercedes?' I stopped her.

"Oh, I forgot to tell you!" she exclaimed. "Mercedes was Inez's car—or maybe I should say what remained of her car. It was an Austin, painted red and yellow, with a capacity of seven people—eight if you squeezed. The roof leaked terribly, and we prayed all the way to town that it wouldn't rain. The side windows were missing, and the doors were crooken. We had to hold on to them to keep them from flying out and being disfolired by passing vehicles. We must have looked like Jacqueline College on a holiday!

"After parking Mercedes about two blocks from the hotel in order to spare the doorman embarrassment and to keep from shocking the inhabitants, we walked the rest of the way. In the hotel we found a waiter and told him we had come to interview Mr. Rogers. He ushered us into the patio where Buddy Rogers was playing for the tea-dancers. Found a table up close, and told the man we were there. Between numbers Buddy came over to the table and after greetings had been passed around, he asked us if we had thought of our questions.

"For a full minute I hadn't enough clear heads that we had to think of questions! I had to do well on the New York Times with my dad for a beginning! Finally I said 'no' in a weak voice so he laughed and told us to be thinking of some while he conducted the next couple of numbers."

"But what did you do?" I queried. "Weren't you shaking in your boots by then?"

Feel Conspicuous

"I don't have to tell you that! Those girls in their cheap, old-fashioned Christmas trees, supposed to be glamorous evening gowns, and all we could do was talk about how conspicuous we felt! I couldn't think of a thing to ask him, and was just about to talk Inez into surreptitious exit when Buddy, with a reporter from the Herald ambled over and made himself comfortable. It seems he had overheard our plight, and was offering his assistance. We practically fell on his neck with joy, but before we could ask him just what an Interviewer would do in such a situation, Buddy Rogers came back again.

"To make matters worse, Inez and I both started talking at the same time, stopped, and started off together again. After several attempts, I started in on what the Herald reporter termed 'the usual line.' I asked him his age, about Mary Pickford, and how he liked Miami all in one breath. All I remember him saying was: "Miss Pickford is a most attractive woman,' and 'I like Miami very much. The girls at the University are very beautiful.'"

"But what about him?" I demanded. "Is he still the dashing young hero of Alden's Irish Rose and the Buddy Rogers-Nancy Carroll team?"

"Oh, I was disappointed in him. He was nice, but he must be much older than he says he is because he has gray hair and looks a much older. He's slightly stout, but his features are well-modeled and he's still good-looking. We had taken along a lot of cards which the kids at the apartment wanted autographed, and he was really swell about doing them. He even got around to autographing a couple of beer-coasters for Inez and me.

Wanders Back, Forth

"However, people kept coming up and wanting to him, and he'd wander away to conduct a number, and would wander back. I was more and more embarrassed by the conspicuousness of our position, including the lack of escorts and the absence of an order. And the waiters kept coming and going around giving us the once-over! I was especially wearing on the nerves. We had been there hours, I know, but we didn't know how to conclude the interview or make an exit gracefully. While we hesitated, Buddy Rogers got up over the palms, and Buddy played 'Moon Over Miami' with a loveliness I shall never forget. I never hear that song without seeing the lights of him and our interview.

"We finally decided it was the proper thing to leave, regardless of conclusions and graceful exits. So we gathered up our autographs, settled our hats more firmly in their proper spaces, and promised him a copy of the Hurricane after thanking him for the interview. Once outside the hotel we ran for Mercedes and went home as fast as its condition and the traffic-lights allowed. We spent three hours at the kitchen table after composing that memorable occasion into verse form, and I think it was refused because we were not authorized to get the interview. Anyway, I'll bet the interview got his paper, and I have yet to see my individual attempt in print!"

"But what sort of an article did you write?" I asked, suddenly realizing that I had a realization that this was supposed to be an interview about Miss Mallory.

"Maybe I will, by," gasped Audrey, disengaging herself from the books and papers strewn across the bed and standing up. "For goodness' sake! If it was really my personal feelings about sitting there so long and being so embarrassed and conspicuous. And then we solid about how he looked and guessed at how we must have appeared as interviewers to him. Well, perhaps I'll break into print yet. If the idea appeals to you, see what you can do with it. It might help!"

Fall Frolics to Be Ushered In by Mal Hallet's Concert

Week-end Program at University Will Include Dances And Florida-Kentucky Game

By BILL JIBB

Fall Frolics will be ushered in this week-end at the University of Florida with the great maestro of the Pacific coast, none other than Mal Hallett, swinging the baton to the latest score of his band.

First he will give a concert Friday at 10 to 12 in the afternoon, and following which he will play for the dance, formal in attire, in the gym from 9:30 to 1:30 o'clock.

On Saturday the plans include a dance in the gym from 10 to 12 o'clock, to be followed again by with another dance from 8:30 to 12 midnight.

Hallet has played recently at the Cocoanut Grove in Hollywood, Cal., the Trianon, and at the Atlantic City steel pier where his band was the guest last summer.

His band features that artist of the reed instruments, Joe Carbone, who is considered also the bass violin and puts on comedy in instrumental solos. Buddy Welcome is the male singer and Teddy Grace, the female vocalist.

Hallett and his entire group will attend the Florida-Kentucky tilt, the last grid battle on the Florida slate for this season. And speaking of football, it is being rumored around that Mallory plans to play professional football. It is being denied on several fronts, but from his own lips he has come the statement he is going to enter the pro ranks of some outfit. Pop Warner, coach at Temple, recently made the statement in the press that Mallory was one of the best ball players in the South and in addition was a one-man backfield.

This past week Bro Kretzman and D. R. Billy Matthews departed for the Association of Col-leve Student Unions conference being held at Purdue university in Lafayette, Ind. While in this territory the two will visit a while in Chicago and other cities en route. They are expected to return here around December 15.

Monday, December 6, will find the University of Florida drubbing the unconquered Georgia Bulldogs and Louis Snetman, on the roster defending their side of the question. Snetman is from Lake Worth, Florida.

State Keys Kiwanis Elects Dr. Kurz

Trustees Hold Election In Gainesville

Dr. Herman Kurz, associate professor in botany, was elected secretary-treasurer of the Florida district of Kiwanis International by the board of trustees at the meeting of the district training school of officers held in Gainesville Wednesday. Presiding at the meeting was Mr. S. R. Doyle, registrar, who is the recently elected district governor of Kiwanis.

Acting as secretary and treasurer, Dr. Kurz will keep in close contact with the 60 Kiwanis clubs of the state and will handle the funds of the district. He will also serve as editor of the Florida Kiwanis bulletin, which is published bi-monthly. Mr. Doyle is business manager of the bulletin.

Dr. Kurz became a member of the Tallahassee Kiwanis club in 1929, and in 1934 was elected president of the local chapter. During 1935 he was chairman of the Inter-club Relationship committee of the Florida district.

Seniors Announce Christmas Party

Approximately 250 seniors, wearing caps and gowns and bearing lighted candles will march into the dining hall singing carols the night of December 15, preceding the annual senior Christmas party, it was announced today by Kathryn Pratt, senior class president.

After dinner seniors will be entertained in the residence hall parlors at a Christmas party given by the social directors. Carolers at the homes of administrative faculty members, and at the college infirmary will follow later in the evening.

so she said, "the most interesting people here."

Another girl, not an N.Y.A. student, who is employed in the library believes that in secretarial organization and set up in the library she is getting something that benefits her here and outside of college as well. "Many girls," she added, "do not know how to use the library and hesitate to ask for help. I know how to find what I want because I work here."

Still another N.Y.A. girl admitted that none of her friends here at home know that she has enrollment. When asked if she deliberately kept this information from them she said, "Oh, but what they don't know won't hurt them."

Dining room girls agree that their work interferes very little with their participation in extra curricular activities. They are of the opinion that if their work affects their grades at all, it affects them favorably.

Dumbbell Social Point

As to their opinion upon how their social standing is affected by working, the girls seem to mean girls disdaine. A majority of them believe that working has no influence whatsoever upon their social position. An exceedingly small minority, on the other hand, believe that they are looked down upon by many and appreciated by others. However, these few dining room girls do not have inferiority complexes. As one girl put it, "Snobs will be snobs here and elsewhere, and I attach little importance to the opinion of such people."

N.Y.A. girls interviewed were unanimous in saying that their work keeps them from going out for extra curricular activities and from other pastimes in which they would like to participate. Girls don't think they would study more if they did not work; others think they would not.

As a whole N.Y.A. girls do not feel that their work interferes too affected one way or the other by working.

The one attitude among working girls occurring most frequently is that of "appreciation" for self-reliance. Instead of feeling sorry for himself the working girl has the impression of being proud of her job and thankful for it.

Libraries Used for Research

In time of research most of my writing was done during the summer months while I visited different universities," says Dr. White. "I have used the libraries at McGill university, Canada, Boston university, Massachusetts, Albany university, New York, and the New York city library to do some research work also. I have also studied in Great Britain," she added, "and some of my material was gathered in libraries abroad."

Johnson Will Talk Sunday

Prophetic Movement In Israel to Be Topic

How prophets, the heart of the Hebrew religion, form the basis of the modern social gospel will be illustrated by Dr. J. E. Johnson, Y.M.C.A. secretary and Bible instructor at the University of Florida, when he speaks here December 5 at the Vesper services, Dr. Johnson's talk, "The Prophetic Movement in Israel," is part of the program planned by the local Y.W.C.A. in observance of Bible Sunday.

The speaker, who claims that he has always been "vitally interested in studying," is a graduate of Clemson, South Carolina, and has spent two degrees from Yale university. In addition, he has studied at the University of Chicago and Harvard.

Dr. Johnson not only has had instructional experience in the Y.M.C.A.'s at Yale, in Kentucky, and in Florida, but also has traveled for Y.M.C.A.'s in Ohio, North Carolina, and South Carolina. He recently made a trip through the committee which was in charge of a short course in religion at Camp Roosevelt, near Gainesville.

Convention of Alumni Council Will Be Held Here During February

A general convention of Division No. 1 of the American Alumni council, which approximately 40 alumni secretaries and presidents of alumni associations are expected to attend, will be held at Florida State college, February 4-5, with the college Alumni association as host.

Mrs. Ruth C. Reeves, director of the district and alumnae secretary at Stanford university, and Mrs. Frank D. Moor, president of the Stanford alumnae association, as general chairman of arrangements.

The third district, comprised of six states, includes Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, and Alabama.

Pranks, Potatoes, People Form Material for Campus Chatters

Conversations at Midnight in College Sessions Take Wide Range of Trivial Topics for Students

Conversations on campus range from such light and trivial topics as pranks, past experiences, sweet potatoes, air castles, and trunk meetings to the much more ponderous subjects of religion, modern governments, newspapers, and governmental ownership.

As the dinner hour rolls around girls, curled upon beds or lounging around the dormitory rooms, begin conversations starting on a light vein but often turning to more serious subjects as the conversation wears on.

"Let's all have a reunion in 1945 at Daytona Beach," someone suggests. Quickly everyone assents and then the discussion of future careers or marriages are brought to the front.

Air Castles Built

Everyone builds air castles as to what she is going to do, explains the home she is going to possess, and lit sly drifts into an explanation of her ideal man. Since men are a favorite topic all chime in. "You will never find a man like that! In fact after four years up here you will have to drag a man to the altar," says disillusioning Sue.

But everyone comes back to earth with a bump as the air is released from the bubble which had been supported by their fleeting thoughts.

Memory Given

Perhaps the girls have gotten sentimental and started up topics of home, and then with reminiscences about the bygone days when school was fun and lessons and grades a push-over.

"Oh," screams Jean.

"Pat, the practical joker, has just slipped the chair from under her unsuspecting friend. Such a scene in the process of sitting down on the last empty chair in the room. Now minutes are spent in the frequent in planning pie beds, cold cream dissolving in shoes, and tin cans, and concealed alarm clocks set at different hours during the night.

Usually right after an 11:30 Belle pops in to finish an argument with her roommates on some subject that has occupied her last hour. Thus governments, dictatorship, religion, music, and newspaper policy are discussed. Governmental ownership and religion brings on such heated controversies that they are continued through the day and are brought up at odd moments when all should be deeply engrossed in other subjects.

Hotter Session Held

The room is crowded with people sitting as comfortably as could be expected on the floor, on one of those nights when the cold zones in for a real heifer session. The trend on this occasion runs along the general line of candidates, marriages, husbands, fashions, coiffures, and holiday plans.

"How about a truth meeting" asks Sue.

This is the time when your friends tell you all your faults and you accept criticism gracefully.

Styles Discussed

Near the end of the month Jo pops in with her new Vogue. Soon some economics major, to everyone uses the book, becomes a stolen half hour on short skirts, long skirts, and the winter colors. Peggy sees the Vogue coat that she just must have and those dainty accessories which would look lovely with her present outfit. Oh! for a million dollars and more time for a real discussion on new modes in the world of fashion.

"Oooh! What a quarterly' exclaims Jane coming in wet dragging feet and a heavy heart from her last lessons and grades. Immediately "profs" and their faculties are discussed.

Subject Played

Saturday when football games are roared over radios and dancing sounds issue from the rooms along the corridor, six minute turn lightly, ever so lightly to the world of sports.

"Bet you a Goody-special on the Sweet Shop Arms" yells Marge over the noise of radio.

Take you up on that smarty replies Pee.

With this remark the game is dismissed and it is over 'I-feel-lonely' feels the bill.

A conviction coat, we've heard it said,
Wards off chill winds from heel to head;
In which respect it's "Victorian",
Much like No Draft Ventilation's.

Folks take such things as No Draft Ventilation as a matter of course now that all GM cars have this improvement. But when you add Knee-Action, the Unisteel Body, the Turret Top, improved Hydraulic Brakes and a steady parade of betterments—you see how a great organization moves ahead—using its resources for the benefit of the public — giving greater value as it wins greater sales.

Sports Squints

Today we can look back with regret and longing to the activities of a week ago. No more red, white and purple caps, no more green and gold feathers, no more Odd-Even pep meetings, no more cavorting cheer leaders until next Thanksgiving rolls around again. All of us can sit back on our heels and think about those team games last Thursday and be proud of either team that we happen to belong to. Thank heaven that the wins were split fifty-fifty or we might have had a riot around here as an outlet for those bottled up spirits.

The continuous rain and gray skies didn't phase the basketball and volleyball fans one little bit, and if anything the dreary weather heightened the optimism of team backers. Excited Odds and Evens hung over the balcony rail, shouted till they were hoarse, sang team songs and had a generally big time. Parents got a good idea of how their offspring act under the stress of circumstances, and we're willing to bet that some of them thought their daughters were better bouncing backs that day than they were 18 or 20 years ago.

What's [illegible] we hear about the possibility of a hockey festival here sometime in the dim future??? Well, anyhow, regardless of how dim the future may be the idea sounds plenty good to us. Some people see[m] to think that after Odd-Even volleyball and basketball games are over the sport's season is a thing of the past. Maybe the word festival attached to another sport would stir up a bit of enthusiasm.

At least the student body is doing their part to keep the faculty sport minded this year. While they still have a finger in the pie with winding up the faculty-student tennis matches, the play-night committee steps in for a [nice] follow-up program with a faculty-student playnight where faculty and students can recreate together in a game of bridge, table tennis, shuffle-board or what have you. Sprint on to the "Ad" building and get all signed up for your faculty guest.

Freshmen, heed this warning, and learn from your elders. One good upperclassman decided that since she had neglected the fine art of tennis in her ultra youthful years that now was the time to get down to it and finish rounding out that personality. So with light feet and a satisfied feeling over her decision she pranced out to the court last week. But after an afternoon of chasing balls the tired feeling began coming on. The following morning found her in the class of "untouchables."

It looks as though we've got to wait till way next year before we can start getting pepped up over those intra-mural games. Oh well, next year isn't very far off when you remember that the Christmas holidays start in two weeks and that by the time we return to our old alma mater the new year will have begun. Intra-murals will get under way some time in January, and that's when we can see an eyeful of Greek letter competition.

We're offering a vote of thanks to those gym teachers who have proven during the last few weeks that they realize their students are susceptible to the cold weather and that there are some days that are chilly enough so that it is impossible to get warm even after a half hour of brisk exercise. Bouquets to those teachers who have allowed their hearts and heads to dictate that they should either call their classes for meetings indoors or else not require the students to put on gym suits. Well do we remember a few cases of last year when students were forced to dress for every class, and were not even allowed to observe in golf classes in spite of colds or other reasons.

In the Virginia Reel that was presented as part of the program at playnight last Friday, we might say that a certain gym teacher looked as though she were enjoying herself even more than the students who were also taking part in it.

Fencing Bouts Will Be Given

Program to Be Presented During Play Night

An exhibition in fencing will feature the play night program tonight. This will be presented by the extra-curricular class in fencing, under the direction of Marie Joffre.

The first number on the program will be an exhibition of the fundamentals employed in fencing given by a group of beginners. Of the two bouts to be held one will be by beginning fencers and the other by advanced students.

Those taking part in the exhibition are Elizabeth Whittington, Vivian Adams, Julia Peters, Doris Dorner, Anna Kurtz, Ida Mary Scharfschwerdt, Barbara Lindner, Mary Chazel, Miss Hope Harrin, and Mary Beth Casall.

Marjorie Harris and Dorothy Donnely will participate in the beginners bout, and Elaine Fleischer and Marie Joffre will participate in the advanced fencers bout. Miss Mary Settle will direct the bouts.

A new beginners' class will start December 9.

Former Basketball Coach Is Discovered on Campus

S. R. Doyle Could Give Aspirants Few Pointers On How to Become Crack Players of Game

By ANNE LANGE

Perhaps S. R. Doyle, college registrar, could give basketball aspirants on this campus a few pointers on how to become crack players. Back in 1908-19, Mr. Doyle coached the first Aldenbridge, La., girls' basketball team to the state championship for three successive years.

Starts With Boys' Team

It all happened when, as a psychological disciplinary measure he took the boys of his class on a fishing trip down by the old stream. There the boys told him that they were interested in basketball. At that time basketball was a new sensation sweeping the country like the "Big Apple" of today. Although Mr. Doyle had scarcely heard of it, never seen a basketball game, much less a basketball, he decided that he would coach the boys.

Then the boys and Coach Doyle set about building a court and getting equipment. Secretly, he made a hasty journey to Shreveport, La., where the sport was more firmly established. From the Y. W. C. A. leader he procured a rule book to study.

Soon after the boys got their court under way—they were starting from the ground up—the girls asked Mr. Doyle if it were not possible for them to organize a team. A bit uncertain of his ability as a coach of two teams, he finally consented to coach them, too.

Many nights found Coach Doyle studying his rule book when he should have been preparing for the following day's assignment. However, he started this new project and it was his job to see it a reality. His visits to Shreveport became more frequent. Mr. Doyle attended every basketball game he could to learn the game more thoroughly and to further his coaching ability.

Girls Show More Interest

Gradually the beginning coach and his teams whipped into shape. From the first the girls showed more interest in the game and came into the limelight. Neighboring teams challenged the girls for games. They met the challengers away from home and returned with victory on their side.

By that time the team was beginning to feel a little "chesty." When they received an invitation to play an undefeated Arkansas team, the team and the coach gladly accepted. The squad and coach arrived in Arkansas on a pile of hay in a wagon drawn by harnessed horses. Luckily, the Aldenbridge girls snatched a startling victory from the Arkansas demons. Jubilant they wired home: "We have met the enemy and they are ours 14-13."

This victory gave the new team a little courage, the team challenged Shreveport—the strongest team in the county. When the visiting team came to Aldenbridge all the townspeople were there; all busines activity ceased; it was a holiday. Led on by the gallant support of the cheerers the home girls took the game from the visitors. At last they had beaten their most powerful opponent. The newly found team had whipped a team which had been at the game longer than the Aldenbridge squad.

Get State Championship

From then on, nothing could stop the amazing team and the wizard coach. The next year they bagged the state championship. For two more years they firmly held their state title—all with the guidance of a coach who had never seen a basketball.

Many hearts lamented the loss of the guiding coach when he resigned his position in Shreveport to embark on his college career. Despite his many investments in basketball equipment, ranging from basketballs to the charming knee bloomers worn by the girl players—Mr. Doyle saved enough money to start his college education at Ouchita college in Arkadelphia, Ark. No sooner had he become oriented there than he was asked to coach the girls' basketball team on the campus. During his four-year stay there he guided a good, hard-fighting basketball team.

When he received a position teaching in Hugo, Okla., after his graduation Mr. Doyle found himself mostly a coach—and also a mathematics teacher. For five years Coach Doyle worked on the high school teams and put out more crack teams—but not state champions.

As a crowning glory to his wonderful work with the Aldenbridge team, there is still a picture of the squad—black bloomers and middy blouses—in the Spaulding rule book for 1908-10.

Faculty To Be Guests At Gym

Play Night Is Planned For Next Friday

Faculty and students will join in bridge, ping-pong, shuffleboard, bowling, and dancing next Friday night at the gym. The first part of the evening from 8:30 until 9:30 o'clock will be devoted entirely to special features for the entertainment of the faculty guests. The latter part of the program will consist of the regular weekly dancing in the gym.

All students may bring as many faculty guests to the play night as they wish. The arrangements for inviting the faculty members are the same as those used for the faculty-student dinners.

Students will sign the faculty guest's name on the W.A.A. bulletin board on the lower floor of the Wescott building Tuesday. The student should also check which activity in which they wish to participate. This will avoid confusion in having people signed up for two entertainments which will take place the same time.

There will be both a booby and a high score prize offered in the bridge game, which will be played during the entire evening.

Intra-Mural Games Will Be Postponed

Marie Joffre, chairman of intra-murals, announced this week that intra-murals will not start until Wednesday after the Christmas holidays. Before the holidays, notices will be sent to all the athletic managers of all campus organizations informing them of the dates, rules, and conditions of entering teams. They are asked to notify the intramural manager if they are not entering a team.

Dance Academy Offers Courses

Rumba, Tango, Fox Trot Taught to Students

The rumba, the tango, fox trot and all other types of dancing except tap are offered at the La Gardeur Dancing Academy, the first dancing academy which Florida State students have ever been allowed to attend.

Miss Mildred Roberts, of Palmetto, is Mr. La Gardeur's new dancing partner. She has done professional work with Mr. La Gardeur previously and is considered by him to be one of the best fitted persons for her present position in the state.

Resident chaperone, Mrs. C. J. Cornell, is at the academy at all times and is college approved.

All classes are arranged for the convenience of the students who may make appointments for lessons at any time. The classes will be segrated according to the ability. Lessons will be given between the hours of 9:30 a. m. and 8:30 p. m. only.

Special arrangements have been made in the office of the Dean of Women concerning the students who are signed up for courses at the academy.

The academy is also holding classes as a part of the extra curricula program at the Demonstration school which is open only to the students of the Demonstration school.

New Treasurer Elected And Appointments Made At Tarpon Club Meeting

At the last meeting of the Tarpon club held recently, Ellagene Bivans was elected treasurer and various business items were discussed.

It was decided that the members should meet every Monday afternoon at 4:30 for swimming practice and regular meetings. At the same time a social committee composed of Virginia Makemson, Dorothy Rickards, and Virginia Rood was appointed, and Frances Weber was chosen to keep the club scrap book up to date.

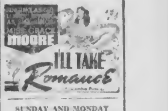
WHAT PRICE GLORY? WHAT PRICE POISE? WHAT PRICE POPULARITY? DANCING!

"The Delectable Diversion of the Discriminating"

Do you spend the evening on the dance floor with one man, or do you get "a grand rush?" A good dancer is never a sitter-outer, and her escort is never "stuck!" Can you dance, or do you THINK you can dance?

The cost of learning to dance properly is negligible. The LeGardeur Academy of Dance Arts has made it possible for any college student to receive expert instruction from one of the South's outstanding authorities at the extremely low rate of 50c per lesson. Or, if you prefer private, individual instruction, you may take advantage of our special student rate of $2.50 per lesson.



If you are a beginner, there is still time for you to become a danceable partner before the Christmas holidays. If you are now a comparatively good dancer, there is ample time for you to learn new steps and get back in practice.

Also, we are inaugurating special classes for members of the college faculty and staff. In our new instructress, Miss Mildred Roberts, will be found one of Florida's outstanding dancers. Her charm and personality immediately wins for her the confidence of every student.

Students Respond To Syphilis Education

The largest audience of students that ever attended an N. S. F. A. meeting came to hear the subject of syphilis and its accompanying venereal diseases discussed Tuesday night. Perhaps it was curiosity that brought them, a curiosity to know something about these diseases, their manner of contagion and the ultimate methods of diagnosis and treatment. Someone has said that this curiosity was morbid, but that phrase smacks of the age which the Daily Democrat has so aptly described in an editorial as "the horse-hair sofa era of American life."

A smug attitude toward our presumptive immunity may result from this meeting, since the improbability of those living in our economic level ever contracting the disease was stressed. However, it would seem that we as college students can contribute our part by becoming educated, by using and spreading our knowledge and by sponsoring progressive measures taken up by groups in our communities. One of these is the compulsory Wasserman test required in many cities of Negro and white employees, particularly those working in restaurants. Even if we don't think that we need the test or other tests for venereal disease we shouldn't dismiss the subject with a snap of our fingers. Sociologically it can not be dismissed so easily. We cannot divorce ourselves from something of such wide-spread effects, and logically we don't want to, for we have only to remind ourselves that we are in college for only four years and that our life is to be spent back in our communities.

It seems too bad that the students Tuesday night did not take a stand which would have been more far-reaching than on our own campus. Of course education must start at home but not end there. Since last week the college has received much publicity about its attitude, both in the news and editorial columns of Florida papers, and it seems to be one of the first to blaze the collegiate trail in Florida concerning venereal disease education. However, individually, we can accomplish something, and it is hoped that students who did not attend the forum will become acquainted with the facts about syphilis and the venereal diseases and that all will take advantage of the Wasserman tests available at the infirmary.

What About These Dance Regulations?

Last Saturday at the Thanksgiving dance considerable confusion and not a little complaint resulted from a ruling which allowed no one to leave the physical education building during intermission. Although girls and their dates were allowed to sign up and go outside to smoke during the dance they were not allowed to go outside at all during the intermission and they were not allowed to smoke inside the building.

Realizing that dances at a women's college are conducted necessarily under more regulations than elsewhere, it still seems unreasonable that girls and their dates should not be allowed to leave the place of dancing during intermission which is obviously the time to go out and smoke. Why should there be an intermission at all if the dancers must stay cooped up in the foyer of the gym?

Since social occasions on this campus are rather rare anyway, it seems a shame to make them less enjoyable by needless petty regulations. The point can be made, too, that certainly as much freedom could be allowed those attending campus dances as those signing up for regular dates on campus. If the honor system is applied to those who entertain their dates on campus why can't it be applied to those who attend dances given in college buildings? There is just as much opportunity in ordinary dates for girls to break the rules as on the dance occasions and surely there is no more incentive at these special functions.

Cutting Credit Hours

The posting on Wednesday of a list of almost 150 students whose credit hours were to have been reduced because of over-cutting in particular courses has brought forcibly to the attention of the campus the drastic change of procedure in dealing with this contingency. Because this is the first quarter that the present system has been in effect, a modification has been made allowing students to recoup their losses by deducting their overdrafts from the cuts allowed them for the second quarter. It has been definitely stated, however, that "no such allowance will be made in the future."

This, then, would seem an opportune time for reviewing the present cut situation and attempting to impress upon all students, and especially seniors, the insecurity of their positions. The average student taking the usual number of hours has at the end of four years only the minimum required for graduation: loss of credits this semester might be made up for during the next term, but any further deficiencies for the senior would mean failure to graduate.

To this upperclassmen who have been under a different system every year this present one, allowing as it does no leeway whatsoever, seems particularly stringent. In the eyes of the administration, however, it seems more nearly perfect than any ever tried before. Criticism has developed among students on two main points. First, since only a certain number of cuts are allowed in any one subject, students having Saturday classes are automatically limited as to week-end cuts regardless of how many are granted.

Last year's arrangement allowing all cuts to be taken in one subject, if so desired, was abused to such a point that some classes were virtually never attended. This difference of opinion arises primarily from a fundamental disagreement between faculty and students to the purpose of cuts. The former hold that cuts are intended for emergencies only; if no emergencies arise, no cuts should be taken. The students, on the other hand, following the philosophy of the Supreme Court and their own desires, interpret "necessary and proper" to mean "convenient and useful." A theoretical difference is hard to argue down, but changes in opinions are constantly made and this point may somehow be remedied.

The second and most important disagreement lies with the deduction of credit hours for overcutting. Although in the eyes of the Cut committee this is a reasonable procedure, in the student mind it appears almost "illegal."

Four years ago the number of cuts taken over the allowed number was deducted from the number of quality points earned during the semester. The objection to this system voiced by the administration is not entirely clear. "If a student can cut every week and make an A," they hold, "by what right can her grade be cut?" This sounds logical enough on the surface but it seems not to cover the question completely. In the first place the letter grade was not actually cut. Whatever it was, it was recorded and the quality points deducted were noted in a separate column. An A in a three-hour course provided six extra quality points that could be applied where necessary. This system provided true gradations, the student being able to take cuts in proportion to her ability as shown by her grades.

"If a student can cut every week and make A, by what right can her grade be cut?" Surely by some better right than her credit hours. The gravity of a loss of credit hours is tremendous. On transfer to other colleges only the reduced hours will be sent. If a senior lacks even fractional hours in a major for which there are no closely allied fields offering one or two hour courses, she must give up graduation and take an extra three hours by correspondence before receiving her diploma through the mails. After four years of reasonably hard work, it would be anti-climactic, to say the least, to miss graduation because of a chance over-cut in one subject because three cuts were taken instead of two.

Definitely it seems that something should be done about this aspect of the cut system.

Spirit of the Week . . . . By Glazier

This Week

Congress Has The Stage This Week

Congress held everyone's attention this week, perhaps by its failure to do anything except prepare to do something. The northern representatives in the House dashed around trying to get eight more names on a petition to remove the wage-hour bill from the rules committee and place it on the floor for consideration. The objections to this came from southern members who asserted that the bill, by equalizing northern and southern wage conditions, would be disadvantageous to the South. In an attempt to bully the gentlemen from Dixie the industrial and urban Yankees threatened in retaliation to blast the cotton provisions from the farm bill. At the same time, the A. F. of L. took the side of the Southerners and called an executive meeting to draw up amendments which they would propose in case the bill were released from its confinement.

Financial matters also succeeded in causing the Congressmen to hop around. The chairman of the senate finance committee berated the corporation tax law and sided with the President in wishing, not its repeal, but its immediate revision. Roosevelt demanded a reduction of $100,000,000 in the Federal appropriations for highways, with a resultant outburst of protests from both houses, and requested that any donations under the farm bill be kept below $500,000,000 in order to decrease governmental expenses.

At the instigation of the President, Congress also looked into the Chief's multi-million dollar building plan, particularly in regard to amending the National Housing act so as to make its conditions more lenient. Under the new system, the financing costs for individual builders would be lessened and national mortgage associations would be permitted to engage in large building projects under the protection of the government. The cut in cost would come from lowering the 21 percent first payment required now to 10 percent and also from reducing monthly installments $5 or $10. The chairman of the R. F. C. in a speech Wednesday, gave his approval to the plan, stating that it would not increase the government's financial burden.

Encouraged perhaps by Roosevelt's demands for more business activity, the railroads this week put in their bid for a little attention. They begged the Interstate Commerce commission for a 15 per cent increase in freight rates and a limited increase in passenger fees in order to raise their annual income $517,000,000. To substantiate this request, the Association of American Railroads stated that the income for October 1935 was 29 million dollars less than for the same month last year and the president of the Baltimore and Ohio line pleaded that, without the desired relief, the railroads would have to discontinue some of their services.

And Others Say. . . . .

"Why have classes?" demands an editorial taken from The Carolinian where it was reprinted from the Daily Tar Heel, both publications of the University of North Carolina. It presents a fresh, and not impractical, viewpoint on the accepted organization of college students.

"Two weeks ago there was a jesting suggestion that the class ranks — Freshman, Sophomore, Junior, Senior — be abolished. Forget the jest for just a moment—what about the fool idea?

"Seriously, what good do the titles of Sophomore and Senior do now, in a school so large that class unity is practically impossible?

Class rankings do perpetuate these conditions: first year men are subject to "freshman" hazing, moral and physical, extra-curricular promotions, honorary societies cling to the same years-in-school consideration; men who flunk out of their "categories" suffer an embarrassment which could be eliminated under any scheme whereby students only come to the University to "register for study."

"Free from the outworn, empty class title, a University student could still be orientated by a special committee at the opening of school, could immediately step into valuable associations with older men if he is susceptible enough. He could devote excess energy and extra time to sports, societies, and the regular run of extra-curriculars (which should 'pick up' with the abolition of the weak class structures). He can dance by joining an inexpensive dance club, if the occasion demands; and if he doesn't want to dance, he won't be forced to spend his money for 'class' bids. His student government can go along just as well as, if not better than it is going along now, with representation coming not from empty classes, but from sections of the campus, for example. Might change your politics around considerably.

"There are other implications to the radical suggestions; but there are enough for the present. Think it over."

The two colleges, Fordham and Michigan State, have in effect at present plans to service their graduates which might be considered by any college where students receive training. An editorial on the two plans from The Michigan State News is reprinted here:

"Fordham, believing that no corporation puts an expensive product on the market, without being sure that it will serve its buyers well, has decided o do the same thing with its graduates. Provided they go out on a job and do not succeed, Fordham proposes to take them back again and revise them so that they will be successful in their line of work. An ingenious scheme, one that will take years of experience, this nevertheless seems to be a step in the right direction.

"Here, at Michigan State, the most comparable service to graduates is the education department's annual clinic for beginning teachers who have gone out from here the preceding June. After several weeks of teaching, the embryonic pedagogues are invited back to discuss their problems and to point out weaknesses in the college's teacher-training. As it is handled, the clinic probably does the department more good than it

With all the fuss about cuts the registrar's office maintains a superior silence. People who have been quivering in their boots about whether or not (justly or otherwise) they are recorded as having overcut since the quarter started or at Thanksgiving are told kindly that "no information, can be given out," and Rome has spoken! Maybe they have the idea that mystery lends enchantment or something.

The Thanksgiving dance is probably the beginning of a new era of freedom at F. S. C. W. Simply by signing in and out a little book, people were allowed to go out and smoke; that is, at any time but intermission—don't ask us why. Anyhow we admire the way it was carried out—freedom, with just the proper amount of restraint. Too bad, though, for those that smoke a great deal. They probably had a good case of writer's cramp next day.

And then there's the faculty member (noted for the ambiguity of his frequent statements) who thinks that the most beneficial thing about horseback riding is the contacts one makes. We think a great deal depends upon the manner in which these contacts are made, if you get what we mean.

A high school hearty who visited our fair institution over the week-end took one look at the cheese-egg-rice combination which graced the tables Saturday noon and asked calmly, "What's that, and when do we get the main dish?" She'd better get her appetite under control before she arrives here for permanent schooling.

Some of the alums that dropped by for "Homecoming" were mightily displeased over the fact that there's no more dancing on Friday night except out at the gym. Some people always have something to gripe about. Don't they realize that we have Saturday classes for which we simply must prepare? Of course we could go to the library and leave sorority houses free for dancing, but then . . .

If the attendance at N. S. F. A. forum last Tuesday doesn't say something for the argument that if we had topics of interest at convocation we wouldn't need compulsory attendance, we are willing to hold our peace for the rest of the year and even give up the three cuts we have for next semester—having already used this semester's cuts.

Some day schools will have rooms where the pupils may rest and rest periods will appear on the schedules, according to A. G. Ireland, of the New Jersey department of public instruction. We don't ask that. All we ask is that teachers learn to modify their voices during classes. It is awfully annoying to have a harsh voice breaking into one's sleep every two minutes. Furthermore, it's bad on the nerves.

A certain group of ten girls found quite a surprise when they walked into the dining room for Thanksgiving dinner to find that their place cards had disappeared, that their table was being occupied, and that they had to leave and eat wherever they could find places. We wouldn't be surprised if the gals were quite annoyed. Equal rights and all that—we're jeffing.

A girl who had her Dad up last week evidently didn't worry at all about taking care of him in the dining room. Saturday morning at breakfast she chewed happily on a muffin or what have you and finally spoke aloud, "Wonder if Pop mad. breakfast." Picture Pop dashing madly through the door and chasing an usher down the aisle in search of a place—just any place!

Now that the list has been posted announcing those who have credit hours deducted for sle[eping] through classes or just plain overcutting there'll be a lot of upperclassmen who are free men once more. The cut system has been changed so often in the past that we're beginning to wonder if it will ever really settle down and light some place. More could be said but at times silence is golden.

Education Gets Attention Agai[n]

The Junior High School
By M. E. Herriott

Dr. M. E. Herriott, principal of the C[illegible] Junior High school in Los Angeles, w[rites in] the December Atlantic about the aims [of his] school and other Los Angeles junior high s[chools] in the field of progressive education.

To fulfill its purpose Dr. Herriott belie[ves the] school should, among other things, emp[hasize] learning for the joy of learning or for the r[ecog]nized usefulness of the knowledge taught, [make] the school a place for wholesome adole[scent] living rather than a place where one is [iso]lated against the ills of adulthood; for[mulate] contributions of many fields of knowledge [to] children's obvious needs and endeavors [rather] than teaching factual material in isolation.

One of the changes the Los Angeles sc[hools] have undergone is the establishment of a [two] grade system consisting of two marks. "S" [means] "satisfactory achievement within the child's [na]tive endowment and present development." "N" means "needs to improve, not achie[ving] reasonable expectancy for that child." Dr. [Her]riott believes this remedies the inexact, m[islead]ing, and arbitrary method of grading by num[bers].

Another interesting innovation of the Lo[s An]geles junior high schools is the social [living] course, a combination of two former co[urses,] English and social studies. Approximately [one] third of the school day is devoted to this [sub]ject, which is taught by just one teacher. [An] advantage of this plan, the author believ[es, is] that it affords the school an opportunity [to be] organized more nearly as a community. [The] social living class is the center of the p[upil's] school day; it is his home in which he [lives] as he lives, and from which e goes out into [the] school to take up the study of specializ[ed subjects.] (P. C.)

Problem Mothers
By Katharine Winant

"For the twenty years [illegible] lived [illegible] town, I've heard students [illegible] two junior colleges [illegible] go home for the quarterly [illegible] mothers would be [illegible] reluctance [illegible] face [illegible] two [illegible] legs [illegible] isms, [illegible] their reluctance to [illegible] writes Katharine Winant in the Decem[ber issue] of the Forum.

The author writes that even though [illegible] legians articulated the expression, the [chil]dren borrow it upon occasion. Mothers a[re] active problems when they refuse to re[lease] a hold on their mature children. Such m[others] identify themselves with them to the [extent] where they are handicapped in leading their [own] lives. They dictate their decisions, su[pervise] their social and professional interests, c[laim] them for emotional sustenance, and many o[ther] things.

This barnacle hold challenges their tolera[nce,] Miss Winant writes. Where we children rec[og]nize ourselves as adults with the minds [and] achievements of men and women, our mo[thers] persist in seeing us only as their children. [And] this is why so many of us are spiritually [alien]ated from our own homes.

Miss Winant concludes that she has ne[ver] known a problem mother who was not bless[edly] unconscious of her impositions on the aff[ec]tion of her children. Yet fatuous disregard [of] the laws of human nature is no more excuse [for] leniency than fatuous disregard of man-ma[de] laws. And certainly it can do as much dam[age.] (B. S.)

Where Jews Succeed
By Louis L. Newman

In a reply to an earlier article written by [illegible] Feuerlicht, Louis L. Newman says in the De[cember] Forum that Jews are just like o[ther] people only more so. Hence it is not surpris[ing] that, when an individual Jew gives an ex[pres]sion of self-hate, he does so with quite extra[or]dinary fervor as Mr. Feuerlicht did in his arti[cle].

According to the author, Jews meet pre[ju]dice with dignity, they are winning laurels [in] scholarship, athletics, and extra-curricula[r ac]tivities in the universities, they are represen[ta]tive citizens in cities large and small, [their] rabbis are outstanding radio speakers and [oc]casionally "dereligionized" non-Jews look [to] them as a fountainhead of religious informa[tion] and inspiration.

Mr. Newman writes, "We are told to look [to] the promise of the future rather than the [illegible] of the past—it shall be easy then, because [we] shall have returned from the Wailing Wal[l to] the normal paths of light." A sneer at the Wa[il]ing Wall as an emblem of Jewish behav[ior] smacks of the attitude of those tourists in [the] new Palestine who imagine they have seen [the] entire life of the Yishub or Jewish Settleme[nt] when they have watched a few grey bear[ds] swinging in prayer before this memento of [the] ancient temple.

Jews "fail" in a Feuerlicht who malprises a[nd] maligns himself and his people, who "befo[uls] his own nest." But Jews "succeed" in th[e] young pioneer, who when a visitor protest[ed] that it would take 100 years to make Palestine['s] bare hills fertile again, replied: "What are [a] hundred years in the life of the Eternal P[eo]ple?" (B. S.)

The Compus Comments, publication of Mary Baldwin college, recently ran a feature comparing different presentation of examinations in various colleges. Due to the unique quality of some of the contrasts the feature is quoted:

"At the University of California examinations are guarded as carefully as a gold reserve. The original exam sheet is brought to the press office of the University Press by the professor or his representive. A copy of the final is printed or mimeographed after which the professor personally reads it at the press office.

"If okayed by the professor, other copies are run off, wrapped up and sealed with sealing wax, and then kept in a safe until the professor personally comes for them. Proofs and spoiled sheets are collected and kept under lock and key.

"Kansas State college has introduced color as the keynote of examinations. A new system known as the Chemo-Score device, turns the student's answer red if it is incorrect, and blue if its is correct.

"In objective tests, the answer spots are so treated that when they are moistened they change color. Here's how it works: The examinee records his choice of answers by touching with a fountain pen filled with water or with a moistened paper clip, his answer to each question. If his answer is correct, the answer spot immediately turns blue; if incorrect it turns red.

"Harvard maintains an "examination file" for the use of all students. In the case of examinations in courses open to freshmen, the dean of freshmen maintains a complete file of former examinations for several years at a time. These have been mounted on cardboard, and are placed in files in the library at the Harvard Union, which is open to all freshmen.

"The Harvard college library also maintains a fairly complete file of examinations in more advanced courses, permanently bound in most cases, and these files may be consulted by all students alike, but it is occasionally difficult for the students to secure a particular examination paper at convenient times."

The Industrial Collegian informs us of a recent research conducted on the University of Illinois campus by Prof. Paul Young of the psychology department to determine the prevalence of weeping and laughter among college students. Prof. Young concludes that for college students this world is "far from a vale of tears." The research indicated that laughter is 400 times more prevalent than weeping.

The conclusions were that: "collegians take down their hair and cry less than once in 20 days but laugh more than 20 times every day.

"Women weep three times as often as men but their funny bones are not tickled as often.

"Weeping is caused 80 to 93 per cent of the time by environment.

"Laughter is caused 98 per cent of the time by social contacts.

"The chief cause of joy or gloom among students is class grades.

"Letters—received and not received—ranked second. Especially letters containing checks from home.

"Dates, however, were relegated to tenth place among the sources of cheer."

Cotillion, V. V. Clubs Choose New Members

Tapping for the Village Vamps and Cotillion club took place last Saturday night at the Thanksgiving dance held in the gymnasium

Those tapped for Village Vamps include: Millicent Hampton, Miriam Lee, Helen Chambers, Betty Langston, Beth Rickards, Cathryn Hague, Pat Brandt, Mary Jane Lambeth, Margaret Ann McGarry, Mardell Larsen, Sally Cook, Betty Graves.

Cotillion club taps are: Janice Simmons, Betty Gautier, Elizabeth Griley, Frances Moss, Emily Akerman, Dorothy Mitchell, Lucille Walker, Frances Kirkland, Meredith Rentz, Margaret Roberts, Mae Hampton, Martha Anderson, Amelia Gordy, Jane Guy, Jimmie Parramore, Frances Wright, Ruth Irvine, Audrey Dolan.

Delta Zetas Visited By Field Secretary

The Delta Zeta sorority members are being honored this week with a visit from their field secretary, Miss Agusta Piatt.

An informal Russian tea was given Wednesday night for members of the alumnae with Miss Agusta Piatt as honor guest. A clever "studio party" was given by the sorority members Sunday night. A theme of modern art was carried out and impressionistic portraits of those present were painted by Katherine Davis.

Delta Zetas who are entertaining Miss Piatt are: Mary Glenn Coarsey, Edith Adkinson, Emily Bush, Katherine Davis, Martha Moore, Jeanette Nordman, Julia Beckman, Margery Jones, Elizabeth Compton, Marcelyn Creech, Blanche White, Charlotte Rawls, and Karolyn Patterson.

Banquet Will Be Held By Phi Beta Kappa

Alpha of Florida chapter members of Phi Beta Kappa will hold their Founders' Day banquet tonight at 6:30 at the Dutch Kitchen. Dr. William G. Dodd, president of the chapter, will act as tosatmaster.

Speakers for the evening will be Dr. Venila Shores, Dr. Viola Graham, and Dr. Harold S. Richards. Their talks will be of an historical nature. Dr. Margaret Whitney Dow is in charge of arrangements for the affair.

Student members of Phi Beta Kappa are Sarah Sealey, Tallahassee, and Elizabeth Knapp, Pensacola.

Miss Katherine Sands of Jacksonville is a week-end visitor at the Alpha Chi Omega house.

Mrs. Harold Hill Helper, recently elected Grand President of Zeta Tau Alpha, paid the local chapter of the sorority an unexpected visit last Saturday.

TRI-DELTA MEMBERS GIVE BREAKFAST CELEBRATING FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Members and pledges of Delta Delta Delta held their annual Founders day breakfast last Sunday morning at the Three Torches commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the sorority at Boston university.

The long table was decorated at intervals with yellow and white chrysanthimums in blue bowls carrying out the color scheme of the sorority, silver, gold, and blue. Places were marked with pine tree shaped cards which also bore the menu for the breakfast and the dates of the existence of Tri-Delta.

Miss Katherine Warren, a former president of the chapter on this campus was guest speaker for the occasion. Miss Katherine Montgomery, also an alumna of the sorority spoke a word of greeting to the members.

Present were: Jamie Brown, Carolyn Collins, Mary Collins, Eugenia Glass, Elizabeth Griley, Eleanor Hickson, Marjorie Jessup, Gene Charlotte Kerns, Sarah Lewis, Mary McCahill, Mary Louise Merriwether, Mary June Michel, Mary Noble, Dorothy Nye, Dorothy Olmstead, Irene Peck, Dorothy Rickards, Jewel Turner, Marion Valz, Clyde Lee Whiddon, Molly Scales, Joan Ross, Dorothy Smith, Charlotte Bartless, Frances Johnston, Doris Reed, Sallie Bert Nusum, Jean Duncan, Mary Lou Bell.

Martha Thomas Will Receive American Diploma This Year

French Exchange Student Has Studied in Many Different Countries and Colleges

By PEARLE SHEPARD

After 14 months spent on the campus of Florida State college, Marthe Thomas has become so Americanized that she confesses to have almost forgotten how to speak her own language, French. Everything she says or thinks is in English, except for one thing. She still counts in French and counting in French has its disadvantages, in Marthe's case. She is taking an accounting course.

A year ago last September Marthe Thomas arrived on this campus, the first foreign exchange student this college can boast of, and in June she will graduate from an American college with a B.S. degree in commerce. Not content with working one year, the usual time given by a foreign student to work on an American campus, Marthe spent a long, hot summer taking economics courses here in order that she might receive an American diploma at the end of two winter sessions.

In answer to the inevitable question concerning her choice of courses, Marthe makes this statement: "I have had my education. You must remember that. Now I am studying something that is so international in scope that I can use it, if I need." Then she adds, "Besides, I do not want to be a teacher."

Has French Education

Marthe has had her education one that began in the French elementary schools, continued through two years in a convent and ended when she completed four years at the College de Cannes, an international university attended by students of all nationalities.

Marthe is not wholly French. Her mother is German. Therefore, it is difficult to see where the French characteristics end and the German ones begin. Her snapping eyes and the lilt in her voice are unmistakably French. However, in looks she might be taken for a young Spanish girl. Her hair is dark, her nose pointed, and her eyes brown. Her body is well proportioned, perhaps suggesting the German influence. Her gestures and manners are French, due to her French environment, no doubt. Surprisingly Marthe was almost born in North America. In 1914 her father, a doctor in the French navy, was sent to a French colony, St. Pierre et Miquelon, off the coast of Newfoundland. His job was to get the fishermen to enlist in the French army. His wife accompanied him and while there Marthe Mathilde Thomas was born. They left their island several monthe later, to return to Marthe's birthplace about nine years after that. Six years which she describes as very happy ones were spent on this island. And on their return trip the Thomas family came down through the United States.

Parents Are Doctors

Both her mother and father are doctors, each doing work in their particular fields. Her mother is stationed in a government charity hospital in Algeria, while her father has the position of medecin en chef de la Marine, a position which has taken him to Spain to do work which might be compared to that done by the American Red Cross.

Marthe became alarmed during the course of the summer when she stopped hearing from her father. Later she learned through her mother that his boat had been stopped by the Spanish and was being held. After what she said seemed like months her mother wrote that her father's ship had been released and much later a brief letter, carrying of necessity no details of his work in Spain, was received. Marthe still worries about him.

A varied life has been Marthe's, although if one would believe her she is just an average French girl "who got the breaks." She has lived in England for two summers, as well as having spent six years at her birthplace, has spent some time in Spain and has lived in Africa off and on for the past six years. It is Africa that she considers home now and to her it is the most enchanting place in the world, notwithstanding the southern siroccos that sweep over the countryside much like the western dust storms of this country.

Learns English

It was in England that she learned to speak English and now she has more of an Anglo-Saxon pronunciation than an American one. Her slang is English. She says "gosh" with a deep intonation on the "o." Her "a's" are borad and her vocabulary is much larger than that of the average American girl. She has not noticeably increased that vocabulary, except for the provincial usages she has found it necessary to learn. "Cute" is among a number of American expressions that she says she cannot understand. "You say that I am cute. Then the dog is cute. What do you mean by cute?" she asks.

Although her speech may be English she does not prefer England to America. She considers America very interesting. "It is so new," she says, "and the people are enthusiastic and friendly. France and England are old and the English are reserved, slow to make friends," she explained. "And they never forget that they are from 'the island'."

Americans, in Marthe's estimation, do not work as hard as Europeans. There is more evidence, too, of prosperity. France has not recovered from the devastation left by the war. "Do yon know," she said half humorously, "that France has not finished putting up monuments for heroes of the war?"

France is divided up into small farms where the people live frugally, passing on their small land holdings to their children. The population, almost from necessity, has had to remain static, because the land cannot be divided into much smaller plots.

Church and State Separate

While France is Catholic, Marthe pointed out that since the beginning of the century the church and state have been separated. No money is allotted the church from the state and education has been taken out of its hands. To show the religious temper of the country Marthe said that "God" is never discussed in the schools. If the people desire their children to be taught religion they must take them to the priests who serve in the capacity of religious educators.

Marthe said that when she was young she had wanted to be a nun. "But now if I should want to do anything like that I would want to be a Salvation Army woman. They do not care about religion principally. They want only to do good." Thus were religious ideas briefly stated.

Politically Marthe is neither leftist or rightist. "Right now," she said, "I am like you, looking on from the outside. I am an American. And I am for Franklin Roosevelt." Seriously, however, Marthe would like to see a return to the democratic form of government which preceded the popular front regime of today. However, she realized that the popular front is necessary to fight the inroads of fascism. "But," she adds brightly, "Mussolini and Hitler cannot live a thousand years."

When asked about the imminence of war for France she said, "There is no danger of war." And then several seconds later she added, "I hope." The French people, she explained, feel no enmity for the German people.

To Visit Germany

Next year Marthe will go to Germany, the home of her mother, for the first time in her life. She hopes to stay there long enough to learn the language and then she would like to enter the diplomatic service. But Marthe has a workable philosophy about herself and her future. She does not plan too far ahead, but lets come what may. She calls herself a fatalist, but her disposition is too cheerful to fit a true one. She works hard, but she explains that all French students must work hard.

In comparing the American schools with those of France she said that the colleges and universities here are much more practical in their curricula, but adds that the schools in France are much more intellectual in their plane. A general education course is offered at the universities, with training for the strict professional fields, such as medicine, law, and education coming during that four-year term. However, if a student wishes to specialize in some other field he must attend an institution devoted entirely to that line. Marthe's majors were science and mathematics.

In order to attend an American university as an exchange student she had first to fulfill certain high qualifications, especially in English. It was her mother's idea thet she try to come to America. "My father did not want me to, but my mother believes in freedom for children."

After her first year here she applied for a student assistant job and with this as an aid in paying for this year's tuition Marthe will be able to get her degree. Right now that degree is uppermost in her mind and unlike many of her American classmates she is able to concentrate on anything that she wants to, until she has mastered it. "Economics in the French language would be hard for me. But gosh in English it is very hard, and accounting. Oh la la."

Marriage of Sunday Of Interest Here

Of interest to many students is the following excerpt from The Sanford Herald, November 29:

"One of the outstanding events of the social season was the wedding of Miss Betty Wheeless, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Wheeless, and James Arthur Boyd, Jr., of Leesburg yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the First Baptist church.

"Mrs James M. Boyd, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor. Miss Kathleen Laney, Miss Jane Sharon, and Miss Eleanor Hickson were bridesmaids.

"The groom had as his attendants his brother, Everett Boyd of Leesburg as best man, and George Miller, Leesburg, John Warren, Dunnellon, and Charles Betts, Sanford, groomsmen.

"The attractive bride was gowned in white bridal satin made on princess lines with a short train. She wore as her only ornament a string of pearls. A short bride's illusion veil fell from a plaited satin tiara. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley tied with white satin ribbon and tulle.

"Mrs. Boyd, matron of honor, was attired in old gold taffeta made princess style with large puffed sleeves. She carried an arm bouquet of bronze chrysanthemums. The bridesmaids' gowns were styled on princess lines with full sleeves. Miss Laney wore iris taffeta, Miss Sharon rose petal taffeta, and Miss Hickson, peacock blue taffeta. Each carried old fashioned nose gays of tiny chrysanthemums.

"The couple will make their home in Leesburg."

FESTIVITIES OF FALL FROLICS LURE MANY TO GAINESVILLE FOR WEEK-END

Fall Frolics have attracted many college girls to the University this week-end to participate in the festivities of one of Gainesville's major social events. The climax of the week-end will be the Florida-Kentucky game, the last of this season, Saturday afternoon. Church Groups Plan Programs For Christmas

Methodists, Baptists Will Hold Parties Next Tuesday Night

With the approach of the holiday season, campus student church centers are planning plans for numerous Christmas parties and programs.

Both Methodist and Baptist student groups will hold Christmas parties Tuesday night. A program of Christmas games, music and stories will feature the evening, at both student houses, and one will be presented by the members to the student homes. Eugene Morrison, chairman of the Methodist social committee, will be in charge of the shower held primarily at the Methodist party, assisted by Anice Walker, Sarah Whitehurst, Mary Emily Sue Stevenson, Elizabeth Whittington, Frances Carter, Eleanor Hoole and Lynne Lee Gardner. Possibility of the decorations committee, Lilian Hunsley, Jane Adams, Katherine Simmons, Lollie Watson, and Frances Posser, refreshments; and Sarah Marion Wallace.

Mrs. Frances Baker left this morning to represent the Methodist group at the district meeting in Atlanta.

Under the leadership of Pepsy Hughes, new president of the sorority council, the Baptist students are planning programs to be presented in the home churches of the students December 26.

There will be a Y. W. A. meeting at the Baptist student house Saturday afternoon at 6:00 o'clock when plans for dressing dolls for the Italian mission in Tampa, and for raising funds for the Christmas offering for the foreign missions will be made.

The Epworth Christmas party will be given December 15 at Rose Hall. This will be given at the parsonage for a needy family sponsored by the Woman's Auxiliary of Florida. Mrs. Porter's Christmas program the students will go caroling in town.

Miss Mary Wood McKenzie of Salisbury, North Carolina, who is to be closely with the church school for girls in Liberia, will speak at Bible Hall Thursday night at 7:30 o'clock. She will present the work and needs of missions in Liberia.

Presbyterian students will present a Christmas play, "They That Sit in Darkness," on Sunday, December 12, at the church at 7:30 o'clock. The play is under the direction of Doris Terrell and the cast includes: Frances Moss, Ruth Tyrone, Mary Alice Slater, Emily Dormer, Lucy Kelley, Sarah Sheldon, Mrs. T. C. McKee, Jean Mahaffey, Lamar Lott, Gene Patterson, Sadee Mae Arnold Carolyn Moore, Mary Emily Johnson, Nanny Mary Ensley, Jane Gunn, Flora Hampton, and Minnie Ratliff.

On Sunday, December 5, the Presbyterian junior program will be on "How to Celebrate Christmas." Harriet Duke and Ellen Warren will be in charge of the program given Sunday morning, December 12 at Sunday school. Gifts for the children of the Lincoln mission in Greene will be made.

Vocational Series Begun by Andrews

The director of personnel, Dr. Elizabeth G. Andrews, began a series of vocational guidance conferences with the class of 1939 on November 29 for the purpose of giving advice on vocations. The plans will be scheduled for 25-minute conferences during the months of December and January. Any students other than the classes selected may make appointments for advice on vocations if they desire.

French Group To Be Formed

Teachers in Florida Will Be Headed by Seymour

The organization of the French teachers in Florida is now definitely underway according to Dr. Arthur Seymour, head of the group. Although the charter has formally been received from national headquarters, the movement has been approved by the honor fraternal de Jauve, vice president of the National French Association in the Southern States. As a member of the national French group, the Florida chapter is one of the last to be organized. All teachers of French in colleges, high schools and junior high schools are eligible for membership.

One of the primary purposes of the organization will be the improvements where problems of French may be discussed, ideas and solutions offered, and general forums held. Another goal will be to encourage an interest of students and teachers between the United States and France.

The French Review," a magazine devoted entirely to French teachers, will be the official organ of the Florida society. This magazine will be edited as a regular feature in the college library at the beginning of next year.

Students and Faculty Turn In 500-97 Thus Far in Sale of Seals

According to a report made last night by the Leon County Tuberculosis and Health association Christmas seal sales and seal donations have turned in 500-97 thus far. Envelopes were sent out in the postoffice boxes last Saturday.

A total of 327 envelopes have been turned back, 226 of which contained seals. These envelopes contained from five cents to fifty dollars.

Thirty-eight were blind.

Jennie Tilt, vice president of the student association, has been in charge of the seal sale. Other extra seals they may have left from her office. Many of the faculty have been requested to mail their envelopes as the seal sale and send in the envelopes must be sent soon in the city box. Envelopes containing seals for return of seals should be made until the Christmas holidays.

Varied Student Opinion on Change of Alumnae Week And Parents' Day Gathered by Flambeau Reporter

By MARY GLENN GRIMES

Since Alumnae week has been changed from Thanksgiving until a later date in the year and Thanksgiving has been set aside exclusively for the parents, there has been much discussion among students concerning this change.

Students interviewed by a Flambeau reporter varied in their opinions concerning Alumnae week and Parents' day. Marie Raulerson thinks that there should be a Parents day; she says that she thoroughly enjoyed it this year. However, she feels it will be a long time before an Alumnae week can be built up in which the alumnae will show the interest that they used to take in the Odd-Even demonstrations and games. Mickey Connolly's version of the discussion is that both Alumnae week and Parents' day could be at the same time. After all, the alumnae are interested in the Odd-Even rivalry much more than are the parents. Parents day really be centered around some other time.

Among the many viewpoints both for and against having Alumnae week at Thanksgiving, Jeanne McMullen thinks that it is a good idea to have Parents day at Thanksgiving and Alumnae week at a later date. The college does not have any other talent comparable to this for the students. It would be grand, she continues, if the celebrations at Thanksgiving here could be built up until they would equal the Homecoming activities at the University of Florida. Leona Howe thinks that Alumnae week should be at Thanksgiving and Parents' day at some other time for the parents are not interested in the Odd-Even activities as are the alumnae. Parents day could be observed sometime during the spring when the campus is at its best. Parents day at this time would make an enjoyable break into the second semester.

Valerie Hunt gives still another slant to the controversy by holding that the students are so very busy with their parents that they cannot appreciate the alumnae nor entertain them properly at Thanksgiving. Frankie Lawrence believes that having Alumnae week at some time other than at Thanksgiving is rather hard on the girls who have recently graduated because they are still very interested in the Odd-Even competition. The older graduates on the other hand, like to come back to college to see its improvements and to compare entire life now with what it was when they were here.

One of the juniors says that it is a lot of trouble both ways

Peace Group Plans Action With Boycott

Silk Stockings and Toys Are Among Articles Service Bans

In order to line up the students of P.S.C.W. with those of other colleges and with the citizens of the United States who are boycotting Japanese goods as a protest against the invasion of China, the Student Peace service recently drew up a list of reasons and methods for putting this boycott into effect.

The Peace service first emphasized that the motive which lay back of the plan was the desire to check Japan in the Far East by public action rather than by governmental in order to avoid as much ill feeling as possible between the American and Japanese governments. Since the Brussels conference had done nothing and since the millions of victimized Chinese needed aid, according to the Peace service, a public movement is imperative.

Having launched this movement, the Peace service went on to show that it could be effective. If America, it explained, refused to buy any of Japan's raw silk, 90 per cent of which is imported to the United States, that alone, as a French delegate at the Brussels conference announced, would end the invasion of China within a week. Last year, $97,300,000 worth of this product entered the United States. Cotton imported from Japan was assessed at $6,000,000 in 1936. Peace service continued, and china, porcelain, earthenware, metals, canned fish, furs, toys and dolls, bristles, straw hats, and other articles amounted to a still larger sum. If the people in this country banned these products entirely, the trade of Japan could no longer use them in the fashion desired, the Peace service was confident. Then Japanese advance would be halted.

The advocates of the boycott, on the other hand, admitted that the enactment of Japanese materials would interfere with American business, particularly since 20 per cent of our imports go to that country, but they claim that it will come to ours. They believed, however, that control of the sale of gold and to an unfavorable balance of trade, the Easterners would yield first.

In suggesting the part that students could play in this movement the Peace service asked that no silk stockings or other silk products be purchased. It also called attention to the numerous Christmas decorations and toys that come from Japan and advised that buyers inquire all points of origin. Instead, it requested that the students buy articles made in this country and Donald Duck ,Mickey Mouse, etc.

Package from Home Found Indigestible

"At last! A box from home," shouted a little freshman as a brown-papered bundle was handed to her through the college postoffice window. Making sure that no fair-weather friends were near, the "remembered" girl skipped to her room.

"Mother's cake never was light and fluffy enough," she remarked, as the package became more cumbersome. Tiptoeing down the hall so as to attract as little attention as possible, the girl opened her door. Cheers from within greeted her. The glad tidings already had spread among the freshman's many friends, who were eagerly waiting to divide the spoils.

Placing the package on the bed, the victim, smiling weakly, found the scissors and began cutting the string.

"Even limburger cheese would smell good to me," remarked one of the disappointed.

The circle of friends closed in as the heavy paper came off. The lid was lifted, and there, resplendent in a lovely green ribbon, was an Acme Comfy Blanket.

Day Students to Leave Saturday for Camp Trip

The day students will leave on their annual outing to Camp Flastacowo this Saturday, Dec. 4, and return Sunday afternoon. Holly Kinsey is in charge of all arrangements. Those students who are interested may sign up on the bulletin board in the college hall.

The organization is at present working for a more intelligent use of day students at convocation, class meetings, and other school affairs. Suggestions points are given to students for participation in campus life.

A meeting will be held at 11:30 Thursday in 307 Science building to complete plans for the camping trip.

Alumnae Plan Chapel Sh

Will Acquaint Stude With Association

Two short skits will be main features of the alumnae convocation program next Wednesday. The purpose of the program is to acquaint the students with the fact that there is an Alumnae Association and that some of the work it does is for the skits will be May Belle Johnson, Alumnae of 1936; Evelyn Kennard, chairman of committee on convocation with undergraduates of the Alumnae association of Florida and Ruth Bell, 1937 Steele Medal.

The cast of the first skit will be made up of daughters of alumnae as follows: Frances Posser, Berneice Owen, Clifton Watkins and Nelle Fain. Starr manager Lillian Alderdice and Betty Nickerson is accompanist.

In the second skits are Vernilne Betty Hatch, Irene Bell, Betty Steele Melton, Jean Smith Mettler, Frances Hodges, Donna Haney, Jean Hall, Catherine Bozeman, Ann Townsend.

Citizens on the committee in cooperation with members who are in charge of the program are Mrs. Robert A. Taylor, Mary Schornherst, Miss Mary Florence, Miss Gay Shackleford, Mrs. Kennell McCowan.

Florida Students Win Trip to 4-H Club

Inners of scholarship trips to the National 4-H club camp in Washington, D. C. are Ruth Chicaro during the international Question Box include four Florida girls who submitted outstanding records of achievement in different phases of 4-H club work.

They will return December 8.

It is suggested that they substitute the manufactured in Czechoslovakia. In case the students fail to recognize these contraband products, the Peace service requests some of the Peace officers

DO AMERICA'S FLIERS APPRECIATE THE COSTLIER TOBACCOS IN CAMELS?

YOU bet they do! In aviation is one of the most discriminating groups of smokers in the country. The famous record-holders, Col. Roscoe Turner, smokes Camels. So do test-pilot Lee Gehlbach, Capt. Frank Hawks, and Chief pilot Hal Snead—to mention only a few. As Col. Turner puts it: "I guess you've noticed that men in aviation are great smokers. And, from what I see, most flyers are very regard for Camels. They need healthy nerves. That's one big reason why so many of us stick to Camels."

And many millions of Americans—more people than smoke any other cigarette in the world—give a hearty o-kay to Camels!

ARTHUR WALDO, JR. is a Senior in College. He says: "Working out a tough assignment often makes me feel all tuckered out. The second I feel myself getting tired, I like to get a 'lift' with a Camel."

WINIFRED CASTLE works long hours at her editorial desk —smokes a lot. She says: "I think there's nothing like Camels for mildness. I can smoke as many Camels as I please and they never get on my nerves."

PETER KILLIAN is a news photographer. His slant: "Camels are always in the picture—time—on the job—at home—and everywhere. The taste does help my digestion to keep clicking day after day."

EDWARD HURLEY, a successful bond broker, says: "To my way of thinking, a man doesn't really know what honest-to-goodness mild flavor means until he smokes Camels. I'd walk a mile for a Camel!"

ED GRAFFE, gym instructor, says: "You sir, I can smoke Camels as I please without getting jangled nerves. No matter how much I dig into 'em, Camels, they don't tire my taste."

MARIE DRISCOLL, business girl, speaks for a lot of cheerful fliers when she says: "Camels certainly have everything I like a cigarette to have."

Camel spends MILLIONS MORE FOR COSTLIER TOBACCOS! Camels are a matchless blend of finer—MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—Turkish and Domestic.

SIXTEEN CHOSEN AS NEW MEMBERS

Organization Is Oldest Speech Group For Women in U. S.

Zeta Phi Eta, national speech professional and honorary fraternity will be installed on Florida State campus tomorrow Mrs. Pearl Brotman, Iowa City, national president, and Miss Lee Emery Secor, second vice president, Brenau college, Gainesville, Ga., will be among prominent guests invited to visit the college for the installation.

Sixteen Chosen

Students to be initiated are Margery Jones, Rachel Sears, Ida Renfroe, Frances Lewis, Polly Scott, Sallie Bert Nunnally, Edith Becky Ashton, Beverly Brown, Dorothy Pemberton, Sara Bryan, Elva Melvin, Mary Jessup, Elizabeth Meagher, Ruth Lee and Julia Bryant.

This initiation, Zeta Phi Eta, as the first women's professional fraternity established for women in the United States. It was founded in 1893 at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. It aims to hold together groups of selected college women interested in furthering standards of speech and drama, to build up professional philosophy for women engaged in the speech profession, and to furnish professional and social stimulus to members after graduation.

Prominent educational figures belonging to the fraternity are Cora Cook, actress; Lewis Worthington Smith, Boston dramatic and motion picture director; Sara Spencer, radio actress; original sketches; Clara Lou Sabin, College Humor; Isabel Jeffries and Helen King, radio; and Elizabeth Grindall, author of the New York play, "Hitch Hiker."

Those combined with pleasure is the general theme of the plans of members of the Masque club for entertaining their parents next month following an afternoon tea. On Dec. 21 there will be an informal business meeting; Saturday morning the group will be shown the campus; Saturday afternoon initiation of the new members will be conducted at the History building; a formal banquet will be given Saturday night at the Quick Kitchen; and Sunday brunch will be a feature of the week-end.

Requirements for membership in the Masque club are that the student be either a junior or senior with a B average and have a B-average in her speech class.

University "Y" Planning Trip

14-Day Christmas Tour To Cover Cuba

A 14-day trip to Cuba with total expenses for each person limited to $48 is being sponsored by the University of Florida Y. M. C. A. during Christmas vacation.

Following the policy of offering Christian opportunities to the students of Florida, the Y. M. C. A. at Gainesville arranged for the Cuban tour composed of a five-day program, property chaperoned, and necessarily limited to 40 students.

The trip will be directed by Hollis Burr and John Tubbs.

Leaving December 18 and returning January 1, the group will travel in the Y. M. C. A. bus to Key West where they will sail on the S. S. Cuba. Five days will be spent in Havana and then a trip covering 1,000 miles of travel on the island, making a total of 14 days in all.

The total expense, $48, of the trip includes transportation, passage meals and lodging.

Those interested in going on the tour should get in contact with Hudson Burr C. L. O. House. Other visits will be made while in Cuba at the F. S. C. W. Baptist Student building immediately, as the limited quota is being filled rapidly.

Chimes in Gay Mood Work Long Overtime

The chimes evidently got too much Christmas spirit on Saturday night for they worked four hours overtime. The strange thing about their overtime is that exactly the same thing happened last year at this season.

Of course, the students like the chimes to have the holiday spirit, but they have requested that all the merry-making cease before 12:30 at night.

N.S.F.A. Forum Will Instruct Two Delegates

National Congress Meets In Albuquerque For Five Days

Students will meet Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock in the council room of Neil Colvin, Florida State college delegates to N.S.F.A. congress, in caucus to discuss problems.

The congress will be held at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque during the Christmas holidays. During the days of plenary sessions, regional meetings, convention assemblies and dances, the representatives of colleges from all over the United States will discuss problems of student life, student government, semi-faculty relations, finances, curriculum, newspapers, college courses and faculties.

To Select Commissions

There are twelve commissions of which each delegate will sit on three. It is the purpose of the forum Tuesday night to select those which Florida State delegates will attend. The group on the first commission will devote its attention to the question of what student councils exist and what their place is in the new system. Theories of higher education, Commission two will study the problem with which student councils in Florida can best deal. Commission three will endeavor to learn the structure and duties of student councils to work with campus parties and organizations which are expected to arise will include official or unofficial factors, representation, selection of student governing groups and general student control of activities.

Group two, of which commission four is a part, will consider student control in connection with activities usually handled officially by the administration. Problems to be discussed by the delegates include freshman orientation program, how students should share in college discipline, the limitations of the honor system, adequate social regulations, how much control the individual student may be destroyed, financial control of college and student press, orientation of students on the college curriculum committee.

Open Forum Tuesday

Commission five will study the relation of the student body to every campus, the policy of the council in influencing the editorial opinion of the college newspaper, the relationship between editors and council and the inter-fraternity council, and the college yearbook guidance and employment program.

Commission six will discuss the problems which arise from the activity of the council as a rep-

Christmas music and carols will be rendered along with the play at appropriate intervals. The cast is composed of Frances Lewis, Shirley Pemberton, Rachel Seay, and Sally Burt Nunnn.

Astronomy Club Studies Saturn

Star-Gazers Hold Naked Eye Observation

Last Wednesday the Astronomy club made their regular observations of the winter constellations between the hours of seven and nine. The constellations are higher in the sky and much better for observation.

Saturn is always interesting for observation, and this time it has learned many new facts about the planet from the observations. Saturn ranks next to Jupiter in magnificence and in offering interesting features to observed features.

Among Saturns features are its moons and its rings. Though Saturn is simply provided with seven moons, the rings of them, the outstanding features are its celestial rings are numerous. There rings, of which there are three, are not solid as they appear to appear, but are swarms of countless tiny "moonlets" so close together that they appear to be indistinguishable from the earth. These "moonlets" shine by reflected sunlight.

From a combination of circumstances Saturn alternately exhibits each side to the earth, and the rings appear to increase and decrease in breadth. That is, the rings are at times open, being only able to see all three of the rings at one time, to having them appear as a thin line or entirely eliminated needles stuck into the ball of the planet, and Dr. Pinner's explanation of this phenomenon is gone through in little less than 15 years for each side of the rings.

With a diameter of about 72,000 miles, Saturn ranks next to Jupiter in size. Saturn's color appears to be a dull yellow hue. Its distance from the sun is approximately 886 million miles, and it takes 29½ years for Saturn to complete one revolution around the sun.

Christmas Harmony Fills Air As the Holidays Draw Nearer

Each Day Is Marked Off on Calendars as Dec. 17 Marks Important Milestone in College

By LEONA HOWE

With the shop windows in downtown Tallahassee reflecting the spirit of Christmas as he utilizes displays of wreaths and tinsel, and the college tied wavering in willower weather always associated with yuletide holidays, is with great anticipation that the students are looking forward to the release from classes next Friday.

Days are being counted and marked off in various amusing ways. Paper dolls strung across dormitory rooms lose one of their number as each night falls, and enormous calendars are chalked in red as each completed day draws near.

In the dining room, in the showers, and in the smoking rooms Christmas carols are sung or hummed with great enthusiasm and whole choruses of students harmonize to Christmas songs on all favorites, feeling suddenly a lift in spirits and an expanding heart filled with a warm glow.

Worries about Christmas gifts seem to beset everyone. "What in the world can I give him this year? The first year I gave him my picture, last year a traveling kit, but now there's just nothing left to give him," is a typical complaint heard around campus. Already in the season Christmas cards are being addressed by the usual early birds, save those persons who will mail their cards in the last minute for New Year's.

In the dorm rooms in the dormitories boast cheerful wreaths de

State Health Board Displays Medical Data

High Maternal Death Rate Given as Illustration In Exhibition

That Florida leads every state in the Union with the exception of one in the death maternal death rate, was one of the many facts illustrated at medical exhibition sponsored by the Florida State Board of Health at the Elks club, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week.

The displays were divided into seven departments concerning subjects vitally important to people today, and the exhibits are also in the entire United States. Among the displays illustrating were those on maternal mortality, tuberculosis, and syphilis.

The fact in regard to maternal mortality were illustrated by a contrivance shaped like a small fly pin, it was shown that the deaths caused by childbirth in 1936 numbered 1,500, and in 1937 they were white and 98 colored.

Among the exhibits in the tuberculosis department, the tuberculin test received the greatest attention. Pictures illustrating the purpose, the procedure of the injection, and the necessary equipment necessary, the correct and incorrect way to inject the

Foreign Dolls Are Featured In Exhibition

Miniature Charmers Sent From 30 Distant Countries Here

Every type of doll from "Grandma Scott" of the Ozark mountains to the Queen of the Nile, in satin and brocade are included in the industrial art room on the first floor of the Education building. This display will continue through December.

On exhibit are dolls from 30 foreign countries and from every section of the United States. From Tangiers, Morocco, comes a native bride, dressed with a goatskin bag and a bell to ring the announcement of precious cargo. From Spain comes a leather toy which the Moors are famous. There is a Norwegian Ruff, direct from the bazaars of Barbary. Facial expressions on all the dolls are true to life as seen in the movies and in story-books. There is a Chinese mandarin, a priest, a peasant woman from Quito, Ecuador, with an impressive Indian expression; a Canadian woman and an old "sailor" from Newfoundland. "Grandma Lady," a dusky charmer dressed elaborately in white satin with satin brocade and jewels; a Slovakian boy and rosy-cheeked couple; Hindu and Burmese.

The "Secretary of London," a doll from the famous Liberty's shop in London, is also on display in the room at a frantic Chinese theater, fantastically costumed and by patient Chinese workers. The Russian ballet of Madame Pavlowa et al Milan, whose work is worldfamous, is "Maria of Italy," who has a somewhat pathetic look

Dunsany Plays Will Be Given

Fantasies Cast by Speech Department Group

The Golden Doom, Fame and the Poet, and The Glittering Gate by Lord Dunsany have been selected to be presented Monday, December 13, by the speech department, in Dirty Dick's room at 8:15 o'clock as part in the three satires by the British playwright.

The Golden Doom, a comedy, reveals Dunsany's fine poetical quality, although he is at his satire in prose. The dialogue is full of humorous repartee, and for taking modern problems and ideas and developing them in an ancient setting for entertainment. The characters in this play are as follows: the King, Beverly Brown; chamberlain, Mary Bostwright; the princess, Rachel Renfroe; girl, Shirley Pemberson; boy, Rachel Seay; first prophet, Sallie Burt Nunnn; second prophet, Betty Scott; first sentry, Zullene Rushing; second sentry, Helen Wahlstranger; Eloise Frink; attendant, Arthur Lee Hamilton; first spy, Frances Lewis; second spy, Betty Anderson; a spy, Caroline Boyd. Assistant director, Mildred Pemberton. Stage manager is Dorothy Hill and property manager is Eloise Frink.

Fame and the Poet, a farce, is considered to be somewhat biographical. The cast is as follows: Fame, Mary Jane Johnson; Dick Prattle, Jane Sharon; Fame, Louise Usher. Lois Ad-

Lecturer

Pierre Frederix, French speaker, who will deliver the last address of his two-day series tonight in the auditorium.

Faculty Senate Makes Several Major Changes

Admission Requirements Undergo Revision During Meeting

Faculty senate made two important changes in requirements Wednesday afternoon, when they voted to change the admission requirements to all divisions of the college and made several important changes in requirements for majors in the various divisions of the college

Requirement Changes

The change in admission requirements which affect every high school in the state will enable any graduate of an accredited high school with a minimum of 12 academic units, three of which must be in English, to enter any division of the college. The remaining nine units may be chosen from any of five fields of knowledge: English, journalism and speech; foreign language; history and social studies; mathematics; and science. This is a very marked change from the former admission requisites as nine of the 15 units of work then necessary were specified as follows: English, three units; history, one; science, one; mathematics, two; geometry, one, and foreign language, two.

Majors Cut Down

The change in major requirements cuts down the minimum of hours that can be required for a degree from 36 to 30 hours. It states that each department shall specify its own major subject policy. Group majors according to the new set-up shall be specified by the departments collaborating in the major.

The revised options open to departments in specifying majors reads as follows: "A 24 hours major may subject and a five hour in some other subject of the same group, or in 18 hours in the major subject plus 12 hours in one or two other subjects of the same group. c. In special cases to be determined by the department of the major subject, 30 hours or even 12 hours, from another group or combination of groups in which the major subject is classified may be used as part of the collateral requirement in a and in b, paragraphs 1 and 2. All major requirements are to be in addition to the literature courses and other constants and no 100 courses are to be used as part of any major.

Interviewer Discovers High Honors Given to Dr. Seymour

Head of Language Department Has Varied History Of Travel, Cowboy Life, and Education

By JANE QUINN

The pioneer spirit which is inherent in Dr. Arthur Seymour, head of the modern language department, may be said to have been "born in a log cabin." Sallas J. Seymour was one of the early pioneers in the state of Wisconsin. Silas Seymour was the owner of a large tract of timber land, a tract of land which came from the Indians after the Blackhawk war. Silas Seymour was a merchant, and a cousin of his Horace Seymour was the Democratic ticket for the office of President after the Civil war, but was defeated by the Republican candidate, U. S. Grant.

Silas Seymour as a member of the Wisconsin legislature, introduced and organized the bill that created the State Board of Health. Wisconsin was one of the first states in the union to provide for such a board. He came to be known, through his tenure of

French Speaker Gives Two-Day Lecture Series

Pierre Frederix Touches Politics, Education In Discussions

THURSDAY SPEECH MADE IN FRENCH

Adds to Program This Afternoon by Talk On Journalism

At 7:45 Friday evening in the Autuma Conrad theater, Pierre Frederix will give the concluding lecture in a two-day series of five addresses. The subject of Friday night's talk will be "Spain and the International Situation." M. Frederix has gathered the material for this lecture from his personal experience in Europe as a traveler, lecturer, author, and journalist. He has traveled in Germany, Spain, Indo-China, Russia, Siberia, Italy, and the United States. The situations in these various nations have formed the subjects of several series of articles and books on contemporary politics which he has had recently published.

Is an Author

His present lecture tour of the southern United States will be concluded after his visit to Gainesville and the University of Florida. During the past six weeks he has spoken in Louisiana, Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia before his appearance at Gainesville. He seems to favor Florida as a pleasure trip. Although he would like to spend a month at his home in France, he will not be able to sail from New York until April 10, instead.

Discusses French Education

Thursday afternoon Pierre Frederix spoke in French at the Assembly Council chamber about the educational system in France The divisions of the educat onal administration in France are entirely different from that in our nation. Instead of the kindergarten, primary, grade, grammar schools, high school, technical college, and university system of the United States, there are four distinct divisions. After a short beginner's course a secondary course is given, and it all classes leading to the bachelor's degree. The secondary course is split. One year of the divisions at a very early age. With the completion of this division, the student is prepared to specialize in any number of fields. Students as will lead to a doctor's or a master's degree in the university. The university course lasts four years, the completion that course not violent.

Regulations On Leaving Given

All Students Must Sign Up in Office

An announcement in regard to regulations for students leaving or returning to holiday has been issued by Maude Reeves, director of residence halls.

The residence halls will close at noon on Thursday, December 16. Each student must turn with her checkout slip before she and how she is going. If she expects to make the trip in a car other than with her parents, she must have immediate family she must have a funeral permit and parking permission on file from her guardian. The trip must be stated on week-end permit. A list of escorts parents of the car, also is the destination limit number of persons allowed per car.

A student who expects to spend the Christmas holidays must have on file with the director of residence halls a permit from her parents and an invitation from her hostess in Tallahassee.

Any student leaving on the night train or bus is required to sign out at the office before second night flash as that the night director may arrange for taxi.

Only first class mail received during Christmas holidays will be forwarded to the home addresses of students unless request to cover mailing costs is left at the post office. Newspapers will not be sent unless they are requested.

Faculty and staff members are asked to advise the post office of their forwarding addresses.

Church Groups Plan Pre-Xmas Celebrations

Coming Christmas Season Will Be Heralded By Carols, Parties

With carols, plays, and parties, the different campus church organizations are celebrating the coming Christmas season.

Thursday night, December 16, the annual Christmas caroling party will be given at Ruge Hall. As only 50 students may go, those who wish to take part in the caroling are requested to sign up on a paper posted on the bulletin board for the purpose. Among those to be serenated are Dr. Edward Conradi and the Ruge Hall committee.

The Student Vestry is planning to send some Christmas gifts to a clergyman working in the mission districts of Alabama. Three freshmen elected to serve on the Student Vestry are Sarah Fuller, Peggy Oldham, and Frances Cushing.

The Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, bishop of the Diocese of Florida, will be at St. John's Episcopal church for the service of confirmation Sunday, December 12. He will speak at the student auxiliary meeting Sunday night at 7:30 o'clock.

The student choir will meet Thursday at 5:30 to work on their Epiphany Feast of Sights service which is to be given the second Tuesday after the Christmas holidays.

Friday [illegible] 7 15 there will be the [illegible] after-dinner coffee for [illegible] and their friends.

"They That Sit in Darkness" is the title of a play to be given by the Presbyterian Dramatic club at the Presbyterian church Sunday evening at 7:30. The characters include Frances Moss— Miriam, the outcast; Ruth Treasure — Ruth, daughter of the innkeeper; Mary Alice Lester—Mary Mother of Jesus; Doris Doner—Joseph, the carpenter, and Lucy Kelly—Joash, the innkeeper.

Baptist students who have previously attended the Y. W. A. doll shows, are looking forward to this year's show to be given Saturday night at 7 45 at the Baptist Student house. These dolls, dressed by Y. W. A. students, are to go to the Italian mission located in Tampa. The girl having the best dressed doll is to receive a prize. In honor of the new student house, the girls are having a Christmas party at the rectory Saturday night at 8.00 o'clock.

The Methodist students gave their Christmas party Tuesday evening. The [illegible] pres- [illegible] Student [illegible] after placing their gifts around the Christmas tree, the guests were entertained with a program of games, readings, and music.

French Speaker Gives 2-Day Lecture Series

this system has many other points of difference. Schools are not co-educational. Practically all of the students are day students. No social activities are included in the curriculum. Until quite recently sports were not included either. Classes are continuous with no time for study or rest throughout the day. Each student carries a full schedule which affords no free time for making social contacts.

About 60 per cent of the foreign language students study English. Considered of succeeding importance are German, Italian, and Spanish. The average French student takes four or five years of this language during the course of his secondary education, between his tenth and eighteenth years. A foreign language is not studied in the university unless that is the student's major. The French people find the absence of any definite rules for the pronunciation of our vowels and for the accentuation of words the main difficulty in mastering the language.

Hold Forum on French Politics

"Political Parties in France" was the theme of the lecture which M. Frederix delivered Thursday afternoon. After a definition of the leading political and labor factions in France at the present time, the speaker made a comparison of the Republican-Democratic party system of this country with the French system. The similarity of the A.F. of L. and the C.I.O. with the labor situation of his country was also brought out. In the forum following the talk, several students asked questions about the economic problems, unemployment relief, monetary standard and [illegible] government of France. The existing attitudes towards Hitler, Roosevelt, and Hoover were discussed.

At 10 o'clock Friday morning a lecture entitled "The Economic Situation" will be given at 303 Westcott building.

As a journalist, M. Frederix's talks on French journalism, scheduled for 3:30 Friday afternoon will be of special interest to all students of journalism. He is interested in the differences between the American and French newspapers. The French paper rarely exceeds six pages. The lack of advertisements and other financial assistance is partially responsible for the size of these papers. Their largest newspapers do not compare with some of our small town daily papers. There is nothing published like the New York Times, New York Herald Tribune, and papers of like nature. A few of the leading American papers have French editions, but even these have become so impregnated with the French system that they are not similar to the American editions. A recent trend in French jounarlism is to put more pictures and more humor into the paper.

Fall Frolics at University Are Gone but Not Forgotten

American Student Union Started, "Dear Brutus" Presented and Bill Terry Returns

By JOE SCALES

Fall Frolics at the University have once again gone into memories of remorse and ecstasy. Collegians received a great though pleasant surprise when Mal Hallet turned out a galaxy of pleasing tunes and colorful performers. All of his dances were acclaimed as successes, and a general consensus of campus opinion placed the Saturday morning dance at the head of the list.

Hallet and his orchestra were well received by campusmen and their ladies. Jerry Perkins, a 17-year-old youngster, made a great impression with his silken vocals. Mal added Jerry to his organization in Boston, the stronghold of Hallet popularity, during the past summer. Teddy Grace, in spite of her thorough seasoning, proved her ability to swing the blues in torrid tempo. Joe Carbonero, trouper extraordinary, substantiated the contention that it takes a fat man to clown.

The band went into a white-hot groove during concluding moments of the Frolics dance on Saturday night. And speaking of swing sessions, the heat sections with Mal Hallet and the University's own Rabbit Robbins combined blasts in a genuine jam party lasting from 3 till 5 Sunday a m. The fortunate kibitzers came away with new ideas about [illegible] improvisations.

[illegible] on the campus [illegible] century to present the ultimate in social functions. Breakfast dances, luncheon dances, dinner dances, formal dances, pop dances and Frolics dances gave all and sundry an opportunity to swing and sway. The White Friars, Cavaliers, Pirates and L'Apache, campus social societies, added extra periods of rhythm. Among the bands in town for the festivities were those of Mal Hallet, Rabbit Robbins, Johnny Entenza and Larry Slaton. Meals, masquerading under verious titles but still supplying food, were provided at proper intervals to renew lagging energies for further activity. Remember that a straight 48-hour stretch of socialization is rather wearing.

Saturday afternoon intermission was called in order to cheer the Gators on to their win over the Kentucky Wildcats. A noticeable lack of an elder crowd was evident at the game, probably due to predictions of a Florida loss. However, a large throng of the younger group made ample amends for the deficiency. Many high school students from all over the state came over to see Gator greats in action during the last game of the present season.

Miami Edison high school sent a bevy of 43 girls, composing a [illegible] cadette drill corps, who marched on the field between halves of the game in a beautiful exhibition of formation maneuvers.

Following the win over Kentucky, Gator supporters had high hopes for an invitation to play Michigan State in the annual Orange Bowl game, which is to be held in Miami on New Year's day. However, Auburn received the bid, and accepted it on Tuesday of this week, thus crushing Florida's short-lived expectations.

On Sunday afternoon in the university auditorium, music in a quieter mood was brought to the campus by the University Symphony orchestra. This was the first in a series of Sunday afternoon pop concerts featuring light and semi-classical music. The boys gave an inspired performance and their broadcast over WRUF was really excellent.

In a debate on Monday night, before an enthusiastically crowded auditorium, the magnificent George Smathers and the convincing Louis Snetman opposed two rather jolly Englishmen, Ronald V. Gibson, of Cambridge, and James A. Brown, of Oxford. And pardon, the redheaded Mr. Brown wants it distinctly understood that his natural habitat is not England, but the renowned Ulster, North Ireland. This debate is an annual affair, and is well attended principally because of the inspired flow of English wit and American humor usually forthcoming. Trouble this year was that the speakers almost forgot to put on a show and tried to make a debate instead. As far as that goes, several good points were brought out on each side, and the supply of cracks did provide sufficient audience appeal. The debate was non-decision, and the subject: "Resolved, that the basolute veto of the Supreme Court is an Anachronism." The Britons upheld the affirmative side and British honor; while the Florida men took the negativa side of the question in Paul Revere fashion.

The Little Theater of Gainesville presented a play entitled "Dear Brutus" on Monday and Tuesday nights. Cast was composed of university students and townspeople; direction by Sigismond Dietrich, of the university faculty; musical direction under Claude L. Murphree, also of faculty. Well acted; quite a cultural influence.

Florida Players, the campus dramatists, are rehearsing a play written by a university man, who is not in school at present. Name of the play, "Cracker Coal"; name of the man, Charles S. Mims. Orval Anderson and Prof. Lester L. Hale are co-directors; production date is not as yet decided upon.

J. Lester Poucher, president of the sophomore class, and 15 members of the newly-organized sophomore executive council met in solemn conclave on Monday night to plot devious details concerning the third annual General College dance, which is to be held next spring. They rightly suppose that early plans make for the best dances.

Bill Terry, ace announcer on the WRUF staff, has returned to native mikes after a prolonged sojourn in the hinterlands of Alabama. Terry made such a rep in that section, with his football broadcasts over a state-wide network, that he plans to leave for Birmingham again in April, to broadcast baseball games.

A new student league made its appearance on the campus Tuesday night, under the heading of American Student union. Details of the organization are not available for publication this week, but the purpose of the Union is to sponsor and further worthwhile causes. Main subject on the fire at the present time is the Alligator's campaign for paved roads around the university. Outstanding leaders are enlisted under the banners of this outfit, and campusmen in the know predict big things for the group.

Choral harmonies are scheduled for university presentation on December 15. The Lyceum council is bringing the Don Cossack male chorus here as their second treat of the year. This all Russian chorus is directed by Serge Jaroff, and it is generally conceded to be the best all-around chorus on circuit today. At least we hope so. The Cossacks' program will consist of Russian sacred music and folk songs in the main.

Multitudes of fraternity dances are planned for the Christmas vacation. All major cities in the state will come in for their share of these affairs. They are officially named Alumni dances, beeause a few alumni will doubtless provide funds for the celebrations.

Members of the Alligator staff, on this, the last week of publication this year, send solicitous salutationsto all Florida State College for Women, and express their best wishes for a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

College Alumns Present Skits

Assembly Program Lead By Emilie Johnson

Daughters of alumnae of Florida State college took the parts of their mothers contemporaries in the Alumnae association skits in convocation last Tuesday. Dressed in trailing white dresses, the ancient form of the present gym suit, and with hair "done" in the style of 1900, the girls illustrated the script read by Miss Emilie Johnson, alumna of Florida State college.

"Dates in the Early Years" presented for the first time on the college stage, Dick Mitchell, a Tallahassee boy, who did not blush when the students in the audience slapped and giggled at his entrance. Other notes of interest in the history of the school attracted much attention.

The second part of the program was devoted to the Alumnae association award given to outstanding graduates. Students representing women who had been so honored paraded across the stage.

Students who participated in the program which was under the joint direction of Miss Evelyn Kennard, alumna and social director of Reynolds, and Miss Johnson, included Frances Lewis, Berahe Oven, Clifton Van Brunt, Nelle Pain, and Mary Emily Parker, who are daughters of alumnae. Other members of the cast were Betty Venning, Betty Hatch, Irene Connell, Evelyn Steele, Melissa Holman, Ruth Merbler, Frances Hodges, Donna Haney, Jean Bennett, Catherine Eckles, Flavil Townsend and Dorothy Niekerson. Lillian Alderdice and Nine K. Noel were stage managers.

needle, and the negative and positive reaction forty-eight hours after the test is given.

According to statistics on display, from January to October in 1937, 6,670 cases of tuberculosis have been found in the state, 735 deaths have occurred, and 666 new cases have been reported. Tuberculosis, however, since 1927 no longer has been considered the chief cause of death in Florida. In fact, it ranks seventh on the list of causes. The success of a recent tuberculosis case-finding campaign in Connecticut and New York has, however, suggested a state-wide program that would give each county in Florida an opoprtunity for finding cases of tuberculosis by means of X-rays.

A recent development in X-ray equipment for taking pictures rapidly at a low cost has placed at the state's disposal a new "screening" method of finding suspicious cases for further study. It is now possible to record the chest "shadows" of many people in a short time, such as 150 "shots" per hour. The pictures are taken on paper "films" in large rolls. A person to be "filmed" steps to the machine which is adjusted to his haight by the turn of a wheel. He stands close, takes a deep breath, someona presses a button, and it is all over. The turn of a crank brings a new section of the film into position for another picture.

One of the exhibits in the tuberculosis department was a miniature of a Burr cottage, a mobile building which can be attached to a residence for the purpose of isolsting from the rest of the family a tubercular patient. The cost of construction amounts to $40. A Burr cottage is useful for cases unable to secure sanitorium benefits.

In the syphilis department were "glorified posters" pointing out that one out of every ten adults passed on the street each day has syphilis, that if a prospective mother takes a required number of treatments before the fifth month of pregnancy, her baby won't be stillborn from ravages of syphilis, and that a physical examination before marriage is necessary.

resentativa of the student body. Particular topics include the stand of the council on national questions, its position at meetings of the college trustees and faculty and is stand at intercollegiate conventions.

Commission seven will confer on problems arising from the responsibility of the council to introduce new ideas to the campus.

Other activities of N.S.F.A. will be discussed by commissions eight to 12. Included here is the question of students' rights, the N.S.F.A. peace program, N.S.F.A. program with regard to national issues, the work of the international student service, and a reconsideration of the idea of N.S.F.A. with regard to its soundness and changes in its practice.

According to tthe Weekly Reporter of N.S.F.A. each delegate must be expert in the problems to be discussed by the commission to which he contributes. It states that the success of the system depends upon the willingness of the individual delegate to acquaint himself with the work of his commission before coming to the congress, the willingness of all to take part in the public sessions of the commissions of which they are not members, and the feeling of responsibility by all members of particular commissions to produce a report which adequately solves their problem.

Officers of Language Organization Elected At Tuesday's Meeting

Officers for this year were elected at the organization meeting of the French club which was held Tuesday afternoon in Broward lounge.

They are: Betty Gamble, president; Joan Kennedy, vice president; Winnie Olive Conway, secretary; and Edith Williams, treasurer.

Christmas carols were sung in French during the meeting and the group voted to meet again next Wednesday. A committee of three girls, Frances Kirkland, Grace Windmueller, and Marjorie Colee, was appointed to plan the program for this time.

The French club, under the direction of Miss Marie Davis, instructor in French, was organized last year for the first time, in order that students interested in the language might have the opportunity to meet and converse in French.

Christmas Harmony Fills Air as the Holidays Near holly and everyone has managed to have some note of Christmas in sight, even carrying the ideas to the extent of the girl who has one green and one red sock festooned in her window. The parlors will soon brighten up with the usual Christmas trees decorated with glowing lights which bring a spring to the step of every girl as she passes, eying the symbol which stands for Home as much as for anything else.

That college girls are not unmindful of the fact that there are many less fortunate who will not have a very cheerful Christmas is shown in the response to the call for clothes made by the Y.W.C.A. Full boxes in the residence halls testify to this, and many girls are polishing up old shoes and mending dresses to add to the still-growing heap which will help some needy persons somewhere to face the New Year with greater hope in their hearts.

Scarcely one week before vacation begins, and hundreds of girls are counting their money for bus and train tickets, looking forward to the moment when the long line of buses lined up in front of the dormitories start blowing their horns and move slowly but surely down the street, toward the highways that lead to Home.

sion on her face, probably due to the grim-looking Bulgarian soldier standing beside her. The latter has a finely modeled face and beautifully made native uniform. Straight from Paris are a charming "grand-pere" and "grand-mere," representing the peasant class with their wooden sabots and dark homespun garments. There is even an Eskimo doll, with face carved from a walrus tusk and warmly surrounded by fur.

Indubitably, the "piece-de-resistance" is the Gorale doll, a Carpathian mountaineer from Poland. His costume is an elaborate one of white felt embroidered in gala colors, with a beaten metal belt, and the outfit is completed by a carved walking stick and pipe.

Among the specimens found in the collection which are representative of the United States are "Grandma Scott" from the Ozark mountains; an Amish woman, a "River Brethrenite," and a Mennonite, the latter three belonging to a group in Pennsylvania known as the "Plain People," recognizable by their distinctive garb; "Slim the Cowboy," with genuine fur chaps and real hair (somewhat shaggy), who was made by an old cowboy in Texas; and some Indian dolls made by the Sioux, Navajo, and Cheyenne Indians. These are clothed in buckskin and alkskin, products of the nearly extinct art of home-tanning.

Christmas Is Exhibit Theme

Library Features Carols And Bayberries

The library's exhibit of evergreen wreaths and gaily-wrapped gift books is a cheerful reminder of the holiday season so soon to come. In a glass case Merry Christmas is spelled out in bayberries, interspersed with evergreen, by way of greeting. There is also posted a short history of the Christmas carol.

Parchment scrolls give the earliest meaning of the word carol as a song accompanied by dancing; it was supposed to have been danced by many performers who joined hands and sang as they danced about in a ring. While carols are popularly associated with English tradition, according to the writings there the first Christmas carol originated in Italy during the thirteenth century and has been sung continuously by many nations. Although carols were suppressed under the Puritanic rule in England they were restored under the Restoration and allowed to return to popular favor. Ever since they have been sung as part of the celebration of Christmas.

The enchantment of the Santa Claus legend is well illustrated with pictures of the familiar poem "'Twas the Night Before Christmas," exhibited as part of the Christmas decorations.

W. A. A. Choose Coming Year's Sport Leaders

Rauchlessnau, Williamson, And Thompson Will Be Given Training

Columbia Watson and Yvonne Mathewson, Nancy Williamson and Lorraine Thompson were chosen as next year's leaders of Odd-Even, Marshall and Softball, respectively, at a meeting of the Women's Athletic association last Tuesday night.

To better equip these leaders for their task special training will be given them and a definite policy has been established with regard to the conduct of their duties. Coaches and student sports leaders participating in the Odd-Even rivalry.

During the Christmas holidays it was announced at the meeting, the Tarpon club will represent Florida State at a swimming conference to be held at Ft. Lauderdale. A counselor of the members will attend this convention at that time.

The W.A.A. also stated that more time has been granted for skating at the rink, which now has been extended to 10:30 instead of the usual 10 o'clock. Dancing starts at 8 o'clock and lasts only a half hours, whereas in former years it started at 9 o'clock and lasted only until 11 o'clock.

Plans for a mid-winter carnival are being drawn up by the board, according to the report, and are somewhat tentative. If the idea materializes, the "F" club plans to assemble with the P.E.C.W. as guests of the local "F" club.

Interviewer Discovers High Honors Were Given to Dr. Seymour

and Miss Seymour and his wife always maintained friendly relations with them. Oftentimes the Indians would call on Mrs. Seymour for help when they were sick. Some years ago Mrs. Seymour died in the house, and occasionally they brought venison over after meals to their friendly people.

Starts to School

In the summer of his fourth year Arthur Seymour started to school, and would walk the mile with his sister, who was the schoolteacher. The winter came on, the family were unable to persuade little Arthur to stay home with school, and he continued attending school from that winter. As a young boy, Arthur was fond of plants and flowers, of music, and especially of horses. He would not go hunting with his brothers because he had an aversion to killing animals. Also, he early awakened in him the adventurers of reading. In the summer the family would sit aloud, reading from books in his father's library. When someone would come across a good passage, they would call it to the attention of the family and they would discuss.

Matriculating at the University of Wisconsin, Dr. Seymour started as a pre-medical student and ended as a major in modern and classical languages. As an undergraduate he studied Latin, Greek, French, Spanish, Italian, Dutch, Saxon, old Persian and Greek. He graduated with special honors in French. In his graduate work, he studied Sanskrit and Provencal, which was an ancestor of the southern French troubadours. He acquired his Bachelor of Arts degree, his Master of Arts degree, and his doctorate degree at the University of Wisconsin. Since then the linguistic knowledge he has accumulated includes Portuguese, Russian, Chinese, Japanese, and Bengali. This last is an Indian language, and Dr. Seymour and his wife were the first Europeans to learn it. Hindu, poet and Nobel prize-winner, to enable them to read his poems in the original.

Studied Abroad

During his life, Dr. Seymour has studied in Spain, France, Mexico, and Italy. While in Spain he resided at Granada and was made a member of the Spanish Academy of Granada. In France, he attended the Sorbonne, the University of Paris. He was a student at the National University of Mexico during a summer session. While in Mexico, he came across what was evidently positive proof that Chinese culture was present in Mexico generations before the arrival of the white man. The curator of the National Museum, Senor Leud of Dr. Seymour's, discovered a slate with inscriptions upon it, which Dr. Seymour could decipher and read, as the characters were old Chinese. The date, found by the Pyramid of the Sun, about 15 or 30 feet under the surface was painted in a faded red color. Dr. Seymour procured some fragments from the same pyramid, which also show the oriental influence by the slanting Mongolian eye. In 1924, Dr. Seymour and his wife studied in the Egyptian museum in Cairo, Egypt.

Teaching Experiences

Every member of Dr. Seymour's family has taught at some time, but he is the only one to take up the profession. His travels have been for the most part on business for educational purposes.

A short while after he had graduated from the University of Wisconsin, he had some adventures which are not common to many in the usual professor's life. For while he lived in Montana with some friends who were in the mining occupation, he moved to Texas, where he was in the cattle business of the term, taking his part in the roundups. Then after ranching, taming wild horses, riding, and all the activities in which real cowboys engage, he returned to Wisconsin to teach. Following this period of his experience, he went to Mexico, where he later established a school from there he went into old Mexico for a number of years.

Holds High Positions

After teaching for sometime in his Alma Mater, he took a position at the University of Illinois. Dr. Seymour's colleagues there interested in better understanding between the various nationalities, and was at one time president of the National Association of Cosmopolitan Clubs. At this time was one international representative of the Carnegie Endowment International Federation of Students. This association was established to bring about brotherhood of the different nationalities and is connected with the International Relations Club of Chicago and New York. Dr. Seymour was among the first to start the movement which has had interesting results, one being the establishment of similar societies in some universities. He became the Dean of Foreign Students at the University of Illinois and it was through the contact with the Chinese students under his charge that he became interested in the excellent opportunities for a pioneer in education in the Orient, and so he went to China.

He was appointed Foreign Adviser to the Minister of Education of Hunan Province and his first task was to standardize an examination for Chinese students who wanted to go abroad to study. After he had made out the examinations and the students had taken them, Dr. Seymour had the final decision on who had passed showing the greatest possibilities. He could also select the best individuals ever to go to continue their studies. He helped to organize two universities while he was in China, and was the first chart correspondence work there. He was present also at the first teacher's convention ever held in Hunan province, and delivered a talk on public service, a virgin field to them. For his services he received an honorary Doctor of Literature degree from the Chinese university, the only other American receiving a similar distinction being John Dewey, American educator at Columbia university.

Returns to U. S.

After the disturbances were in the Orient, Dr. Seymour returned to the United States and in 1926 he accepted the appointment to his present position, and in 1930 became head of the modern language department at Florida State College for Women. Through a constant efforts the department has achieved a reputation for concrete recognition of this fact came to Dr. Seymour following the visit of the French consul to this campus in 1935. The latter was very well pleased with the work of professors and students here in the French department and in recognition of the services done in the interest of the French language and literature, the French government granted Dr. Seymour the title of "Officier d' Academie."

Writes Texts

Four of Dr. Seymour's textbooks, all in the Spanish field, are being used in Florida now, and in the course of his career he has published many articles on varied subjects.

Dr. Seymour and his wife, who is herself a linguist, have much in common. Mrs. Seymour, who was Mayor Pries before her marriage, is also a graduate of the University of Wisconsin. Both are members of Phi Beta Kappa, and both have similar interests and talent in reading, music, and the arts. Among their favorite authors include LaCadio Hearn, Cervantes, Molliere, and Victor Hugo, a poet. Their preference for Hearn is due to his masterful interpretation of the Orient, and his tolerance for people of different races and ideas. Music is of great interest and delight to the Seymours. Dr. Seymour is a violin performer of talent. To satisfy a desire to understand Seymour's culture was present in Mexico generations before the arrival of the white man. The curator of the National Museum, Senor Leud of Dr. Seymour's, discovered a slate with inscriptions upon it, which Dr. Seymour could decipher and read, as the characters were old Chinese. F Club Plans Christmas Party for December 13

In keeping with the holiday spirit, of give and take, the "F" club held a special initiation Monday night and made plans for their annual Christmas party.

At the initiation, carried out in the gymnasium instead of at an outing, Evelyn Fisher was given the right to wear her letter sweater and jumperstation for the party, which will take place in Ruse Hall December 13, at 7:30 o'clock. The members arranged to bring nickel or dime toys to be turned over to the welfare society of Tallahassee after the social affair.

Sports Squints

With storybody else thinking and talking about Christmas we might as well add our little bit, too, and admit that although we realize it shouldn't be so, our minds insist on going beyond the hockey practices and the physical education convention to the more beautiful thoughts of Christmas trees, Santa Claus, and no lessons to worry about.

Along with the importance of the Christmas season to everyone the cold weather has also taken its share of attention, what with circles on the fountain, fur coats on the students and coolness in the classrooms. However, the weather didn't phase the gals who love camp because a truckload of the lads left last week-end just as usual except for the addition of a couple of the hardiest co-eds available. Fresher winds than usual were blowing off the lake and the indoor sports were much more appreciated than the outdoor ones, but on the whole they had a grand time, so we've decided to let them continue to have the camp during the cold weather while we remain near the heater and drink hot tea.

Sympathy this week goes to the girl who fell while roller skating and broke a bone in her wrist. A plaster of paris and is hobbling around on crutches. Another unfortunate victim has not diminished the enthusiasm shown for roller skating. Those little pastime of walking around on skates is fun, but the dance on roller skates that was presented in Even demonstration has encouraged more students to try their luck at the art.

Bouquets this week go to the new Odd-Even volleyball coaches. Social leaders who have been chosen for next year. It seems that the girls will be put through some sort of a training course in order that they may be able to take over their duties next year in working up a winning team. Volleyball coaches teams to fight out the usual games on Thanksgiving day.

If our poor friends insist upon going swimming in the coldest of water and the frigidest of weather, we suggest that they put their teeth together and say "Peter Piper" instead of "accidently" slipped, and then, well if you're half wet you might as well be all wet.

This time next week more of us will probably be wishing we had studied and lumbered up the old sprinting appendages. We have had our share of the mad dash from just any dorm when the bus horns begin to let out a call, and there's always a chance that the less sturdy ones of us will be riding back seats. Jump seats and what have you.

Wonder if the rumor of having the F club from Duke University for the final hockey and soccer games has anything to do with the number of girls that are planning to go out for practice. We don't mind whether or not the team is increased for such a reason—all we ask is for it to continue.

Students and faculty members will have a chance to get together tonight in a different way when the go-d od question and answer method that is used most commonly in Florida Flambeau column originated the idea and will carry it out tonight at pajamajig

Swimming Club To Attend Meet

Tarpon Members to Enter Ft. Lauderdale Event

The Athletic board appointed the entire Tarpon club to represent Florida State college at the swimming meet held in Fort Lauderdale each Christmas.

As Miss Betty Washburn is going to be out of the state at the time of the meet, Frances Thill and Valera Bunn will have charge of the Tarpon club's part of the swimming meet.

The members of the club who live in or near Miami, Fort Lauderdale, or Palm Beach will definitely that they are going. The other members will attend the meet if they can arrange for transportation. The day when the Tarpon club will swim has not been set. The students from Florida State college swimming in the meet are Frances Thill, Valerie Bunn, Betty Hancock, Virginia Makemson, Ernestine Makemson, Dorothy Compton, Pat Campbell, Jeanne Whitting, Dorothy Rickards, and Elizajean Bishop.

Examiner Will Give Red Cross Life Saving Test

Mr. Harry Kenine, field examiner for the Red Cross from Washington, D. C., will conduct an examination course in life saving during the week of February 28. Mr. Kenine said it is a course throughout the South.

All students interested in taking the examination will enroll in a special review course which will be offered by Mr. Burwell Burnburn every Saturday at 11:30. No one may attend this review course without passing this review.

Faculty Senate Makes Several Major Changes

sion changes, Mr. Doyle, secretary of senate, said: "There has always been a feeling in high schools throughout the country that colleges were ignoring high school life and courses." In announcing the changes mentioned Mr. Doyle pointed out that this plan will give new liberty to high schools so that they may set up and carry out the program that they wish. By setting up only 12 units, nine of which can be in any of five fields of knowledge, a student graduating from any accredited high school may enter any division of the university and embark with full specialization in the work of her choice.

Freedom Allowed

High schools will be enabled to develop their educational fields as they wish and give much more freedom in the choice of courses to the students themselves. In this way, the ambitious student (or pupil) will be more apt to obtain a less concentrated scope of learning before coming to college and a wider educational experience will result. It is different way of learning.

A maximum of four non-academic courses may be offered from courses such as education, home economics, music, psychology, art-drawing, accounting and other commercial subjects.

We might as well do our little bit of advertising for next week and remind you all that inter-sorority basketball and volleyball games will be starting soon. Come on out here fify the holidays, so bring many of that Christmas spirit along with you when you start for school again so that you can use some of it on the games.

Bits on the Boycott

QUESTION: What do you think of the boycott of Japanese goods?

Betty Bow: I don't think it can be really successful unless everyone cooperates with it. Why pick on one particular commodity that is a necessity to many women to boycott? It would be better to boycott other Japanese articles in the stores and shops in which there are good substitutes of products from other countries.

Betty Carnes: It is quite ridiculous, because the products owned by the boycott would be one of the quickest ways to become involved in a war.

Allant Day: I think that fi is stirring up more prejudice with her fine efforts than it is accomplishing any real good. It needs a solution for peace.

Kather ne Lowe: I don't think it will do any good unless it is a national campaign. Right now there are just a handful of people working on it, and I don't think anything can be accomplished by Mickie Hearon: I think it is crazy. What can a few thousand college girls do about it?

Margaret Wakely: What do you think the Japanese will think of us after the war? The country, a neutral nation, talks about.

Margaret Meister: I think it is a good idea if you can get the majority of people to do it. But you will find out that most people will think it is narrow minded and cannot admit its effectiveness.

Nancy Dorney: I think it is a fine thing.

Jane Chaney: I think it is a good idea because of the cheap, mess of cotton stockings, but I cannot commit myself either way.

Benny Syfert: I think like the others that it is a good idea, but that it will help toward solving international problems and I think it would give the representatives of the countries time to put their heads together and figure out a better plan.

Marcie Burks: My sympathies are entirely with China, but I wonder how much we are hurting ourselves economically by the large stocks of silk on hand. I suppose we will have to find some more immediate harm than that.

Marguerite Brown: Acting too quickly without thinking may do great harm.

Miss Mary Alice Eaton. I think the boycott is a splendid movement. It is an excellent idea because it is the only action that the individual intermingled with the restrictions is the maintenance of peace can take without becoming involved in war. It will certainly effectively cripple Japanese industry if carried out. If it affects American business adversely, the government is going to shuffle about in the big warm house would be just as much exercise and at least it would be a

Peace Service Has Busy Week

First Council Meeting Is Called by Group

The Student Peace service has had a busy week, and from things it has done is place posters about the campus buildings concerning the boycott of Japanese goods, have its first council meeting, send letters to the faculty, solicit funds, and speak in convocation on the boycott.

In an effort to remember a nation-wide individual boycott of Japanese products, the Peace service here is sponsoring a ban of old stockings by the students of Florida State college.

At the first meeting of the student representatives from the various groups on campus were present. The purpose of the council is to coordinate the different organizations which have an interest in world affairs.

The members of the executive council of the Student Peace service and the organizations they represent are as follows: Dorothy Barclay, Flambeau; Riva Hemphill, N.S.F.A.; Kathleen Grupe, Y.W.C.A.; Ruth Frahler, Kappa Delta Pi; Elizabeth Finch, Women's league; Mrs. Lucien Gibson, day students. Other groups will have representatives at the next meeting.

The service sent letters to members of the faculty emphasizing the boycott and asking for their support. They are also soliciting the faculty for funds to help carry out their campaign.

Barry Fitzgerald Once Appeared Here

At that period Fitzgerald was known to his audience only as Denis Boyle, a Dublin playwright. Their Irish Players, who gave three plays in the college auditorium. Miss Katheryn Montgomery, head of the Physical Education department, has been granted a leave of absence from the college beginning next semester. Acting in her place for the semester will be Miss Bettie Settle, administrator in physical education.

Miss Elizabeth Britton has been appointed to fill the vacancy of Miss Settle in the department. Miss Britton, formerly of Thomasville, Georgia, has taught physical education for the past five years in Shanghai, China. Previous to that, she instructed in Alabama and Tennessee college. Miss Britton received her M.A. from Columbia university in New York.

During her semester leave from the college, Miss Montgomery will continue work on her Ph.D.

Flannel Underwear Helps Intrepid Explorers Survive Freeze

The college truck starts from Bryan with almost more equipment than girls in this 16-degree weather. Coats, big wool blankets and any other available warmth coverings are put into full use when girls go to Lake Bradford for a week-end of fun and frolic in the sun and ice water.

When a girl ventures out to Camp Flatsaway she puts on her tickets pair of flannel pajamas under her usual camp costume of shorts, and on top of her shorts she pulls on slacks, preferably made of heavy tarpaulin. Numerous sweaters and twin sweater suits plus bang-tailed sport coats completes her outfit for a "comfy" week-end.

On reaching Camp the girl who is lucky enough to be able to move from jolting rushes from the open-air truck, and in her usual outdoor-girl fashion builds a fire in the huge fireplace. As the other girls stand shivering and chattering around the pitiful fire, there is a general shout of joy when the tiny flame quivers and catches. It's easy for these students to understand why the Indians worshipped a fire god.

After the girls have become warm and settled for the camp evening, some cheerful soul suggests boat riding in the form of canoeing on the nearby lake. Are pulled on until it seems they have been hauling everyone in the dormitories. At last when all the girls are exhausted so that they can hardly move, they bid farewell to the fire and with a parting warning to the fire-building brigade to keep the fire going, they depart to conquer the elements.

Fifteen minutes of the fresh and bracing outdoor air is enough to satisfy even the most enthusiastic bootman, and it is unanimously decided that perhaps pinning up shuffle-board in the big warm house would be just as much exercise and at least it would be a

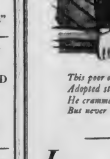
Faculty Are Students' Guests for First Time At Play Night Tonight

Faculty and students will play games officially for the first time tonight when the gym opens its doors at 8 o'clock to visitors tonight.



The hostess committee including Ruth Wilson, general chairman of the play nights, Verona Marchesseau, Frances Fryer, and Cornelia Watson, will conduct the students as dinner guests to the bridge tables, the bowling alley, the paddle-tennis courts and the ping pong tables. There the students and their guests will play until 9:15, when social dancing begins in the big gym.

The play night on trial tonight is sponsored by the Woman's Athletic association in order to cooperate with the movement for better student-faculty relations on campus. Though plans are not completed, if the special play night is successful, other similar events may follow.

Newman Members Plan For Intra-mural Games

At the recent Newman club meeting plans were made for the organization of basketball and volleyball teams to compete in the coming intramural program. The Christmas party, to be given by the freshman members for others, at the gym on December 11, was also discussed, and Doris Beutlemen was placed in charge.

Dorothy Hoffman, vice president of the club, presided in the absence of the president, Mary Joffre. The meeting was concluded with a talk by Carol Carroll, who told of his recent visit to the state institution at Chattahoochee.

This year old geed, in his freshman daze,
Adopted studious thoughts and ways.
He crammed his Turret Top with fact,
But never learned how one should act.

It's simple arithmetic that the more cars General Motors sells the greater this organization grows. And the solid fact back of that growth is this: General Motors cars must continually offer more in terms of extra value to win those sales. It is only because General Motors is great that it can maintain the research and improvement program responsible for such modern betterments as the Turret Top, the Unisteel Body, No Draft Ventilation, Knee-Action and advanced Hydraulic Brakes.

Let's Examine This Japanese Boycott

These are hard days for American college students to think clearly and objectively about international problems. Things happen quickly, public opinion is constantly changing and although one may attempt to keep up with the newspapers and critical quarterlies it is still hard to formulate opinions that can withstand the bombardment of diversified ideas.

The student should, however, think about current affairs. She should attempt to analyze the forces that lie behind international relations, particularly if she as an individual can be called upon to support one issue or another. A case in point is the boycott on Japanese goods which the student Peace service on this campus is sponsoring.

Before one can conscientiously take sides on this question the purposes of the boycott should be examined. Briefly, the student Peace service's prime motive in advocating a boycott of Japanese goods, the bulk of which is silk used in stockings, is to prevent Japan from obtaining American money through the sale of her goods. The local organization believes that the concerted efforts of groups throughout the United States can so curtail the import of Japanese goods as to render that country unable to fight, all in a very short time. The members believe that an unofficial boycott of this kind can accomplish something peacefully that might be impossible if the State department were involved or by official embargo. In other words, the service believes that this is the one way that individuals can help toward a peaceful settlement of the Chinese-Japanese war which quickly assumes greater world-wide proportions.

The first association against the boycott comes from those who believe that something of this sort will hurt American business. That it will ruin many American concerns and the service admits that there is some truth in this argument for this point. But it believes that there will be a redistribution of business and that the loss in one field will be balanced by a gain in another.

Moreover, it points to the labor unions which themselves constitute the group most unitedly supporting the boycotting at the present time. Next, although it is still hoped that the first boycott attempts will cause business to temporarily stop buying Japanese products. Finally, the service believes that the part that in case of a business emergency, be the government, which in time of war would take emergency measures to help industry, should do so in the interests of preserving peace and averting a condition of this sort. Of course the objectors have asks, "But will the government do this?"

Criticism next has been directed toward the boycott signs posted about the campus. To some they seem to be a direct attack against the Japanese people. The Peace service vehemently discounts any such purpose, however, by declaring that "this is not a movement against the Japanese people." They argue that it is a boycott of Japanese goods and furthermore "a cessation of hostilities will benefit the Japanese people who are suffering death in the trenches and intensely lowered standards of living at home." Once there is an armistice a movement should be created inadvertently, they maintain that the present view warrants the means.

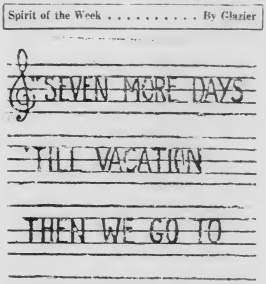
That the posters evoke an emotional appeal is another point brought out by the students. The Service, in this connection, contends that if emotion plays a large part in stimulation of war sentiment that it should be used to counteract it. Further, it maintains that it is the prerogative of all peace-loving peoples to use whatever means they can to fight for peace. In making the posters the members of the Peace service have followed much the pattern used during past wars to create public opinion. They have made their appeals startling by quoting alarming figures and by illustrating their facts profusely with death and war horror, all to make their readers realize the critical situation. But those who dislike the often exaggerated appeal of emotion ask that an intelligent approach be used, in addition to the emotional.

Attention Turns To Lecture Series

With the first lecture series of the year opening tonight, attention is again focused on the contributions of the lecture series to the campus. Not many years ago there was no lecture series at Florida State. Speakers were rare and were usually chance visitors to the campus. Due to the organization of various groups a definite sum of money was set aside from student activity fund for the purpose of securing lecturers to come to the campus.

The amount of money set aside from the student activity fund for lectures is surprisingly small. Each student pays the meager amount of 25 cents for the privilege of hearing the programs presented each year. Considering the small amount paid for the artists series it hardly seems adequate. The total amount set aside for lectures ranges from $200 to $400 while the artists series fund comes to $1,000 or more. The only reason for this disproportionate sum seems to be the current idea that speakers are cheaper than musical artists.

We do not feel that the artists series fee is too high and that the services of such artists as Nino Martini or the Minneapolis Symphony probably are more expensive than even the higher priced speakers. We do feel, however, that the lecture series should receive more than three of the student activity fund. An increase of 50 cents would bring at least one national figure of importance to the campus besides the Daytona Beach Symphony. This could be used entirely if reductions on tuition could be made which would permit funds to allow more speakers to lecture fund, perhaps an additional number could be added to the artists series. Students would not miss an extra 50 cents added on to the fees that they jump at the beginning of the year.



There is no reason why that the committee which is responsible for doing an adequate job in the selection of lecturers should not receive more. All of the speakers on the series this year have been secured from the campus of the Daytona Beach Junior College. Still it seems that at a reduction in price that the fact that they are brought to the state through this other agency. The cost of these speakers has been considerable. Dr. Rollo Walter Brown who has come to the campus in the last few years have been on the whole interesting lecturers representing a number of fields. However, the selection of the committee is to usually limited to those speakers secured by the Daytona Beach forum.

We notice in an exchange paper from a Texas state college for women that Carl Sandburg is to appear there. This was a presentation of the lecture series. At the same time we see that Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings, outstanding author of Florida, has been secured by the University of Florida for a series of lectures. The utilization of such excellent material near at hand seems to give credit to the university.

Looking over the names of the past few years we can see a outstanding figures of contemporary literature represented in the lecture series. It would seem that a major field has been overlooked here. There are other fields represented. It is through the lecture series committee that some other fields are not represented. The committee must necessarily help.

These suggestions are made not in criticism of the present series or the choice of speakers but with the belief that the campus is very much interested in intellectual interests as well as in sound in the light of this group. A representation of speakers to these already brought to the campus would be an asset to campus life.

Spirit of the Week . . . . . By Glazier

This Week

Philanthropic duPont

Lamont duPont, president of the E. I. duPont de Nemours company, speaking before the National Association of Manufacturers, faced the responsibility of industry in regard to unemployment and urged that industry carry out a twenty-five billion dollar recovery plan. In order to effect this, duPont demanded that a three-fold program entailing tax development and popularization of new products, the broadening of markets for present products, and the maintenance in fair returns for all efforts including that of capital be inaugurated. He explained further that this could be effected only if taxes and business and labor conditions were stabilized over a definite period of time, the existing uncertainties in these fields being the cause of our present distress. His address, being aimed against the thought that the banker protested vigorously against any proposed increase in taxes. Will and William F. Green made no comments either pro or con. This following the opportunity on the heels of labor's protest against shipping munitions to Japan.

In the meantime Congress did some more scrambling and actually passed a bill providing traveling expenses for the Congressmen over the Christmas holidays. During the session of this matters on the floor the possibility of revising the tax on undistributed profits so as to make the revision take effect in 1937 instead of waiting until 1938 was rejected by a negative vote of over eighty-five. The compromise measure was substantially identical to that of G. O. P. demands that it be limited to 1936 and was retained in the House of Representatives that the cotton marketing quota be eliminated. The wage and hour bill, discussed in the House, was ordered to the rules committee to be sent back so as to provide for administration by the Labor department. Hours limit of a week of five men as proposed at first.

Labor was quiet active this week as strikes and mediation and progress were handled. The International Longshoremen's Association tied up ports with Boston officials of the Mc & M. line over a question of higher wages. The "Little Steel" mills in Portland, Oregon, continued to remain closed as picket lines. At the Ford Motor company in Detroit, Detroit, five men, arrested for distributing union propaganda, protested that the action was a violation of the Fourteenth amendment and brought suit in a Federal court. Lewis head of the C. I. O. refused to come to terms with the A. F. L. and ordered all of his flock to vote to protest their unemployed brethren. He argued that all the members without jobs should organize and should campaign for democratic action to cope with their difficulties and further that if the large corporations who controlled American industry would not handle

And Others Say . . . . .

AND OTHERS SAY

In the Lexington-Omaha we are informed by a headline that "Bypothesis Raises Mark of Students." This startling revelation is the result of experiments by Dr. E. M. Hildreth, psychologist at Hampden-Sydney college which has made use of the hypnotic powers by helping students of that college improve their grades.

"I did this," he said, "by taking the student into a hypnotic state and then stating with emphasis, 'As a result of this trance you will receive grades that will be greatly increased, your mind will work better and you will not be nervous during examinations.' The first step in my attention to be successful in your studies and to improve your class records."

A number of Hampden-Sydney students submitted themselves to the experiment and the failing and near-failing individuals changed their grades to the better above. Others climbed from 'B' to 'A.' Two students jumped the entire scale from failure to the honor group, an increase of 75 points in their average grade.

"During the five years he has been conducting the experiment, Dr. Allen studied the psychology of subjects and improved the marks of all but five, who could not be hypnotized."

The Auburn Plainsman prints an item from the ACP which gives the results of a voluntary attendance plan of education carried on for six years at the University of Chicago. After six years of operation it has proved success ful in that some students have completed the four year course in one year, while others have done it in two and the majority in less than four years. It has been found that under this plan fewer students cut classes and a greater number take postgraduate work.

However president Robert M Hutchins believes the plan has a definite drawback. He deplores the fact that the attendance at classes has increased so much since becoming voluntary that it indicates a "slavish servility." In this case the student is definitely injured by the university interfere with his education.

The Carolinian becomes confused when it says that Christmas holidays are practically upon us, and publishes a rather startling editorial on college students neglecting their work before vacations. It quotes:

"Studying, in itself, always seems to be a bother, but at this particular time of the year, when so many more distractions presentations occupy our thoughts, there is a general tendency to let studies slide. Term papers, theses, examination finally results in a tremendous amount of work that either is rushed through at the last minute to obtain a bit of knowledge or is ignored and failed.

"Why let a couple of weeks preceding a vacation spoil a good class record? The holidays can't be hurried along by neglect of one's duties. Such neglect hurts no one but himself. He comes to college to obtain knowledge of some sort. Therefore it is up to each one of us to stop rationalizing, to stop excusing ourselves for wasting time, and to keep up our work during the few remaining weeks."

Collegiate Comebacks

What with the rush of getting term papers in on time, worrying about what clothes to take home, and all that sort of thing we figure that even our sprinkling of faithful followers was it five or six ; won't be indulging in this column this week so we are saving our energy and what we fondly call our "Humor" for another time when we think we'll have an audience.

The most popular people on campus right now are those who don't poke you with their elbow, look shy as all get out, and yell, "O boy! This time next week!" It's no secret. We'd be willing to get that the whole student body knows we won't be here "this time next week."

. . . .

Somebody was in a "ring out wild bells" mood last Sunday night. We wanted to have the chimes ring until ten o'clock and they kept it up until one o'clock Monday morning. All of which goes to show that someone among the powers that be is pathetically eager to please the students.

. . . .

Some more of that phoney language (and a little to our dear, dear teachers):

Thaks

Im thnkl fer th brds tht sng
In th, dew lefr, too
Beuz i'm thnkfi fer
th B vli gi frm u.

—Exchange

Speaking of oddities, we read in the paper about a "colored possum" did something or other. Typographical error, no doubt. We can understand his being colored or a professor, but not both.

. . . .

While we're on the subject, there are quite a few teachers on campus who are amazingly like human beings. The others thought it their duty to society to give quizzes last week. Never mind, there'll come a day of reckoning—or don't you read the Hour.

. . . .

Now that the train rates have gone up a considerable amount and the rates are first-class to follow the leader, we're beginning to wonder if hitch-hiking as such a bad idea after all. Maybe the conductors concerned see this. I'll sure give 'em a scare.)

. . . .

We learn that Conception college in Missouri operates a free bus service for bums. They feed them 10 to 25 daily—and they talk about it. Here we feed almost 1 800 three times a day.

. . . .

A pencil, a book,
A lighted nook,
To study?
No, by heck—to listen to the radio!

—Exchange.

Assuming that most of the student body was at convocation last week and heard some of the talks that were delivered, we guess there are a few less snipers on campus for a little while anyhow. At least we can dance at our proms "to a certain extent" this year when, in years to come students might even be allowed to go out at intermission! (We know that sounds radically right now, but times do change!)

. . . .

And about that compulsory church attendance, I'm sure God was duly appreciative even though He did realize that half the students were there because they were saving their cuts or because they had already used them. Or was He?

. . . .

Some do and some don't.
Depending on their moral code.
Being right and all fashioned
I eat pie straight, not a la mode.

—Exchange.

. . . .

We enjoyed the icicles on the fountain no end last week but we bet the local Chamber of Commerce is tearing its hair and blushing furiously.

. . . .

A silk worm crawling through any of the buildings on campus should feel wormier than ever if it should read some signs about all the havoc that could be averted if only we would start wearing cotton stockings. As long as the war has to be waged on someone, wouldn't you come right down to it who is more to blame than that lowly creature that makes silk stockings possible

. . . .

At last we have come across a poet with common sense.

Most modern poets
Realize
That the average person who reads
Poetry
Doesn't really want to read
Poetry
And so they write
It
Like this
Which is easy on the eyes
And the mind
And the type-setter.

—Exchange.

(The Chesnee and American Lit students are probably wishing that some people had realized this fact sooner.)

. . . .

And so we wish you Merry Christmas, offer our Yuletide greetings and remind you that a card to a prof might be a strategic move for those who simply must get a B.

Author Discusses Oriental Situation

Convulsion in the Orient
By Nathaniel Peffer

The war in the Far East is inevitable and will eventually cause the ruin of Japan, Nathaniel Peffer declares in the December issue of Harpers.

Almost every event in the past 100 years has come into the making of this war. China submitted to the invasion of the Western Powers up till the World war because she had to, she had nationalistic wars, she began to pass foreign nations out. Japan took this opportunity to strengthen herself in China, but the Chinese, being no longer helpless, had either to be subjugated entirely or freed entirely.

Now that the war is on, it is sure to know no lack of complications, the author asserts. A conclusive Japanese victory would mean a later array against Japan the other great powers, who want to save something for the future. Almost inevitable it would bring Japan and Soviet Russia to collision. If Russia and China combined defeated Japan, as Mr. Peffer feels sure they would, the western nations would find themselves against Soviet Russia in order to check a Red avalanche. On the other hand a localized China-Japan war without decisive result would leave the Far East open to aggression just as before 1914.

"Japan has begun a war which it sees a matter how the war ends," the author says. The expense involved in keeping China in subjection would be enormous, and Japan has already spent so much money in the conduct of the war that her financial structure is going shaky.

Declaring that the world is too dismayed for economic sanctions to have any effect, Mr. Peffer says: and the only alternative is an all around stalemate, waiting that no more nations will be drawn into the war. (P. C.)

Can We Afford Children?
By Paul Popenoe

Americans also about the survival of the upper classes, Paul Popenoe, who points out in the December issue of Scribner's, declares that families in America are now producing only seventy-five per children to replace their own numbers.

As the main reason for the limited birth rate is economic, Mr. Popenoe believes any solution of this problem must involve some equalization of the economic burdens of childbearing. He proposes to remedy the situation by a reform tuition of the nation's wealth among the different lines.

First, he states that it is unfair for a bachelor to be paid the same salary for a job identical to that held by a man with a wife and four children. Second, he asserts that the man who has a certain per cent of his base salary added to his pay check for each minor child. The second suggestion the author favors is between the young and the old. He believes that the young, who are raising families should receive higher salaries than the old, who have put themselves to provide for. Lastly, in order to repay the farmers for all the children they have contributed to the cities, Mr. Popenoe advocates that the cities tax themselves, by lowering the tariffs and other methods, so that the farmer may be benefited directly. (P. C)

Our Adventure in Conservation—The CCC.
By F. A. Silcox.

According to F. A. Silcox in an article in the December Atlantic Monthly, the idea of valuing the youth of this country in work while conservation work must be credited to President William James, who in 1910 wrote an essay on the "Moral Equivalents of War." He expressed the thought that it was time to do away with the idea that the nation's youth would be organized in form for a few of their young years a part of an army drilled against imaginary foes.

Mr. Silcox writes that trees and young men have been growing up simultaneously in the nation for centuries. Generations of trees were struggling for their lives when the white man came and in his struggle for security turned against the trees and the young men. Some trees and the Indians were pushed back, by burning, by killing—by any and all means. In the name of economy and progress we have let unrestrained exploitation o. the nation's forest wealth.

It is trite to say, according to Mr. Silcox, that the light of the present age is a heritage of devastated lands, that soils which were unfit for farming a few years ago are now prized, that it should forever have remained in forest growth. This ever-hurrying stride of "modern progress" had brought both young men and trees to a stage, perhaps, of the same relative value, long before the facts were generally realized. The conservation job started by Theodore Roosevelt and Gifford Pinchot had been well under way before it was brought to a standstill by the World war.

The major purposes of the CCC program for the first four years, writes Mr. Silcox, have been to relieve distress through the employment of idle young men on constructive conservation projects, to aid the rehabilitation of youth, and to assist in the general administration drive for economic recovery.

Mr. Silcox thinks that the saving of the remnants of our natural resources from abuse and of our youth from the effects of the depression has just begun. The work of destruction on the former, running back through generations, cannot be repaired in a few short years; denudation was too thorough and lasted too long for its scars to be healed so quickly. No one can say that this big job of conservation is now finished; it will take generations to complete. (S. B.)

FLORIDA STATE ALUMNAE NEWS

By LAURA STRUNK LESLIE
Alumnae Secretary

Faculty and Alumnae

By ANNA M. TRACY

To the Alumnae:

This letter is going to be topheavy with dietitians! I suppose it is an admission of my partiality to them.

We believe that the F.S.C.W. dinner held in Richmond during the recent annual convention of the American Dietetic association was the first such dinner held at any national convention. I suppose that it was the first one held at an American Dietetic association meeting. It was an enthusiastic affair. Sixteen were present. The alumnae there were Ethel Mae McIntosh '32; Helen Bass '29, Margaret McDonald '31, Barbee Crane '29, Grace Laffitte '18, and Margaret Gill '31. All of these girls were there as members of the American Dietetic association. We had no alumnae with us who represented an allied profession. Dorothy Lancaster '30, a second year medical student at the University of Virginia Medical college and Dr. Hilda Jane Watson '31, a second year medical intern at the same institution.

We were also glad to have Meredith Smith shepherd '31 with us at the dinner. From the college faculty there were Dean Dendy, Dr. Bell, and Miss Hilpert. Dean, a new member this year (which justifies management) Dr. Cecilia Schulz, formerly of F.S.C.W. and now at Purdue university, and Miss Latham, the dietetic internship intern in Gadsden county.

There was a great deal of talk and friendly gossip about the doings of former students, and facts for Dr. Bell to send to the groups by telegram. Mrs Beth Moon sent us a letter as president of the Alumnae association. Your alumnae office provided us with the attractive favors in the form of snapshots of Lake Bradford. Each person had each of us in front of the college edition of the Tallahassee Daily Democrat. Dean Dendy made the one talk of the occasion and brought the group up to the present days of the School of Home Economics in particular. So we got quite an idea of the college meeting a lot of fun, a lot friendly interest, and a little work.

Also during the meeting here of our F.S.C.W. people about Dr. Evander Bowditch '34) and Mrs. Tweed '31) came to attend the session of the association.

Dr. now dietitian in the Baptist hospital at New Orleans. Sara Tweed is a student dietitian at Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore. Two of our former student-dietitians who, as I believe I have told you, married the year 31-32 with us at the school hall at F.S.C.W. are Meredith Smith, who spent the year 36-37 with us, entered the meeting. Helen is now director of the university cafeteria and instructor in quantity cooking at the University of Illinois. Urbana Ruth Tolane—dietitian at Dallas Teachers' college, California, Pennsylvania.

It seemed to me that the group present at our dinner and at the reception and tea as an interesting picture of what some of our home economics graduates are doing. Several practically every section of the country, our girls are doing the credit to themselves and to their Alma Mater in the particular profession.

Miss Venable had the pleasure of meeting with a small group of alumnae in Cleveland recently. Miss Venable went to that city to attend a Key Worker conference. While there was entertained at dinner and at a coffee party by the Cleveland alumnae club. The group present seemed to predominate with alumnae. Virginia Student-dietitian at the University of Cleveland hospital. Girls who came in to see Venable were Edith Hobson '36, on the dietary staff of the Cleveland hospital of Cleveland; Mary Wagner '36, dietitian in the Stone Mother college. Western Reserve university; Anna Lee '37, now studying at Western Reserve university school of Medicine; Lucy Dickinson '36, studying at Western Reserve university, and Pearl Smith '37, who is instructor in nursing arts in the Huron Road hospital school. Miss Venable reports the girls seemed to think that they had studied at the limit—that they had no time to drink, but were always glad to see them. The mentioned that Western Reserve university hospital are in the dietetic cold" spot in winter!

One more word about our members and I am through. It is a pleasure to announce an advance in vital liberty with

Many Alumnae Club Meetings Have Convened

Richardson, Eyman Speak At Graduate Sessions Throughout State

With the discontinuance of T. S. C. W. Week-end meetings by the alumnae clubs may select their own dates for convening and may choose their own faculty guests. A number of alumnae clubs have actually held fall meetings at which representatives from the college were present.

Among the alumnae groups which have met this fall are: Tallahassee, Miami, Jacksonville, Smyrna, Lake County, West Palm Beach, Fort Pierce and Key West. The Broward county alumnae club will meet tonight and next week the Dade county alumnae club has been arranged.

Mrs. Louise Richardson, college librarian, was the college representative who spoke to the Tallahassee alumnae club on Monday evening, November 15. Mrs. Frank D. Moor, president of the alumnae association, and Miss Louise Conrad will be guests of honor at the Lake County club on Tuesday afternoon, December 14, at the home of Mrs. J. W. McCollum. Mrs. Moor also was present at the Tallahassee meeting and spoke to the group at that time Faculty speakers for the Fort Pierce meeting, which met this fall was Dr. Ralph Lee Eyman dean of the School of Education.

The first meeting of the year was held by the Jacksonville Alumnae group on Monday night, November 6, with Dr. Ralph Eyman speaking on "Religious Education and Training for Citizenship." Mrs. Eyman, Mothers of the Peninsula club and the Jacksonville Beach Parent-Teacher association.

On Tuesday, November 2, Dr. Eyman filled a similar engagement made by the New Smyrna alumnae club. His first appearance was before assembly on "Training for a vocation," and later addressed the alumnae club on "Trends in Education." That evening he was the guest of the New Smyrna alumnae club at a dinner meeting. On Wednesday evening, November 10, Dr. Eyman addressed the Lake county alumnae club in Tavares.

On Monday, December 6, Dr. Eyman will address a number of addresses before the Florida State college alumnae clubs. In the morning he will speak to the Pierce alumnae club which gathers for a luncheon meeting. The next day, he was the guest of the West Palm Beach alumnae and addressed a luncheon meeting of women which included addresses by the Rotary club and the Kiwanis club.

From West Palm Beach he went to Key West where on Thursday, he appeared before the high school assembly and the Key West alumnae club at noon. That evening he will be the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Key West alumnae club to which members of the Women's Civic club, Business and Professional club and county officials. Parent-Teacher association, school board, and interested citizens were invited. Tonight he will be the guest of the Broward county alumnae club and groups planning the fall meetings are: Tallahassee, Miss. Harwick Finds It Long Leap From Track to Social Work

Former F. S. C. W. Student and Olympic Star Is In School Again After 15 Years Absence

It's a long leap from Olympic star to social worker, and even a longer step from a sporting Southern column and running an iron foundry, but Mrs. Lillian Brooks Harwick Floridian now studying social service at Tulane—duke is the prize in running under the long athletic career.

A three-college-button picture of Miss Harwick, former Olympic star and sprinter, appeared in a recent edition of the New Orleans Item with the caption "Social Service Student Social Service." Trophies and medals won by Miss Harwick in the Florida Sugar Bowl Carnival the picture was written.

Once an athlete, always an athlete, Miss Ann Harwick in the Tulane School of Social Work, New Orleans, is Lillian Brooks Harwick, ex-Lake Placid Olympic track star and Florida Sugar Bowl champion, and for the prospect of a future of social service she confessed. In the meantime her present is a school girl's life, with medals for paper-writing.

The write-up of Miss Harwick then continues:

"A school girl again after 15 years, Miss Brooks is a student today in the school of her original school days at the Florida State College for Women—the day in 1922 when she broke the women's world record for javelin throwing and broke into international track fame.

"Sent to New York for try-outs by the A.A.U., she landed a berth on the American track team for the Olympic games. Immediately track met in the 1922 Paris Olympics. She had to be content with finishing thirteenth and she had to hurl in an unfamiliar way with both hands. But it was her birthday, and she won an inner laurel. She stepped up for her throw. That helped, she recalled of her victory today.

"America placed second in the meet and Miss Harwick was honored placed in the baseball throw. 200 meter race and the discus. Cups and plaques with Olympic insignia still testify her winnings. Back in the Miss Harwick was graduated became Florida state tennis champ and a basketball coach, with fishing and golf over the week ends.

"But athletics alone began to pall. So Miss Harwick entered Business took her fancy. She sold real estate and automobiles, then helped manage an iron foundry.

"Literature, too, had its appeal. Columns in a Florida paper shared her off: a novel of Florida characters, called Cracker Trail, hasn't quite finished her She's looking for a publisher even now.

"Her long leap had several turnings, but she resumed the broad stretch in 1933 when she began working for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in Florida and caught a glimpse of new vistas in the field of social service. Subsequent work with the W.P.A. proved her enthusiasm permanent. Social work gave her "an inner satisfaction" that everything else had lacked.

"Tulane offered her a chance to perfect that inner satisfaction with its social service training, so now Miss Brooks is studying for her paperweights, a school girl again."

Alumnae Meet for Chat

Above are shown Mrs. C. O. Andrews, wife of United States Senator Charles O. Andrews; Mrs. Frank D. Moor, president of the Florida State College for Women Alumnae association, and Mrs. E. C. Gilbert, of Pensacola, former national president of Kappa Delta sorority, as they stepped for an informal chat on the campus of Florida State College for Women recently. Mrs. Andrews is the former Marvel Spear, who graduated at Florida State College for Women in 1904. Mrs. Moor was formerly Beth Walton, of Pensacola, graduate of 1916, and Mrs. Gilbert, the former Elizabeth Corbett of the class of 1911. Mrs. Corbett's daughter, Jen, is a freshman this year at Florida State College for Women. While Mrs. Gilbert was in Tallahassee, she spoke to the students in convocation on some of her experiences as a student at F. S. C. W.

Questionnaires On Building are Sent

Over 5,000 possible questionnaires seeking the opinion of alumnae concerning the Sloggin - Alumnae Building project were mailed to alumnae last month. To date only a small percentage has been returned.

Every alumnae is asked to return the card whether she approves "yes" or whether she answers "no." The association wants to get the true feeling of every alumna. Your cooperation in this matter will be sincerely appreciated.

The return of the postal questionnaires will also help the alumnae office in the mammoth task of keeping the alumna address list up-to-date. Every alumna, your complete name (both maiden and married) street address, for the office is endeavoring to make a thorough check of the files prior to working up material for an alumnae directory which will probably be issued some time within the next year.

Alumnae Office Notes Weddings of 25 Former Students at F. S. C. W.

Approximately 25 marriages of alumnae were recorded in the alumnae office during the past month. Some of the marriages occurred recently, the others took place some time ago and the information has just reached the office.

Alumnae marriages recorded last month are:

Juanita Pace, BS-Ed-25, Mrs Luther Vernon Howard, Jacksonville; Elizabeth Douglas Mansfield, BS-31, E.-36, Mrs. Joel Tucker Turnbull, Wilmington, Del.; Jane Futts, AB-22, Mrs John Bourke, Rochester, N.Y.; Freida Kosta, LL-29, Mrs. Fred B. Exclusive Dress Shop Run by FSCW Graduate

Designer, lecturer, and business woman are represented in Lela Belle Calvert (Mrs. Joseph F. Brooks), a Florida State graduate in home economics with the class of 1924, who now owns an exclusive dress shop in New York city.

A designer and dressmaker, Mrs. Brooks has won marked success in the New York dress creative shop located at 5 Prospect Place, Tudor City, New York, she designs exclusive models and creates for the individual. In addition, she does special lecture work in clothing and accessories for Cornell university extension department.

Since 1934 when she received the master's degree in household arts from Columbia Teachers college, Mrs. Brooks has been in business for herself. On April 24, 1937, she married Joseph F. Brooks, a native Floridian from Key West.

Quarterly Magazine May Rejoice Page

Due to the great expense of sending out a monthly publication to the alumnae, a change is being considered from the alumnae page in the Flambeau each month to a quarterly alumnae magazine. Because of lack of funds, no issue of the Flambeau was mailed to alumnae in November.

The alumnae office is anxious to know the opinion of the alumnae on this matter. The office would also like to know the feeling of the alumnae as to whether the publication should be sent to all alumnae or just to those who are active in the association by payment of dues.

A number of changes have been made in the alumnae publication over the last ten year period. Prior to 1928 a mimeographed letter was mailed to the alumnae. In 1928-29 a four-page printed leaflet known as the Alumnae News was sent each month. In 1931 this was increased to eight pages. Since 1933 a copy of the Flambeau containing an alumnae page has been mailed to alumnae each month.

Inside College Gates

Prior to doing alumnae updating work on campus, a kaleidoscopic resume presents some recent highlights that have made the center of student attention since the last Alumnae edition of the Florida Flambeau.

In spite of rainy weather the Tennessee Odd-Even spirit remained unsmothered during Dr. Parent's day celebration. Both sides claimed victories in the gymnastic basketball and volleyball games. The Odds upset the Evens in two-year jinx to win the basketball game and the Evens held up their side by stunning the Odds in volley game. The traditional color rush between the two lasted long enough to pinned the red, white, and purple to all the buildings except the Westcott dormitory and the college library, reached first by the Evens who had planned a special display night, and a formal dance shared honors with Thanksgiving holidays for dining hall attractive features of the five-days event.

Dr. Parent's day program was won a garnet and gold ribbon and five dollars in the Thanksgiving decorations competition sponsored by the Alumnae association. On one side of the door the Kappa Delta lawn was transformed into a miniature college campus. The Evens. One wore a cap and the other a feather. Suspended on strings from the ceiling was the symbolized the names. On the opposite side of the door the Odds and smaller turkeys holding a sign of welcome to the returning. The house chief represented a barn. Second prize went to Alpha Delta Pi who used a colonial plantation as their motif.

Two presidents were set when Nina Mullin, colonized to opera, the concert, stage, screen, and radio contest held on campus Saturday. It was felt by the board that it might be more effective to grant this scholarship to juniors or seniors who have good college records before going to freshmen. By granting the loan to an upperclassman, the loan part of the scholarship could be paid back earlier and several students rather than one would have the benefit of the scholarship.

Members of the alumnae board present at the meeting were: Mrs. Ruth Moor, president; Mrs. Ruth alumnae president; Miss Katherine Warren, Tallahassee, recording secretary; Miss Clarissa Strunk, Tallahassee, treasurer; Miss Gladys Polsom, Cross City, Mrs. Maude McCall, Chattahoochee; Miss Charlotte Hodson, Fort Lauderdale, Miss Mary Newton Green, Live Oak; district directors and Miss Laura Strunk Leslie, alumnae secretary.

5,000 Alumnae Questioned On Building Plan

Executive Board Seeks To Determine Opinion On Major Project

Postal questionnaires were sent to more than 5,000 graduates of Florida State College for Women last month to determine the interest of the former students in regard to a campaign for a Student-Alumnae building sponsored by the Alumnae association.

The decision to "sound" the alumnae out was made by the alumnae executive board in session here last month which also thought it advisable to seek the opinion of all alumnae about the Student-Alumnae building project before launching a definite campaign to secure funds. Any alumna who did not receive a postal questionnaire is requested to notify the alumnae office and one will be sent her immediately. All alumnae should fill out the questionnaires back before January 1.

The possibility of inaugurating a training course for alumnae workers was discussed by the board, and a motion was passed that the Alumnae association endeavor to have a training course for alumnae club presidents and chairmen at the Alumnae dinner in the spring which time programs and means of financing these programs will be suggested.

A motion was also passed that the Alumnae association be asked to formulate requirements for the Rowena Lonamire still-loan scholarship. It was felt by the board that it might be more effective to grant this scholarship to juniors or seniors who have good college records before going to freshmen. By granting the loan to an upperclassman, the loan part of the scholarship could be paid back earlier and several students rather than one would have the benefit of the scholarship.

Interests Are Developed

If Students Want to Play Tennis, Sing, Dance, Or Write They Can Follow Any Line In Extra-Curricular Activities

By META HELMS

If the student wishes to become a Helen Wills Moody, a Lily Pons, a Martha Graham, or an Edna St. Vincent Millay, she can find on this campus extra-curricular activities leading in any of these directions; for clubs have been organized by the various departments of the school with the outpurpose of stimulating interest since definitely fixed.

W. A. A. Sponsors Activities

For the energetic student there are the activities and organizations sponsored by the Women's Athletic association some of which are the "F" club, the Life Saving corps the Tarpon club, fast fully-student tennis tournament, Play nights, and all athletic activities including the Odd-Even games and water sports.

The "F" club is for all students who have earned the required number of points through participation in the extra-curricular program of athletic activities and have maintained the required scholastic average. The purpose of the "F" club is to promote a high standard of sportsmanship among the students and to co-operate with the athletic association in arousing interest in athletic contests.

Red Cross Has Corps

The Life Saving corps, an active chapter of the American Red Cross life saving corps, is another phase of activity coming under the W. A. A. Its program sponsors instructions, pageants and service projects. The Outing club, designed for those students who enjoy the out-of-door type of life, plans hikes, night-seeing tours, camp trips, and all kinds of outing activities for students and faculty.

Directing the students' religious life is the Young Women's Christian association, which furnishes a unified religious atmosphere on campus by sponsoring weekly Sunday vespers and mid-week morning worship services. The organization also supervises the Free Polity playgrounds during the school year.

From the academic field have evolved various clubs and organizations maintained for the purpose of developing a student in their chosen educational field during her leisure time. Among these are the Classical club, Der Deutsche Verein, the Art guild, Astronomy club, 4-H club, Orchesis, The International Relations club, Glee club, Home Economics club, Masonic club, French club, International Student Federation of America, and the Emergency Peace Campaign.

Language Groups Here

The Classical club and Der Deutsche Verein are both language clubs. Der Deutsche Verein is an organization among students of German who wish to improve their speaking knowledge of the language, and who are interested in further study of the language and literature, the life and customs of the German people. The Classical club serves as the Latin laboratory in which a study of the civilizations of the ancient Greeks and Romans is made. Carrying on this study along group lines are the Latin majors for future teaching. The French club is also a language club which is organized on this campus last year to give students of French an opportunity to speak the language.

Members of the Art guild strive to promote art interest on campus each year by holding an art exhibition in the spring. The Masque club is the honorary dramatics organization on campus, while the Astronomy club is the physical science organization enabling students to operate the large telescope and make observations of the solar system. The Home Economics club is a club for Home Economics majors. From the music department have come the Glee club and Orchestra as fields in which to spend leisure time. The 4-H club is composed of former 4-H girls and has as its purpose the objective of encouraging girls to enter college.

Publication Are Edited

The organizations whose purpose it is to develop an interest in creative work in the field of publication, the Flastacwo, and the Delaff. The Flastacwo is the weekly newspaper published by the students of journalism. The year book, The Flastacwo, is edited each year toward the close of the regular term. It is a complete summary of the year's activities, containing pictures and information concerning college personalities and functions.

The Distaff, a literary and critical magazine published four times a year, endeavors to raise the standard of creative writing and to present well-written expressions of student opinion on contemporary problems.

The honorary fraternities on campus which serve as an incentive for high scholarship are Alpha Kappa Psi, fraternity; Theta Kappa, French; Chi Delta Phi, literary; Eta Sigma Phi, classics; Kappa Delta Pi, educational; Omicron Nu, home economics; Phi Alpha Theta, history; Sigma Delta Pi, Spanish; Phi Kappa Phi, general scholarship; Mu Beta Kappa, scholarship in liberal arts; Mortar Board is a national honor society for seniors, with leadership, scholarship, and service to the student body as the honorary societies are Spitsgirls, for Odds and Esteem, for Evens.

And Others Say

we take excerpts concerning two drives now pertinent through the nation as well as on innumerable college campuses.

The first, in support of the Christmas seal movement, gives the basic and unexplainable means of that drive to aid the fight against tuberculosis.

"Since 1904, in which year the National Tuberculosis association was founded, the first organized, the splendid results have been many. Through the funds gained from their sale, an organized campaign to prevent tuberculosis, which is one of the seven leading causes of death at the present time, has been made possible. Through this organization, a large part of the 80,000 hospital beds for treatment of tuberculosis, many of the 20,000 public health nurses, and the 1,000 tuberculosis clinics have been provided. In addition to this, a medical research program has been developed to help in the solving of the many problems presented by tuberculosis.

"Now, again, we have an opportunity to continue its progress by our interest and help."

The other drive is of course that against syphilis. In the News Letter is printed a summary of the beginning of this drive. The fight is now published in thirty-four eastern colleges, while the Inter-collegiate Newspaper association has decided to carry it into other colleges.

"The step is notable as the first co-operative effort among institutions of higher learning to assist

Alumna Given Executive Job

Marian Hobson Chamber Of Commerce Manager

Miss Marian Hobson, Sarasota star girl reporter and a graduate of Florida State College for Women, has been given the executive position of office manager at the Sarasota Chamber of Commerce.

A journalism student at Sarasota high school and later a journalism major at college, Miss Hobson was during her senior year, editor of the Flastacwo, and for a period, held the position of managing editor. She graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1934.

In the summer previous to her graduation she received her first experience at a newspaper office working at the Herald as straight news reporter and society editor.

Immediately upon graduation she began work on the Herald-Sarasota paper, where, besides her straight news reporting, she has written many feature stories which have attracted wide-spread commendation. She has been local news correspondent for the Associated Press and Sarasota society reporter for the Tampa Tribune.

jors in the speech department held the most successful debate of the history. Mumbling, lisping, nasality, monotone, drawling, and talking too pitch were the most common faults found among the 200 students that attended the clinic.

A program of social service training will be carried on at Florida State college this year, under the direction of a member of the State Welfare board, according to a recent announcement made by President Conrad and Mr. C. Codrington, commissioner of the State Welfare board. This arrangement will bring the students into much closer relationship with the activities of the state department of welfare. This new social service training, which entails work under the supervision of Mrs. Emeth Tuttle Cochran, who has been supervisor of the Tallahassee unit, district two, of the state welfare set-up.

Two short skits were the main features of the alumnae convocation program last Tuesday morning. The purpose of the program was to acquaint students with the fact that there is an Alumnae association and with some of the work it does. Readers for the skits was Miss Emily Johnson, alumna of 1926, and Virginia Rouland, chairman of the committee on cooperation with undergraduates, was in charge of the program.

Dr Sarah Parker White, orthopedic physician and associate professor of hygiene, received recognition recently when her book "A Moral History of Nation" was published by Doubleday Doran and Company of New York. The book which has just come off the press is the result of many years of research and writing. "A Moral History of Woman" is a literary study, conducted along anthropological and sociological lines of the advance woman has made toward economic and sexual freedom from prehistoric times to the present. Dr. White's book is regarded as one of the first serious attempts of woman to understand and explain herself in the light of her history.

the United States Public Health service in its campaign against the social evil," says the editorial and goes on to sure the details of the drive.

"The campaign is not aimed at the correction of a condition prevalent among college students. The rate of syphilis is lower in colleges as a group than in any other organized body, according to the Public Health service. The real purpose of the campaign is education. College students are trained in all other ways to be leaders of their communities. They should receive this social problem and its solution.

"The first goal of the campaign is the education of the Wassermann test in the routine physical examinations which are given in most institutions of higher learning. This introduction will be an important step toward universal application of the test, which is the most immediate aim of the campaign. Syphilis, if early diagnosed and treated promptly, can be cured with more certainty than any other serious ailment. Social taboo and ignorance have in the past prevented this early treatment, and it is the particular desire of the United States Health service to reach everyone with the Wassermann test to insure removing the disease as soon as possible."

Busy Publicity Office Serves as Clearing House Of College News for 200 Daily Florida Papers

By JEANETTE MULLIS

If Mr. John Taxpayer reads in the Key West Citizen that Florida State college has a new curriculum or a famous personage comine to visit the campus, Charles Adams are the "story" originated from the college news bureau.

Or if Mary Jones of Pahokee is written up in the Pahokee News because she figured prominently in something on the campus the news briefs was sent from the college publicity office which acts as a clearinghouse for state college news for non-daily and weekly papers of Florida as well as for news services such as the Associated Press or for periodicals and magazines.

Aiding also in publicizing activities of Florida State college are a number of student assistants and freshman journalism students who act as "hometown correspondents" from their home towns and who write mostly for the bigger dailies, keep in touch with the publicity office and the freshmen receive all their assignments through the publicity office where a record is kept of each student's work since she gets credit that way. Leonard war journalism course. This has proved valuable experience for the students, a number having obtained summer newspaper jobs as the result of the work done on the campus.

Many Subjects Used

News stories about Florida State college represent a wide variety of interests. They may deal with courses taught, new additions to the school plant, scholarship, religious life, athletics, faculty honors, and so on. The newspaper editor always welcomes stories with inches of "hometown" girls so whenever it is possible names are used in connection with the college news. Feature stories and pictures, rather than "spot news" are favored more for national release.

Pictures play an increasingly important role in the college news at Florida State. The college publicity office has a photographer who cooperate in making "cuts" of prominent faculty members and students and from the newspaper cuts "mats" of cardboard likenesses can be made for sending by little expense. Often times pictures of individual activities in the college are mailed to the biggest dailies which reproduce them at their own expense. The college publicity office owns no camera but borrows one from interested ones—a Graflex and a Recomar—which all have proved useful on many occasions.

Assistants Required

All this entails a vast amount of details in which two office assistants lend their aid. Reporters are kept of all the information mailed out, also of all letters about the colleges and organizations on campus. The publicity office maintains its own clipping service with the assistance of the library and the newspaper clipping bureau and this makes it possible to see how different news stories were used, and to measure the Florida State with other Florida institutions which have similar publicity bureaus.

The publicity office of Florida State college is located in a small room on the main floor of the Education building and has the clatter of typewriters and the ring of the telephone may be heard at all times except any hour because there are "deadlines" always to meet with many papers differing as to their requirements. Miss Rachel Pitchford, a graduate of the college and a former newspaper reporter, is publicity director.

Leon County Leads In Enrollment; Dade Next

According to the latest statistics released by R. B. Doyle, registrar, 96 out of Florida's 67 counties are well as 15 states, Cuba, the District of Columbia, and Hawaii are represented in this fall's enrollment of 1,788 students, which is the highest fall registration in the history of the college.

Leon county has 196 students enrolled while Dade is second with 164; Duval third with 101; Hillsborough fourth with 141; and Polk fifth with 103.

Kappa Delta Pledges Plan Bowery Party Saturday Night

The Kappa Delta house will be transformed into a bowery cafe Saturday night when the pledges give their annual party for the pledges of the other sororities on campus.

The two front rooms will be filled with small tables covered with red and white checked cloths. The traditional candle stuck in a bottle will be used on each table. Cigarette girls will wander from place to place with their wares. Pretzels and punch will be served in the bar in the smoking room. Kaise Pugsley will be the featured singer in the floor show presented at 10:30 o'clock.

Hostesses, who will be dressed as bowery maids, include Mary Ann Anderson, Mary Myers Alford, Carolyn Brinson, Virginia Bell, Betty Ann Hester Bryant, Alleyne Calvin, Frances Cofer, Helen Dykes, Mary Sledge secretary of the Florida alumnae.

Prominent guests at the reunion which included a number of social events were: Mrs. Robert Taylor, southern district superintendent, and Mrs. George Dean, second vice-president, of the national organization; also Mrs. Georgia Pearce, alumnae adviser to the University of Georgia chapter, all of Atlanta.

Conradi Heads Committee

Dr. Conradi will preside as program committee chairman of the secondary division of the Southern Association of colleges and secondary schools when this committee gathers in Tallahassee December 27. At this meeting a program is to be planned for a convention in Dallas, Texas, next March.

Lecturer Is Honored At Several Affairs During Stay Here

Dr. A. R. Seymour, of the modern language department, entertained last night at his home with an after-dinner coffee honoring Monsieur Pierre Frederix, lecturer on campus this week.

Those who attended the after-dinner coffee were: members of the modern language department, Mr and Mrs. Harry Hay, Miss Mildred Pinneau, and Miss Margaret Dow.

On Wednesday evening, Monsieur Frederix was entertained in the dining hall at a table composed of the following people: Dr. Beulah Belle Briley, head of the economics department; Miss Mabel Ellis, political science department; Dean Olivia N. Dorman, Betty Cottrill, Lewis Cohan, Marguerite Brown, Alice Skiggs, chairman of programs of I. R. C., Bertha Lamme, French student, and Pierre Frederix.

The committee for International Relations club honored Monsieur Frederix with an after-dinner coffee.

A. D. Pi Pledges Plan For Formal Party

Alpha Delta Pi pledges will entertain the pledges of the other sororities, girl friends, and faculty members from 4 to 6 tomorrow afternoon with a formal Christmas tea. Mints, nuts, coffee and tea, sandwiches and individual cakes will be served.

In the receiving line will be Mrs. L. B. Sikes, Jean Paullin, Betty Blackwell, Dr. Mary Nichols, and Florence Gaskin.

A O Pi Alumnae Elect President at Meet

Miss Elizabeth Markey, of Apopka, a Florida State college graduate, was elected president of the Florida Alpha Alumnae Club Saturday at the alumnae reunion held last week-end in the local chapter house.

Elected alumnae chairmen in the various counties were: Mrs. George Roller, jr., Miami; Mrs. Wallace Tahkin, St. Petersburg; Miss Ruth Lambert, Lakeland; Mrs. Robert Linton, Jacksonville, and Miss Sara Graham, Tallahassee. Miss Helen Davis, of Orlando, another Florida college graduate, was elected secretary of the Florida alumnae.

Reynolds will entertain Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock with a special party for the girls of the club. Margaret Scott and Mary Greenleaf, newly elected treasurer and secretary, will pour. The tea table will be decorated with holly, red cellophane, and a red light. The program will include a Santa Claus giving out gifts from the lighted Christmas tree. The maids and janitors, Anna Florida, Betty Jack, and Golden, will sing old negro spirituals. Following this chorus, Anna, as maid, will read "The Other Wise Man." Special refreshments will be served to the guests.

The upper classmen dormitories will hold their regular Wednesday afternoon teas. At these teas the Christmas spirit will be reflected in the wreaths, holly, and gaily decked Christmas trees in the parlors.

As for those people not attending any of these functions, they will not go unreminded of the approaching season. At night the campus will be a spot of color in the darkness. Both Gilchrist and Reynolds hall will have beautifully lighted Christmas trees adorning the front of the buildings. Bryan will have a large cut of the shepherds following the star of Bethlehem. This cut will be illuminated and placed above the entrance to the hall.

VARIED SOCIAL EVENTS ON SORORITY CALENDARS FOR PRE-HOLIDAY SEASON

One in a series of bi-weekly teas was given Tuesday afternoon by the active and pledges of Chi Omega sorority honoring faculty members and friends.

Miss Josephine King, national inspector of Kappa Delta sorority, is spending several days in Tallahassee this week. Miss King is a graduate of Florida State college and a past president of Kappa Delta sorority. An after-dinner coffee was given Thursday evening in her honor by the Kappa Delta actives and pledges. Faculty members, town alumnae, dormitory directors, and representatives from all other chapters on campus were invited.

Festivity Is In Air While Holidays Near

Special Parties Planned In Dormitories For All Students

As the Christmas holidays near, the campus takes on a festive air and parties become more numerous. Special parties for dormitors and freshmen have been given this week. Tomorrow there will be scenes of gaiety for the students.

Wednesday afternoon from 4:30 until 5:30 o'clock Miss Maude Powers will entertain the dormitors at the annual Christmas party to be held in Bryan hall. As in previous years, there will be a central theme carried out in the program. All contributions for the affair are being kept secret to add to the gaiety.

Following the party, the seniors will march into the dining hall in their caps and gowns and take their places at the special table. The tables will be decorated in the Christmas motif. After dinner, groups of seniors will go to town and call on the families of invalids and other shut-ins.

The dormitors of both Jennie Murphree and Reynolds halls will entertain the freshmen with special parties Wednesday afternoon. Both dormitories will decorate the parlors with Christmas trees candles and berries.

In Jennie Murphree hall the setting for the party will be the reception room with wreaths placed in the windows, holly, candles and greens in the archways. A Christmas tree with brightly colored lights will add its bit to the holiday tone. There will be a special program of Christmas carols and music to give the finishing touch and to brighten more the already happy girls.

Reynolds will entertain Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock with a special party for the girls of that hall. Margaret Scott and Mary Greenleaf, newly elected treasurer and secretary, will pour. The tea table will be decorated with holly, red cellophane, and a red light. The program will include a Santa Claus giving out gifts from the lighted Christmas tree. The maids and janitors, Anna Florida, Betty Jack, and Golden, will sing old negro spirituals. Following this chorus, Anna, as maid, will read "The Other Wise Man." BY WAY OF EXPLANATION

On November 27 the annual Thanksgiving dance was held in the college gymnasium. This is one of the more important social affairs on campus, rather climaxing the Thanksgiving festivities, and should, accordingly, be as smoothly run as possible. However, in spite of careful planning, unforseen situations arise, and the execution of plans is not always as careful as the making of them.

Many students enjoyed the privilege of being able to leave the dance for a smoke now and then. The arrangements under which this privilege was brought about were left up to the students. They worked out a system which involved checking in and out, and designating a definite time limit for the gym. No stated provision for an intermission were made, as it was understood that such time would be taken up with a program. The students' plans were all right. On the night of the dance the post executive in charge of the gym revealed in the fact that no definite smoking area had been designated. Two hundred members were present, enough to park their cars across the street to make an exodus of a destination, but the students had failed to live up to their bargain. Then came the unforseen situation. The program ran over time minutes, whereas the intermission lasted half an hour. Naturally, students wanted to go outside. Those students who had no share in the blame for other students' acts which made this impossible. Aside from these difficulties, the dance was complicated because the misuse of these same privileges by students last year. As a result nothing else, the many suffer for the mistakes of the few.

This article is not an attempt to make any indictments, but rather to make it clear that students were handicapped because students had been careless. The dance is over, but if that occasion course was right and we do learn through experience, then certainly every effort will be made to avoid any repetition of such an incident.—Louise Gehan.

Home Economics Club Has Christmas Party

A Christmas tree, Christmas carols, and a Santa Claus were features of the annual Christmas party of the home economics club, given Wednesday night in the club laboratory of the science building. Games were played. Katherine Summers gave a reading, and refreshments were served during the course of the evening. Gifts were given to the nursery school children, were distributed from the tree by the Santa Claus.

Betty Harrison, chairman of the social committee, was in charge of the party, assisted by Dottie Mae Wilson and Ruth Eveman.

Miss Sarah Meador is the newly selected sponsor of the home economics club ,succeeding Miss Edna Mae McIntosh.

NUMEROUS CHRISTMAS PARTIES GIVEN AS HOLIDAY SEASON NEARS RAPIDLY

With the rapid approach of the holiday season, many Christmas parties are being given by social sororities this week and next week. At all, the decorations are appropriate to the time of year, and the customary Christmas tree with its dazzling decorations will once again hold the center of interest.

The Chi Omega actives will entertain the pledges Tuesday from 7 o'clock until light flash. During the evening gifts will be given out from the Christmas tree. Entertainment will feature the pledges' goat songs.

Thursday evening members and pledges of Kappa Delta will give their annual Christmas party. Each girl will receive a present with a finale attached which will be read to the rest of the party. These gifts will afterwards be sent to the crippled children's hospital in Richmond, Va.

On the same evening the Kappa Alpha Theta members will en-

Gosting Season Climaxed For Club Members With Christmas Party Tonight

A Christmas party, climaxing the gosting season for pledges, will be given by the 4-H club tonight in the home demonstration club hall on the lower floor of the Science building.

Gifts from a Christmas tree will be presented by a Santa Claus to the guests who will later give them to the Leon County Welfare association. Christmas games and Christmas carols will be enjoyed and refreshments of coffee, sandwiches, doughnuts, and mints will be served.

Guests invited to the party include: Miss Ruby Brown, the home demonstration agent of Leon county; Miss Elsie Lafleur, the home demonstration agent from Gadsden county; Mr. A. P. Spencer, director of the extension division at the University of Florida; Mr. Wilmon Newell, of Gainesville, general director of extension work for the state; Miss Helen Brown of Tallahassee, state home demonstration agent; and the state club members.

Initiation for the 25 pledges will be held Sunday morning at 6:30 o'clock at the Baptist student house. Following the initiation the 40 old members, the new members, and guests will have breakfast in the lower dining room. Guests who will attend the party Sunday morning will be Miss A. P. Spencer, Mr. Wilmon Newell, and Miss Helen Keown.

Three Groups Plan Holiday Parties Soon

Classical, German Clubs And Theta Kappa To Entertain

Three language groups, the Classical club, the German club and The's Kappa, French honorary, will entertain with Christmas parties during the coming week.

On Saturday night at 8 o'clock in the Methodist student house the Classical club will celebrate the Saturnalia, which is a Roman festival which corresponds to our Christmas. The decorations will be varied and will carry out the spirit of the Saturnalian festival.

The program of the evening will be presented by Eta Sigma Phi, classics honorary, and will be introduced by Sandra Smith who will reign as Rex Saturnalis. The character and survival of this ancient festival will be discussed by Frederica Roberts. Another feature will be the presentation and interpretation of Vergil's Messianic Prophecy by Dorothy Dendrick. This will be followed by a group singing of Christmas carols in Latin.

Refreshments will be in the form of those served at the "convivia mensa," or refreshment table, at a Roman banquet, and favor paper favors, which is the Latin name for the Roman slave can will be given as favors.

Miss Ruth Fuerman, who is general chairman for the affair, will be assisted by the following committees: Marie Anderson, Dorothy Dendrick, Mary Clyde Greer, Geneva Nelson, Frederica Roberts, Marion Smith and Polly Ann White.

Also on Saturday evening the German club will have their "Weihnachten" at Rouse Hall.

A large Christmas tree will glitter in all its traditional splendor, and Santa Claus, or Weihnachtsmann, will be present to distribute gifts to the guests. Other Christmas decorations will be used in emphasizing the Christmas atmosphere.

A program of German skits will be presented by members of the first year German classes, and these will be followed by a German comedy entitled "Wie Man's Macht in America," or "As One Does in America." The cast of characters includes Elizabeth Knapp, Annie Jemmett, Anita Leonard, Florence Wagner, Dorothy Gluhr, and Henrietta Jacoby.

A social committee, headed by Charlotte Kamper, will serve punch and German cookies as refreshments.

In addition to the members of the German club, approximately 40 guests have been invited.

The pledges of Theta Kappa are entertaining active members and the faculty of the modern language department Tuesday evening at the Sigma Kappa house with an annual Christmas party. Pete Noel, alias Santa Claus, will be an honor guest and the usual gifts for all those present.

Entertainment for the evening will be in the form of a rFrench play which illustrates many of the French holiday customs. The The drama is entitled "Adieu, cPre Fouettard," and all the pledges will participate in the presentation.

At the close of the program, refreshments will be served.

Initiation will not be held until after the Christmas holidays

Students View World Events Indifferently

Article Writer Finds Few Signs of Interest In Outside

By HELEN SHATKOWSKY

World affairs and the college student—do they mix? According to the consensus of collegiate students' opinion of Florida State college, world affairs are of minor importance in their lives. The average Florida State college student knows little or nothing about world affairs or even about the affairs of the United States.

We are not speaking partially or relel to read newspapers. How do you expect us to keep up with what is going on in the world?" This is the hue and cry of a great number of the Florida State collegians. It is intimated that the average student is so overworked that she has no time for reading a newspaper.

Newspapers are read in the library by most of the students, but most of them read only considered the society columns and finally pages of widest interest. And of course, for the movie fans, there are always the news reels collected from time to time. Some students mentioned the news reels as a time for relaxation.

When asked if they ever stopped to read the bulletin board, "The Talk of Florida" and students either demonstrated complete ignorance of the existence of such a bulletin board or said they were too busy to read it.

Other students when questioned answered flippantly, "Yes, we know there's a war going in China—so what?" Most students dismiss the thought from their minds with this blase statement. "It's a situation which we have not created." "We cannot contribute anything to the betterment of the problem." "Why should we inter-ne now?" "It's too far away to affect us." These are some of the thoughts that circulate among some Florida State students.

However, the intellectually minded students of Florida State college consider world affairs of sufficient importance to arouse their anger and make them look with intolerance upon their fellow students. The intelligentsia say, "The world situation is far more serious than most students realize." As a policy to be taken by the United States, isolation was suggested. Isolation would mean the end of international trade and credit, drastically lowering the reputation of the country. It would mean the existence of the United States as an amoeba-like unit. They contended that the United States is too dependent upon other countries to practice isolation; therefore, when a foreign nation becomes involved in a conflict, sooner or later, this country will become entangled.

Other students remarked that peace enthusiasts think they can solve all world difficulties with their talk of collective security. Collective security is a policy whereby all nations would establish a league with each nation represented by a certain per cent of her army. This would make the league strong enough to make its ultimatums carry weight.

The students intimated that if more students took an interest in world affairs and gave more comments, policies of peace might mean something. "It is true," they said, "that there are some forces in motion at present that would be very difficult to control, and yet if enough people were interested something might be done. Students must realize that foreign affairs of today will affect the United States tomorrow." Some colleges are doing their small part, such as the boycotting of silk stockings by students of Vassar, Syracuse, and Women's College of Rochester, concerning the Sino-Jap situation.

There were other viewpoints, one of extreme importance to every girl on the Florida State campus. If the United States were to enter another war, most of the boyfriends would be used as gun fodder. The Florida State college male looks forward to her years after college at home with a flock of admiring swains hanging around the doorsteps, and she wants to be an old maid, they added.

Another war might even change our standards of marriage, some-

Collegiates Put on Russian-like Clothing When Icicles and Freezing Winds Prevail on Campus

Simultaneous with the rapid fall in temperature is the rise in a grand collection, so predominant this week among the students of F. S. C. W., of a heavy snow fall predicted for sometime in the near future. With the temperature standing at its lowest point last Monday night at 14 degrees, this hope has reached its highest peak.

Leaders for the Emergency Relief Campaigners, busy on their rounds to boycott Japanese goods, this weather has made long woolen and cotton stockings far more desirable than sheer thin silk ones. A visitor to our campus would easily imagine himself in some part of Italy, or Russia, or even in Indian Village. Not only with bundling themselves in long woolen stockings and fur coats the students have shaken off the mode of last year's garments and gloves and have wrapped their head, peasant fashion, with big flashy handkerchiefs and knitted snow caps.

Several girls were heard exclaiming last Saturday over the "hail storm" which occurred at noon. Not daunted by a northern girl's attempt to explain the difference between hail and sleet, these girls have been enthusiastically conducting experiments. Glasses of water left overnight on the window sills were found frozen solid in the early morning. These scientists are now eagerly looking forward to a party they are planning at which chocolate ice cream is to be served. All sorts of liquid-containing vehicles have been smuggled into the dining room and window sills have appeared with triumphant rows of these containers of milk on them. Whether the results will be successful or not remains to be seen.

You can't convince the girls that this isn't the coldest winter that has been known in years, despite the fact that year before last the mercury went down as low as 14 degrees around Thanksgiving.

Our mother's donation of long flannel underwear, so unanimously scorned by her daughter last summer, is now making somewhat belated and sheepish appearance. We know because there was a young lady in modern dancing who decided that short brief leotards are not quite the thing on these cold winter days as she pulled her pink flannel drawers down to her knees below her blue leotard, and with her head held high nonchalantly walked into her class

Laundry Does College Wash On Large Scale

5000 Dresses Put Out Each Week by Modern Plant On Back Campus

By ANN LANGE

What happens to the Florida State College girls' laundry from the time it is sent until it is returned wrapped in the familiar brown paper involves the work of 54 persons.

Each week the laundry truck delivers 5,000 dresses and thousands of flat work from Tallahassee and Reynolds offices. Here the laundry is carried to the second floor in the rear of the building. As the carriers bring in the dirty clothes into the room the checkers re-mark the initials on any article of flat work which does not have the initials of the owner clearly stamped upon it. When the checker discovers a damaged article, she sends it to the wrapper, who wraps it up with a notice checking the defect.

Next the washers pour the 5,000 dresses and 6,000 pounds of flat work into the three large electric tumbling machines to be washed. Following this, the starchers place the wet clothes in the cage for the extractor, where they are partly dried. Then, hung on racks to further dry out, the wash awaits the ironing.

The presser sends the flat work either through the huge mangling machine or any one of the four electric pressers. Nineteen women work quickly on the wash dresses. Every dress leaving the shop has received at least "touches up" with a hand iron.

As soon as the worker has finished pressing the garment, the sisters put it into its proper place in the alphabetized arrangement of shelves. Other sorters also in the laundry lists in their hands proceed to assemble each laundry from the shelves. When a purchase has been assembled, girl other checkers go over it again making sure it is complete.

When the wrappers have tied and sealed the laundry bundles, the fresh bundles are carried and load the week's wash on the truck. The truck then goes to the assigned dormitory offices.

Long lines of anxious girls form at these doors, and each student awaits her turn to receive her laundry. At last she enters and rushes to her room inspecting the existing dresses underneath them for her side.

one suggested. Unless the birth-rate for male children were to far exceed that of female children, a state of polygamy might ensue. Several students suggested that universal birth control might be a solution to war.

Frosh Fear Fire Drills

Heaviest Pajamas Are Now Nightly Attire

The old saying around campus that fire drills are always given on the coldest night of the year has evidently been revived lately and interpreted literally by scores of freshmen.

Every night since Jack Frost has taken his winter scenes in earnest and decorated the fountain with ice, many freshmen heads have been cold with fear that the dreaded summoning bell would ring out.

But, believes that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, each girl has nightly donned two pairs of heavy pajamas, with such added charms as a muffler or two wound tightly around the

Williams on Committee

Word has been received here from the department of education at the University of Chicago that Kenneth Williams, a former member of the teaching staff in the Demonstration school, has been assisting with investigations underway for the past year in Washington to determine the relations of the federal government to vocational education.

Eduarad is a member of President Roosevelt's Advisory Committee. Mr. Williams has been employed as a student in the department of education at the University of Chicago during the past year.

Two Classes Plan University Dance

Holmes Melton, freshman class president, and J. Lester Poucher, sophomore class president, of the University of Florida, wired the Flambeau yesterday that plans for the general college dance are underway. The telegram read: "Freshman and sophomore class officers of F.S.C.W. have been visited today concerning plans for general college dance week-end at that city on March 26 and 26. It will be a joint occasion for first and second year students at F.S.C.W. and University of Florida. Will appreciate any release in this week. Flambeau so students may be free to the dance and week-end during holidays."

Many Things Wanted In Xmas Stockings

Students at Florida State college have definite ideas of what they want Santa Claus to leave in their (cotton) stockings Christmas eve.

Practical-minded girls want fountain pens and "really good deflection ink." Others ask for wrist watches, clothes, a lot of underwear, a Ford automobile.

A public said tha; a year at Columbia university would satisfy him. Another, a senior, said that a fur would was a Bible. Three students ask for sleighs scared ones want good grades. One girl thinks the central session of the state pleads for a week or July weather.

Weary seniors agreed that they could do with a parallel-bending machine or a robot to answer "Yes, Dr. Cashier" every time the professor says a fact that you didn't know.

Perhaps the general campus yearn was expressed in the wish of a junior, "Two weeks' vacation. I'm satisfied."

Five Delegates Attend Methodist Convention

Five members of the Methodist student organization on this campus expect to attend the national Methodist student convention December 28-31 in St. Louis, Missouri. Representing the student organization will be Jane Dowdell, Esther O'Byrne, and Pauline Flake. Alice Royster will represent the Trinity Methodist church of Tallahassee.

Annual Camera Contest Opened

Amateur Photographers May Enter Competition

Of interest to members of the freshman photography club and other amateur photographers on campus is the announcement by the University of Wisconsin Camera club of their fifth annual national intercollegiate salon of pictorial photography.

This salon is believed to provide the only chance for college photographers to enter their pictures in competition with others. Any student or faculty member of a college or university in the United States is eligible to submit prints. The exhibition will be open from March 14 to April 8. The closing date for entries is January 15. Two judges from Chicago and one prominent pictorialist from Milwaukee will act as judges in the contest.

Two new features this year will be an illustrated catalog containing reproductions of the final winning prints and the backing of all accepted prints under glass. Additional information and entry blanks may be obtained from Ralph Turner, salon chairman, University of Wisconsin Camera club Memorial Union Building, Madison, Wis.
